HOW LAIDLAW WAS KILLED

Courageous Work by Messrs. Lalley and Frick

The explosion on board the Argentine battleship on Tuesday, which cost James G. Laidlaw his life, was one of the most horrible of the accidents of various kinds that have ever occurred at the shipyard. While fortunately his face was not burned, although blackened, his arms, legs and body were terribly burned. The force of the explosion was terrific, so much so, that although the paint room is located in the hull of the vessel the upper hatchways were blown open.

When Fred Lalley and H. C. Frick reached the entrance of the room, a thick stifling white cloud of smoke greeted them, and it was impossible for them to enter. A powerful electric light was brought into play and its rays thrown into the room but so thick was the smoke that the rays did not penetrate the smoke, and it was nearly an hour after the explosion before they were able to force their way into the room, and it required ten minutes groping around in the smoke filled room to locate the body. Entrance then was only made possible by pumping air into the room to clear it of the smoke.

In the room was a quantity of brass polishing mixture, turpentine, paints and gasoline as well as a quantity of gasoline and a lot of cotton waste. It is supposed that the explosion was caused by the light carried by the unfortunate man igniting the fumes from the gasoline soaked rags. A naked light is never carried into these rooms as they are provided with electric lights, and it was a naked light ed candle carried by the victim which caused the explosion.

According to the officers, it was the thick heavy smoke from the burning waste that caused the thick penetrating white smoke, and the only damage the fire did was to burn a lot of this waste. The cans of paint and brass polish were found uninjured, other that the blackening of the outside of the cans.

When at last Messrs. Lalley and Frick were able to enter the room and bring out the body, it was some time before it could be determined who it was. There were a large number of Argentine people on board, and for a time they were considerably aroused as it was thought that the victim was one of their number. A roll call of the South Americans however found all accounted for, and then came the elimination process of the employees to determine who the victim was. Although his face was not burned it was so blackened that the features could not be recognized.

It was about 9.30 when the accident happened, and after 10 o'clock before the body was recovered and carried to the Red Cross hospital. It was nearly noon before it had been practically decided that it was Laidlaw.

The unfortunate man had been employed at the Fore River since March, 1912, and was one of the crew of the Rivadavia on her recent trial trips. He resided at 3 Edwards street and leaves a widow and a year old child.

He was a Scotchman by birth and 30 years of age. His family were regular attendants at the First Presbyterian church, and he was a member of Clan McGregor O. S. C., and was also captain of the Fore River draftsmen bowling team.

His wife became prostrated when told by her pastor, Rev. J. A. Matheson that her husband had been injured and her condition was such that it was not deemed wise to inform her of his death.

It required considerable courage on the part of Messrs. Lalley and Frick to enter the room, which even at that time was heavy with smoke and it was not known but another explosion might take place at any minute. But they are made of the stuff heroes are made of, and unmindful of danger to themselves they entered and groped about until the body was found on the bench, where Laidlaw evidently sat when the explosion took place.

The funeral will take place Thursday afternoon. Services will be held at Hall's undertaking rooms. He was a member of Clan McGregor, O. S. C. and of the draftsmen's organization, and both these societies, will attend the services.

MAYOR STONE NOT A CANDIDATE

In Justice to His Private Interests He Declines a Third Term

Compliments City Officials and Councilmen on Their Work

The much clouded atmosphere as to whether or not Mayor Eugene R. Stone would be a candidate for renomination as Mayor, was cleared this morning when His Honor gave out a statement on the Mayoralty question. This letter will be found in full below.

Editor Daily Ledger:

As the time has arrived for those who desire to be candidates at the coming municipal caucuses to receive their nomination papers and voters will be asked to endorse them I feel I should declare myself as to the mayoralty.

Notwithstanding it is true the duties of the office of Mayor each year become more exacting and require more time for their discharge I have found the work most congenial and interesting, and were it not for the demands of my personal business I would with pleasure yield to the solicitations of the many citizens who have so kindly urged me to again be a candidate for Mayor. But in justice to my private interests I ought not to do so, and therefore I am not a candidate for reelection.

I cannot let this opportunity pass without publicly expressing my appreciation of the value to the city of the services of the city officials and councilmen who have been associated with me during the years 1912 and 1913 in the government of the city.

For ability and disinterested devotion to the public service, the administrative officials and councilmen of these years will rank second to none who have served the city, and I sincerely believe their services will receive the approbation of their fellow citizens.

Eugene R. Stone, Mayor.

Quincy, Oct. 1, 1913.

With Mayor Stone out of the race, the question comes will Charles H. Johnson have any opposition in the primaries for the Republican nomination for Mayor. No other person has taken out papers as yet, although for that matter there is still plenty of time before the final date of filing nomination papers.

There has however been a well defined rumor for several days that Ward Six would put forth a candidate for the nomination in the person of ex-Councilman Charles E. Cherrington. At the Council meeting Monday evening it was given out by several of the councilmen that Mr. Cherrington would be a candidate, but as stated

SCHOOL STRIKES.

A recent epidemic of school strikes has been viewed with tolerant amusement. In a land of ultra democracy, it has seemed to many people natural that children should have their own Revolutions, Declarations of Independence, and Bills of Rights.

The infection caught a few days ago in the Syracuse, N. Y., High school, and 1000 pupils escaped through windows and doors, had parades and indignation meetings. They protested against 50 minutes longer study hours.

It is diverting to see the youngsters play soldier, parading with penny whistles and tin pans. But when the youngsters begin to flourish a revolver, the old man may lead them out to the woodshed for further debate.

While the use of the referendum in politics is favored by many, it will be a long time before the decisions of school boards and committees are referred to a majority vote of the pupils.

A school strike is a picturesque incident furnishing the newspapers with graphic copy. But it has its significance. One can not imagine a thousand children skipping out of doors and windows in school hours, unless many of them were confident of tacit parental approval. In most towns there is an element of parents who maintain a suspicious and hostile attitude toward public schools. They connive at attacks on the authority they help to create and support.

No one is fit to command unless he has first learned to obey. One of the most valuable school lessons is obedience to law and loyalty to discipline and good order. It may be all right to sympathize with the boy as an "under dog." But it is poor policy for parents to tolerate a spirit that will keep the boy an under dog all his life.

REGULATING TRAIN SPEED.

The quicker click of switches and frogs as the traveller passes through railroad yards and across junctions tells a story of gradual increase of train speed during recent years. In view of recent accidents, the Inter-State Commerce Commission is drafting a bill that would give in control over the rate of train operation.

Whether or not the public wants the commission to control train speed, there seems to be some reaction from the demand for racing trains.

Up to recently, a moderate speed has got on the nerves of our impatient travellers. Yet even busy people will freely waste an hour or more a day in profitless occupation. But travellers will wait around an hour for a train that saves 15 minutes.

With most persons it is a question of sport. A fast train gives the same feeling of exhilaration that comes from the swift automobile. The sight of flying villages left behind gives a sense of power and superiority and mastery of the earth's big resources, particularly if the train charges an extra fare for its rapid travel.

While the public will not tolerate needless delays, the time may be ripe for a more philosophical attitude toward railroad journeys. Let the traveller not consult his watch so often, nor study the mile posts to see how far below the possible 75 miles an hour he has fallen.

A theater of surpassing interest passes as you look out of the car window. The ways of men and cities, the fortunes of agriculture, the competition of industry, are spread before your eyes. If you get interested in the human drama being played along your flight, a few moments at the end of the journey will not assume such tragic significance. Besides you will not need as much life insurance.

FOOD SUPERSTITIONS.

Dyak Warriors Won't Eat Deer For Fear of Becoming Timid.

In rural Germany one still meets with a superstition that he who eats during a thunderstorm will be struck by lightning. Abstaining from food during an eclipse is common among savages; also a belief that in eating the flesh of any animal one absorbs that animal's characteristics. Thus an Indian tribe highly prizes tigers' flesh as food for men, but forbids women to eat it lest it make them too aggressive.

In the Kongo women are forbidden to eat birds of prey on the same principle, but are encouraged to eat frogs, which the men on no account ever touch. In the Caroline islands blackbirds are a favorite dish with women, but men must not eat them, because if one did and afterward climbed a cocoa tree he would surely fall to the ground and be killed.

Among the Dyaks warriors must not eat venison because it would make them as timid as the deer. Fowls and eggs are forbidden to women of a Bantu tribe because on eating either a woman would certainly fly into the brush and never again be seen. Again, the flesh of many animals is forbidden because the animals themselves—for example, swine—are disagreeable to the eye or have untidy habits.—Exchange.

BAD FOR PRONUNCIATION.

Silent Reading and Neglect of Conversation Are Harmful.

Perhaps the most potent of influences toward diverse pronunciation, especially difference in accent, is the fact that we seldom or never hear in conversation a vast number of words which nevertheless constitute an important and indispensable part of our vocabulary.

"By silent reading and neglect of conversation language itself," declares Richard Grant White, "is coming into disuse." The result of this practice is not only that we are always mentally registering pronunciations peculiar to ourselves, which we have no means of ascertaining to be uncommon or ridiculous, but also that the natural tendencies of our language, unrestrained by the conservative force which occasional use in conversation might exert, rapidly foster new pronunciations and produce a diversity of pronunciation even among the most careful speakers.

All these influences obviously supplement each other in resisting any trend toward uniform pronunciation and facilitate the progress of the tendencies of speech peculiar to our English tongue.—Robert J. Menner in Atlantic Monthly.

A Fleet Street Story.

Henry Arthur Broome, in "The Log of a Rolling Stone," says that in 1871 he was engaged in wood engraving for Punch when one day, at the end of the week, short of money, he stood gazing longingly at the cherries on a costermonger's barrow which stood abreast of the offices of the London Telegraph. His gaze arrested the attention of a gentleman whom he had often seen there before, though not at midday.

Then a kindly deed was done. The gentleman, averting his gaze from me a moment, purchased two paper bags of this fruit. Then, placing one of them in the pocket of his capacious dust coat, he turned to me with the sweetest smile imaginable and without a word offered the other one to me, which I gratefully accepted. He then passed on and went upstairs to the offices of the newspaper. That was my first introduction to the prince of journalists, George Augustus Sala.

A Limit to His Power.

A curious historical anecdote is handed down from the time of James I. James, being in want of £20,000, applied to the corporation for a loan. The corporation refused. The king insisted. "But, sire, you cannot compel us," said the lord mayor. "No," exclaimed James, "but I'll ruin you and the city forever. I'll remove my courts of law, my court itself and my parliament to Winchester or to Oxford and make a desert of Westminster, and then think what will become of you!" "May it please your majesty," replied the lord mayor, "you are at liberty to remove yourself and your courts to wherever you please; but, sire, there will always be one consolation to the merchants of London—your majesty cannot take the Thames along with you."

True Kindergarten Spirit.

Master Harold had returned after his first day at a kindergarten school, says the Manchester Guardian.

"Well, Harold," said a friend of his mother who was calling, "how do you like school? I suppose you are the youngest there."

"Oh, no," said Harold indignantly, drawing himself to his full neight and throwing out his chest—"oh, no! Some of our chaps come in perambulators."

As Far as He Could Go.

"I," she said proudly, "can trace my ancestry back to armor and shirts of mail."

"I started to trace my ancestry back once," he replied, "but my wife made me stop when I got to shirt sleeves and overalls."—Judge.

Good Names and Riches.

"A good name is better than great riches," quoted the sage.

"But that's not the reason why most of us are poor," replied the fool.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

SULZER'S WIFE WAS IN DEBT

HE RECEIVED ABOUT $180,000

Firm of Harris & Fuller Changed Their Books Just Previous to Inauguration of Governor to Prevent Publicity—Repeatedly Called Upon For More Margain

Albany, Oct. 1.—Mrs. William Sulzer had borrowed money from the Carnegie Trust company of New York and it was to aid her in her financial difficulties that the governor borrowed from the stock exchange firm of Harris & Fuller.

This was the explanation which Melvin B. Fuller, head of the firm, a witness at the impeachment trial, said the governor made to him. The testimony followed questioning regarding the transfer of Sulzer's account to Lieutenant Commander Josephthal of the national militia and a member of the governor's staff.

Fuller identified a note written by Sulzer to his partner in relation to the Spriggs check. It read: "What Governor Spriggs says is agreeable to me."

Fuller said the Spriggs message related to closing the account and that the outcome of the conference was that Josephthal took up the account on July 15 through an order reading:

"Please deliver to J. M. Josephthal the securities held as collateral on my loan on payment of debit balance due there."

It was signed: "William Sulzer, for Mrs. Sulzer."

Fuller testified that Mrs. Sulzer had no connection with the account in any form or manner.

The books of the firm of Harris & Fuller, with whom Sulzer dealt for three years, were changed two days before his inauguration so that it appeared that instead of his account being a speculative one the firm had merely loaned the governor money.

Fuller, who produced the books, testified that a "cross entry" had been made in the governor's account under the date of Dec. 30, 1912, showing the firm had loaned him $40,000, or the debit balance against the account on previous stock transactions.

These dated back to early in 1910 and there was put into evidence letters showing that during that time the firm had repeatedly called upon the governor for more margain because of the steady decline of the stocks involved in the account.

Some of the securities Sulzer had bought through the firm, others he had deposited as margin against those he had bought, and at the same time had borrowed money on them. His total borrowings, including the $40,000 debited against him in the "cross entry" transaction, amounted to $180,000, according to the books.

The "cross entry" was made, Fuller testified, because his partner thought it "would not be wise to have stock floating around the street in Governor Sulzer's name." Otherwise, as is frequently the case in margin accounts, the stock might find its way into the collateral put up in the firm's transactions with banks.

Mr. Kresel, attorney for the impeachment managers, intimated that this "cross entry" was not made on Dec. 30, 1912, but at a later date. The books showed that on June 16, 1913, another "cross entry" had been made after a check for $5000, given by former Governor Spriggs of Montana, had been paid into the account and that, as in a regular speculative account, dividends on the stock had been credited and interest charged. These latter transactions reduced the governor's debit balance to about $35,000 and the second "cross entry" showed that on that date the firm had made the governor a new loan of $35,000.

It was shown that Sulzer had a total of $585,978 in margin transactions, the brokers "loaning" him money from time to time to cover shortages.

THE AUMULLER INQUEST

Crowded Courtroom Assured When Schmidt Appears Before Jury

New York, Oct. 1.—So many applications for admission to the inquest to be held on Friday to inquire into the death of Anna Aumuller, the victim of Hans Schmidt, have been received that Coroner Feinberg has decided to hold the hearing in one of the general sessions courtrooms.

A crowded courtroom is assured when Schmidt is called before the jury, which will be composed of men prominent in the business and financial affairs of the city. Theodore Shonts, president of the Interborough Rapid Transit company, will be foreman of the jury.

The inquest is expected to produce few new details to add to the sensational confession made by Schmidt.

Five Men Are Charged With Killing Cambridge Boy

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 1.—Charged with killing John Scannell, 17 years old, five men were in the district court before Judge Almy.

NEGROES MARCHED PAST BOYS' COFFINS

Compelled to Look at Bodies of Starters of Race Riot

Harriston, Miss., Oct. 1.—Silent from fear of the living, not awe of the dead, 2000 negroes, comprising practically all of the negro population of this vicinity, were compelled to pass in line before the coffins in which lay two members of their race who were lynched.

The lynched men were the two Jones brothers who started the race riot that resulted in a total of twelve deaths and sixteen wounded.

The whole countryside is still armed. Charged with being the prime plotter, Maggie Jones, mother of the Jones boys, was arrested at Port Gibson, twenty miles away. She is charged with having bought the cocaine that crazed her sons.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE RECALLED

Long String of Cavalrymen Pass Through Shenandoah Valley

Winchester, Va., Oct. 1.—Historic Shenandoah valley witnessed scenes which recalled war days, as a line of cavalrymen fully three miles long, riding two abreast, wended their way over the country roads, starting on their long march across country to Washington.

The troopers, comprising the Tenth, Eleventh and Fifteenth regiments of the United States cavalry, had been in camp near here for several months, working out war problems in accordance with a program of the general staff of the army.

Camp was broken yesterday. Several days will be occupied in the march to Washington, where it is expected they will be reviewed by President Wilson.

HIS OWN CHIEF COUNSEL

Thaw Will Dictate to His Attorneys In Fight For Liberty

Concord, N. H., Oct. 1.—Harry K. Thaw has decided that hereafter he will be the dictator in his fight for liberty, that he will decide upon his own actions, that he will be his own chief of counsel and that he will lay down to the attorneys in his employ the course of action to be taken.

In other words, Thaw has taken away from his counsel the direction of the case, and hereafter it will be his wits against those of his old enemy, William T. Jerome.

WEDDING AT WOLLASTON

Lois Akers Calderwood Bride of John G. Allan

Relatives and friends to the number of fifty were present Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Horace W. Richmond, at 105 Brook street, Wollaston, when Miss Lois Akers Calderwood, a daughter of Mrs. Annie M. Calderwood of Dorchester and a sister of Mrs. Richmond, became the bride of Mr. John George Allan, a son of Mrs. Isabella Allan also of Dorchester.

The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock and was performed by Rev. Frederick Steenstra, rector of St. Chrysostom's church, the bride being given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Mr. Horace W. Richmond.

Miss Annie E. Visall of Winthrop was the maid of honor and Miss Virginia Richmond the flower girl. The best man was Mr. Austin Bittenbender of Boston. The ushers were two Quincy High school young men, Paul A. Richmond and Theodore R. Higgins.

The ceremony took place in the living room, in an alcove banked with white asters, the bride entering on the arm of Mr. Richmond, preceded by the flower girl and the maid of honor, being met in the alcove by the groom and best man.

As the bridal party entered the inspiring strains of Lohengrin's wedding march resounded through the house, being played by Miss Sarah Lynch, pianist, Miss Annie H. Leonard and Mr. Thornton Walter violinists. Just before the ceremony Miss Lynch sang, "Oh Promise Me."

The bride's gown was a silk crepe with satin and lace, her veil being caught up with a spray of orange blossoms, which had been sent on from California for the wedding. The maid of honor wore a gown of embroidered white voile.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond and pearl pendant and chain, and to the best man a diamond pin. The brides gift to the maid of honor was pearl beads.

The decorations at the home were green and white in the parlor, and living room, yellow in the dining room, and autumn colors in the hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Allan received many handsome gifts of cut glass, china and pieces of gold.

They left immediately after the reception and after a brief wedding trip will make their home at 10 Lincoln street, Dorchester, where they will be at home after Nov. 1.

Elizabeth Ford of New York is the guest of Mrs. Marjorie Milne and family of 28 Glencoe place.

Prince John, Son of the King of England.

© by American Press Association.

Prince John, the handsome boy here pictured, is the youngest son of King George V. of England. The little prince was born eight years ago, and the photograph was taken on the anniversary of his last birthday. He has four brothers and one sister and, being the baby, is the pet of the family. His sister, Princess Mary, is devoted to her small brother and spends much of her spare time in aiding him in his studies and as his playmate. Princess Mary is in her seventeenth year and is the third child of King George and Queen Mary. The two boys next older than Prince John are Prince Henry, thirteen years old, and Prince George, who is eleven.

The Kaiser's Meal.

About twenty-five years ago, when the German emperor was traveling in Austria, he found himself very hungry after a hunting trip miles from his destination and food.

"What shall we do?" asked his majesty.

His companion, Count Dolma, remembered a farmhouse not very far away.

"Yes; follow me," he answered, and in a few minutes they stood within the old farmhouse.

"Well, my good woman, what can you give us?" asked the emperor.

The woman placed bread, milk, butter and sausage on the table.

"Milk, bread, butter and sausage!" exclaimed his majesty. "Why, this is a feast fit to set before the king!"

He and his companion started in, and the woman had the satisfaction of seeing her food quickly disappear. Finally the emperor said, "My good woman, take this and go and buy yourself more sausage and more bread," and he placed a golden double eagle in her outstretched hand. "And," he continued, "if you happen to see a cheap picture of the kaiser buy it so that you can point to it and say, 'I once saved that poor man from starvation.'"

Riddles.

Why should an architect make a good actor? Because he is an adept at drawing houses.

When was wit a father? When a pun became apparent (a parent).

Why is an elephant different from other animals? Because if you cut off his head and tail you don't take it from his trunk.

What sea would a seasick person like to be on? Adriatic (a dry attic).

What kind of a cat lives in a library? A cat-alogue.

Why are these riddles like monkeys? Because they are farfetched and full of nonsense.

The Word Fiasco.

When a play or performance turns out badly or any cherished plan meets with failure we call it a fiasco. Fiasco is the Italian word for bottle or flask, and at first glance the word bottle seems hardly to fit the meaning we imply. But the use of this word came about logically enough.

When the Venetian glassblowers, in making their beautiful glassware, detected a flaw in the bulb they would convert it into an ordinary bottle or fiasco. In this way the word bottle came to be synonymous with failure.

Not Magical.

How can you draw a circle around a person placed in the center of a room so that he will not be able to jump out of it, though his legs should be free?

Draw it around his body.

We'll All Drink Tea!
(Only water tea, of course!)

I.

Polly, put the kettle on,
We'll all drink tea.
The tiny table now is set
As nicely as can be.

II.

The dollies and the Teddy bear
And Punch and Judy, too,
Have been invited all to come.
I think they will, don't you?

—Philadelphia Record.

CONFER OVER NEW HAVEN

Foss and Macleod Plan Investigation of Expense Account

Boston, Oct. 1.—Chairman Macleod of the public service commission held a conference with Governor Foss for the purpose of discussing the pending investigation of the New Haven expense accounts as demanded by the governor and also the matter of the New Haven bond issue.

Macleod was closeted with the governor for more than an hour. At the conclusion of the conference he refused to discuss the details of the visit.

"I will say," said Macleod, "that the commission will begin this week to lay our plans for the investigation as asked for by Governor Foss."

PUT $100,000 INTO RAILWAY STOCKS

Former Chief Whip of British Liberals Figures In Scandal

London, Oct. 1.—An article published in the National Review charges that while the ministers were engaged in setling the coal strike in 1912, Lord Murray of Elibank, then chief whip of the Liberal party, was investing more than $100,000 in home railway stocks which were likely to be affected materially by the negotiations.

L. J. Maxie, the writer of the article, declares that when the whole story is told surprise will be expressed that the criminal law has not been set in motion. Murray had previously tried to hide the Marconi deal.

Murray has been inaccessible, having been in South America since last January negotiating for valuable concessions for the Pearson company, in which he is partner, in Ecuador and Colombia.

LIGHTNING COOKS EGGS

One Feature of Day of Freakish Weather In Chicago

Chicago, Oct. 1.—September, which has been marked by unusual fickleness that ran the entire gamut from prostrating heat to frost, wound up with a fog of great density and a weird thunderstorm.

The fog made traffic dangerous and difficult, but was hailed with delight by the great criminal element, which worked overtime robbing pedestrians and residences.

One of the features of the freakish day was a bolt of lightning which thoroughly scrambled eggs when it darted down a tree and demolished the wagon of an egg merchant who had taken refuge there.

BODY BURIED IN BOX

Police In Illinois Town Have Death Mystery on Their Hands

Paris, Ills., Oct. 1.—The police face a murder mystery in the discovery of a woman's body in a box buried a few feet below the surface of the ground.

The crude grave was found by workmen digging for a basement in the best residence section of Paris. The woman's skull has been crushed and her body doubled in order to fit into the box.

A coroner's physician said it was impossible to determine how long the woman had been dead.

EASY FOR QUINCY HIGH

Roll Up Big Score of 41 Points

And Shut Out the Weymouths

Quincy High played its first home game on the Merrymount oval Tuesday afternoon and overwhelmingly defeated the Weymouth High school 41 to 0. Rooters on the side lines were not too numerous and the cheering expected to float across football fields was an absent feature.

Although Quincy is developing into a speedy eleven the defeat of Weymouth cannot be taken with any such assurance, since the visitors were outweighed as much as 20 pounds in some cases and the defense was like paper on line bucks or skin tackle plays. The superior work of the "young men" of Quincy High compared to the "boys" from Weymouth was unquestioned, but hardly a fair comparison from a sporting standpoint.

Not one of Quincy's men came from the field suffering from even a minor injury, and Talbot who gave his ankle a slight twist and was obliged to retire was the only visitor that was at all injured.

Weymouth's few opportunities to rush the ball were practically devoted to mass plays, while the Quincy men kept their game wide open most of the time.

Quincy played nearly every man at some period and it was not unusual for a man to be sent in and withdrawn inside of three minutes and then be returned. In this way aspirants for the local aggregation were trotted and tumbled but only a few had a real chance of displaying football ability because Weymouth's aggressiveness was not active enough to call for a rapid fire defense.

Of the visitors, Ries, left end, played probably the most spectacular all round game that will be witnessed on the oval this season. A former Worcester academy man, and a seasoned football veteran, he was in every play regardless of its formation, and three quarters of the time was the man downing the runner. By the third period his fighting spirit was gaining the recognition of the fans and they unbent enough at the finish to give him a cheer.

Paul Larkin continued his fine football work and gained nearly 200 yards for Quincy. He succeeded in making one touchdown but his brilliant rushing was the means of often placing the ball in a position where the other backs could cross the line. He figured in long runs, sensational tackles and forward passes from the beginning and easily outshone his teammates throughout his brilliant playing. The backfield worked well and furnished good interference where necessary.

The game was free from penalties, only two violations being seen by the officials, and five yards penalties were imposed in both cases on Quincy. The fumbling was not so pronounced as in the Newton game, but still there is a chance for improvement. Most of the fumbling occurred after a man was tackled, the ball on kickoffs and punts and forward passes being well handled.

The Quincy High men are rapidly rounding into shape but some snappy practicing must be done before Saturday when they travel to Medford for a hard game.

The line-up was:

CLAN McGREGOR LEAGUE

The McLanes and Thompsons Score Victories

The Clan McGregor league, which opened auspiciously on the Coliseum alleys a week ago, held their second roll-off Tuesday night and the interest the league has aroused since its organization, can best be realized by a visit to the alleys and listening to the band of lusty followers cheering their favorites.

Some of the bowlers who have not struck their gait were the means of holding their teams down and in some cases prevented the netting of even one point. This was particularly true of the O'Neils who failed to score against the McLanes.

Peter Morton, one of the seasoned bowlers of the city and a man who can be reckoned on at all times made high single, getting 114 in his second string. His other two were not so good and his total reached only 244.

Dell of the McLane's was the best all round performer of the evening, rolling three over 100 and making the pretty total of 314.

J. Raleigh of the O'Neil's was low man of the evening, his 67 being the smallest made. The over 100 men were Nichol 107, 103, Morton 114, Esson 109, Dell 106, 101, 107, Stewart 103, Dunbar 103.

THOMPSON'S WIN.

The Thompsons beat Mavers 3 to 1, both teams tieing the second and third strings, an unusual coincidence.

A FEDERATION HYMN.

The music department of the General Federation of Women's clubs has offered a prize for a Federation hymn. The committee appointed to decide the contest is Mrs. Alice Williams Brotherton, Miss Mary C. Gallegher, Mrs. McLean Blair, the two latter being former presidents of the Cincinnati Woman's club. The qualities which the committee believe should enter into the compositions are:

High thought fitted to the theme.
Perfect metre.
Suitable words.
Dignity.

There have been already 22 manuscripts submitted, but none have the essentials for a great choral for convention use, therefore the contest will remain open until a Federation hymn is produced that shall meet the approval of the judges.

The name of the author of words or composer of words must be enclosed in sealed envelope accompanying manuscripts directed to Mrs. Lawrence Maxwell, Cincinnati O., chairman department of music, General Federation of Women's clubs.

The committee of the department of music will award a prize of $50 each for words and music to successful competitors. It is desired that the music should be written in two or three parts for women's voices.

POINTS FOR PRESIDENT.

Some hints for the government of the president of a club—her self-government—which are of interest to any woman who is likely at any time to have to preside over a meeting are given in the Woman Citizen as follows:

A president should rise when addressing the club, to state a motion, and to take a vote, to introduce any one, and to offer a recommendation. During a discussion she should remain seated, for always, if she stands it appears to hurry any one who is taking part in a program or debate. She should avoid bobbing up and down. Better break a rule and remain seated than rise too often.

A president should never use the pronoun "I". She should refer to herself as "your president" "your presiding officer" or "the president of the —— club" (naming the organization.) She should refer to herself even in this way only when it is unavoidable, and she should refer to the club instead whenever possible. She should, of all things, be deliberate. Never rush. She must be calm, for she can never keep a meeting in order if she is herself in disorder. She should be prompt and businesslike. She should protect the club from bores, and when the time arrives for adjournment, she should say so, and if the club wishes to vote a longer session that is its pleasure.

A club president does not look dignified if she stands and taps and taps her table with her gavel to keep order. She should bring down the gavel as though she knew it was the symbol of the club's authority gently and firmly, and if its mandates are not obeyed instantly she should use as much force as is required to attract attention.

There is one reward that all presidents are sure of, if they do all things the best they may—they learn a lot and they can never go backward. They will always realize their development and that is a good bit in this world. After a couple of terms as president a member is just ready to enter upon her duties as a member of the organization. She has had the proper training and she is now ready to be a member.

SHOT TO DEATH IN HIS HOME

Wife In Room With Farmer When He Is Slain

LIFE IS TAKEN AS HE SLEEPS

Woman Says Masked Men Overpowered Her With Chloroform and Stole $80—Police and State Authorities Suspect Tragedy Which Will Create Sensation In New Hampshire

Freedom, N. H., Oct. 1.—Edward A. Shackford, a well-to-do farmer living in the north side of this town, was murdered by two masked men, who shot him to death while he was sleeping.

His wife, who occupied the same room, says she was rendered unconscious by the men, who placed a handkerchief saturated with chloroform over her face and held her down. Afterward, she declares, the men robbed the house, securing $80.

But the police and state authorities, who began an investigation at once, believe a mystery surrounds the tragedy which, when laid bare, will create the greatest sensation ever experienced in this section.

The first known of the tragedy was when Mrs. Shackford came to the house of a neighbor just after daylight and told the story.

A posse was immediately formed and a search of this section made by the men and officers for the two men described by the woman. She was breathless when she arrived at the farmhouse and collapsed after reciting her story.

The town was aroused by the announcement of the crime, and every available man volunteered for service in aiding in the apprehension of the criminals.

State authorities soon began to arrive and Attorney General Tuttle with Coroner Hobbs started at once a hearing. This was held at the home of the murdered man. Several witnesses were examined, mostly neighbors of the Shackfords.

The nature of the inquiries at the inquest led to the belief that the state authorities are not wholly satisfied with the story which Mrs. Shackford has told regarding the murder.

Shackford was 35 years old. He and his wife were the only occupants of the house, which is situated in a lonely section of the town.

CAUSE IS UNDETERMINED

Verdict of Coroner on Binghamton Factory Holocaust

Binghamton, N. Y., Oct. 1.—"The cause has not been determined," is the verdict of Coroner Seymour regarding the Binghamton Clothing company fire, which resulted in the loss of thirty-two lives on July 22 last. The decision includes several facts which appeared to the coroner to be unusual.

"The building was twenty years old," he says, "the interior was of soft wood and varnished, the material manufactured therein was of highly inflammable composition, and an old wooden stairway was in use for the entire four stories, and above the first floor but one stairway communicated with the remainder of the building." He also sets forth that the fire escapes were inadequate.

LODGE IS IMPROVING

Some Danger of Peritonitis, However, Continues to Exist

Nahant, Mass., Oct. 1.—Although doctors attending Senator Lodge admit there is some danger of peritonitis, they express themselves satisfied with his present condition.

The senator slept several times during yesterday, and last night, according to a statement given out by his wife, was free from fever for the first time since the operation performed Friday for the removal of a gastric ulcer. He was able at that time to take a moderate amount of food.

Bulletins given out by the family and the physicians during the day were encouraging and indicated improvement on the part of the patient.

MRS. MELCHER DEPORTED

Woman Who Chased Austrian Prince an Undesirable Alien

New York, Oct. 1.—Mrs. Clara Melcher, the Vienese laundress who says Prince Stanislaus Sulkowiski promised to marry her only to jilt her when she followed him to this country, was taken aboard the steamship Kronprinz Wilhelm for deportation.

She was brought here from California as an undesirable alien after her pursuit of the prince. He subsequently married Miss Marie L. Freese, a California girl of wealth.

Fourteen Killed In Storm

Cherbere, France, Oct. 1.—A terrific thunderstorm which raged for twelve hours spread death and ruin throughout the city. Fourteen persons are known to have been killed and thirty injured, but there are many missing.

Falls Dead on School Stairs

Dedham, Mass., Oct. 1.—Mrs. Bertha Heald, wife of Principal Heald of the Dedham grammar school, became faint while walking down the school stairs, fell and died five minutes later.

ELLIOTT'S PROMISE

New Haven Road Will Confine Activities to Railroad Business

Boston, Oct. 1.—Howard Elliott, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, speaking at the banquet of welcome tendered him by the Boston Chamber of Commerce last night, gave the solemn assurance that the New Haven, in the future, would spend what money it raised for the betterment of the property now in its possession, that it would confine its activities to transportation, and that it would not make any effort to discourage the establishment of a steamship line from Boston through the Panama canal and to other parts of the world.

Elliott's statement was generally taken as a formal announcement that the New Haven will abandon its plans for the further purchase of trolleys in western Massachusetts, and that it will see to it that charges made in the past that it has sought to stifle the maritime development of Boston will, in the future, have no ground of truth.

FERNCROFT MEN GUILTY

Salem, Mass., Oct. 1.—Trial of the Ferncroft Inn cases came to an abrupt end in the Salem district court, when Judge Sears found all the parties guilty and imposed sentences from which they appealed to the superior court.

Harry K. Mansfield, the proprietor, charged with maintaining a common nuisance, was sentenced to three months in the house of correction and fined $500; John D. Mitchell, charged in three counts with selling liquor, was given a two months' sentence in the house of correction and fined $100; Giles Morrill, assisting in keeping a gambling house, $50 fine; Charles Johnson, common nuisance, $50 fine, and the Ferncroft Club corporation, liquor nuisance, fine $50.

ENGINEERS VOTING ON STRIKE QUESTION

Grand Officers to Count Ballot on New Haven Road

New Haven, Oct. 1.—Members of the adjustment committee of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers have reassembled here. They have been traveling over the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad distributing ballots on which the engineers are voting on the question of a strike, if deemed necessary.

The ballots will not all be returned here until Thursday, when the count will be made by the grand officers of the brotherhood. Later in the week it is expected a statement will be issued bearing upon the situation as it develops in light of the ballot.

SUED BY CHORUS GIRL

New York State Senator Charged With Breach of Promise

New York, Oct. 1.—That State Senator William J. Heffernan gave her a promise of marriage and a ring on the evening of Feb. 19 last, but next day took the ring from her and thereafter failed to keep the promise, is alleged in the complaint of Miss Bisnett, the chorus girl, who has begun an action for breach of promise, demanding $25,000.

The summons and complaint were served on Heffernan, now in Albany, where the young woman recently was playing in a musical comedy.

Miss Bisnett alleges that several times the senator, who was married a week ago to a young woman in Brooklyn, promised to marry her. The ring he gave as a token of the engagement, she states, he afterward "took from the plaintiff by force."

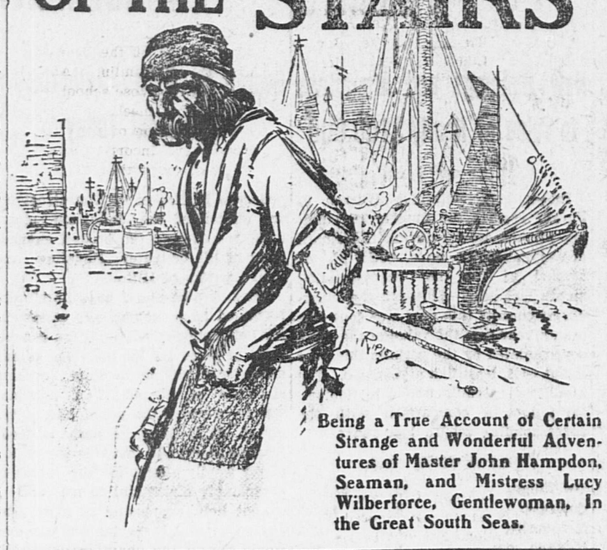
THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

CHAPTER II.

Wherein I Break the News.

"MASTER HAMPDON," said Mistress Lucy at last, "since nobody else seems to be about, suppose you attempt the task."

She loosed her little foot from the stirrup and thrust it out toward me. I am nothing of a horseman. I was very early sent to sea, and I have a sailor's awkwardness with horses. Naturally, I did not know how a lady should be dismounted. I stepped over to her, seized her about the waist with both hands, lifted her bodily from the saddle and set her down gently on the gravel. She looked at me very queerly and gave a faint shriek as her weight came upon my arms. Indeed, I have no doubt that I held her tightly.

"I dare say there is not a man among my father's friends or mine who could have done that, Master Hampdon," said she sniffing a little and looking flushed and excited.

"'Tis no great feat," said I stupidly enough. "I have lifted bigger"—

"Women!" flashed out Mistress Lucy, slightly frowning up at me.

"Things," I replied.

"It amazes me," she said. "I have never been dismounted that way before. However, you always were stronger than most men, even as a boy. There seems to be no groom about. The place is wretchedly served. Will you take my horse to the stables?" she asked me.

There was a certain flattery to me in that request. If I had not shown her how strong I was in all probability she would have thrown me the bridle and, with a nod toward the stables to indicate her wishes, would have left me without a word.

"Have you seen my father this morning?" she asked as I paused before her.

As luck would have it, while she spoke a sleepy groom came round the house. I flung the reins to him, bade him take the horse away and turned to my lady.

"Madam," said I, my voice thickening and choking, "I have seen your noble father this morning."

There was something in my voice and manner, great stupid fool that I was, that instantly apprised her that something was wrong. With one swift step she was by my side.

"Where?"

"In the spinney."

"What does he there at this hour?"

"Nothing."

"I don't understand."

"Sir Geoffrey."—I began racking my brains what to say next and how to convey the awful tidings.

She made a sudden step or two in my direction, then turned toward the coppice, her suspicions fully aroused.

But now I ventured upon a familiarity—that is, I turned and caught her arm.

"I will see him myself," she began resolutely.

"Madam," said I swiftly, "you cannot."

"Master Hampdon," she said, "something dreadful has happened."

I nodded.

This was breaking it gently with a vengeance, but what could I do? She always did twist me around her little finger, and I was always more or less helpless before her. I admit that. I am still, for that matter, although she will not have it so.

"What is it? Is my father—what is he doing in the spinney? He never rises at this hour?"

"Mistress Wilberforce," I said, "you come of a brave stock, and the time for your courage is now."

"Is my father dead?" she asked, after a sudden, awful stillness.

I nodded while she stared at me like one possessed.

"Killed in a duel?" she whispered.

I shook my head.

"Mistress," said I, "he died by his own hand."

"Oh, my God!" she cried, clapping her hands to her face and reeling back.

I caught her about the waist. She had no knowledge that she was held or supported. Of course, all her interest and attention were elsewhere. She did not weep or give way otherwise. She was a marvelous woman, and her self mastery and control amazed me, for I knew how she had loved her father.

"When? Why?" she gasped out.

"I was early awake," I answered—and I did not tell her it was my habit to see her gallop off for that morning ride—"and I heard a shot in the spinney. I hurried there and found Sir Geoffrey"—

"Let us go to him."

"No," said I. And I marveled to find myself assuming the direction as if I had been on the deck of my own ship. "that you cannot. It is no sight for your eyes. I was coming to the castle to tell you and to send the servants to fetch him. Meanwhile you go into the hall and summon your women and"—

"I will do what you say, Master Hampdon," she whispered very small, very forlorn, very despairing. "My father! My dear, good father!"

She turned, and I, still supporting her, we mounted the steps of the terrace. Suddenly she stopped, freed herself and faced me.

"Lord Luftdon and the Duke of Arcester," she explained, "they are staying at the castle. They must be notified."

"Madam," said I, "they already know it."

"And why, then, have they left the duty of telling me to you? Where are they? Summon them at once!"

"They are gone!" I blustered out, my rage at the duke reviving.

"Gone!"

"Having won everything from Sir Geoffrey, they have left him alone in his death!" I retorted bitterly.

"Impossible!"

"I ordered them off the place," I said bluntly.

"You?" she flashed out imperiously. "And who gave you the power to dismiss—my father's friends?"

"I heard what they said, being hidden myself."

"And what did they say?"

"It concerned you, mistress."

"The Duke of Arcester," she promptly began, "is my betrothed husband. I will hear no calumny against him."

"Madam," I said, "your engagement is broken."

"Broken!" she cried in amaze.

"The duke declared himself too poor to marry the penniless child of a disgraced man—his words, not mine, believe me."

She turned so white and reeled so that I caught her again. I even shook her while I cried roughly:

"You must not give way."

"It is a lie, a dastardly lie!" she panted out at last.

"It is God's truth," said I. "He repudiates you."

"No man could be so base," she persisted. "He swore that he loved me."

"I would it were otherwise, madam, but he is gone, leaving that message for you."

"And he made you his messenger?"

"I volunteered."

"Why? Why?"

"Because he is a low coward."

"And you stood by and let him insult the your patron's daughter, your mistress?"

I told her what had happened in the

"In all that," she said in a certain strained way, "you acted as a loyal servitor of the house, and I thank you."

"I am to give orders to have his baggage sent to the inn at once," said I.

"And Lord Luftdon?"

"He came to your defense as if he were still the gentleman he had once been. But he goes hence with his friend. His baggage will also follow him."

"I will attend to that for them both," said Mistress Lucy, growing strangely and firmly resolved again, and even I could guess the tremendous constraint she put upon herself. "Enough of Arcester. I am well rid of him and of his companions. Summon the servants to bring my father's body to the castle. I suppose the crowner will have to be notified."

"Yes," said I; "I will attend to that."

"Of all my friends," said she piteously, "you seem to be the only one left, Master Hampdon."

"I have been your faithful servant always, Mistress Lucy," I answered as I ushered her into the hall.

STONE NOT A CANDIDATE

above no nomination papers have as yet been taken out.

As for Councilman Joseph L. Whiton becoming a candidate there has never been any foundation for the rumor that he would be or was trying to be induced to become a candidate. Councilman Whiton stated positively several weeks ago that he should not be a candidate for the mayoralty nomination, but that he would seek the nomination for the City Council, and this he has already done. Councilman Whiton believes that whoever holds the office of Mayor should give the greater part of his time to the duties of the office, and his business therefore would not permit his becoming a candidate.

There is plenty of timber in the Republican party for the Mayoralty, but whether the voters are willing to give Mr. Johnson the nomination without contest or whether some other candidate will appear is at present problematical.

As for the Democratic candidate it seems to be pretty well understood now that Mayor Stone has withdrawn, that Dr. John H. Ash will enter the contest for the nomination. As Dr. Ash is an office holder under Mayor Stone, he believed in loyalty to the Mayor that he should not enter the arena against Mayor Stone if he again decided to try for the nomination.

WATERWAYS CONVENTION.

Members of the Quincy Board of Trade are invited to attend the Waterways convention to be held under the auspices of the Harbor and Land Commission and Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange at Boston on Monday October 6, at room 431 State House. A morning session at 10.30, and afternoon session at 2 o'clock, and an evening session with dinner at 6 P. M. at Young's Hotel. The price of tickets for the dinner $2.50 each.

At these meetings speakers from the various sections of the State will address the convention, and at the evening session at Young's Hotel Congressman J. Hampton Moore of Pennsylvania and George Humphrey Small of North Carolina, his excellency Gov. Eugene N. Foss, Mayor John F. Fitzgerald will be speakers.

FUNERAL OF MR. LEWIS.

The funeral of George R. Lewis of Wollaston, who died suddenly at his camp at Ballardvale, was held this morning from the home of his mother, Mrs. James H. Lewis of 33 Park street. Services were conducted by Rev. Edward A. Chase of Beverly, formerly pastor of the Wollaston Congregational church. Interment was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery. Mr. Lewis was a graduate of Quincy High School class of 1898, and after receiving his degree from the mining engineering department at Harvard University went to Mexico where he gained much prominence through his profession.

NOMINATION PAPERS.

The only nomination papers taken out since Tuesday noon were those by Charles C. McCue. He took out papers for councilman from Ward Four and for councilman at large, but did not state who they were for.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Miss Lona Schatzel of West Quincy who died at the Quincy City Hospital Tuesday evening, was the second member of the Y. F. K. Girls' club to respond to the final summons within a week. Her life long chum and companion, Miss Annie Ogle, died Friday after a long illness and she was at her bedside.

Miss Schatzel was removed to the hospital Monday afternoon, after being taken seriously ill the previous day. She was operated upon for an intestinal obstruction and failed to recover. She was a very popular resident of Ward Four and has served as secretary of the Y. F. K. club for several months.

She is survived by two brothers, Frederick and William, and four sisters, three of whom Margaret, Julia and Elizabeth live in Quincy. She is the daughter of Mrs. Fred Schatzel.

ACCIDENT.

A tightly wound brake handle, suddenly released, struck Edward Myatt, a motorman on the East Weymouth line, on the right elbow Tuesday afternoon, and he was unable to run his car to City Square. Joseph Delorey, another employee was on the car and relieved Mr. Myatt from duty. He is confined to his room at the Hancock house today and is suffering severe pain. This is his first accident in 18 years service with the road.

THE BROKEN ENGAGEMENT

George H. Brown Authorizes a Statement Today

George H. Brown of Elm street today authorized the following statement relatives to the broken engagement of his daughter Madeline and Paul Zerrahn of Milton.

"Mrs. Brown and I have heretofore refrained from making any statement for publication concerning the cancelment of plans for the marriage of our daughter Madeline to Paul Zerrahn, since we considered it a personal matter in which the public had no interest. It is therefore perhaps needless for me to add that this discussion of my family affairs in the press is exceedingly distasteful to me and I cannot help expressing surprise that any editor of a respectable newspaper would permit the unauthorized publication of my daughter's picture. However, since so many misleading statements have been printed, I feel compelled in justice to my family to make public these facts:

"Very recent disclosures concerning Paul Zerrahn's business affairs at Lowell were of such a serious nature that Mrs. Brown and I decided that the marriage could not take place and that the engagement should be terminated.

"Our views were fully concurred in by our daughter, as well as by the young man's parents.

"The alleged illness of the young man, which has been given wide publicity, has had nothing to do with our action in this matter.

"In view of the assurance this morning by Mr. Zerrahn, Sr., that his son had left this vicinity to rehabilitate himself and will not return, I have agreed not to make any further public statement of the affair, and I trust the newspapers will not respect our wishes and permit the matter to be closed with the publication of this statement."

BLISS—McKEON.

George H. Bliss, one of the popular members of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus and Miss Margaret McKeon of Newton Highlands, were married at the Church of the Sacred Heart Tuesday morning by Rev. Fr. Daniel Riordan, the pastor. The ceremony followed a low mass which was attended by many relatives and friends. Miss Alice McKeon, a cousin of the bride was bridesmaid and John T. Caine of Quincy was the best man. Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride after which Mr. and Mrs. Bliss left on a short trip. They will reside in Neponset.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Mrs. Bertha L. Heald, wife of Frank C. Heald of Dedham, died suddenly on Tuesday. Mr. Heald formerly taught at Braintree and Weymouth. Mrs. Heald was 36 years of age and the daughter of Rev. Albert Leach of Vasselboro, Maine.

BRIEFS

The new telephone booth at the Norfolk Downs station is a much needed improvement.

Miss Hellena Earle and nephew Fred Sutermeister, have returned from a trip to Niagara Falls and Buffalo.

Seats are beginning to be at a premium at the Sunday evening preaching service at the Wollaston Methodist Episcopal church. The new chorus choir was greatly appreciated last Sunday evening.

All the technicalities of the law cannot cover up the conspicuous fact that Harry Thaw was acquitted of murder only because he was adjudged insane; that he was committed to Matteawan because he was insane; that within a few months a judge, after a careful hearing, has decided that he is still insane; and that it is only because he is rich and so can buy privileges that a poor man could not get that he is not back in Matteawan today.—Somerville Journal.

DUTY AVERAGES 26 PERCENT

House Leader Underwood Declares Rates Are Lowest In Seventy-Five Years—Expected to Yield Surplus of $18,000,000 Over Estimated Government Expenditures In 1915

Washington, Oct. 1.—The Democratic tariff bill left the house last night on what the party leaders hoped would be its last journey to the senate. After many hours of debate the house adopted the main conference agreement on the bill, 251 to 103, almost a strict party vote, and by this action gave its indorsement to everything in the measure—except the cotton futures tax.

At the end of a short, but bitter, fight that followed the adoption of the report, Representative Underwood succeeded in carrying through the Smith-Lever cotton futures tax amendment by a vote of 171 to 161, Democrats and Republicans alike voting on this without regard to party.

The cotton futures tax question now rests entirely with the senate. The house concurred in the Clarke amendment put into the tariff bill by the senate, but added the Smith-Lever-Underfood plan as another amendment.

Unless the senate will accept this change, which has the indorsement of the president, the whole cotton futures plan will have to be considered in the joint conference committee and again reported to both houses.

"The rates of the tariff bill, as it comes back to the house for approval, proposes a lower taxation than any tariff bill in the last three-quarters of a century," said Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the house, in the opening speech in support of the conference report on the tariff bill.

"The bill, as it is now before the house, is lower in its rates than either the bill that passed the house or the bill that passed the senate, for the house conferees accepted all but three or four of the reductions made by the senate, while the senate receded from one-half of its increases.

"This tariff bill, with its 26 percent average, is almost as low as the famous Walker tariff, which had low duties on liquors and tobacco. Besides its great reductions on articles of general use this bill places many of the necessities of life on the free list, or gives them very low rates of tariff."

Underwood's statement was greeted with applause from the crowded Democratic side of the house. In contrast with with the average tariff of 26 per cent ad val 'em in the Underwood-Simmons bill, he said the existing Payne law has an average of over 40 percent and the Wilson bill passed b the last Democratic administration had an average of over 39 percent.

The revenue under the new law, Underwood said, would yield a surplus of $18,000,000 over estimated government expenditures in 1915. He gave the house the treasury expert's figures, showing that the total government revenue in 1915 would be $1,026,000,000; expenditures, $1,008,000,000; surplus, $18,000,000.

"After three years of battle, today the Democratic party is prepared to keep its pledges to the American people," continued Underwood. "No matter what criticisms our adversaries may have of this bill, no matter whether they believe it wise or workable, no man can deny that the representatives of the American people constituting the Democratic party in congress have kept every pledge made four years ago and two years ago in reference to the reduction of tariff taxation."

NEW CHILD LABOR LAW

Lawrence People Think It a Hardship on Poor Families

Lawrence, Mass., Oct. 1.—Many persons who spoke at a hearing here last night expressed the opinion that the new child labor law would prove a hardship on poor families.

The hearing was given by a special committee of the state house of representatives appointed to investigate conditions surrounding the employment of women and children in this commonwealth. About 150 men and women and a number of boys were present. Of the numerous speakers, only half a dozen favored the law.

Mayor Scanlon declared the law ought to be repealed, claiming it makes paupers out of industrious families.

—The American Practitioner says this: A perpetual Sabbath is being celebrated on earth. This is not generally known, for most people think that the day they call Sunday is the only one celebrated. The Greeks observe Monday; the Persians, Tuesday; the Assyrians, Wednesday; the Egyptians, Thursday; the Turks, Friday, the Hebrews and several Christian sects, Saturday, and the Christians, Sunday. So, really, it is Sabbath every day to someone on earth.

New Members Added at Meeting of Board of Trade

A large gathering met at the Board of Trade rooms Wednesday evening and enjoyed a solid hour and one half lecture on South America by Col. Henry L. Kincaide, Quincy's "Live Wire" who was chairman of the Chamber of Commerce party which travelled through the Latin countries on a "business getting" tour. Colonel Kincaide talked rapidly and in a conversational tone, thoroughly covering points of intense interest. He was given a rising vote of thanks, and was congratulated by all.

NEW MEMBERS.

Before introducing Colonel Kincaide, President Hamilton received several reports from committees and Warren S. Parker, Richard Newcomb, F. D. Field, Jr., Thomas H. Irving, J. E. Allen, Louis E. Crosscup, F. E. Callahan and Frederick W. Porter were admitted to membership.

Frank Fessenden Crane reported that the Directors of the Port of Boston will give Quincy no part of the $9,000,000 appropriated for harbor development.

Joseph Walker of the Granite Manufacturers Association asked the Board of Trade to work with the association is presenting Quincy granite values to the Directors of Port in anticipation of the general use of the local product in Boston development.

John R. Richards, because of an injury to his knee was not present to report on electric rates and comfort station.

SIDEWALK WANTED.

A committee was appointed to act in conjunction with the Merchants Association to secure the repair of the sidewalk on the west side of Hancock street, between City Square and Elm street. The matter was presented by Colonel Kincaide who said is was in a deplorable condition, and asked each member to see his councilman and talk for an appropriation sufficient to do the work.

Fred F. Green said he objected to the board lobbying for the passage of money for a sidewalk, inasmuch as it was illegal to borrow money for repairs.

Colonel Kincaide in rebuttal strongly resented the word "lobbying," saying that the merchants wanted to see the city develop properly, and that one advantage to shoppers in Quincy would be a repair of a sidewalk which in spots is not only a menace but a disgrace. The committee appointed was not announced.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Col. Kincaide said that the strong lesson brought home in that Latin America is our natural tourist ground and that means the development of our business relations with South America if a merchant marine plies between the ports, and American banks with American boards of directors are introduced so the merchant can have protection in strenuous competition of the English and Germans. American gold is no good now but the English pound sterling is acceptable everywhere.

With the opening of the Panama canal, trade will be stimulated but this government has by no means overcome the intense feeling which exists on the East coast because the Columbian claims have not been settled. Teddy Roosevelt is "in bad" there because of the manner in which he seized the canal strip.

As to the defense of the canal, Col. Kincaide said the locks are hollow and damage by dynamite would be small and could quickly be repaired. The approaches are heavily planted with cactus, shrubbery and grasses and in the words of an officer "we can hold any enemy at bay for a week and by that time disease will take care of them as it did the French who started the canal."

Some of the most valuable concessions in South America are held by the Japanese but their invasion is resented by the inhabitants because they quickly break contracts. They are strongly intrenched in some business enterprise, however.

The Munroe Doctrine is a dead issue as far as the Argentine Republic Brazil and Chili are concerned, since each one is large enough to take care of itself, and it will be unfortunate for the United States should they attempt to enforce the principles of the doctrine.

In Buenos Aires, Colonel Kincaide, found city planning, occupying the attention of the electorate, and outside the city proper a community was being developed in this manner.

Immigration is welcomed and the sturdy Russian is going there in large numbers. The expenses are borne by the Latin governments who do all

HUNTING PARTY AT WOLLASTON

License Fee Required and Prizes Were Awarded

One of the most novel affairs held in Wollaston for some time took place at the residence of Charles F. Bryant of Beach street and James A. Boone of Muirhead street, Wednesday evening in the form of a hunting party attended by the members of the Women's Guild of the Park and Downs church with their husbands.

Guests arriving were first ushered into "Bryant's Lodge" where they had to register and pay the fee for a hunter's license. They were each given a miniature game bag and a toy pistol with caps. After the game laws were explained the chase began. All gathered outside the lodge and when the call to hunt was sounded by Bugler Pletsch the start was made for "Boone's preserves."

The "animals" were animal crackers, each with a certain number of pounds marked upon it. Those bagging the most pounds of game were awarded prizes. Mrs. William J. Colby received a picture of the hunt, and William Holmes another sporting picture, as first prizes for the women and men respectively.

Mrs. Celia Mackay and Mrs. James A. Boone in the garb of game wardens with large badges, billies and guns kept order and saw that the game laws were obeyed.

Rev. William B. Ayers, the pastor made a big hit when he appeared in a corduroy hunting jacket and cap, carrying a huge gun.

When the bugle call for return was sounded the guests, who numbered 80 gathered once more in the Bryant residence and enjoyed a chafing dish supper.

Those presiding over the eight chafing dishes were: Mrs. James D. Willson, Miss Marie Brown, Mrs. Arthur F. Capen, Mrs. W. O. Crane, Mrs. Fred Robinson, Mrs. William Holmes, Mrs. William J. Colby and Mrs. Bert Wiley. Mrs. Ella M. Brown assisted by Mrs. Charles F. Bryant, poured.

Bryant Lodge was most tastefully decorated with Japanese lanterns, autumn foliage, corn stalks, rifles, paddles, hunting pictures, etc., making the scene a very novel and attractive one.

OPEN AIR RALLY.

Ex-Representative James F. Carey, one of the leading socialists in the state addressed a small but enthusiastic gathering in City Square Wednesday evening. Mr. Carey had a permit and there was no police interference. The majority of the audience was composed of foreigners who are now affiliated with the local Socialist branches.

EX. MAYOR SHEA NOT A CANDIDATE

Charles H. Johnson Alone in Field As a Mayoralty Candidate

Several Rumors That Others May Enter

There does not seem to be any great rush to take out nomination papers by either party, although for that matter there is plenty of time yet. Since Wednesday noon Charles H. Johnson Herbert S. Barker might take out papers and enter the contest.

Among the Democrats no papers have as yet been taken out. It was announced officially, this morning, has taken out five more nomination papers for Republican candidate for Mayor making 25 in all. He also took out one paper for school committee at large and one paper for school committee from Ward Two. He did not state who these papers were for.

The Mayoralty question is practically the same as on Wednesday. That is no new candidate has taken out papers for the Republican nomination other than Mr. Johnson, although there was a rumor in certain quarters Wednesday night that ex-Councilman that ex-Mayor William T. Shea would under no condition enter the contest. This statement is official coming direct from the ex-Mayor.

Although it is quite well understood that Dr. John H. Ash will enter the field as the Democratic candidate, he has not as yet taken out papers. There was some talk Wednesday night that James H. Penniman, who was the party candidate last year might again enter the field this year.

Nomination papers must be filed before Oct. 25.

Mrs. Pankhurst has got over to this side, not having tried to make converts by sinking the ship.

The British feel pretty badly about that defeat of golf, but of course their men would have won if an indiscreet American spectator had not said "Hooray!"

Considering that the 345,682d installment of the Thaw serial has just been printed, the suspicion is dawning on some of the editors that it doesn't sell the papers as in the good old days.

President Wilson's former teachers called him "Tommy," and probably he would remove that apple from his desk if they told him to.

Mr. Taft has got rid of 80 pounds of flesh, but probably he still looks at a chair with some caution before sitting down in it.

The early frost that spoils the garden crop looks like a direct interposition of Providence to the small boy, saving him from further labor.

A new snake has been brought home by the Universtiy of Michigan expedition to South America, but the Prohibitionists say this country was previously supplied with all known varieties.

Although lights are now burning late in the college student quarters, the parents need not feel so much alarm for fear the boys are studying too hard.

President Wilson travelled down to Princeton to vote, but the time of many citizens is so valuable that they won't go to the polls unless you send a carriage for them.

It gives great pain to the college sophomore to put the freshman under the pump, but of course he feels under a moral obligation to do it for the new student's best good.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

Many sour tears have been shed by the English press, since the Olympic games of 1912 at Stockholm, over the crushing defeat of the British team. American sporting methods have been attacked, for professionalism and the "anything to win" spirit.

Even the yelling of our rooters, the badges they wore on their coats, the flags they waved in the breeze, looked crooked to these puritans of sport.

Within a few days this feeling has culminated in a statement that England would probably not take part again, or at best would merely send a delegation to the Berlin games of 1916, and then retire for good.

Yet English sportsmen originated the idea of professional coaches in their cricket matches. If the English athletes would devote to track athletics a portion of the vast effort that is put into rowing, they could develop a very creditable, possibly a winning team. But that would seem to their inflexible minds like an attack on the national constitution. Cricket has absorbed the attention of many athletes—a ladylike, graceful game, suggestive of green lawns and afternoon tea, rather than the dust and heat of the race track.

This question of professionalism is a mighty hard one to handle. The college fellow who is helping himself to an education by industrious ball playing during the summer, may be quite as fine a type as the wealthy young amateur who loafs on summer hotel piazzas during the intervals between college games.

At the same time the amateur rule is a reasonable one, as the average college man will be discouraged from participating if he must meet the competition of those who are making it a business.

The Olympic games have a very fine aspect as a class leveller. When the hotel bell-hop is associated in an enterprise equally with the millionaire's son, both learn things to their advantage. A similar advantage comes from the mingling of races and nations. England has always been a sporting nation. It is quite possible that the love of battle may yet drive away the sulks and lead the British cousins to stay in the Olympic circle.

LIFE IN PRISON NOT AGREEABLE

Osborne Feels Resentment at Being Caged

BREAKS TWO SIMPLE RULES

Gets Off With Reprimand, but May Be Disciplined Before He Leaves Auburn—Works at Basket-Making Bench With Highwayman Serving Four-Year Term

Auburn, N. Y., Oct. 2.—"I feel like wrenching out the bars and forcing my way into the open. It is not strange, I suppose—just the natural resentment of a human being caged."

With these words Thomas M. Osborne, philanthropist and chairman of the state commission of prison reform, described his emotions at Auburn prison. Osborne has chosen to live as a convict so that he may better understand the minds of the men whose condition he hopes to better.

The new "prisoner" has been reprimanded twice and may be disciplined before he leaves the institution. He "looked back" in the mess hall and was cautioned, and later while marching with his company got out of line in the half-hour exercise tour in the prison yard and again was rebuked.

Osborne's statement was made to E. R. Coss, secretary of the state commission, who had called at the prison to ask advice regarding imperative business now under consideration by the commission. Osborne consented to see him only after the nature of the business had been explained, and told Coss he would not consent to another call during his prison term. He refused to see reporters.

After the first day the prisoner was aroused with eighteen members of what is known as the "idle gang" soon after 6 o'clock and for two hours worked at pulling cars of coal.

After breakfast of cereal, coffee and bread, Osborne, or "Thomas Brown," as he is registered at the prison, was assigned to work in the broom and basket shop.

He worked at a bench with "Bean" Gilroy, a highwayman serving a four-year term. He learned the making of basket bases, and, according to one of the attendants, turned out two perfect waste basket bottoms as his day's work. "Bean" showed him some of the tricks of the craft, with no conversation.

TESTING SCHMIDT'S SANITY

Four Alienists Closeted With Murderer For Two Hours

New York, Oct. 2.—Rev. Hans Schmidt, confessed murderer of Anna Aumuller, was taken from his cell in the Tombs prison for an examination as to his sanity, conducted by four alienists in the office of District Attorney Whitman. Schmidt was closeted with the alienists for two hours, after which he was returned to his cell.

Another examination by the alienists will be held after the coroner's inquest into the death of Anna Aumuller. On the report they will make to the district attorney will rest the course to be taken in the prosecution of Schmidt.

POURING INTO TEXAS

Refugees Are Fleeing From Reign of Terror In Northern Mexico

Eagle Pass, Tex., Oct. 2.—With the federal troops threatening Piedgras Negras, the rebel capital, refugees are still pouring across the international border here.

The reign of terror in the vicinity of Sabainas was caused by the victorious northward march of Huerta's troops and the retreat of the rebels, who are pillaging the country.

American Consul Blocker urged all Americans to leave Piedgras Negras, fearing anti-American demonstrations if the constitutionalists are driven from the capital.

CHARGES PIGEONHOLED

Elections Committee Adjourns Without Acting on Whaley's Case

Washington, Oct. 2.—After examining witnesses brought to support the charge that Representative Whaley of the First South Carolina district had spent large sums unlawfully to obtain his nomination, the house elections committee decided to adjourn until December.

It was said at the Capitol that this meant the committee would make no further inquiry and take no action on the charges, filed originally with Speaker Clark by Mayor Grace of Charleston.

Child Crushed by Elevator

Malden, Mass., Oct. 2.—James Watkins, 4 years old, was crushed between the top of an elevator and the roof of a building at the Middlesex Last company factory last evening, where he was found dead after about an hour's search. The little fellow had gone to the factory to meet his father.

Tupper Sentenced For Manslaughter

Skowhegan, Me., Oct. 2.—Harlan R. Tupper, convicted of manslaughter, was sentenced to not more than eight years and not less than four years in the state prison at Thomaston. Tupper was charged with the murder of Fred McLaughlin of Moscow, Me., last April.

PARENTS CHARGE CRUELTY

Doings at Institution For Boys Are to Be Investigated

Boston, Oct. 2.—Charges of brutality were preferred against three attendants of the Parental school in West Roxbury at a meeting of the children's institution trustees by a number of mothers and fathers of the boys at the school.

Stories of how boys were beaten with straps until their bodies were black and blue, and how a teacher, after throwing a steaming hot potato into a garbage can, picked it up and forced it into the mouth of one of the boys, were listened to by the trustees.

Just what the outcome of the charges will be is not known, because a number of the trustees have declared they do not believe the attendants went beyond their authority in punishing the children. However, an investigation of the charges was promised by Chairman O'Hare of the trustees.

THAW JURY "INFLUENCED"

Reports Said to Have Reached Ears of New York State Officials

Albany, Oct. 2.—The advisability of a special session of the New York county grand jury to consider developments in the Thaw case was discussed by Acting Governor Glynn, Attorney General Carmody, William T. Jerome and District Attorney Conger of Dutchess county. An order convening the grand jury and designating the attorney general to take charge of the proceedings is expected from Glynn today.

Reports have been received by the state officials, it was said, that undue influence had been used in an effort to prevent the Dutchess county grand jury from returning an indictment against Thaw for alleged bribery in connection with his escape.

POPULAR SOCIETY GIRL BECOMES BRIDE

Victoria Sackville-West Is Wife of Harold Nickerson

London, Oct. 2.—Victoria Sackville-West, daughter of Lady Sackville-West, who recently won the Sackville-West will suit, thereby establishing her right to $3,000,000 bequeathed her by the late Sir John M. Scott, was married to Harold Nicholson of the British foreign office.

The bride is 21 and very popular in London society. She became known all over England as "Kidlet," the name by which Sir John called her in letters to Lady Sackville.

The bridegroom is the son of Sir Arthur Nicholson, permanent undersecretary of the foreign office. He is several years older than his bride, whom he has known since childhood.

Shroud Prepared Long Ago Used by Woman For Wedding Dress

Baltimore, Oct. 2.—After being pronounced incurably ill with an abdominal trouble by a score or more of physicians and operated on nine times, each time with supposedly fewer chances of recovery, Miss Sophie Koerth of this city was married to Jeremiah J. Railsbach in the dress which was made four years ago with her own hands for her shroud.

Four months ago, after the ninth operation, Miss Koerth felt for the first time that a cure had been effected. Since then she has been strong enough to carry a market basket half a mile or more, and has not felt a trace of her former pain.

EATON INQUEST RESUMED

Hingham, Mass., Oct. 2.—Nine witnesses have been summoned to appear here today at the third session of the inquest into the death of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, whose widow is awaiting trial on the charge of murder.

Search has been made by the police officials in drug stores near Scollay square, Boston, to learn if Mrs. Eaton bought poison there.

FOUR PROBABLY DROWNED

Undesirables Held at New York Jump Overboard From Steamer

New York, Oct. 2.—Four men who were to have been deported on the steamer France obtained liberty or death by leaping forty-five feet from an upper deck to the Hudson river as the vessel lay at her pier.

All trace of the men was lost. The finding of two life belts in the river led to the belief, however, that they perished. All had arrived here recently as stowaways.

PROSECUTION IS COMPLETED

Request of Sulzer Defense For a Long Recess Is Denied

WANTED UNTIL NEXT MONDAY

Will Ask That Some Articles In Impeachment Be Dismissed—Colwell's Account "No. 500" on Books of Brokers Was In Part at Least That of Sulzer, Witness Testifies

Albany, Oct. 2.—The prosecution has rested in the impeachment proceedings against Governor Sulzer.

Mr. Herrick of counsel for the defense asked for a recess until Monday. He declared there were important motions to be made and important questions for counsel to decide.

Herrick declared the gravity of the charges against the governor demanded that he be given every opportunity to prove his innocence. A slight mistake at this point, he said, might mean grave disaster. In addition, he said his side had expected the prosecution to consume all day in completing its case, and so had failed to complete preparations for a motion to dismiss on the ground that a case had not been made out against the governor.

Judge Cullen, presiding, said he did not care to decide the question and suggested that the court should vote on it. It was understood that the judges of the court of appeals opposed any such lengthy recess.

Senator Brown asked that the request for postponement be considered in executive sesion, and this was decided on. The courtroom was then cleared of all but members of the court.

It was agreed to adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon, when the various motions will be made on behalf of the defense. It is understood the defense will ask that a few of the articles which they do not believe have been substantiated be dismissed.

When the doors of the court were thrown open Cullen announced the decision. He told Herrick the court would expect that all preliminary motions will be disposed of during that session.

Attorneys for the defense said they will do their best to have the actual opening of their case postponed until Friday, but it is unlikely they will be able to do this unless they use up most of this afternoon with speechmaking.

That Frederick W. Colwell's account, "No. 500," carried on the books of Fuller & Gray, stock brokers of New York, was in part at least that of William Sulzer was developed at the trial. John B. Gray of that firm, under a searching examination from E. T. Brackett for the impeachment managers, reluctantly admitted that Colwell had told him the transaction in Big Four stock represented by it was made for the governor. Colwell has been missing since August, when he disappeared immediately following a conference with Sulzer.

The impeachment managers allege that this stock was actually purchased with cash subscribed to the Sulzer campaign fund. So far as the Colwell account was concerned, Gray said in addition to Big Four stock it included a bond purchase.

The prosecution also showed that Louis A. Sarecky, former confidential stenographer for Sulzer, was given a $4000 job in the state hospital service which had heretofore been held always by a physician.

In order to qualify Sarecky, the position was transferred from the competitive to the exempt class. The prosecution in its impeachment articles alleges that this transfer was a reward for Sarecky's promise not to testify regarding the governor's stock deals.

Reports that Sulzer had agreed to resign when the legislature reconvened next Monday night, in return for a promise that the impeachment would be dropped and no attempt made to forever disqualify him from holding a position of trust under the state, were again widely circulated. The attorneys for both the prosecution and the defense, however, characterized the rumors as foolish. They said the case had proceeded so far now that it must be fought through to the finish.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mayor Stone and Others Congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Shay

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Shay ,who recently moved from Wollaston to Stoughton where Frank had a better opportunity to farm it and raise hens and pigs, celebrated their tenth marriage anniversary Wednesday evening at their new home by entertaining seventy-five or more of their many friends, who included Mayor Stone and several from Quincy, ex-Senator George L. Barnes and Dr. W. L. Faxon.

After informal greetings, during which Mr. and Mrs. Shay received many gifts, all of which were not of the tin variety, a supper was served the menu among other things including new cider, made from apples raised on his farm and borrowed from his neighbors, and new doughnuts fried especially for "Tiny" Childs.

An adjournment was then made to the barn where dancing was in order until 11 o'clock, an opportunity also being had to get a look at Maude, Franks prize pig, samples of whom he has promised his friends when the time comes for Maude to make her departure from this world.

Of course with so many guests, Frank found himself a little shy on chairs but this want he had no difficulty in filling by using his well known political influence with the board of selectmen, in consequence of which the chairs used at the Town Hall were loaned for the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Shay's many Quincy friends wish them continued health and happiness.

FIRE AT BRAINTREE.

The alarm from Box. 26 at 2.55 this morning was not in Quincy although the fire alarm whistles were very distinct. The alarm was in Braintree and was for a fire at Sheppard & Sons coal wharf . So plainly were the whistles heard in Quincy that many thought the fire to be in Quincy and the telephone wires were kept busy for a time answering inquiries.

The fire started from spontaneous conbustion in a pile of soft coal outside one of the coal sheds and prompt discovery prevented a serious fire. As it was the fire only burnt a hole two feet square in the side of the building.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

Max Pinkham of Wollaston, an old Brown man, and his friend, Charles Howard, a Harvard Law School graduate, executed an interesting mountain-climbing stunt recently. They were in the White Mountains when they decided to start at Randolph and walk to Crawfords, touching the peak of every mountain in their path. This they did, accomplishing the feat in 12 hours and 30 minutes, which is said to be a record. The best previous time for the same climb is said to have been 14 hours.—Globe.

EVENING SCHOOL REGISTRATION

Houghs Neck Building Is Now Overcrowded

Registration has been going on all this week from 7 to 9 P. M. at the High school building for the different trade classes that have been advertised by the School Committee, and which appear in the advertising columns of this issue. There have already been a large number of registrants, and classes in dressmaking, in machine drawing, and in monument design and lettering are already assured. In case the registration continues at the same rate tonight and tomorrow night, several other classes will also be filled.

The class for granite workers will be housed in much better quarters this year than last. A room on the third floor of the old Adams building has been cleared of the school desks and chairs and full sized chairs and drawing tables have been installed with much more powerful lighting facilities than were available last year.

One other room in the Adams building has also been equipped with electric lights so that it may be put in use to accommodate the increase in attendance which is expected this year.

Members of the Y. M. H. A. are planning to secure a sufficient number of Jewish people who do not speak English for a class where they may be taught by some one who understands the Yiddish dialect.

SCHOOL MASTERS CLUB.

A very largely attended meeting of the Quincy School Masters Club was held at the High School, Wednesday evening with President H. W. Rice in the chair. M. L. Hamilton of this city gave an address in explanation of the new State Pension law for teachers, which proved of much interest and led to extended discussion.

At the next meeting of the club, the new labor law will be discussed with special reference to the effect on the children between 14 and 16 and the provisions for their schooling.

HOUGHS NECK SCHOOL.

The attendance at the Atherton Hough School at the present time is 205. There are two rooms with more than 60 pupils to a room and two assistants are required in addition to the four regular teachers. At the beginning of the new half year in February There will be an addition of 15 to 20 more children, and the only way in which they can be accommodated will be by adding seats to the upper corridor. To all appearances, by the time four more rooms are added to the building there will be children enough in Houghs Neck to fill them.

WOLLASTON SCHOOL.

The following program has been arranged for the Wollaston Parent-Teachers' Association for the coming year:

SCHOOL NOTES.

School notes are a regular Thursday feature of the Daily Ledger and all school buildings of the city should be represented.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The first real convention covering the waterway projects of the entire state ever held in Boston will open at Room 431, State House on Oct. 6

In spite of the intense interest which the Panama Canal has awakened in waterway improvements, it will be seen from the above notice that Massachusetts is not neglecting her opportunities for advancement in this line.

In this connection and considering that Quincy is to be represented at this meeting, called the Massachusetts Deep Waterways Convention, we would call attention to a monthly periodical, the National Waterways, which is written instructively yet interestingly, and pictures are profusely scattered with the text. News of boat races, pleasure excursions and social doings are mingled with the more technical.

The Bulletin of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, also a monthly periodical has recently been added to the library. This Bulletin is devoted to the development of interior waterways along the Atlantic coast, with the object of achieving communication by water between the States, and gives interesting news both of pleasures and profits resulting from the existing waterways.

Harold G. Moulton in Waterways versus railways (80.127) appreciates the connection of inland waterways with conservation of resources; and Herbert Quick in "American inland waterways" (80.132) presents the subject in an appealing and convincing manner, which the many illustrations increase.

Mrs. Pankhurst Faces Inquiry From Ellis Island Board

MRS. EMMELINE PANKHURST, leader of the militant suffragettes of England, who is coming on a lecture tour of the United States, will be held at Ellis island on her arrival in New York and compelled to appear before a special board of inquiry. By the time Mrs. Pankhurst gets to this side of the Atlantic the immigration officials will have from the English government her full police court record. It will be obtained through the state department at the request of the department of labor.

The department has taken the matter up and intends to see that Mrs. Pankhurst goes through an examination at Ellis island. She will be asked to explain some of her acts abroad in connection with the militant campaign. Some officials of the immigration service believe Mrs. Pankhurst could be deported as an anarchist, and she will be questioned regarding her belief concerning orderly government.

The department has been importuned by leading suffragists to indicate what it was going to do about Mrs. Pankhurst, but thus far it has declined to commit itself formally beyond the statement that Mrs. Pankhurst would be treated as any other alien. The department has clippings calling attention to Mrs. Pankhurst's militancy, and it considers these sufficient to examine Mrs. Pankhurst when she arrives.

If the board decides against her she can appeal to the department here. The immigration act prevents "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude" from entering this country.

Suffragists have intimated that if Mrs. Pankhurst is held up they will make an issue of it and carry the matter to the president of the United States. They have been informed that Mrs. Pankhurst is going to be treated like any other alien against whom there is suspicion and doubt and, while the department has no charge to make against her, she is going to get a fair deal. Nevertheless she will have to undergo something more than a routine examination.

It is the consensus of opinion among government officials that she can be barred from the country on the grounds of moral turpitude.

"To instigate the burning of houses and the destruction of property," said one of these authorities, "is certainly an indication of moral turpitude according to our standards. It may be regarded by some as a political crime, but it is a felony nevertheless."

The duration of Mrs. Pankhurst's intended stay here, they say, will not alter her chances any more than will her promise to refrain from preaching militancy.

"Suppose," they say, "a notorious criminal were to come here from abroad intending to lecture so as to get money to further his criminal plans in his own country. Would he not be deported, even if he agreed to omit the subject of his crimes from his lectures?"

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst is now under a three years' sentence at hard labor for inciting the malicious destruction of property, for which she might have received a sentence of fourteen years. Under the criminal laws of the majority of the states of this country such a crime is regarded as a felony, and by this construction of the law the immigration authorities would be justified in excluding her.

Mrs. Pankhurst was sentenced on April 3 last, and on June 14 she was released on license after a hunger strike. She was taken back to prison and again released after another period of voluntary starvation. Then she went to France, where the details of her lecture tour in this country have been arranged. As soon as she returns to England she will be sent back to jail. Under these circumstances the immigration authorities might regard her as a fugitive from justice and hold her for deportation.

THE WEDDIN'.

Well, it's over, it's all over—bein' the last to leave I know that—and I declare, I'm that full of all the things we had to eat that John and me won't want any supper for a good hour yet, so I just ran in to tell you about it, while it's on top of my mind.

It's an everlastin' shame you had to miss it! One thing, though, you'll get a trayful of good things sent into you, I shouldn't wonder. I know there's loads left, for I happened to slip out to the kitchen for a drink of water—I was that dry after all those salty nuts, and I didn't want to trouble em'—and I saw just heaps of things standin' round.

Most likely you'll get a good, large plate of cake, not just a pinchin' little mite of a piece in a box. The boxes is real pretty, though, and they did look real palatial all stacked up on the table by the front door with a strange colored man, in white gloves like a pall-bearer, to hand 'em to you.

How did I get two of 'em? Why, it just happened that way. You see, when I was leavin' I missed my sunshade and I laid my box down on the hatrack stand while I went upstairs to look for it. I went through all the rooms, and just when I'd about given it up, why, there it was, right in my hand all the time! Wasn't it foolish? And when I came downstairs I found I'd clean forgot where I'd laid that box of cake. I hunted everywhere, and then I just had to tell the man how 'twas, so he handed me another one, and I was just walkin' out the front door when, would you believe it! if there wasn't the other one, just as innocent, on the hatrack stand where I had laid it. So now I have three of 'em, countin' John's.

I just can't seem to realize that Eleanor Jamison is married at last, can you? She took her time if ever anybody did. They do say she was real taken with that young college professor with the full beard and spectacles that visited there last summer, and then to think that, after all, she went and married a man with a smooth face. He wears glasses, though; that's one point in common.

Eleanor's gone off a good deal lately, don't you think so? You hadn't noticed it? But then you never was any great hand at noticin', I've noticed you weren't. Why, the other day when I was there offerin' to help 'em get ready for the weddin' I noticed that she looked real worn, and there was two or three little fine lines in her eye-corners—not real wrinkles, of course—but we all know that lines is a forerunner. Her hair's beginnin' to turn, too; I noticed that comin' out of church last Sunday, I dare say her knowing this made her less particular than she'd once have been;; and after all, marryin' any husband is a good deal like buyin' a new black silk dress pattern—an awful risk.

You may look at it on both sides and hold it up to the light, and pull it to see if it'll fray and try if it'll spot, but you can't be sure what it'll do till after you've worn it a spell.

There's one advantage to the dress pattern, though—you can make em take it back if you mistrust it won't wear—if you haven't cut into it, that is—but when you've got a husband, why, you've got him, to have and to hold, for better and worse and good and all.

Yes, I'm comin' to the weddin'—I declare, when I think how careless Eleanor is about little things I can't help mistrusting what kind of a housekeeper she'll turn out. Why, when John's and my invitation came it was only printed to the church—there wasn't any reception card with it.

Now I've supplied Eleanor's folks with butter and eggs and spring chickens for thirty years, and I'd just have gone anyway, for I knew it was a mistake, but John held out that 'twasn't—that they didn't mean to have us to the house part; so to settle it I went right over and told 'em. I told Eleanor she mustn't feel put out about it— we was all mortal—and if it hadn't been for satisfyin" John I'd never have let her know how careless she'd been—of course I'd made allowance, weddin's is upsettin' to the intellect—and so 'twas all right.

I had a real good view of the ceremony; but 'twasn't their fault that I had; it just happened that way.

When John and me got there I asked the young man at the door—he was a usher and a stranger to me—to give us a front seat, but he said that all the front places was reserved for the relations of the bride and groom, and then I noticed that they'd tied off the middle aisle about seven pews back with white satin ribbons and a big bunch of pink roses. It seemed real impolite to invite folks to a weddin' and then take the best seats themselves.

Well, just then. I happened to feel my shoe lacin" gettin loose and I stepped to one side to fix it; and when I got up from stoopin' and my gloves on and buttoned—I had to take 'em off to tie my shoe— and straightened John's cravat for him, why, there was the families on both sides just goin' in.

Of course we had to follow right along behind 'em, and when we came up to the ribbons—would you believe it?—the big bow just untied itself—or seemed to—I heard afterward it was done by somebody pullin' an invisible wire—and we all walked through an took seats. I made John go into the pew ahead of me so's I could get out without botherin' anybody if I should have a headache or feel faint.

When John found we was settin' with the family—he was right close up against Eleanor"s mother—he was for gettin' up and movin' back. But I just whispered to him, "John Appleby, do sit still! I hear the bridal party comin'!"

Of course I didn't just hear 'em, but I was sure they'd be along in a minute, and I knew it wouldn't do to move out seats anyway, as if we weren't satisfied with 'em.

The church was decorated beautiful. Eleanor's folks must have cleaned out their greenhouse to put into it, besides tons of greens from the city.

Pretty near the whole of Wrenville was there, and I must say that, the church was a credit to the Wrenville dressmakers. I could pick out all their different fits without any trouble.

There was Arabella Satterlee's—she shapes her backs like the top of a coffin, or sometimes they remind me more of a kite; and Sally Ann Hodd's—she makes 'em square; and old Mrs. Tucker's—you always tell hers by the way the armholes draw; she makes the minister's wife's. But they'd every one of 'em done their level best and I was proud of 'em.

Well, when the organ—it had been playin' low and soft all the time—changed off into the weddin' march and the bridesmaids, eight of 'em, marched up the aisle behind the eight yushers, I tell you, Miss Halliday, it was a sight!

They was all in pink gauzy stuff—I happened to feel one of 'em as she went by but I couldn't tell what 'twas made of; it seemd dreadful flimsy—and big flat hats all made of roses on their heads, and carryin' bunches of long-stemmed roses so big that they had to hold 'em in their arms like young babies.

Eleanor came behind 'em all, walkin' with her father. He always was a small-built man, and with her long train and her veil spreadin' out so, why, I declare, you couldn't hardly see him.

I whispered to John that they looked more as it Eleanor was goin' to give her pa away than him her.

Eleanor's dress was elegant, only awful plain. It was made in New York at Greenleaf's. I know, because when I was upstairs lookin' for my sunshade—I told you about that, din't I?—I happened to get into Eleanor's room by mistake, and there was the box it came in right on the bed before my eyes.

Well, when they was all past, I kept lookin' 'round me for the groom and wonderin' how I had come to miss him, when all at once John nudged me, and there he was right in front of me and the minister beginnin' to marry 'em, and where he had sprung from I can't tell you this livin' minute!

Came in from the vestry, did he? Well, now, I never would have thought of that!

Well, when they was most married the most ridiculous thing happened.

You see, Eleanor's father in steppin' back after givin' her away, had put his foot right down on her trail and never noticed, and when it came time for the prayer, Eleanor pulled and pulled—they was to kneel down on two big white satin cushions in front of 'em— but her pa never budged, just stood there with his eyes shut and his head bowed as devout as anything, and before Eleanor could stop him, her husband, he was most her husband, anyway, had kneeled right down on to the cushion, with his eyes shut, too, I suppose, and the minister had to pray over 'em that way. I could see Eleanor's shoulders shakin' under her veil, and of course it was ridiculous if it hadn't been so solemn.

And then they all marched down the aisle, with the bride and groom leadin' the procession. Eleanor's veil was put back, and I noticed that she was half laughin' yet, and her cheeks were real pink, and her eyes sort of bright and moist, she looked real handsome. Good gracious, Miss Haliday, don't ever tell me that's six o'clock! And I haven't told a think about the presents, and who was there, and Eleanor's clothes, and what they had to eat, why, they didn't even use their own china-ware! They had a colored caterer from New York, and he brought everything, all the dishes and table-cloths and spoons and forks, besides the refreshments. I know, because just after he came I happened to carry over my eleven best forks—John broke the dozenth tryin' to pry the cork out of a bottle of raspberry vinegar the year we was married. I never take a fork to pry with—and offered to loan 'em for the weddin' but they didn't need 'em, so I just stayed a minute or two in the butler's pantry and then went home, but I saw the caterer unpackin'.

There! I knew I'd stay too long! There's John comin' in the gate after me. I must go this blessed minute.—J. B. Hartswick.

J. E. SPARGO PASSES AWAY

Young Printer Whose Work Had Been Recognized

John Edward Spargo, one of South Quincy's best known business men, died at his home, 59 Roberts street, Wednesday evening, in his 22nd year, after a long illness. For the past 18 months he suffered from an abscess on the hip and although he underwent an operation an infection set in too swiftly to be resisted.

He was the son of Mrs. William G. Spargo and has been associated with his brother, William G. Spargo, doing business at the Spargo print. He was born in Quincy and early learned the printers' trade. His rapid development in this line soon became known and his typographical work up to the time of his death was recognized as being of unusual merit.

He was a prominent member of the Gardner Club of Christ Church and of the Quincy lodge of Moose. The funeral will take place Sunday afternoon at Christ church and burial will be in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

VAST POSSIBILITIES

they can to encourage the hardy immigrant to settle and become part of their life.

The firm conviction of Colonel Kincaide is that the United States should own its legation buildings. Other countries have their representatives richly housed and we came across one minister who was seeking new quarters bcause of financial pressure. Minister Fletcher is doing considerable good in Latin America.

The question now disturbing the English and Germans in Argentine is the American invasion of the beef market, and a political war is being waged for control.

Colonel Kincaide throughout his talk touched upon cities in all parts of the continent, spoke of the customs of the people and of the method of doing business. They possess a supersensitive nature and their kindly feeling was expressed in all possible ways and royalty could not have been better entertained.

His trips into the interior were interestingly discussed and he gave a vivid description of a trip to the Andes mountains, where the rarefied air brings on the mountain sickness. He said that metals abound in the Andes and in some places cover the surface so that the sun gilds them.

In concluding, Colonel Kincaide said that despite all his pleasure he was glad to get home because he was confident that vast possibilities exist here for the fellow that is willing to take off his coat and work.

ROB BANK OF $6300

Boys Being Taught Finance by Banker Turn Out Embezzlers

Bayonne, N. J., Oct. 2.—At the close of an anxious week, in which he found that two of his proteges had gone wrong, Emmett S. Hamilton, president of the City bank of Bayonne, said the discovery had brought to an end his cherished plans of educating boys in the banking business.

Charles K. Jaeger, 25, and Henry J. Klink, 19, the wrongdoers, occupy cells in the Hudson county jail, charged with embezzlement. They are held under $5000 bail each.

The boys, Hamilton said, have confessed taking money from the bank. Jaeger's shortage is $5850 and Klink's $1600, of which he took $1066 from Jaeger and which is included in the Jaeger account, making a total for the two of about $6300.

Both were bonded by the United States Fidelity and Guaranty company, which will make good the combined deficit.

TARIFF BILL APPROVED

Differences Adjusted After Heated Conference of Democrats

Washington, Oct. 2.—Disaffection among Democratic senators which yesterday prevented final action on the tariff bill was dissipated under the influence of a heated caucus discussion, and last evening the caucus approved the bill as reported by the conference committee of the house and senate. But six Democrats voted against approving the report.

The caucus decided to abandon its position on the proposition in the bill to tax dealings in cotton futures and to leave the entire subject for later legislative action.

After the caucus Senator Simmons said he was confident the senate would complete its consideration of the tariff bill today.

ATLANTIC FLIGHT WILL BE A REALITY

Grahame-White Wants to Be First to Perform Feat

"There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the transatlantic flight will be made before long by some one, and it is only a question of who the first shall be. I am trying to interest friends and supporters of aviation here in my prospective venture, and feel that with any kind of support the great flight will soon be a reality."

DOUBT AS TO SUICIDE

Bullet In Cargill's Heart, but No Hole Found In Clothing

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 2.—The state police are investigating the death of Joseph Cargill, who died in the Worcester city hospital from bullet wounds supposed at the time to have been self-inflicted.

Investigation has revealed the fact that although Cargill was shot through the heart, the bullet did not pass through his coat or vest, and the revolver with which the shooting was supposed to have been done was thrown further than he could have thrown it after shooting himself.

Cargill aroused attention in the state as the first man to sue for alimony when he entered suit against his wife for divorce.

Washington, Oct. 2.—The national capital's fourth annual style show, with beautiful models wearing all the transparencies, slit skirts and other paraphernalia of advanced styles, has opened here.

The interest of the capital's social contingent centres in M. Pol Poiret, Paris dressmaker, who has an exhibit displaying his new "minaret" gown.

News that slit skirts had so shocked some policemen here that they had arrested wearers gave Poiret a painful shock. He predicted more and longer slits, with few, very few, petticoats, in coming styles.

AFTERMATH OF AUTO WRECK

Girl Makes Assault Charge Against Young Oelrichs

HE IS TAKEN INTO CUSTODY

Failure of Efforts to "Call Off" All Proceedings Also Followed by Suspension of Detective on Charge of Attempted Bribery—How Young Millionaire Was Trapped

New York, Oct. 2.—Hermann Oelrichs, son of the millionaire steamship man of the same name, chum of Vincent Astor's and a student at Columbia university, was placed under arrest last night in the apartments of Miss Lucille Singleton, charged with felonous assault. He was taken immediately to police headquarters, where Deputy Dougherty put him through the "third degree."

A man named "Taylor," said to be a Columbia student and a close friend of Oelrich's, was also questioned at headquarters. The complainant against Oelrichs is Miss Singleton, the young woman who was with him when his automobile was wrecked at Broadway and Tenth street early yesterday morning.

Another outcome of the automobile wreck and the taking of Miss Singleton to the Knickerbocker hospital was the suspension of Detective Trayor of the headquarters squad, the woman in the case making a charge of attempted bribery.

Miss Singleton professed to be greatly surprised when she learned that the man whom she said she had always known as "Billy" Creighorn was none other than Hermann Oelrichs, in his own right a millionaire.

Oelrichs' arrest followed an all-day police investigation. Reports were widely circulated that there had been much secret "dickering" between Oelrichs and his friends and Miss Singleton, in an effort to have the young woman "call off" all proceedings. According to the report given out at police headquarters, Trayor is accused by Miss Singleton of having acted the part of intermediary.

The case, at the beginning, was involved in a mass of contradictory statements. When Miss Singleton was first taken to the hospital she was unconscious, suffering from severe gashes on her left breast and face and on her arms.

The girl is first said to have told the physicians that Creighorn, in a fit of jealousy because she had an engagement on Tuesday night with another man, stabbed her with some blunt instrument held in his left hand. It was while thus engaged, she said, that "Billy" lost control of the machine, which leaped the curb and crashed into a tree. Within the next few hours the girl was reported as denying the statement and saying she received her injuries through the broken windshield.

While the girl was taken to the hospital, Oelrichs lost no time in disappearing. After she had left the hospital, Miss Singleton told Detectives McKenna and Casassa, she returned to her apartments and it was while she was lying in her bed that a tall man, about 28 years old, wearing glasses, came to see her. He said he was a detective and asked her about the details of the case.

"You don't want Craighorn arrested, do you?" the detective asked the girl.

"No, not if he will give me $5000," Miss Singleton said she replied. She was told Craighorn had offered to settle for $400. The girl refused this tender, she said.

The detectives communicated with Dougherty, who, in turn, reported developments to Commissioner Waldo. The latter immediately ordered Trayor's suspension.

McKenna and Casassa remained secreted in Miss Singleton's apartments and told her to call up Oelrichs, or Craighorn, at the fraternity house at 434 Riverside drive, where the young millionaire had his student quarters.

A man's voice answered at the other end of the wire. She told him to come over and talk with her about a settlement of the case.

About 5 o'clock a man came in the apartments. He is reported to have advised her to settle the case. He said he would be back at 10 o'clock with "Craighorn." Promptly at that hour the man returned with Oelrichs. The detectives placed him under arrest.

Cabrera For Leader Of Great Central American Republic

MANUEL ESTRADA CABRERA, president of Guatemala, as head of a great republic of all the Central American countries is the plan advanced by Carlos F. Secord of Chichicastenango, Guatemala. Mr. Secord, who has been a medical missionary in Guatemala for fourteen years, has studied the social, economic and political conditions of that country, has become acquainted with leading men throughout the country. In those conditions Mr. Secord sees much hope of future progress for the Central American republics and for Americans resident there also, provided changes in governmental policy of Washington do not disturb the present adjustments.

"Much has been written about Guatemala in recent years," says Mr. Secord, "but I have observed that many of the newspaper articles are colored with personal prejudices and therefore do not give a clear idea of actual facts. It is impossible to judge these countries from the point of view of one who has always lived in the United States and still more difficult to form an impartial idea from a superficial observation, such as is often obtained by the tourist. His ears are filled with stories of cruelty, oppression, etc., and while some of these may have foundation in fact, many of them originate in minds soured by disappointments in grafting schemes or animated by hopes of personal advancement through the change of government which they hope to effect.

"In every sense of the word the Latin-American is different from the Anglo-Saxon—in tradition, training, environment and ambitions, and to attempt to judge him by our standard will only result in the greatest confusion, doing him an injustice at the same time.

"Guatemala is essentially distinct from the other Central American republics, and her difficulties and problems are peculiar to her alone. About 60 per cent of the population is composed of pure blooded Indians, descendants of the Toltecs, peaceable and industrious, and among them are represented many of the arts, professions and trades.

"There is and always has been some enmity between the Indians and the Latin elements, the first sturdily resenting the interference from the latter in their affairs ever since the Spanish conquest. This feeling is carried into all circles and is most noticeable in efforts made by the government to educate the Indian. Except in certain districts in the Indian states, where large numbers of Indian children are being educated, the opposition is so great that but few attend the schools. Their parents prefer the children to herd sheep or hoe corn, and even where force has been used and numbers placed in the village schools they have been taken out and secreted in the mountains. This has repeatedly been the experience here in the state of Quiche, the most populous of the Indian states.

"I find that in the main the government of the republic is well balanced. It is not perfect from our point of view, nor are angelic beings in charge of affairs, but I can truthfully state that the president of the republic is an exceptionally able man, firm, superior in intelligence, progressive and in my opinion the most capable ruler at the present moment in the country from the Rio Grande to Panama. If the efforts being made by leading men in Central America bear fruit, according to their desires, I am sure the only solution of all difficulties in the Central American isthmus can be through the fusion of all into one republic under the government of a strong man, and a stronger man than President Cabrera is not yet in sight.

"Regarding business opportunities, there are many in this country, and with the high price of coffee the planters are coining gold from the fertile lands. General business is not prosperous, due to the high exchange, but we are hoping for a satisfactory solution of the financial question in the near future."

He Saw New York and Went Through the Tunnel

By THOMAS R. DEAN

In New York city there is a spacious excavation at the crossing of Broadway and Thirty-third street which is the entrance room of the Hudson tunnels. There are newspaper and candy stands, ticket offices and benches. One afternoon a tall, bony man descended the steps leading to this subterranean station and looked about him wonderingly.

He was Martin Granger, a Kentuckian, who had come from his native state to see New York. He had taken a tour in one of the big autocars in which strangers are shown the metropolis while a conductor points out the principal items of curiosity and comments on them through a megaphone. And now he had determined to go through the tunnel under the Hudson river that he might go back to Henderson county, Ky., and tell his children how the great ships, some of them 800 or 900 feet long, had sailed right over his head, while smaller boats without number had steamed back and forth in the same relative position.

Not knowing exactly how to get to the cars which were to take him on this (to him) perilous journey or perhaps wishing for time to screw up his courage to plunge under the great river, he sat down on one of the benches, presenting a perfect picture of a southwestern countryman wonder struck with that congregation of people which within a radius of twenty-five miles forms the largest in the world.

He had not been there long before a man came and sat down beside him. But Martin Granger was not interested in a single man, but the throngs passing through this station, wherein everything was as much alive underground as on the surface and were just as much alive above the surface as on it. The man beside him sat there but a few minutes, then got up and went away.

Presently Granger noticed persons buying tickets at a booth and put his hand into his pocket for money, intending to do the same thing. Casting his eyes down beside him, he saw a small package on the bench. He took it up, looked at it, then cast a glance about him for the owner, thinking that it had been left through carelessness. A number of persons were near, but there was no evidence that any one of them was the owner of the package. He weighted it and found it light—no heavier than paper. He pondered awhile as to what to do with it, then untied a string and partly unwrapped the covering.

Any look of surprise that had come over Martin Granger's face while in New York was surpassed by the one that came upon it now. He looked upon the corner of a bank bill and especially on the figures $100. As soon as he regained something of his equanimity he lifted the corner of the bill, and underneath it was another of the same denomination. The next below this was marked $50, the next $20, the next $100, and so on of different denominations. The package was about two inches thick.

"What you got there?"

Granger, looking up, saw a man standing over him regarding him with a severe expression.

"Somebody has been powerful careless and left a whole stack o' bank bills on this yere seat."

"I'm in luck," said the other. "You've found the bills taken from the vaults of the —— Trust company."

"How do you know that?" asked Granger.

"I know it because I am a detective and have been shadowing the man who stole the bills. I followed him down here, and, realizing that I had him trapped, rather than be caught with the plunder on him he sat down here beside you and when he went away left it. His intention is doubtless to follow you, and when you get far enough from the station and he thinks himself unobserved he will claim the property."

The westerner looked at the man with wonder. "You must be one o' them fellers that I've read about in the stories printed in our home paper. They kin tell from a shirt button or the stump of a cigar jist who done the murder."

"Yes; I'm a detective. Now I've got the stolen property I want you to help me take the thief. Where are you going?"

"I'm goin' down under the river jist to see how it feels to be joggin' along under the big ships."

"All right. Put the package in your pocket and"—

The speaker stopped short and turned his back on Granger as though he had no intercourse with him. In a few minutes he turned again and continued:

"I saw the rascal. He's gone down the stairs to the train. I didn't want to have him see me talking to you. Go to that birdcage over there and buy the tickets. You'll be given two of 'em. Then go past that man over there and drop 'em in the box. Get on the train, and don't leave it till you get to the last station—Hoboken. I'll be in the same car with you, and quite likely the man who stole the bills will be on the train. When he joins you and asks you for his parcel I'll nab him."

"Waal, now, ain't that fine! I thort that when I come to New York I'd see some remarkable sights, but I didn't think I'd git inter one o' them detective stories."

The man gave him a knowing look, and Granger bought his tickets and, descending a flight of steps leading farther down toward the center of the earth, found a train, which he boarded, and was soon carried down under the mighty waters. He seemed overpowered and did not draw a regular breath till a guard called "All out!" and, seeing the other passengers leave the train, the visitor to New York also left.

He had no sooner stepped on the platform before he saw the detective looking at him, and Granger followed him up a flight of stairs, through a railway station and on to a ferryboat. As soon as the boat left the dock the detective joined the Kentuckian.

"I thort you was goin' to nab the thief," said the latter.

"He has eluded me. We'll return to New York. You may as well turn over the goods to me. I shall not be able to take the thief."

Now, Granger was a countryman, but there are few persons in the world who have not learned the principle that "possession is nine points of the law."

"What am I goin' to git out o' the find?" he asked.

"Oh, you'll get the reward. There's $10,000 offered for the return of the stolen goods."

"Reckon that's all right. But if you do the returnin' how am I to git the reward?"

"I'll report you as the finder of the property."

"You jist tell me whar to turn it in, and I'll go thar with it."

There was a good deal of sparring on the part of the detective to get possession of the property, which failed. Before the boat landed he explained to the Kentuckian that the latter was in a very dangerous position. If the detective should arrest him as the thief it would go hard with him. But the bluff was not effective. The Kentuckian said that he thought he could prove an alibi since he had reached New York only that morning and Cy Butler could swear to the fact since he had come all the way from Henderson county with him.

"Well," said the detective, "I suppose I'll have to go with you to the bank that lost the money, but it's too late to go today. The banks don't keep open after 3 o'clock. You can stay with me overnight, and we'll turn the money over tomorrow morning."

The Kentuckian said he had promised to stay with Cy Butler at a hotel on the east side, but the detective explained that it would not do for him to let him go away with the money, so Granger finally consented to spend the night with him in his room.

The apartment was in a cheap flathouse. The detective, as soon as they had entered it, locked the door and said to Mr. Granger:

"See here, pard, there's plenty for both of us in this deal. I'm the man that took that money from the bank. There's $80,000 of it. I'll give you $20,000. What do you say?"

"What do I say? Why, I say I'm l'arnin' New York powerful fast. I thort you was a detective."

"You're a pretty good sort of chap," replied the other, "and I don't mind taking you into my confidence. I was the man who sat down by you in the Hudson tunnel station. I was trying to get away from a shadower. I concluded to load the goods on to you till I could get away from him and divide with you. All you've got to do to be rich is to turn the goods back to me and deduct your share."

Granger looked at him with righteous indignation and said:

"Stranger, I've lived in Henderson county, Kaintucky, for forty year. Anybody thar'll tell you I hain't got a dishonest ha'r in my head. I'm goin' to turn this money back to the bank that lost it, and don't you forgit it."

The man put out his hand and grasped Granger's, saying, "Anybody 'd know to look at you that you were an honest man."

Holding Granger's right hand, the rascal put his own left hand to his hip and drew a revolver. He had cocked and raised it only a part of the way to cover his man when Granger, quick as a flash, put his hand to the back of his neck and drew forth a knife about ten inches long and held it point downward over the so called detective.

"I see that hand," he said quietly, "and go you one better. Drop yer weepon!"

The man needed to raise his pistol but a short distance to make it effective, yet the distance was sufficient to give the Kentuckian time to draw his bowie knife—a weapon of the olden time—and hold it point downward over him. The villain quailed and dropped his pistol.

How the Kentuckian drove his enemy down and out into the street, met a policeman and the three proceeded to a station; how the next morning the money was turned over by its finder to the bank, is merely a succession of ordinary details. When the president handed Granger a check for $10,000 the subject grows again interesting. The Kentuckian handed it back, saying:

"Do you reckon that if one o' my Kaintuck neighbors' mares war to stray away and git on to my premises and I sent her back by a nigger I'd take money for doin' it? No, sir. You may do things that a-way in New York, but we don't do 'em so in Kaintuck."

And, turning on his heel, he left the bank.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

I delivered the mistress to her woman, who came at my call, and then I summoned the butler and steward and told them what had happened. In a moment all was confusion. They brought the body of Sir Geoffrey back to the castle, which was no longer his. As the duke had said, it was mortgaged to its full value. Everything that he could get his hands on had been sacrificed to his passion for play.

After the inquest and after a due interval for decent respect for the dead

there was a great funeral, of course, during which what little ready money there was available was of necessity spent. The gentry came for miles around. Even Luftdon was there in the background, although Arcester had the decency to keep away. I was there, too, finding a place among the upper servants of the household. I happened to be immediately back of Mistress Lucy. From under her veil she shot a forlorn, grateful look at me as she came in.

Sir Geoffrey, except Mistress Lucy, was the last of his race. The brave, fine old stock had at last been reduced to this one slender slip of a girl. Kith or kin, save of the most distant, she had none, nor did she enjoy much acquaintance. She had never been formally introduced to society. Sir Geoffrey had loved her and had been kind enough to her in his careless, magnificent way, but she had been left much alone since the death of her mother some years before, and she had grown up under the care of governesses and tutors. The neighboring gentry had assembled with much show of sympathy, but I knew that Mistress Lucy felt very much alone, and I rather gloried in the position which made me, humble though I was, her friend.

It was over soon enough—the show and parade. No one spoke to me save Lord Luftdon.

"You seem to be a man of sense, Master Hampdon," he whispered, drawing me apart after it was all over, "and I noticed the way Mistress Wilberforce looked at you when she first came in. I have still unspent some of the proceeds of our last bout at the table with her father that could be conveyed to the lady, and"—

"She would burn her hand off rather than accept anything," said I promptly.

"You speak with authority?" he asked, looking at me strangely.

"I have known her from a child," said I, "and her father before her. It is not in the breed to take favors, and"—

"But this is restitution, authough we won it fairly. Sir Geoffrey was the most reckless and even the most foolish gambler I ever played with. We took advantage of that, but there was no cheating, no, as I am a gentleman."

"Under the circumstances, then," said I, "there is nothing further to be said."

"But what will the poor girl do?" he persisted.

I shook my head. I did not know how to answer that question, for I did not know what she would do. Nevertheless I was touched and pleased with his interest. The man had some good in him still. Association with such a scoundrel as Arcester had not yet wholly ruined him.

"It is too late to make reparation now, although the wish does you honor, my lord."

"Well, Hampdon, if you have a chance to tell her what I wanted," he said, "please do. I should do it myself," he continued, "only since her repudiation by that blackguard Arcester she will not admit me to speech. If I were a bit younger and not so confoundedly in debt I would marry the woman myself."

"She is meet for a better man, my lord," said I, exactly as I had answered the duke.

He looked at me curiously for a moment and then laughed loudly.

"Doubtless," he said, "you may tell her that too."

With that he turned on his heel and walked away, and I saw no more of him. I stood about on the terrace until the last of the gentry had gone. My lady spoke to me:

"Master Hampdon," she began wearily, "will you come into the house? Master Ficklin, the lawyer, is here waiting to go over my father's papers with me. You have stood by me manfully, your people and my people have been"— she stopped a moment, "friends," she added, "for 500 years. I have no one else with whom to counsel. Come with me."

CHAPTER III.

In Which I Deliver a Letter.

SIR GEOFFREY'S will, as Master Ficklin read it, was a simple affair. It left everything of which he died possessed to his daughter. Unfortunately, he died possessed of nothing. The document was mere waste paper. Everything was mortgaged, every family portrait even. Mistress Lucy appeared to have no legal right to anything in or out of the castle, save the clothes she wore.

"The point is," Mistress Lucy said, as Master Ficklin bowed deferentially toward her, "that I have nothing?"

"Nothing from your father, madam."

"But my mother's estate?"

"I regret to say," said Master Ficklin, "that most of it has been converted into money and lost by your father. There is left in my hands, madam, only a matter of some £2,000, out at interest, which you, being now of full age"—

"I was eighteen on my last birthday."

"Exactly, so that it is at your present disposal."

"What shape is it in?"

"It is invested in consols."

"Can they be realized upon?"

"Instantly."

"To advantage?"

"Most certainly."

"I thank you, Master Ficklin, for your provident care of my little fortune. It is most unexpected," she faltered.

"Believe me, Mistress Lucy, it is a happiness to do anything for you," said the old attorney, rising and gathering up his papers and bowing low before her. "You may command me in everything. A temporary loan or"—

"Thank you, Master Ficklin," said Mistress Lucy; "you touch me greatly, but I need nothing at present. My father made me an allowance and generally paid it. It was a generous one, and, living alone as I did, I did not spend it. I have a few hundred pounds in my own name at the bank, and with that for temporary use and my mother's legacy I shall lack nothing."

"But where will you live, Mistress Lucy?"

"It matters little," she answered listlessly.

"My sister and I," said the old attorney, "live alone in the county town. The house is large. If you would accept our hospitality until your future is decided we should be vastly honored."

"I accept your kindly proffer most thankfully," was her reply. "I have been invited to various homes here and there in the county, but I prefer to go to you."

"Good," said Master Ficklin briskly. "That is settled then. I am empowered by those who hold the mortgage to tell you that the pictures of your father or mother or anything strictly personal they waive their claim to."

"Thank you," said Mistress Lucy. "I shall take but small advantage of their generosity."

"I know that," answered Master Ficklin, "and now I will return to the town. If you will be ready about 6 o'clock" (it was then about 2) "I will return and fetch you to our home."

"I shall be ready. Goodby."

The little lawyer bent over her hand and left the room. I sat dumb and silent during the whole interview, although I had listened to everything with the deepest interest. As usual, it was she who broke the silence when we were alone again.

ALBEE CLASS REUNION

Opening of New Class Rooms at Wollaston Baptist

Nearly 100 women of all ages attended the reunion of the Albee class Wednesday evening in the chapel and new class rooms of the Wollaston Baptist church. Invitations referred to the affair as a "frolic," and a frolic it certainly was. The older women renewed their youth and with the younger people thoroughly entered into the enjoyment of the evening.

Many games were enjoyed and the evening closed with refreshments, and felicitations. The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. Moses Brown, Mrs. F. W. Bent, Mrs. C. A. Colson and Mrs. P. H. McGrath.

The occasion served to open for the first time the new class room addition which is to be dedicated in about ten days.

The Albee class is the women's bible class of the Wollaston Baptist church, and is nearing its fifth birthday; at present it has a membership of 72. The class since its inception has been under the leadership of Amos D. Albee who was present Wednesday evening.

STABBING AT BRAINTREE.

Antonio Manganello, who was stabbed twice in the back at Braintree this morning, is at the Quincy City Hospital and may die. The police are searching for Vito Del Vecchio who is said to have done the stabbing.

The assault occurred opposite 90 Granite street, as Manganello started to walk away from Del Vecchio. Eye witnesses say that Antonio Del Vecchio, a brother of the man who did the stabbing, attempted to hold him for the police. He is held as a witness.

The police believe that bad feeling has existed between the two men because each have been attentive to the same girl.

Manganello was treated by Dr. C. A. Sullivan, who found that the tip of the knife had penetrated the left lung in one wound and that the other was slight.

STEAMERS TO PACIFIC.

Establishment of a new steamship line between Boston and the Pacific Coast by way of the Panama Canal was practically decided upon Wednesday, says the Globe, in a conference at the offices of the Port Directors. Although the line will not be established until the canal is navigable, two 9000-ton steamships for the service are already under construction at the Fore River Shipbuilding Works in Quincy.

EVANS--LOWE WEDDING

On Silver Anniversary of Brides' Parents

Twenty-five years ago Oct 1, Miss Minnie E. Baxter and Mr. Edward H. Lowe were married and it was planned this year to have a double celebration as their daughter intended to be married on the date of the anniversary. Owing to a bereavement in the family, a simple ceremony was performed by Rev. Richard D. Armstrong, rector of the Episcopal church. The contracting parties were Miss Minnie Beatrice Lowe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Lowe of Quincy Point and Mr. Douglas Bellmond Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin J. Evans of Winthrop.

The best man was Mr. Edwin J. Evans, Jr., of Winthrop, a brother of the groom and the bridesmaid was Miss Esther L. Dahlberg of New London, Connecticut. The ring bearer was little Isabel Cameron Crane, a cousin of the bride. The double ring service was used. The bride looked charming in her bridal robes.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans will reside with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Lowe of 495 Washington street, Quincy Point.

—City planning commissions are becoming fashionable. Several cities have taken steps to institute them, in conformity to the law. Their occupation will be fascinating; but as they have no authority, it will be apt to be disappointing also.—New Bedford Standard.

HIGH TAX RATES

Fifteen City Rates of $20 and Over

Springfield the Lowest

Springfield may well be proud of the fact that it has the lowest city tax rate in Massachusetts. E. T. Tifft, the city treasurer of Springfield, has just compiled valuable data relative to the population valuation, debt and tax rates of all the cities of the state, which he compares with similar data issued in 1895.

Today the Daily Ledger comments only on the tax rates. It will be seen at the outset that the average tax rates of cities in 1895 was $16.20, while in 1913 the average is $19.40, an increase of $3.20.

This year 15 of the 33 cities have a tax rate of $20.00 or over, and Quincy is at the top of the list. It is not a very enviable position for our city, and the taxpayers will gladly surrender it at any time.

The only city that has a lower tax rate than in 1895 is Holyoke, which is twenty cents smaller. Pittsfield is a close rival with a tax rate only thirty cents larger.

In 1895 Brockton had the highest tax, $18.60, and had a close rival in Salem with $18.50. In that year Brockton had the highest percentage of indebtedness to assessed valuation among the cities. Quincys tax rate was then only 60 cents above the average of the cities, and twelve of the 32 cities had a larger taxe rate than Quincy, viz—Brockton, Salem, Fitchburg, North Adams, Lowell, Marlboro, Woburn, Taunton, Fall River, Lynn, Chelsea, and Holyoke.

In no city has the tax rate taken a bigger jump since 1895 than Quincy, although Chicopee is in the same class the increase in both having been $7.70.

In the summary below the cities are given in the order of the 1913 tax rate, as compiled by the city treasurer of Springfield. In the same line is also given the tax rate of 1895 and the increase of 1913 over 1895:

SQUANTUM GRIEVANCES

Board of Trade Committee Listen to Them

President J. L. Hamilton of the Quincy Board of Trade and a committee of that body were guests Tuesday night of the Squantum Improvement association at a largely attended meeting of that organization at the Vacation House. They heard the complaints of Squantum citizens regarding the lack of city improvements, excessive tax rate and arguments as to why Squantum should be separated from Quincy and annexed to Boston. Besides President Hamilton the board was represented by E. O. Woodward, Dr. Philip Kelley, J. A. Sedgwick and Secretary J. O. Hall.

President Hamilton at the opening of the meeting declared that he and the members of the committee had come to listen and take notes. They hoped to be of aid to city officials and to Squantum residents in adjusting the differences that now exist and to reach some happy adjustment of Squantum's complaints.

President Herbert A. Smith presided at the meeting and called upon the following men, who vigorously told of Squantum's needs and of the treatment received from Quincy: W. N. Kenyon and C. E. Carlson, former presidents of the Squantum Improvement association, Edward Eagar, T. F. Callahan, John R. Nelson, James H. Hagan, Rev. Mr. Davison of Atlantic and Mr. Brophy.

Mr. Kenyon said in part: "Squantum has not grown the way it ought because it has not received proper encouragement from Quincy. Why is the City of Quincy so poor? Is it not that great improvements have been made in past years in Wollaston, West Quincy and other sections? Then why should Squantum be compelled to pay for these improvements in other sections when it is receiving no improvements itself. For three years we have fought for two or three accepted streets in the residential section and have received nothing. I believe the City of Boston would be glad to spend $100,000 in local improvements here for the one or two million dollars of increased valuation that would surely result. But Quincy believes in holding back this section instead of aiding in its developments. It is purely a business proposition which the Quincy City Council is too blind to see."

Mr. Carlson endorsed the sentiments expressed by Mr. Kenyon.

Mr. Eagar said: "We have been told by members of the Quincy City Council that we have got to have the votes before we can expect anything in this section. We tried to get things here by giving dinners and treating everyone nice. We got nothing. Now we are out to fight."

Mr. Callahan declared that Squantum people kicked for the very principle that tea was thrown overboard in Boston harbor. He said the taxation in Squantum was unjust. "Why does the valuation on Squantum property increase every year when we do not receive a single improvement. My tax bill in 1911 was $200. The only improvement I got that year was one street light. My next tax bill was $300 I paid $100 for that street light and thanked my lucky stars the city of Quincy did not give me two instead of one.

"I have driven over the streets of Squantum every day for 35 years. I think I know what I am talking about when I say that for five months of the year these streets are impassible except for a light one horse hitch. When they speak of fire protection I want to tell you gentlemen of the Quincy Board of Trade that there is no such thing in Squantum for five months in the year. No piece of fire apparatus in the City of Quincy can get over these streets during five months of the year and I will defy anyone to show me that they can.

"Quincy is very poor, but here are some facts for your consideration. The so-called boulevard from Atlantic to Squantum cost the City of Quincy $18,000 and at that most of the gravel was given to the city free. Following this stretch of street is 1800 feet which I was directed to put in condition for the City of Boston. I did this work for $159 or less than 10 cents a foot. Gentlemen you can draw your own conclusions as to why Quincy is poor. It is a shame and an outrage that Quincy banks will not take loans in Squantum which is one of the best assets that the City of Quincy has today."

John R. Nelson said he hoped that Quincy would soon wake up to the needs of Squantum. He said that one of the greatest drawbacks was the car service. He said the cars were in wretched conditions, that the roadbed was dangerous, and that there was a great need in Squantum for a midnight car every day of the week instead of only Wednesday and Saturday nights as at present.

Mr. Hagan spoke in vigorous terms of Squantum's needs. He said: "Squantum has an area of over 350 acres all laid out for developments. If this land was built upon, it would mean over $6,000,000 of taxable property added to the City of Quincy. But the City of Quincy cannot see it that way. Police protection is two miles away. Schools are two miles away. Fire protection is two miles away. In spite of these facts Squantum has jumped in five years from an assessed valuation of a few thousand dollars to an assessment on $800,000.

"Think of it, our citizens with children are compelled to pay car fare for their children to return home for dinner at noon. This cost $9 a year. Add this to the $23 tax rate and people with children are paying over $32 a year taxes for the same thing that Boston residents get for $18. In five years Squantum tax payers have paid over $40,000 in taxes and have received $18,000 in improvements. This is not fair and it is not just."

Rev. Mr. Davison condemned the police protection which is given at the Boston park at Squantum. He spoke of women being insulted there when crowds were at this park on Sunday. He said a 13-year old girl had been seen drunk on a car after one of the beer parties from Boston had wound up a day at Squaw rock.

Mr. Brophy said that at least Quincy should accept some of Squantum's streets of the residential section.

An enthusiastic vote of thanks was given President Hamilton and his associates for coming to Squantum.

IMPROVEMENT IS SHOWN

City Receipts of 1913 Larger Than Last Year

The October report of City Auditor Fairbanks shows a larger collection of receipts in 1913 than any of the recent years to Oct. 1. The tax payments have been nearly $100,000 larger, and the water receipts took a brace in September.

TAXES
1913 to Oct. 1	$348,409.52
1912 to Oct. 1	255,460.03
1911 to Oct. 1	255,091.35
1910 to Oct. 1	257,042.81
WATER
1913 to Oct. 1	$113,174.03
1912 to Oct. 1	113,559.81
1911 to Oct. 1	116,455.46
1910 to Oct. 1	106,252.96
SEWER ASSESSMENTS
1913 to Oct. 1	$13,852.33
1912 to Oct. 1	11,342.72
1911 to Oct. 1	11,173.53
1910 to Oct. 1	10,445.46
PARTICULAR SEWER.
1913 to Oct. 1	$4,801.88
1912 to Oct. 1	5,185.78
1911 to Oct. 1	4,426.05
1910 to Oct. 1	4,121.33

The tax payments were almost wholly back taxes, as the 1913 bills have been out less than a week. The uncollected taxes at the beginning of each year were:

Jan. 1, 1913	$454,434.04
Jan. 1, 1912	361.760.19
Jan. 1, 1911	369,720.84

It will be seen that the uncollected back taxes on Oct. 1 were about same in 1913 as in 1912 and 1911 about $100,000.

UNLICENSED DOGS.

Notice will be sent to the City Council this week, that if they so elect a warrant will be issued for the killing of all unrestrained dogs in the city, and from the interest taken by the members in the recent recommendations of the Board of Health incorporating suggestions for the further prevention of rabies, favorable action will undoubtedly be taken.

Licensed dogs in Quincy should wear a tag bearing the license number, which is issued at the office of the City Clerk when the fee is paid and in this way it is not difficult to find the owner of a dog that has either bitten or damaged personal property.

During the past three months 65 dogs coming under the ban were found and killed by the Police department and the issuance of the proposed warrant by the City Council Monday evening will mean that the death toll may mount higher.

The agitation for collection of fees has resulted in $2806 being contributed by owners up to Oct. 1 and the receipts this year exceed the total dog tax collected last year.

At the present time the licensed dogs in the city include 966 males, 70 spayed, 125 females and five kennels. The liability for the keeping and owning of an unlicensed dog has been given wide publicity this year and it is the intention of departments to see that the purport of the law is carried out.

MONEY WASTED ON DRESS.

The American society woman, who has earned the reputation of being the best dressed and the most extravagant woman in the world, spends $75,000 a year for her clothes, according to the estimates of a convention of Chicago dressmakers. His sister who works in the factories clothes herself for $200 a year, according to the same authority. The latter statement is open to doubt. Three dollars and eighty-four cents a week for dress seems all out of proportion to the income of the average factory girl, which labor commissions have recently computed to be about six dollars and fifty cents a week.

However, there is little doubt that poor women and rich alike are guilty of extravagance in matters of personal adornment. Fashion is the lure that brings them all to unjustifiable expenditures. The leader of society sets the pace with her diamond heels, her six changes of clothing a day and all the rest of her prodigal follies. The girl of the factory imitates in her humble way. And so, considering the top of the social ladder with the bottom, it will be found that the expenditure of $75,000 by a society woman is not out of proportion to the expenditure by a factory girl of $3.84 out a possible $6.50.

CITY GAINS IN VALUATION

Quincy Is More Than Holding Its Own

Has Passed Four Cities

Only ten of the 33 cities of Massachusetts have doubled their assessed valuation since 1895, according to the figures compiled by City Treasurer Tifft of Springfield, which are published below. Quincy is in this list and also Springfield, Lawrence, Holyoke, Brockton, Pittsfield, North Adams, Everett, Chicopee and Beverly. Quincy's gain was over 123 per cent for the 18 years.

Two cities have passed Quincy in valuation during this period—Beverly with its new United Shoe machinery plant and wealthy summer colony, and Pittsfield with its large mills. But Quincy has more than held its own, as it has passed Fitchburg, Waltham, Chelsea and Taunton.

In the list below the cities are arranged in order of their 1913 valuation, and Quincy is number 19 among the 33 cities, but she is really number 20 in Massachusetts as there is one town which is wealthier—Brookline.

But Quincy should not attempt to outstrip in improvements the cities above her in this valuation list, like Newton, Brockton and Malden. Compared with Everett, Waltham and Medford we make a good showing.

The valuation figures for 1913 and 1895 afford an interesting study, and will be followed with a comparison of city debts:

	1913 Valuation	1895 Valuation

House cleaning time is here, not only for the cleaning of the house itself but the thorough renovating of all household furnishings, lace curtains, draperies ,couch covers, pillow tops, etc. One of the most important factors is the cleansing of lace curtains. Washing ruins them while proper cleansing and re-finishing brings back its new look and finish. The finest and the coarsest of laces yield to our methods of cleaning without injury to the curtain. TRANSFERRED TO LAWRENCE.

Rev. Fr. Patrick J. Scannell, for a number of years curate at St. John's church, was appointed a curate to St. Patrick's parish, South Lawrence, on Thursday by Cardinal O'Connell. Father Scannell is very popular in Quincy and has many friends outside of the Catholic faith. A year ago he was granted a leave of absence on account of poor health and spent the time touring Europe. He repeated his visit this summer and now enjoys good health. He was active in parish work while here and was a very welcome visitor at the Quincy City hospital where he ministered daily to the patients.

QUINCY VS MEDFORD.

Quincy High plays Medford at Medford on Saturday afternoon and in preparation they had a long scrimmage Thursday afternoon. All of the candidates were in the pile and some experienced real football. Today signal practice and offensive work was the card and the members expect to meet an eleven much different than Weymouth.

Joseph Wolfe, of Moulton avenue, Weymouth, died at the Quincy City Hospital Thursday night from acute appendicitis. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wolfe and was in his seventh year.

CELEBRATES FIRST MASS

Rev. T. R. McCoy Assumes Pastorate at West Quincy

The change of pastors of St. Mary's Parish as announed by Cardinal O'Connell was affected this morning when Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, the new pastor celebrated his first mass and Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady his last mass and shortly after left for Somerville where he has been appointed pastor of St. Benedict's parish.

Father McCoy came to West Quincy Thursday afternoon and the parish was officially placed in his charge shortly after his arrival. This morning through the kindness of Father Grady the Daily Ledger reporter was presented to Father McCoy who also renewed his friendship with Timothy J. Collins of the Boston Globe, a classmate at Boston college.

Father McCoy said he was very much impressed with Quincy, particularly West Quincy where his parish is situated. From past experiences he said he found that the people here are loyal and kind and that their sterling qualities resulted in the promotion of Father Grady to St. Benedict's parish. Father McCoy has resigned as director of the Holy Name Societies of the diocese but plans to increase the local membership to a great extent.

He is a native of Marblehead and a long time friend of Father Grady. He was ordained to the priesthood 13 years ago, and after a short stay at Wakefield was appointed senior curate at the Cathedral. While there he gained the friendship of the congregation, especially the young men, and genuine regret was expressed when Cardinal O' Connell appointed him to St. Mary's parish.

Before leaving, Father Grady again expressed himself as being confident of the loyalty the parishioners will extend to his successor and modestly accepted the congratulations of many friends on his five years pastorate at West Quincy.

BRAINTREE STABBING CASE.

Antonio Del Vievhio was arraigned in court this morning on a warrant charging him with assault with intent to murder on Antonio Manganello at Braintree. Del Viechio is a brother of the man who it is alleged did the stabbing at Braintree on Thursday morning, and according to the injured man who is now at the City Hospital, Del Vievhio held him while his brother Vito did the stabbing.

Antonio however denies that he held the victim. He says that he was 75 feet away when the row took place, and that he ran to the scene, and did his best to prevent his brother from further assault. He claims that instead of holding the victim that he pulled his brother away and tried to hold him until the police arrived.

As the injured man is still unable to appear in court Del Viechio was held without bail until Oct. 11.

Vito Del Viechio who it is alleged did the stabbing is still at large and although the police have scoured Quincy and Boston as well as other places where Italians congregate no trace of him has yet been found.

POPULAR WITH DRAFTSMEN.

The funeral of James G. Laidlaw, who met death in an explosion on the Rivadavia on Tuesday, was held Thursday afternoon from the Hall undertaking rooms and was largely attended by friends and associates. Services were conducted by Rev. James A. Matheson of the First Presbyterian church. Deelgations were present from Clan MacGregor, Order of Scottish Clans, and the American Society of Marine Draftsmen. The deceased was one of the most popular draftsmen at the Fore River offices. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

CHALLENGE NOT ACCEPTED.

The executive committee of the Massachusetts Police league met at Chelsea on Tuesday and did not acsept the challenge issued by the police of Philadelphia for a series of games because of the lateness of the season. But few of the committee favorably considered the challenge and they were invited to submit another defy in early spring.

GYM CLASSES AT Y. M. C. A.

Three Classes This Week and Others Next Week

The winter activities opened in earnest at the Y. M. C. A. Thursday night, when the Employed Boys class had its first session on the "gym" floor. Twenty-three boys turned out for the opener and all agreed that this season is going to be a "hummer" in every way. Prizes were given to Oscar Djerf, James Sullivan, William Bjournholm, Allan Connor and George Peterson for all-round work during the summer in athletic events.

Tonight the Senior class will hold its opening session and Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the Junior class will begin work. The High School boys and the Business Men's classes will not begin operations until the latter part of next week.

Basket ball will hold quite a prominent place as last year in the gym schedule, as practically all of the two crack teams will report for practice in the near future. A meeting will be held in Boston next week to determine whether or not a Y. M. C. A. legaue will be formed this year. Owing to the success of last year's league there is no doubt that such a league will be formed. It will be remembered that Quincy took second place in the Senior league and first place in the Junior league last season.

More attention will be paid to athletics this year on account of the new men who are coming in. Outside meets with Newton, Somerville and possibly Cambridge will be arranged in addition to the local handicap meets which have been features for the past three years.

ABIGAIL ADAMS.

QUINCY BOY ARRESTED.

Salvatore Sarno, aged 14 years, who gave his address as 25 Pearl street, Quincy, was among the dozen boys of about the same age arrested by the police at the Brockton fair on Thursday for larceny of numerous small articles, such as trinkets, etc., from patrons of the fair. Most of the boys gave their homes as Dorchester and South Boston. The directory gives the name of Pasquale Sarno, probably the boy's father as 45 Pearl street.

NEW GLEE CLUB POPULAR

Birds Christmas Carol Presented at Catholic Club

The Quincy Catholic Glee Club composed of some of the well known vocalists of that well known women's club, made its first public appearance Thursday evening at the club's first social meeting, which was called "New Members' Night." The social was held in the rooms of the Knights of Columbus club and was very largely attended.

A very pleasing program was given during the first part of the evening, which included piano selections by Miss Helen L. Galvin, songs by the Glee club after which club members gave the dramatization of Birds "Christmas Carol." The several characters were impersonated as follows:

Mrs. Ruggles,	Mrs. Joseph D. Griffin
Sarah Maude,	Mrs. Timothy J. Carey
Clement,	Miss Eva Rice
Cornelius,	Miss Catherine Brown
Peter,	Miss Zorine McDonnell
Baby Larry,	Mrs. William Walsh
Kitty,	Miss Gertrude Carroll
Eli,	Miss Clara DeCoste
Susan,	Miss Annie Cahill
Peoria,	Miss Mary A. Ford

The play was presented in a manner that was highly complimentary to those who impersonated the several characters, the ladies who impersonated the men parts being especially fine, their efforts calling for loud and prolonged applause.

Following the drama there were more selections by the Glee club who received an ovation. So well pleased were the members with the Glee club that their services promise to be in constant demand at future gatherings.

The entertainment closed with another piano selection by Miss Galvin, after which there was a social hour during which refreshments were served.

CITIZENS SUNDAY.

At 2.30 Sunday, Oct. 5, Paul J. Revere Corps, No. 103, will present a flag to the Sunday school of the Universalist church. All patriotic orders and friends are invited to be present, also pastors of churches.

As Citizen Sunday is a patriotic day it will please the patriotic orders if pastors of the different churches observe that day as a patriotic one. Members will wear white gloves and badges and meet at the church at 2.15.

GRANITE IS RECOMMENDED

Trades Council Endorse It for Boston Dock

The Granite Trades Council met Thursday evening at the offices of the Quincy branches of the G. C. I. A. at Brewers' Corner. Every organization affiliated was represented and much business was done.

The trade reports were very encouraging and showed that the granite business was still good.

Matters of trade jurisdiction were discussed and the trades involved will be benefited by the suggestions offered.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of President Robert McVitie and Secretary Alex W. Russell. Both men are well known in the labor movement in this city, and are eminently qualified to fill the positions to which they have been elected.

The Granite Trades Council has just closed the first year of its history and is the most powerful federation of trades in this city. All the trades connected with the granite industry are affiliated. The council stands for industrial peace, for a strict recognition of trade agreements, and it is recognized as a power for good by employers and employees.

The Council voted before adjournment to memorialize the Directors of the Port of Boston to the effect that SQUANTUM'S SHARE.

Any ward or section of a city which expects that for every dollar paid in taxes the city shall expend one hundred cents in that ward or section is on the wrong track. It is an impossibility and should never be attempted. Quincy pays a State tax of $62,400—aside from water, sewers, parks and State highways,—but it cannot expect from the State the annual expenditure of even $10,000 for general improvements.

About one-third of the total tax raised by Quincy is paid by Ward One, yet this ward gets a much smaller portion of the improvements.

The whole of Ward Six, which includes all of Squantum, pays about one-eighth of the taxes of the city.

But the tax levy is not generally understood. The total levy of 1913 is $892,933.36, but less than half of this—$422,637.43—is available for current municipal expenses and improvements. Over one half of the taxes paid by individuals are not available for city purposes unless payment of debt is included under this head.

It was claimed at a meeting at Squantum this week that—"In five years Squantum taxpayers have paid over $40,000 in taxes and received $18,000 in improvements."

Let us analyze this a little. $40,000 in five years in only $8,000 per year. Over one-half of this goes to State, county, metropolitan expenses and payment of debt, which leaves less than $4,000 for city purposes. Nearly one-half of the city expense is for maintenance of schools which would reduce the $4,000 to $2,000. Further analysis seems unnecessary, as Squantum should expect to pay more than $2,000 for general city expenses and as salaries of city officials, fire department, police department, street department, etc., etc.

The quotation admits that Squantum has received $18,000 in improvements in five years, so that really it is $18,000 ahead, and in justice to the other parts of the city should wait 25 or more years for a schoolhouse.

Two new schoolhouses have been erected in Ward Six in recent years, and Squantum children attend one of these schools. It will be many years before Squantum taxpayers pay their share of the cost of these buildings. When the cost of buildings is included it costs the city nearly $50 per year to educate each school pupil.

Squantum makes a mistake when it argues as follows: "But Quincy believes in holding back this section instead of aiding in its developments. It is purely a business proposition which the Quincy City Council is too blind to see."

Quincy wants to see all parts of the city progress, and would not for a minute hold Squantum back, but the facts are that Quincy is already spending too much money. The needs are very numerous in all parts of the city, but there is a limit on the amount that can be raised by taxation annually (and Quincy goes to the limit,) and there is a limit on the debt which is already much too large.

The process of elimination seems to prevail relative to the Mayoralty nomination this year, and no contest has developed. The following have declined:

Tuesday—Joseph L. Whiton.
Wednesday—Eugene R. Stone.
Thursday—William T. Shea .

Today no one has declined, but no one comes forward to oppose Charles H .Johnson.

The Cleveland women are to have a chamber of commerce, and it is hoped that the matrimonial market will receive more attention now.

The Farmers' National Congress decides that the girls should stay on the farm. The ordinary way of promoting that end is to give them butter and milking the cows as an amusement.

The difference between the two sports seems to be that in base ball they pound the ball, and in foot ball they pound the player.

In the Tennesee legislature they have been drawing revolvers, but down at Washington it takes more than that to catch the eye of the speaker.

FIFTH CHANCE FOR FREEDOM

Thaw Case Has Become an International Incident

UP TO STATE DEPARTMENT

England Calls Upon Canadian Authorities For Full Explanation of Fugitive's Deportation—Claim That It Was Carried Out In Defiance of Order of King's Bench

Washington, Oct. 3.—The British government has taken a hand in the Thaw case and has made a demand upon the Canadian authorities for a full explanation of the fugitive's deportation.

This became public when it was announced that Attorney McInnes, K. C., of Ottawa, the man who drafted the Canadian immigration law, has succeeded in getting the matter of Thaw's deportation by the Canadian government brought before the state department here as an international incident.

McInnes, who is chief of Canadian counsel for Harry K. Thaw, told the nature of the "fifth chance" for his client's freedom, should he lose his fight through the federal courts. This is his return to Canada by the federal authorities, upon request of the British government.

For more than two weeks McInnes has been in Washington, quietly working on the case. Last night he was ready to announce his results—the bringing of Thaw's deportation before the state department.

The question involved is the violation of the rights guaranteed to American citizens under the Ashburton treaty with England. Already the British government has asked for explanation from Canada on the ground that the deportation was carried out in defiance of the order of the court of king's bench at Montreal, and also the denial of the right of appeal to Thaw.

The latter, according to the contention of the British government, is beyond the power of the Canadian government, and unconstitutional.

It is believed here that a formal protest will be made by the United States government and that this protest will be favorably entertained by the British government, as the rights of British subjects, not domiciled in Canada, it is declared, are continually being denied to them, as well as to Americans by the Canadian immigration officers.

As long as Thaw remains in the custody of the United States marshal instead of the state authorities, he can be returned to Canada by the federal authorities demanding that he be given his treaty rights to appear and prosecute such claims as he may have before the Canadian courts.

HEINZE WINS BIG SUIT

Securities Worth $500,000 Must Be Replaced by Money Lenders

Boston, Oct. 3.—F. A. Heinze of New York and Butte, Mont., has won his suit to recover the value of $500,000 in bonds and stocks from about forty Boston brokers and money lenders.

The supreme judicial court recalled its decision in the case and so amended it that virtually all the defendants may be held liable by Heinze.

Liability rests not only for any bonds or stock which he originally delivered to A. D. F. Adams, now serving a term in state prison, and which they may have remaining in their possession, but for the value of those securities which the note brokers and money lenders have disposed of.

TRACERY IS BEATEN

Belmont's Colt Runs Second to Cantilever For $50,000 Stakes

Newmarket, Eng., Oct. 3.—August Belmont's Tracery disappointed his backers at the Newmarket race meeting, as the colt could only get second to the colt Cantilever, in the rich Jockey club stakes of $50,000. Aleppo was third. There were seven runners.

When $236,550 was paid for Prince Palatine last July it was thought that the limit in the value set on one horse had been reached. The offer, declined last Tuesday, by Belmont, of $200,000 for Tracery shows that the search for really good horses has become increasingly keen.

BRUTALITY IN HOSPITAL

Six Ribs of Aged Insane Patient Broken to Keep Him In Bed

Kankakee, Ills., Oct. 3.—Blows dealt Carl G. Hoist, an insane patient, 78 years old, so that he suffered six broken ribs and later died, were the method employed to keep him in bed at the Kankakee state hospital for the insane, according to a confession by William Wolf, a former hospital attendant.

Wolf is under arrest, charged with murder. He implicated John Mahan, a hospital employe, who also was arrested, and another former employe who has not been apprehended.

Coin Decides Method of Suicide

Paris, Oct. 3.—Gaston Halpen, artillery captain, tossed a coin to decide the manner of his suicide, and when it fell "heads" he shot himself through the heart.

SHERIFF ON THE ALERT

Boatload of Whiskey From Boston Seized In Portland Harbor

Portland, Me., Oct. 3.—The Boston motorboat Spartan, carrying a cargo of nearly 1000 gallons of whiskey which was destined to run the blockade and enter Rockland and Bangor, Me., nearly swamped in the heavy sea which ran off the Maine coast and was forced to put into Portland harbor, where Sheriff Scully seized the boat and cargo and arrested two of its crew.

In an effort to escape from the sheriff and deputies three of the five men of the crew made their escape by plunging into the water and swimming ashore. The two men arrested gave the names of Michael O'Shea and Charles M. Capillo.

The arrests and cargo form the biggest seizure which the Maine officials have yet made in their effort to suppress the entry of liquor into the "dry state."

MARIE LLOYD DEPORTED

New York, Oct. 3.—Marie Lloyd, the English commedienne, was ordered deported as an undesirable alien by a board of inquiry at Ellis island.

Bernard Dillon, formerly a jockey on the English turf, who came to America with her on the Olympic, was also ordered expelled from the country.

Miss Lloyd was registered on the Olympic as the wife of Dillon. She was accompanied by a maid. With Dillon she occupied one of the exclusive suites on the B deck. She was on her way to fill a long engagement at $1500 a week.

It was while the couple's baggage was being examined that it was revealed they were not man and wife. Under the persistent questioning of the inspector, Miss Lloyd admitted she was not Dillon's wife.

HUERTA OPPOSED TO DELAY IN ELECTION

Indications That He Will Hold Over as President

Mexico City, Oct. 3.—Provisional President Huerta showed himself an able politician by protesting against the enactment of the bill introduced in congress for the purpose of postponing the national election this month.

The Huerta government has gone on record with the United States government in saying that the election will take place Oct. 21, Huerta being shrewdly aware of conditions throughout the republic.

Unless one presidential candidate gets a majority of all votes cast, Huerta will continue in office, and under present conditions it is a foregone certainty that this constitutional provision cannot be fulfilled.

GYPSIES' LONG JOURNEY

Travel All the Way From Rio de Janeiro to Boston by Wagon

Boston, Oct. 3.—A band of Brazilian gypsies, nearly 100 in number, arrived in Boston yesterday and will spend the winter in three blocks they have hired on Dedham street. This gypsy band, whose chief is Carlo Bulla, started two years ago from Rio de Janeiro, coming all the way to Boston by land.

The route covered all of the Central American countries and Mexico. The band spent last winter in Mexico, where the revolution was going on. Many of their horses were confiscated by the federal government.

When the gypsies left Brazil they had more than 100 horses and ten wagons. Now they have but thirty-five horses and ten wagons. There are but two of the original wagons left.

MAY BE LAW TOMORROW

Senate Passes Tariff Conference Report by Vote of 36 to 17

Washington, Oct. 3.—The Democratic tariff revision bill probably will be in the hands of President Wilson for his signature by tonight. The senate passed the conference report last night by a vote of 36 to 17.

Immediately after the passage of the conference report the senate rejected the Smith-Lever compromise cotton futures tax amendment passed by the house Tuesday, and then receded from its own amendment, known as the Clarke cotton futures tax plan.

Both of these motions were carried without rollcalls and their effect is to leave the cotton futures question out of the tariff bill, so far as the senate is concerned.

Royalty's Expenses Increase

Berlin, Oct. 3.—That the high cost of living hits all alike was shown when the Bavarian royal family allowance was increased to $1,350,000 and Prince Hohenlohe borrowed $3,000,000 on a mortgage.

Boulogne, Oct. 3.—The authorities released Aviator Steffen, the German who landed on French soil accidentally, but refused to let him fly away, forcing him to depart by rail.

Summer White House Closes on 15th

Windsor, Vt., Oct. 3.—President Wilson's family will close the "summer White House" at Cornish, N. H., on Oct. 15 and return to Washington.

OELRICHS IN COURT

Hearing on Charge of Stabbing Miss Singleton Is Postponed

New York, Oct. 3.—When 21-year-old Hermann Oelrichs, second richest bachelor in America and chum of Vincent Astor, was arraigned in Harlem police court, charged with stabbing Miss Lucille Singleton, a 19-year-old music student, during a quarrel in an automobile, the case was postponed until Oct. 7, because the complainant was too ill to appear.

A physician's certificate was presented to the court saying Miss Singleton must remain in bed for several days.

Through his lawyer Oelrichs issued a statement denying the charge against him. Representatives of the Oelrichs family made lively efforts to have Miss Singleton drop the charge of assault.

After much contradiction and some mystery, the original charge made by Miss Singleton, that she had been stabbed during an automobile ride, was sustained.

FOSS WARNS UNION MEN

Railroad Engineers Must Not Strike to Enforce Seniority Rule

Boston, Oct. 3.—Governor Foss sent a letter last night to the officials of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in which he stated that if this organization declared a strike on the New Haven road that he would call for a special session of the legislature and ask for the passage of a law prohibiting strikes of railroad employes in Massachusetts.

In his letter he plainly sets himself up in opposition to the contention of the big railroad organization that its men should be promoted in the order of their seniority, the governor holding "that seniority without regard to fitness lowers the efficiency of the labor force." He says that the real question at issue is the safety of the traveling public.

CANAL NOT INJURED BY EARTH TREMORS

First Heavy Shocks on Isthmus of Panama In 150 Years

Panama, Oct. 3.—Careful inspection was made of the Panama canal and the Gatun locks to ascertain if any damage was done by the earthquakes that shook the isthmus near midnight. Superficial examination of the canal after the shocks failed to show any injury to the work.

The tremors came twenty minutes apart and people rushed from their beds in panic. The first upheaval was the most violent. The quake began with a tremulous upheaval and gradually increased, lasting fully twenty seconds. Clocks stopped, furniture moved about and windows were broken.

The last earthquake of any consequence on the isthmus was 150 years ago.

BODY HURLED OUT WINDOW

Gloucester Man Killed by Powerful Current of Electricity

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 3.—Alexander T. Stewart, foreman of the Gordon-Pew Fisheries company of this city, was electrocuted as he was turning on the powerful electric switch to run the esculator and hurled ten feet through a window.

Stewart, when he turned on the switch, was standing in his bare feet on a floor covered with water. His hand, it is believed, must have come in contact with the switch, and the current of electricity passed through his body into the water covered floor.

The sash of the window through which the man was hurled was carried out into the yard by the force of the contact. It was found lying beside the body.

KING GUSTAVE LAID UP

Ruler Suffers From After Effects of Operation For Appendicitis

Stockholm, Oct. 3.—King Gustave is suffering from the after effects of an operation for appendicitis performed in 1910 and he has been obliged to take to his bed to undergo special treatment.

Since the operation the king often had severe pains in the stomach, and these increased considerably within the past few days. The treatment, it is said, will necessitate the king staying in bed for some time, which will prevent him from attending to state business.

NOW A FEDERAL PRISONER

Muret, Pal of Schmidt, Must Answer to Charge of Counterfeiting

New York, Oct. 3.—"Dr." Ernest Muret, arersted with Hans Schmidt, the confessed priest-murderer of Anna Aumueller, was turned over to the federal authorities and must now answer the charge of counterfeiting.

Captain Henry, head of the secret service here, took charge of Muret. After being arraigned before Federal Judge Hough, Muret was returned to the Tombs as a federal prisoner.

Pegoud's Latest Feat

Paris, Oct. 3.—Alphonse Pegoud, loop-the-loop aviator, made eight loops, flew head downward without touching his levers and then did a steep spiral glide.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Milton High school is fast forging to the front in interscholastic football and by the end of the season may be one of the best in the state. The players are not giants but are fast and are still developing. The showing in the Winthrop game, and the Chamber of Commerce game was better than expected, and Coach Hazleton finds that his efforts are fruitful. For the first time in many years no game has been arranged with Quincy, due perhaps to the absence of rivalry between the schools in football.

Cunningham gymnasium is about to launch its busiest athletic season under the direction of William Eaton, who is serving his first term as director. They expect to reap honors of all kinds. The football and basket ball teams meet Sunday to choose captains, a committee is preparing the program for the winter bowling, the wrestling team is training faithfully and on the showing of these teams depends the outcome of the agitation for the new swimming tank which is being considered. For football there are 16 candidates, 14 aspirants for basket ball honors, about 80 bowling enthusiasts and nine wrestlers. The boys true to their sporting instincts, are shaping into condition as soon as possible. The four alleys which were installed when the gymnasium was fitted up are being repaired and four new ones added, making eight in all. They are the regulation top notch Brunswick Balk-Collender alley on which champions develop. The social season is also receiving the attention of the committee and the opening hop will take place next week in the gymnasium. The affair will be a costume party at which suitable prizes will be offered.

The residents of Milton, particularly those living in the East Milton section are constituting themselves into a committee to work for the elimination of the East Milton grade crossing. Sentiment, freely expressed for several years, has crystalized and before the end of the month a definite program may be arranged to bring about a change in this most dangerous locality.

Another interesting topic being discussed is street railway extension over Granite avenue, connecting with the Boston lines. The agitation revived with the passage of an appropriation to build a new bridge and today West Quincy and East Milton are hand in hand seeking the extension. This connection with Boston means much to East Milton in time and money because vast tracts of undeveloped property can be placed on the market and rapidly built up if proper transportation is offered.

AMUSEMENTS

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

THOMAS COMEDY COMPANY.

If any titles were conferred upon the fun makers of the stage, the rank given Tom Thomas as the mayor general of the army of fun would be well merited. Mr. Thomas is a unique figure on the American stage. His humor is of the everlasting kind, one never tires of his eccentricities, because each one seems funnier than the one before. He has mastered that subtle art between the real and the sham. As one watches his funnyisms, his face beaming with good nature, his eyes twinkling with mirth, his broad happy smile, his hearty laugh, one forgets that it is acting and is carried along in the mimic joy of this great laugh provoker. His long experience has thoroughly fitted him for every part he would undertake and in the years he has given to the profession he has probably made more people laugh than any other actor now on the stage. Tom Thomas is the chief funologist of the Thomas Musical Comedy Co. at the Kincaid Theatre commencing next Monday and continuing one week with daily matinee. He has surrounded himself this season with a company of picked artists including Temple & Clark, Mabel Grand, Madeline Buckley, Bob Thomas, Bert Morley, Francis Kramer, Alyre Melzard, Paul Danish, clever performers and high class singers.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

The tremendous reception accorded George Arliss in "Disraeli" at the Plymouth theatre, Boston, would lead one to believe that both were making their first appearance, rather than playing a return engagement. The success was merely a repetition of its former engagement at this playhouse. The only regret, however, is that the present engagement is positively limited to four weeks only. Those who have seen the fascinating elements of this remarkable play as well as the masterful characterization offered by Mr. Arliss, agree that the play is better enjoyed when witnessed the second or third time. The play shows the great English statesman at the height of his career, in the early seventies, striving to obtain possession of the Suez canal for England, the intrigues that developed with the undertaking and through all a delightful love story. It is a part admirably fitted to Mr. Arliss' artistry. The production scenically is most attractive and interesting, particularly the brilliant ensemble effects in the last act, just before the presentation to the Queen. The matinees are as usual, Thursday and Saturday, in addition to a special matinee on Columbus day, Monday October 13.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

Despite the fact that on next Monday "Les Miserables," enters upon the sixth successful week of its engagement, at Tremont Temple, Boston ,there is no abatement in the enormous interest aroused by this magnificent photo-play. In fact anything the interest just at present is greater than ever. All those who have viewed this remarkable production agree that it is undeniably the supreme achievement in motion photography, superseding anything of a similar nature. Great care was utilized by the producers in the staging of the production, as well as in the selection of the cast, with the result that the work is being deservingly rewarded by loudest praises of both the press and public. On Tuesday Oct 14, the management announces "Victor Hugo Night," on which occasion there will be present representative French people, including the French consul at Boston. This particular night is set aside to fittingly pay tribute to the memory of one of France's greatest writers, whose works have been universally read.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

Gus Edwards' latest and in many respects, best production, "A Cabaret In Bingville," will be seen for the first time at B. F. Keith's theatre next week at the head of an exceptionally strong bill of all-star vaudeville of the highest class. At a time when the whole country is cabaret crazy, it is not surprising that the rage has reached the stage, and in his latest effort in the musical comedy line, Mr. Edwards has presented a big troupe of juvenile entertainers, including a big chorus of extremely pretty girls, in a most novel musical comedietta. Other big features of the week will be Mrs. Louis James and her players in a new triangular comedy, "Holding a Husband;" Mr. and Mrs. Jack McGreevey, the country fiddler and the rural maid; Smith, Cook and Brandon in a new and original jumble of songs, dances, and nonsense; Tom Kyle and company in the farce, "A Doctored Widow;" Williams and Segal, novelty dancers; Dare Brothers, in the acme of acrobatic accuracy; and many other attractions yet to be announced. The week of October 13th, Will M. Cressey and Blanche Dayne will make their first appearance in five years at Keith's Theatre, in "The Man Who Remembered." Mr. Cressy's latest and funniest comedy sketch. Their reappearance will be one of the events of the season.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

After an absence of six seasons, Charles H. Hoyt's comedy, "A Temperance Town," will be given by John Craig at the Castle Square next week. With its scenes in a New England village, and its plot founded on fact, this play is one of the most popular of the many written by Hoyt for the amusement of the theatre-going public. It was written for laughing purposes only, and it is full to the brim with humorous incident and dialogue. The characters are all New England types, and from Mink Jones to the orthodox minister they are productive of mirth. There is a little of everything in "A Temperance Town," comedy, farce, melodrama and satire. In scenery, the Castle Square production will bring to the eye of the audience a series of characteristic and homelike village country scenes, and they will carry many a spectator back to childhood's days. In the cast will be Mr. Carleton as John Worth, Doris Olsson as Ruth, and Donald Meek and Carney Christie as the pair of scapegraces old and young Mink Jones and his son Bingo. "A Temperance Town" will be given for only one week at the Castle Square.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

For that great general public—and it is great—which acclaim George M. Cohan, the best feature of his play "Broadway Jones" which he is presenting at the Colonial theatre, Boston is the fact that it keeps its audience laughing all the time, and that, too, frankly, unreservedly and hilariously. But for those of us who like to inquire into the reason of things there is a chief cause for congratulation that his play reveals, more than any of his previous works, Mr. Cohan's keen facility for observing things, remembering them and bringing an unusual sense of humor to bear upon them. In "Broadway Jones" Mr. Cohan has written another of his remarkably clever comedy figures, one into which, in playing, he projects his magnetic personality with a sincerity that makes for certain success. Then, too, he has surrounded himself with a fine company whose individual and collective efforts add materially to the satisfaction that is derived from viewing his newest Cohan product. The cast includes his mother and father, Helen F. and Jerry J. Cohan, Edith Luckett, Ada Gilman, Mary Murphy, George Parsons, Fletcher Harvey, M. J. Sullivan, Daniel Burns, Jack Klendon, John Fenton and others. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

LIBRARY IMPROVEMENT.

Commissioner Tupper's men commenced work this morning completing the work on the grounds of the Thomas Crane public library. There was quite a low place on the side of the grounds bordering Coddington street. This low spot is being filled with loam and when completed will be graded and sown with grass. On the corner a large ornamental pole is already to be set. This pole will carry a cluster of four lights as well as the street railway wires. The addition to Coddington street will be resurfaced and put in first class condition.

Economy Hints

THERE was a time in the history of our country when many of the occupations labeled themselves "Hands Off" at the approach of women; but, happily, that time has gone by. One form of industry that has opened its avenues to women is the real estate industry.

A woman of Boston who has become an expert along this line began work on the most insignificant plan imaginable. Her work is a little different from that of the general real estate dealer, for instead of selling the house she sells the house furnishings and equipments of the lodging house.

One day she was in the company of a couple of gentlemen who were discussing the real estate business, with its opportunities for making money. If the work was so attractive to a man, could it not be made to appeal just as forcibly to a woman of ordinary intelligence? She rented a room for an office and met with success at the start.

She found advertising the best aid in her work and in her experience has never had a house on her hands more than two months. Generally they sell much sooner. Sometimes she sells her furnishings the same afternoon she buys them. Location has much to do in the sale, and houses in the business sections are readily disposed of. In buying, one must see that the price paid is not more than could be realized from a forced sale. Sometimes a house has to be renovated at a small cost. Whatever is old or worn goes to the auction room, and, no matter how shabby an article is, some one is there to purchase it, so that a little is realized from every article.

Sometimes she bought on time, but generally she bought for cash outright, always under such conditions that she could not possibly lose on the transaction.

The woman with no capital who desires to undertake this work could buy and sell for the parties themselves, reserving a commission for her trouble.

PACKING A SUIT CASE.

Packing a suit case is a problem to the woman who wishes to arrive at her destination with her clothes fresh and dainty. Many a frock has been ruined by jamming it into a case without thought of consequences. Pack away all the underwear and accessories first, and make sure there is plenty of room left for your favorite frock.

Present day underwear does not take up much room. The necessary changes can be packed in a very thin layer in the bottom of the case. A thin silk petticoat or one of crepe de chine or wash net spread the full length and breadth of the suit case takes up only a fraction of an inch. Stockings are never seriously inconvenient, for they can be tucked in corners or inside the shoes.

As to shoes, if walking shoes are worn a pair of house shoes and a pair of evening slippers are all that are needed. Shoes at best, even in this year of thin kid and French heels and pointed toes, take up a lot of room, and the packer generally gives a sigh of relief when they are safely disposed of.

A few layers of tissue paper will be found convenient in packing the suit case. They are as effective in keeping frocks free from dust as muslin cases and certainly take up less room.

How to Care For a Silk Umbrella.

When coming in with a wet umbrella stand it handle down to dry, then wipe off the handle and ferrule and furl the silk sections. If the silk gets a spot on it remove it with a silk rag, warm water and soap. Clean a gold or silver handle with whiting, wash a china handle in warm soapsuds, rub up a wooden handle with a very slightly oily rag. A good way to mend a silk umbrella is to wet a piece of black court plaster and fasten it to the silk just under the tear and let it dry.

How to Make Picnic Loaf.

Three pounds beef from brisket, six hard boiled eggs, three tablespoonfuls vinegar, salt, pepper, cloves, mace, celery and mustard seed, mixed; one cupful stock.

Boil and chop meat fine. Add chopped eggs, spices and stock. Mix well and mold into brick pan. Cover with a weight and let stand overnight. Slice for picnics or other meal.

How to Remedy Frayed Cuffs.

Instead of cutting the frayed edges of cuffs and collars, as many people are accustomed to do, take a lighted taper and just singe the frayed parts. It will be seen that the linen will last much longer. Cutting the edges has a tendency to loosen the parts, and singeing just takes the frayed edges off without injury.

How to Store Apples.

A box of fresh dry sand is an excellent thing to have in a corner of the storeroom or pantry. If apples are carefully packed in the sand they will keep fresh and unshriveled for months.

There's So Much I Want to Do!

Almost every hour of the day, in our stores, one hears one say to another:

"I can only stop a minute to talk; I've got so much to do."

And it is very true. Few men have an idea of what women have to do in the home—getting breakfast for the husband, a later breakfast for the children, lunches to put up, dinner for those who come home, supper when the day is done—and keeping everything going right.

The man comes home at night believing that he is the only one who works, and looks around his nice little home, little realizing the time, strength and thought it took to arrange all these little things, and keep them arranged so well.

Well, the best we can do in being helpful is not as much as we wish to do.

That this store grows better all the time must be apparent to everybody, and it shall keep on growing better, and more acceptable and useful.

It is an exquisite compliment to have people say:

"I come to this store because I can find here everything I want and am sure of the goodness of what I buy."

The long Autumn and Winter months are coming, and must be prepared for.

CUP NIGHT.

Secretary Hall of the Quincy Yacht club reports that tickets for the cup night of the club to be held next Thursday evening are going well, and the affair promises to be a success. The committee in order to make the necessary arrangements for the banquet desire to know at as early a date as possible how many are to attend.

ANNUAL SOCCER GAME.

The choice of the teams to represent Scotland and England in the annual soccer game has developed a controversy, many of the Boston and District Soccer league members claiming that team representation and not merit was considered by the committees.

Sharples, the youngest goal star in the country and a member of last years champion Fore River team, was appointed goal on the English team. He has not played this year and while his merit is unquestioned it is the feeling of many that the place should go to F. Fletcher of the Lynn Fosse.

It is further claimed that Harrison and Hendry of last year's Fore River teams, now with the Brockton aggregation, should have been placed on the Scotch representation. The controversy may result in the non acceptance of the report of the committee and a postponement of the game which is scheduled for Columbus day on the Locust street grounds.

TO START FLYING BOAT FAD.

Glenn Curtiss Will Demonstrate His Passenger Carrying Machine Abroad.

Glenn Curtiss, the famous American aviator, who is traveling through Europe with his wife, says that he is going to introduce the flying boat fad in elite circles abroad. Since several American millionaires have taken up the sport it has created worldwide interest, and Mr. Curtiss expects to demonstrate his machine in all of the big cities.

He says that safety in the air is practically assured now if aviators will only be reasonable and not attempt foolhardy stunts.

M. Santos-Dumont, the first aviator in Europe to fly in a petrol driven aeroplane, recently took a short trip in one of Curtiss' waterplanes at Deauville and was so delighted with the experience that he has decided to take up the flying game again.

He retired in 1906 after making a record breaking flight of 722 feet at Bagatelle, in France.

QUEENS OF SORROW.

Czarina of Russia and Victoria of Spain Similarly Afflicted.

The czarina of Russia has long held the sympathy of nations as the "saddest woman in Europe." The illness of her little son, the czarevitch, has caused her years of worry and anxiety. Now, however, the right to this dubious title has been taken from her by

Queen Victoria's sorrows started when the second son, Don Jaime, was born with an affliction that has made him deaf and dumb for life. Their fourth child died at birth, and now as a culmination of her troubles the court physicians have declared that the Infanta Maria Cristina, her youngest child, will also be deaf and dumb.

The queen is reported to have visited many of the Spanish convents asking that special prayers be said for her daughter. Dr. Lorente, one of the court physicians, is studying the various methods of teaching the deaf and dumb and will superintend the care of the two children.

It was thought for a time by many of her subjects that the queen's appearance of sadness was due to the memory of the anarchist bomb which was thrown at the bridal carriage on her wedding day. Both she and the king were unhurt, although fifty persons around them were instantly killed. The shock of this tragic occurrence has been completely overshadowed by this later and more personal affliction.

TWO ARRESTED AS DYNAMITERS

Confession of Man Selected to Head Alleged Gang

IMPLICATES UNION OFFICIALS

Secretary-Treasurer Jones of International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers and George Davis Charged With Conspiracy—The McNamaras Pleading Guilty Exploded Plans

New York, Oct. 3.—George E. Davis, alias George O'Donnell, was arrested by a United States marshal here on a charge of blowing up with dynamite a New Haven railroad bridge at Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1911.

Davis is also charged with having conspired with the McNamara brothers, Frank M. Ryan and other officers of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' union to wreck the Mt. Vernon and other bridges. The marshal asserts that Davis has confessed.

Davis was arrested upon the complaint of Robert J. Foster, a private detective. Foster charged that a conspiracy of Ryan, the McNamara brothers and fifty other iron workers to transport dynamite to be used in wrecking property of the American Bridge company was still in existence.

The formal charge against Davis, who is an iron worker, is that he violated the federal law against the transportation of high explosives on passenger trains engaged in interstate commerce. Foster said that Davis gave him a written confession before his arrest.

Davis was arraigned before a United States commissioner, waived examination and consented to go to Indianapolis, where he is under indictment for transporting explosives. In his confession, it is alleged, Davis has implicated union officials in several explosions. Bail for Davis was placed at $10,000.

Davis was first apprehended in Pittsburg by Foster, who has been working for several years on the dynamite case. The detective and the prisoner talked the matter over in Davis' hotel room in Pittsburg. Then they came to New York in a parlor car and Foster said Davis dictated the confession while en route here from Pittsburg. Since then Foster has been in touch with the federal officials here, and the confession was elaborated.

One sensational statement credited to Davis is that he had been selected to head a gang of fifteen dynamiters assigned to blow up every non-union building they could find in the country. The confession states that this plan was conceived while the McNamaras were on trial in Los Angeles and was designed to show that the McNamaras were not doing the dynamiting.

The confession sets forth that the plan was cut short by the action of the McNamaras in pleading guilty.

The confession is very voluminous and purports to give Davis' entire connection with the ironworkers. It comprises a history of many facts developed at the time of the McNamara trials.

Davis served a term in the Massachusetts penitentiary under the name of O'Donnell because of events connected with the Somerset dynamiting.

During the federal investigation and trial, an unsuccessful search was made for Davis. In his confession, he alleged the union kept him "under cover."

Arrest of Jones

Indianapolis, Oct. 3.—Harry Jones, secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, was arrested here by a deputy United States marshal on a charge of conspiracy. Jones, it is said, is implicated in the confession of George E. Davis.

Jones was arraigned in federal court and his bond fixed at $10,000.

DISCUSSED BY WILSON

Bill to Have Government Operate All Wires to Be Introduced

Washington, Oct. 3.—Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines is to be proposed in bills Representative Lewis of Maryland is drafting now for introduction in the house.

Though the measures have not been made an administration policy, the president is known to have discussed the idea with Lewis and others interested in the project.

Lewis has collected a mass of data on the subject of telephone and telegraph operation, and has prepared estimates as to their cost to the government, their advisability as a source of revenue and cost of maintenance and also has worked out a tentative plan for their acquirement and operation as government public utilities.

NO ATTEMPT TO FAVOR SULZER

Assembly Managers' Counsel Absolves Brokerage Firm

DEFENSE INTRODUCES MOTIONS

Find Articles Declared Not Worthy of Court's Consideration—Governor's Lawyers Say His Story In Defense Will Be Sensational—Trial Goes Over Until Monday

Albany, Oct. 3.—Adjournment until Monday afternoon was taken in the impeachment trial of Governor Sulzer after a few motions made by counsel for the defense had been disposed of.

Isador J. Kresel, of counsel for the assembly managers, read a statement absolving the New York brokerage firm of Harris & Fuller of any attempt to change its books in order to protect the governor.

Kresel's statement preceded various motions made by counsel for Sulzer to strike out certain testimony taken by the assembly managers, which they desired the court to rule upon before opening their case. The motions were made by Austen G. Fox of the governor's counsel.

"I shall hold that all motions involving the probative force of competent evidence must be left to the final submission of the case," said Judge Cullen.

Fox then declared he had intended to move to strike out articles 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8 on the ground that "the testimony concerning them, in our estimation, is not worthy of consideration of this court."

These articles are: Articles 3, 4 and 5—That the governor fraudulently induced, persuaded and prevented Louis A. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller from testifying before the Frawley legislative committee, which investigated the governor.

Article 7—That the governor corruptly used his position to affect legislation by seeking to trade with legislators his executive approval of bills for votes.

Article 8—That the governor sought to affect stock prices by influencing legislation adverse to the New York stock exchange.

The Sulzer defense plans are completed. With an array of notable witnesses, including the governor and his wife, Lieutenant Commander Josephthal and at least three others upon whom the prosecution has been counting confidently for stirring rebuttal evidence, they hope to riddle the case made out by the impeachment managers.

There was an air of great confidence in the camp of the governor. His counsel claim that the case presented on behalf of the state was woefully weak.

It is understood that Sulzer plans to admit the use of campaign funds for his own personal use. He will say that at the time of his nomination he was hopelessly in debt and was being pressed by creditors. Friends of his told him they wanted to aid him. Because of this, he will say, he accepted much money as personal gifts and tried to arrange his business affairs so that after he became governor he would be obligated to no one.

His story, it is claimed by his lawyers, will be extremely sensational and he will recite alleged efforts made to force him to give in to the machine. How far the court will enable him to go with a statement of this character is problematical.

ARREST EXPECTED SOON

Children of Shackford to Be Questioned Concerning His Murder

Freedom, N. H., Oct. 3.—The authorities investigating the mysterious slaying of Edward A. Shackford, who was shot as he slept in a room near his wife and their four children, declare that an arrest in the case will be made soon.

Children of the slain man, the eldest of whom is a girl of 8, are to be questioned for the first time. The county officials believe the children may be able to help clear up the mystery of what took place in the Shackford bedroom when the well-to-do farmer was found dying in bed by his wife.

GREAT RUN OF MACKEREL

Steamers Gather Eleven Hundred Barrels Within a Few Hours

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 3.—A great catch of mackerel was made when the fishing steamers brought into port 1100 barrels, all of the fish being caught within a few hours in Ipswich bay, where for the past few days a big school has been close to the shore.

The fish weighed about three-quarters of a pound each, and there were about 300 mackerel to a barrel. The mackerel are so close to the shore line that many steamers find great difficulty in seining for them because of the rocks.

Patient Plunges to Death

Portland, Me., Oct. 3.—In spite of the heroic efforts of Jennie L. Keene, his nurse, Frank H. Boody, a typhoid patient at the Maine General hospital, jumped from a fourth-story window and was killed. The man dived through the glass and the screen.

POISON SALE TRACED?

Important Developments Reported In Eaton Murder Inquest

Hingham, Mass., Oct. 3.—Despite the veil of mystery District Attorney Barker cast around the resumption of the Eaton murder inquest yesterday, it became known late last night that his action was due to his belief that the government has located the source from which the poison that killed Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton was procured.

Two witnesses were examined as to their knowledge of a substance containing arsenic which Mrs. Eaton, the accused widow, is supposed to have purchased. The poison, it is reported, was procured in the form of a preparation for household purposes. According to the autopsy, it must have been an arsenical mixture.

ANOTHER CONFLICT MENACES BALKANS

Greece, Servia and Montenegro vs. Turkey and Bulgaria

Vienna, Oct. 3.—After a year of almost continuous fighting in the Balkans, military men are certain a third war is imminent in the near east.

Greek troops are mobilizing at several points on the frontier and all reservists have been called to the colors by King Constantine. A declaration of war against Turkey is hourly expected at Athens, according to dispatches.

Bulgaria will take the field with Turkey, following the provisions of the new treaty.

It is regarded as probable that Servia and Montenegro will line up with Greece, and thus the Balkan war will continue with a new alignment.

A dispatch from Belgrade says the Servians have defeated the Albanians in several engagements and now feel confident they will drive the mountaineers from the border.

PERHAPS PROBING BANK

Officials of Defunct Providence Institution In Grand Jury Room

Providence, Oct. 3.—The federal grand jury has begun a special session, maintaining the utmost secrecy as to their mission.

Risley Brown, special agent of the department of justice, who has been investigating the failure of the Atlantic National bank last April, sat in court with United States Attorney Stiness, and his presence, together with that of officials and attorneys of the bank who were about the corridors, gave color to a report that the jury had been called to consider the bank's affairs.

BOY MURDERS SEVEN

Confesses Wiping Out Family of Farmer Who Scolded Him

Nantes, France, Oct. 3.—The police forced 16-year-old Marcel Redupeau, farmhand, to repeat his confession that he murdered seven people in a nearby village. They feared that he previously confessed under stress of fright.

The boy worked for M. Mabit, a farmer. When Mabit scolded him, Redupeau lost his temper and stabbed Mabit to death. He then went into the house and murdered the farmer's wife, his mother, aged 70, three children and a servant girl.

Fifty Corpses Found In Church

IN SPITE OF MAGIC

A Story For All-hallow Eve

BY LILLIAN WENTZ

Young Cornelius Babcock settled his necktie and thrust in its crimson folds the mock turquoise scarfpin he had bought at Levy's on his way home from work that night. Then he stood away and admired the snowy whiteness of the rubber collar that looked exactly like linen and saved many a laundry bill by its deceptive guise; he stroked the glossy smoothness of his olive green striped suit; he stuck out a neat foot attired in a pale blue sock and shiny patent leather pumps and smiled with satisfaction. It would be a critical maiden, indeed, who would not look with favor upon Mr. Babcock in this festal array, for he had health and youth and a measure of good looks. He was going to a party, and he was in love. It showed in his face and in his eyes.

Suddenly he reached into an obscure corner of the bureau drawer and drew forth a tiny box. From this box there issued a small gold ring, set with a cheap red stone. Cornelius gazed on it with quickened breath. He had planned to wear it on his little finger that night. She would ask him about it, and he would ask her to wear it if she wanted to. It all seemed so simple as he had planned it, and now he scarcely dared place it on his hand. Suddenly it found place on his finger, and the stone flashed as he lifted a hand and turned out the gas.

As he strode through the dining room, where the elder Cornelius sat reading the evening paper, his mother's voice halted his steps.

"Where you going, Corny? My, but you're dressed up!" She beamed at him over her spectacles.

His father lifted a shaggy gray head and surveyed his son with apparent scorn. "What you rigged like a nigger minstrel for?" he growled contemptuously.

Cornelius writhed inwardly. His face flushed, and he stammered confusedly. "I'm going to a party. I guess I won't be home till late. Mary Finn's giving a Halloween party."

The Finns lived in upper New York, and on this particular night their small flat was filled to overflowing with a merry company of young people.

All sorts of paper decorations hung from the walls and chandeliers. Jack-o'-lanterns were suspended in the doorways and swayed grinningly as tall heads passed to and fro. In a circle of laughing young men and girls Mary Finn was outlining her program for the evening's fun.

"We'll tell fortunes by melting lead and dropping it in cold water, and we can roast chestnuts on the gas stove. There's a tub of water and apples to duck for in the kitchen, and afterward you peel the apples and throw the paring over your shoulder. It curls into the initial of the one you're going to marry! It does!" Mary blushed charmingly, and Cornelius intercepted her smile and took it to himself.

"And what else, Mary?" A broad shouldered young man with a shock of thick, dark hair moved forward and obstructed Cornelius' view of Mary Finn.

"It's for us girls to do," giggled Mary. "We let down our hair at midnight and take a lighted candle and a handglass and walk backward around the house three times. Only this being a flat we'll have to walk up and down the hall, I guess. If you're ever going to get married you'll see the face of your future husband in the glass."

"Do you believe that, Mary?" asked a thin faced girl sharply. "You seem to take it like it was dead earnest, but"—

"Ask my mother," returned Mary proudly, and genial Mrs. Finn nodded complacently.

"It's true, ain't it Michael?" she asked of Mr. Finn, who murmured assent. "I saw Mike as plain as could be looking over my shoulder, and I married him, didn't I? Don't be so skeptical, Kitty; it ain't healthy. Keep young and foolish as long as you can."

The thin faced Kitty smiled politely and sat down near Cornelius. "Things don't come like that, do they?" she asked him. "I mean the things you want to happen don't come so easy. You have to work to make 'em come right."

"I—I don't know. I never thought much about it," admitted Cornelius, conscious that he had been wildly hoping that some reflection of his face might be projected upon Mary Finn's mirror.

"Humph!" ejaculated Kitty scornfully as she moved away.

It was a delightful evening. There were much fun and merriment over the fortune telling and the apple ducking. Cornelius was lifted to heights of bliss when Mary's paring dropped over her shoulder and formed a distinct B—for Babcock, of course. But he was plunged to the lowest depths when he learned that the broad shouldered young man's name was Brady—Christopher Brady—so he stood an equal chance with Cornelius.

But the hour of midnight was to be the crucial test of future partners for life. Apple parings might fall into all sorts of angles that would be mistaken or construed into any desired letters, but a face in a mirror—surely each countenance bore its own distinction, and there could be nothing but plain magic in that test.

Cornelius grew hot and cold as the hour approached. He had scarcely a word with Mary Finn, so absorbed was she in her duties as hostess.

At ten minutes before midnight the girls withdrew to a bedroom, from whence issued much giggling and pushing about and sudden shrieks of laughter. Mrs. Finn ambled to and fro in friendly banter with the waiting young men in the parlor.

"No cheating, boys," she warned, her voice shrill above the vigorous singing of Mr. Christopher Brady at the piano. They laughed good naturedly and joined in the chorus of "She Said She Loved Me, but Now She Loves Another Fellow," and something in the air stuck in Cornelius' memory and could not be eradicated for many a day.

"I don't see where we fellows get any fun out of it all," growled Mr. Brady, whirling around on the stool. "I wonder if I couldn't let down my hair and run around with a hand mirror—what do you think I'd see, eh?"

"You'd see a conceited puppy!" joked Mr. Finn, slapping Mr. Brady's broad shoulders with easy familiarity. "Let me whisper a secret, Chris—excuse me, gents"—he bent down and whispered in Mr. Brady's red ear, while that gentleman nodded mirthfully.

"Sure, I'll do it. I'm on. I thought maybe there was something more! Have a cigar, Mr. Finn." He followed Mary's father into the kitchen, and Cornelius sat silently alone, envying the easy manners of the big Mr. Brady and his apparent intimacy with the Finns. Did this friendliness portend some bond between Christopher Brady and Mary Finn?

Cornelius grew wretched as the time passed. Mary must soon make her test of fate in the gloomy hall. When would he know if it was his own face she had seen over her shoulder? Would she tell it to the assembled company or would she acknowledge it by blushing when his questioning glance sought hers? Desperately he calculated the chances that fate held for him, and he admitted they were very few indeed. Everything he had ever gained he had had to struggle for, as had his father before him. He had fought tooth and nail for his position as office boy in the beginning, and he had fought his way up to his position as shipping clerk by sheer force of will and pluck. In his practical experience he had never called upon luck or fortune or fate to aid him in his climb. He just planned what he wanted and then worked up to it. It had proved a good method in the past.

Now he wanted Mary Finn. If he won her it must be by his usual methods. He must not trust to chance nor to any other doubtful means. There was no time to fool with luck or the magic sorceries of Halloween. He must have Mary Finn in spite of magic, in spite of Christopher Brady, in spite of everything.

Then it was that a daring thought came to Cornelius Babcock—daring because he was unaccustomed to intrigue or fighting in the dark, and this game called for darkness. Leagued against him were Christopher Brady and his intimacy with the Finns, and also on the opposing side were the chances that Cornelius would not win. So he resolved to fight for what he wanted—for Mary Finn.

Mr. Finn entered the parlor and lifted a hand to the chandelier. "I'll be dousing the light, boys," he warned. "Everything's got to be dark as your hat. Out she goes!"

In the thick velvety blackness that followed, Cornelius stepped, swift as a cat, across the floor to the door that led into the corridor. It was ajar and he pushed it open, slid around it and entered the hall where he felt his way into the embrasure of another door and waited, his heart pounding heavily.

Mary Finn would soon come down the hall, her fair hair swinging loose, her sweet face peering in the mirror's depths for the face of her true love. And Cornelius would be there, looking over her shoulder, his eyes meeting hers in the candlelight—settling their futures at one blow.

A door opened, and with muffled shrieks a slender form came into view holding a lighted candle before her. It was Mary Finn!

Christopher held his breath as she advanced. She looked so much like an angel, with the mist of hair about her shoulders and her eyes fixed timidly on the glass, that he almost forgot the role he had selected to play.

As she approached his hiding place Cornelius braced himself to overcome the shyness that began to steal over him. Here was his opportunity to forestall the goddess of chance—he would win Mary Finn in spite of magic!

As she passed he leaned forward and peered over her shoulder just as a dark shock head leaned from the opposite doorway to perform the same service. Their heads bumped vigorously, were withdrawn and then met in growling threats. Mary Finn turned with a frightened cry.

"Whatever is the matter? Why-y!" She stared at the two rivals with mirthful eyes.

"Did you see my face, Mary?" snapped Cornelius sharply, aware that he had suddenly attained manhood. "Didn't you see my face first?"

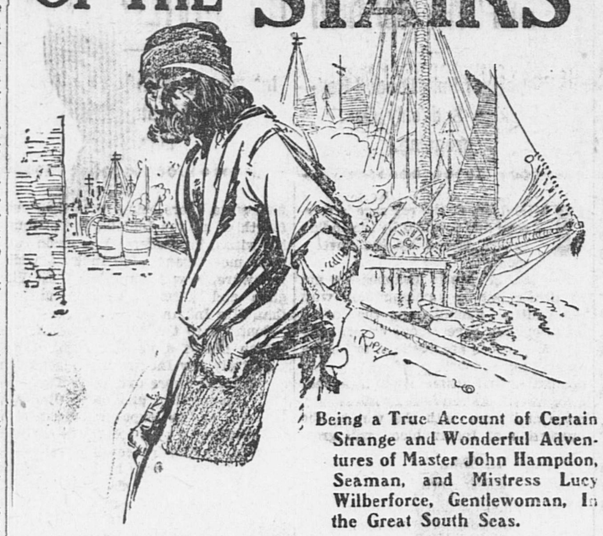
She flushed and nodded with downcast eyes. In the gloom her hand stole into Cornelius' outstretched palm.

"Ah-h-h," growled Mr. Christopher Brady sourly. "You saw my face in the glass too! How about me, eh?"

"Maybe you're going to be my second husband, Chris—if anything happens to Corny—but I hope nothing happens!"

And Mr. Brady had to be satisfied with that arrangement.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

From English fields to south sea shore their path they follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

"Master Hampdon," she began, "to what a sorry pass am I reduced! What shall I do now?"

"My lady," said I, "the sorriest part of the pass to which you have been brought is that you have in me such a poor counselor, a rough sailor, but one who would, nevertheless, give his heart's blood to promote your welfare, or do you any service."

Now, as I said that I laid my hand on the breast of my coat, and as I bent awkwardly enough toward her—I could not even bow as gracefully as the little attorney just departed—I felt the paper which I had taken from Sir Geoffrey's hand and which I had entirely forgotten in the hurry and confusion of the days that had followed his death. I stood open mouthed with surprise and shame at my careless forgetfulness, and stared at her.

"What is it?" she asked, instantly noting my amaze.

"I am a fool, madam, a blundering fool," said I, drawing forth the paper, "here is a letter addressed to you which I should have delivered at once," I continued, extending it toward her.

She tore open the envelope as she spoke and drew forth a letter, unfolded it and there dropped from it a little piece of parchment which I instantly picked up and extended to her, but she was so engrossed in the letter that she did not see my action and paid no attention to my outstretched hand.

I looked at the parchment I held in my hand. It was evidently the half of a larger sheet which had been torn in two. The right half was in my possession. A glance showed me that it was a part of a rudely drawn map, apparently of an island, although lacking the other half of that I could not be quite certain. It was lettered in characters which were very old and quaint, and some figures in the upper left hand corner gave a latitude. The outlines of the map and the letters and figures were all very dim and faded.

My lady's letter was a short one, for she looked up from it presently, her eyes filled with tears, the first I had seen there, and for that reason I was glad she should enjoy this relief. I suppose the fact that she was so alone and had no one else induced her to confide in me. At any rate she extended the paper to me.

"Read it," she said. "'Tis my father's last word to me."

I took it from her, and this is what I read:

My Dear Lucy—As an ancient king of France once said, "Everything is lost but honor," and that trembles in the balance. I have speculated, gambled, tempted fortune, first because I loved it and at last hoping to win for you. But everything has gone wrong. You are penniless. Even your mother's fortune, of which she foolishly made me trustee, has followed my own. Master Ficklin may save something from the wreck. I hope so. I can do no more, and perhaps—nay, certainly—the best thing I can do for you is to leave you. May God help you since I cannot. Your shamed and unhappy father.

GEOFFREY WILBERFORCE.

Post Scriptum.—The last thing that I possess is this scrap of parchment. It has been handed down from father to son for five generations. The tradition of it is lost, but there has always been attached to it a singular value. Perhaps some day the missing part may turn up. At any rate, of all that I once had this is what is left. Should you marry and have children pass it to them. A foolish request, but I am moved to make it as my father made it to me. G. W.

I read it slowly. It was not a brave man's letter. I liked Sir Geoffrey less then than ever before. Some of the ancient awe and reverence I felt for the family went out of my heart then.

"Here," said I, "is the inclosure to which your father refers."

She took it listlessly, but as her glance fell upon it her face brightened.

"Why," she exclaimed, brushing aside her tears, "I have the other half. It came to me from my mother. When she died, five years ago, she gave it to me with much the same account as my father gives. I have never shown it to any one—never mentioned it even."

"Why not?" I asked.

"I scarcely know. It was valueless. I attached no special importance to it. But now, now"—

"It is a miracle," I said, "that the two pieces should have come together in your hands."

"I don't yet understand what it all means," she said, "but"—

"Meanwhile," said I, "may I respectfully suggest that you get the other piece and let me look at it."

"You!" she flashed out in one of those sudden changes of mood, sometimes so delightful and sometimes the reverse.

"I am a seafaring man, as you know, mistress," said I humbly, "and I am accustomed to study maps and charts

"It is an island!" she exclaimed.

Perhaps this may contain information vital to your fortunes which I can decipher more easily than another."

She nodded and went rapidly out of the room. In a few moments she came back with another piece of parchment. I placed them side by side, and the torn and jagged edges fitted into each other perfectly. I had laid them on a table and we bent over them in great excitement—excitement on my part caused by her proximity rather than by the faded, yellow sheepskin.

"It is an island!" she exclaimed.

"Yes," said I.

"Where is it?" she asked.

I pointed with my huge index finger to the figures in the upper left hand corner and the upper right hand corner marked respectively latitude and longitude.

"That will tell us exactly."

"And you can find it?"

"If it is there where the figures say I can as easily as I can find the park gate yonder."

She looked at me with a certain amount of awe. "Why, that is wonderful!" she exclaimed.

"Not at all. It is done by seamen every day."

"Have you ever been there?"

"No," said I. "I have crossed the south seas several times, but I have never chanced upon that island or, in fact, sailed anywhere near that latitude or longitude."

"But you know where it is?"

"Exactly, and if I had my great chart of the south seas here I could put my finger upon it and show it to you."

"What," she asked, pointing with her own dainty finger in her turn, "is that ring around the island?"

"That will be a coral reef, I take it. They usually are broken at some point so that ships can sail within, but here is a complete circle inclosing the island. There seems to be no entrance anywhere. 'Tis unusual and most strange."

"Perhaps the man that drew it made a mistake."

"I think not. The map has been made by a seafaring man, that is plain."

UNUSUALLY HIGH TIDES

Low Land Along the Water Front Were Submerged

With Thursday's noon tide of nearly 12 feet things became interesting in low places along the water front. On the Houghs Neck line the tracks across the causeway were overflowed and street car traffic was tied up for a time the tide being across the street completely submerging the tracks. On the southerly side of the street are a number of small cottages and these were completely surrounded by water, a boat being needed to get to the street.

The same condition also prevailed at the northerly end of Adams Shore where a number of cottages, which were supposed to be far enough back from the water, so that the tide would not reach them, were also surrounded.

Norton road the most easterly street leading to Merrymount subdivision was also overflowed and the street badly gullied out, the sidewalk on the westerly side of the street being entirely carried away.

Thursday night's tide was also a high one, and many places along the shore front were surrounded, but as the tide was high in the vicinity of midnight it caused no inconvenience.

A similar condition existed along the causeway leading to Squantum which was overflowed, and street car traffic was for a time tied up.

It is reported that the Thursday noon tide was the highest for a number of years.

In addition to the damage to the two causeways, the tide backed up toward Montclair and with the heavy rain the dike near the Montclair depot was carried away.

The heavy rain in the morning also did a lot of damage. On South Central avenue, Wollaston, the street was very badly washed and gullied out as was also a part of Lincoln avenue both of these streets being made almost impassable.

At South Quincy damage was also done especially on Ritchie road. Here the water came down from the hill tearing away the street and part of the foundation piling a great pile of gravel and rocks on top of the catch basin at the foot of the hill.

Catch basins in many other places about the city were filled with the gravel washed from the street and in several other cases the gutters were put out of commission.

AMONG THE MISSING.

The police have not located Guissippee Marinelli, and a man known as Tony, who are charged with assault with a dangerous weapon on Carlo Alberto in the latter's home Sunday afternoon. A description has been furnished police circles and outgoing steamers are being watched. Alberto was slashed in the abdomen and on the left wrist and after two days treatment at the Quincy City Hospital was discharged. His daughter, Virginia, who received cuts on the left hand and right knee during the fracas is doing well.

ANOTHER NOMINATION.

The only nomination paper taken out today up to noon was by Charles C. Foster for school committee from Ward Two.

AMERICAN INDIANS DISAPPEARING BEFORE MARCH OF CIVILIZATION

Number of Full Blooded Redskins Suddenly Decreasing.

Intermarry With Whites and Raise Healthy Families.

The Indian race is disappearing not by death, but by amalgamation with the whites. Summing up the Indian situation, the government experts say "the full bloods are destined to form a decreasing proportion of the Indian population and ultimately to disappear altogether." As the Indians intermarry more and more with the whites, the proportion of Indian blood will grow smaller and smaller until the quantity will be negligible and the race will have disappeared.

But, while the race as a race is disappearing, the number of "breeds" classed as "Indians" is increasing. From 1900 to 1910 there was an increase of about 20,000 in the number of Indians in the United States, bringing the total up to 265,000. In Alaska there are 25,000 Indians. Fifty-six per cent of all the Indians in the United States are full bloods. But the mixed breeds are increasing in number, while the full bloods are decreasing. When intermarried with whites more children result, and a larger proportion of these children live to manhood.

Oklahoma Indians are very badly "mixed," only 36.6 per cent of their number being pure blooded. The general proportion in the United States is 56 per cent. Because of the wealth of Oklahoma Indians many white men married into the tribes in order that they might participate in the tribal wealth.

The result is that two-thirds of Oklahoma Indians are of mixed blood. On the other hand, the Sioux, Fox and Choctaw tribes of Iowa and Mississippi are almost pure blooded. In Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico the Indians are very pure blooded, there having been very little intermarriage with the whites.

There are 280 distinct Indian tribes in the United States, and there are fifty-three linguistic stocks among them. Forty-two of these 280 tribes are represented by but a single member, and another generation will see that number of tribes disappear altogether. The largest tribe is the Cherokee, in Oklahoma, which has 31,489 members. Next come the Navajos, Chippewas, Choctaws and the Teton Sioux in the order named. In Alaska there are sixty-six tribes.

The Indians are just as widely scattered today as they were when Columbus discovered America, perhaps more so, because today there are Indians in every state in the Union, according to the report. Few people are probably aware that only eight states in the Union contain more Indians than does North Carolina.

There are 7,951 Indians in North Carolina, but when the youth of the east starts out to hunt Indians he naturally turns westward instead of invading the country nearer home. New York state contains over 6,000 red men.

Oklahoma is, however, the true Indian state, there being more than one-fourth of all the Indians in the country within its borders. Wisconsin contains more than 10,000 Indians, while Delaware, New Hampshire, West Virginia and Vermont each count less than fifty Indian inhabitants.

Contrary to the accepted belief, the Indian is not a healthy man. Comparatively few Indians live beyond the allotted threescore and ten. Tuberculosis, rheumatism and other diseases, brought on by exposure, decimated their ranks. And especially is the full blooded Indian susceptible to "civilized" diseases since he has taken on so many habits and fads of civilization.

According to the census, more than 51 per cent of all the Indians alive today are less than twenty years of age. And a large proportion of these young people are half bloods. The census figures show a greater increase among mixed breed Indians than among pure blooded Indians, the former having more children than the latter.

These figures show that in proportion as the white blood increases among Indians so do their families increase, and there is also a lower death rate among the mixed breeds than among the full blooded Indians. The mixture of the white and red makes a stronger, more prolific race.

The number of Indians in the country decreased between the years 1890 and 1900, but increased in the decade ending with 1910. The increase for the twenty years was 17,500, or 7 per cent. This increase was largely among the mixed breeds, not the full bloods.

There are 50.9 per cent males and 49.1 per cent females. The proportion of males among white people is slightly larger than this. Among full blooded Indians the proportion of male and female is almost equal, while there is a preponderance of males among those of mixed blood.

The expenditures of the United States on account of the Indians for the past fiscal year amounted to $17,690,018.65. The total expenditures from 1789 to 1912 inclusive are $532,867,625.65.

Scholarship played an important part in this disbursement. During the past year $3,757,495 was set aside for Indian schools. The government supports 114 boarding and 223 day schools for the red men. In addition to these there are fifty-seven mission schools, conducted by various churches and societies.

RUN SLOWLY NOT SLOW

City Signs Criticised by Parents Teachers Association

Criticism of the grammatical construction of Quincy's city fathers was indicated at the meeting of the Parents and Teachers Association of the Massachusetts Fields school, Thursday evening, when a motion was introduced regarding warnings to automobilists.

It was moved that the city be requested to place such signs on the streets approaching the school. The motion was amended to make sure of its reading—"Schoolhouse —Automobilists run slowly," instead of "slow" as is seen in other parts of the city. The motion was carried amid loud applause.

As an aid to the finances of the Association it was voted to place a free will offering box at the door each meeting night.

S. J. Ripley the newly elected president presided and Mrs. Douglas Wetmore read the secretary's report.

The secretary was elected a delegate with expenses paid, to the state convention of the Mothers Congress to be held in Gloucester on October 9, 10 and 11.

Among discussions that came up were the loss of clothing at the schools and the practice of High school children riding on the fenders of the electric cars. It was voted to appoint a committee of three to look into the letter.

David H. Goodspeed, principal of the school gave an interesting talk on "Our school," telling of its erection in 1896 at the cost of $40,000 and telling in detail of its different parts. The present crowded conditions he declared would soon demand the erection of a building between that school and the Quincy School at Atlantic. This would also take care of those children who now have to cross the tracks to Montclair. A social hour followed the address.

BRIEFS

Charles O. Watts, the grocer, has filed a petition in bankruptcy; assets $5; liabilities $753.70.

The many friends of Mrs. E. Neary will be pleased to learn of her re-appointment as instructor in sewing and dressmaking at the evening classes in the High school the coming winter. Her former pupils will be glad of the opportunity to renew their studies in dressmaking under her efficient instruction.

TO GIVE UP BUTTER?

Among other health measures enforced at Vassar college, it is reported that the girls are not to be supplied with butter this fall.

Yet butter all comes from the cow, like milk, and is an important constituent of the most natural food the world contains. It adds tang to the staff of life, and converts the severity of a slice of bread into a rich satisfaction for the hungry man.

It is true that the people of Southern Europe and other countries subsist largely without butter. But it is largely an economy habit, the frugal custom of a people whose imperfect industrial life restricts their means of subsistence.

If Vassar has really cut out butter from its table, it of course does so from a belief that the students will he healthier without it. But is not a wholesome diet dependent on appetite as well as chemical formulas? To most people bread without butter would be so unattractive that but little would be eaten.

—"Only a month to the next holiday," says a contemporary, "and like the last one it will fall on Monday."

To be more precise, the holiday will fall on Sunday and be observed on Monday. Coming in mid-October, a splendid opportunity will be afforded for one of those week-end outings which are so much in favor when the legal holiday comes at the end or the beginning of the week. With good weather, this part of the Columbus day observance will take on no small proportions.—Salem News.

HOWARD ARRESTED

Was an Hour Late in Arriving at Court in Milford

Caleb F. Howard of Quincy, an I. W. W. organizer, met with an unwelcome surprise when he appeared in court at Milford on Friday an hour late. Howard was due to appear at 9 o'clock but it was after 10 before he arrived, and he was immediately placed under arrest and locked up to insure his appearance Saturday morning.

Howard explained that he was taken ill in the South Station, and reached Milford late. The police however had reported that Howard arrived in town in time to be in court at 9 o'clock. Later in the day Howard secured bail so that he did not have to spend the night in jail.

A summons was received in Quincy for Howard on Thursday and the Quincy police were going to lock him up. A telephone to Milford however, by Howard, who promised to be in court Friday morning prevented his being placed under arrest. As stated above however he was an hour late in arriving which was not relished by the court.

REGULAR OF CITY COUNCIL

Busy Session Anticipated Next Monday Evening

A regular meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening. In addition to any new business that may be received there is considerable business to come before the meeting, as since the last regular meeting several committees have met, so that a number of committee reports will be received.

The several committees are making an effort to clear the calendar of the unfinished business earlier this year than usual. Under the rules of the Council no further appropriation for street construction, repair or rebuilding can be made this year. The only way to get over this would be to suspend the rules, and as a three-fourths vote would be necessary to suspend this particular rule it is very doubtful if any more appropriations of this character are made this year. Under this same rule any petitions or orders for work of this kind now received will have to be referred to next year's City Council.

SLOW OR SLOWLY.

It is generally conceded that it is correct to say "run fast," why therefore should it not be correct to say—"run slow?" Webster's International dictionary says "slow" and "fast" are both adverbs as well as adjectives. Will the Parents and Teachers association of the Massachusetts Fields school please quote authorities in favor of slowly?

CARPENTER BREAKS LEG.

Nils Nilson of Franklin street, while doing carpenter work in a new house on Bradford street fell from the two and one half story roof to the first floor Friday afternoon. He landed in a heap and was unconscious for some time. He was removed to the Quincy City Hospital in the police ambulance where an examination showed that he had received a fracture of the right leg and severe bruises.

ONLY RUMORS TODAY

No More Mayoralty Papers Taken Out

Chas. M. Bryant May Enter

Business in the nomination paper line was quiet today, for up to noon not a paper other than those already mentioned had been taken out.

As far as the Mayoralty goes there is nothing doing, although there are several rumors about City Square that may develop into something the first of the week. One of these rumors was to the effect that ex-Mayor Charles M. Bryant was going into the caucus for the Republican nomination. Another rumor said that it was not the Republican Mayoralty nomination that he was after but that he might file papers as an Independent for Representative to the General Court from the sixth district. Neither of these rumors however could be verified.

There was still another persistent rumor, to the effect that a prominent Ward One gentleman was being solicited by many of his friends to take out Republican nomination papers for Mayor, but as yet was undecided although friends have kept his telephone ringing urging him to become a candidate. The Ledger was informed who this gentleman was, but was pledged to secrecy until the gentleman had made up his mind. It would not be at all surprising however if the first of the week saw nomination papers in circulation for this gentleman. For the present therefore he will be known as a dark horse.

In the meantime Charles H. Johnsons papers are being circulated in all wards of the city and are receiving many signatures. But thirty signatures are required to place a candidate in nomination before city primaries, but it is said that Mr. Johnson's friends desire to get a large number of signatures in order that it may be shown how large an endorsement he is being given.

Among the Democrats things are fully as quiet for up to this noon no Mayoralty papers had been taken out. Dr. Ash whose name has frequently been mentioned in connection with the Democratic nomination is at City Hall every morning, but in reply to a direct question whether he is to be a candidate, he simply smiles and refuses to say yes or no.

It is expected that next week will see a lively movement all along the line in regard to nomination papers.

They will inspect Boston harbor and the Fore River Shipbuilding plant, Monday, Oct. 6. They will be the guests of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange at the banquet at Young's hotel, Monday evening, at which time and place, Hon. S. M. Sparkman, M. C. of Florida, chairman of the committee will make an address.

NOT ONE CASE OF TARDINESS

Great Record for Children at Cranch School

Supt. Barbours report of school attendance for the month of September shows a high percentage of daily attendance at all buildings. Conspicuous however, is the perfect record of the Cranch school relative to tardinesses; with 314 pupils and a possibility of 6591 being tardy, no one was tardy. The High and the Washington each had 40 cases.

CHANNEL AT ALL TIDES

Large Basin Near Public Landing at Houghs Neck

The state has completed a good job of dredging off Houghs Neck, which yachtsmen and others appreciate. There is now a 24 foot channel to the public landing and a large basin with six feet of water at low tide. The channel to the Steamboat wharf is eight feet deep. It is 60 feet wide at the bottom and 80 feet wide at the top. The Directors of Port of Boston should be complimented for recognizing the needs of Quincy at this point.

FAVORITE WITH THAW.

John J. Caddigan of Post Island, the well known musical director and composer, is in receipt of a letter from Harry K. Thaw which expresses the thanks and appreciation of the most talked of man in the United States. Mr. Caddigan during the summer composed a sentimental song entitled "Dreams of Mother," and knowing the fondness of Harry K. Thaw for music and the devotion of his mother, he mailed him a manuscript at the same time he sent it to the publishers. It immediately became his favorite because of its tribute to mothers, and the letter states that he often runs it over when the feeling of lonesomeness steals o'er him. Mr. Caddigan considers the song one of his best compositions and is pleased to know that he was able to produce something which filled in the void of a troubled existence. Harry Thaw is an accomplished musician.

KILLED AT CHELSEA.

Agrippino Capra, the young East Weymouth shoemaker who died at the Frost hospital Friday night as a result of stab and revolver wounds received at Chelsea the night before, had quite a number of friends among the Italians of this city. According to Officer Fitzgerald of Weymouth who searched the victim's room at East Weymouth, he found a number of letters and other matter among his effects. Officer Fitzgerald has learned that Capra was in Quincy Thursday afternoon looking for a letter and that he spent the afternoon at Kincaide's theatre. It is thought that he was looking for a letter from the woman in whose room he was killed, and that on receiving it he started for Chelsea where he later in the day received the injuries from which he died.

There's So Much I Want to Do!

Almost every hour of the day, in our stores, one hears one say to another:

"I can only stop a minute to talk; I have so much to do."

And it is very true. Few men have an idea what women have to do in the home—getting breakfast for the husband, later breakfast for the children, batches to put up, dinner for those who come home, supper when the day is done—and keeping everything going right.

The man comes home at night believing that he is the only one who works, and looks around his nice little home, little realizing the time, strength and thought it took to arrange all these little things, and keep them arranged so well.

Well the best we can do in being helpful is not as much as we wish to do.

That this store grows better all the time must be apparent to everybody, and it shall keep on growing better, and more acceptable and useful.

It is an exquisite compliment to have people say:

"I come to this store because I can find here everything I want and am sure of the goodness of what I buy."

The long Autumn and Winter months are coming, and must be prepared for.

The bachelors are to pay an additional income tax, but they feel it is much easier to write a check than to propose to a girl.

It is proposed that the army take hold and help raise cattle for food, but that would interfere with the work of mowing the lawns at the government posts.

Paul Poiret, the French dressmaker says American women are not bold enough in their dress. But anyway, they confront the dressmaker's bill with much fortitude.

The present mayor of Boston has often claimed that Boston is unjustly taxed by the State because of low valuations in other parts of Massachusetts. The city valuations published by the Daily Ledger yesterday seem to tell a different story. Boston's increase in valuation since 1895 has been less than 60 per cent, while that of Quincy was over 123 per cent, and nine other cities over 100 per cent, viz—Springfield, Lawrence, Holyoke, Brockton, Chicopee, Pittsfield, North Adams, Everett and Beverly. Many taxpayers in Quincy think the valuation is increasing too rapidly, but building has been very active in this city for several years. Undoubtedly some property in Quincy is valued too high, while some is valued too low. Boston is well down in the list in percentage of gain in valuation.

If Squantum expects to obtain improvements from Quincy it should change its tactics. Abuse will not accomplish the object. Squantum has received courteous treatment from Quincy, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. Taxpayers in all parts of the city must pay for improvements in all parts of the city. Squantum is not the only part of the city that wants its streets accepted. It is true of all wards and all sections.

Squantum was never told seriously that it "must have the votes before it can expect anything." But everything cannot be accomplished in all parts of the city at once. There are old streets in Ward One just as sorely in need of improvement as at Squantum. Gentlemen, present your claims upon their merit, and don't expect too much. As for police protection at Boston park at Squantum, that is city of Boston property and should be protected by Boston.

PRESENT DAY FOOT BALL.

In the days of mass plays and flying tackles at foot ball, the game admittedly developed endurance and courage. Some of its more robust adherents were not over favorable to the recent more open game. Would a dehorned sport develop a rugged manliness?

Several fatal accidents this fall, with other mischances, suggest that it is still not sufficiently denatured to lose such virtues. Indeed, if the average spectator had his way, other changes would take place.

The big foot ball games draw crowds exceeding almost anything in base ball. This is partly because there are relatively few chances to see good foot ball, and attendance concentrates in great crowds. After all it is only a fraction of the people who see base ball.

The people who control foot ball should reflect on the conditions that make base ball the foremost sporting interest. The enormous patronage of base ball is due in part to its clean, open beauty. Every movement of every player is photographed on the eye. When a dozen men pile in a heap at foot ball, the whole thing seems only a frame-up in which umpires and referees are the real players.

There has been remarkable improvement during the past few years. It still remains a superb training Still there are too many chances for the "put him out of business" style of play. Too frequently a man's knees connect with the other fellow's stomach. The array of substitutes suggests a feeling that casualties are a necessary part of the game. If they were comprehensively scored, they might be regarded as like sacrifice hits at base ball.

WIFE ENTERS $8000 CLAIM

PLOT NIPPED IN THE BUD

Grave Robbing and Arson Figure In Conspiracy Said to Have Been Hatched by Montana Ranch Owner Who Is Placed Under Arrest In New York—Held Without Bail

New York, Oct. 4.—Charged with conspiracy, arson and the robbery of a grave, Arthur S. Hughes, a ranch owner of Forsythe, Mont., was arrested here at the request of Sheriff Mosen of Rosebud, Mont.

Hughes is charged with having entered into a conspiracy with his wife and a man named Elliott, both of whom, the police assert, are under arrest in Montana, to collect $8000 insurance on his life which he carried in the Montana Life Insurance company.

According to complaint, a man named Craig was killed in Forsyth about two and one-half months ago by a railroad train. Hughes, it is alleged, took Craig's body from the grave, carted it to his home, placed it in a bed chamber and then set the house on fire. The body, burned and unrecognizable, was found in the embers, and Mrs. Hughes went into mourning for her husband. Hughes, the complaint continues, disappeared.

A few days later Mrs. Hughes married Elliott and put in a claim for the $8000 insurance on Hughes' life. Sheriff Mosen believed that the body found in the ruins was that of Hughes, and soon afterwards arrested them both, while he investigated the supposed death of Hughes.

The Montana authorities, according to advices received at police headquarters here, caused the body found in the ruins to be exhumed and measured it. Then they discovered the robbery of Craig's grave, and by measurements of the body learned that it was Craig's and not that of Hughes.

Mosen and the insurance officials learned later that Hughes had come to New York and was in communication with his supposed widow. After searching for weeks detectives traced him to a cheap lodging house on the East Side and found that he was working as a longshoreman. They arrested him.

The police assert that Hughes admitted his identity when arrested, and also admitted having written his wife. He said he wanted to clear his wife of any charges made against her in connection with his supposed death.

Hughes was held without bail in the Tombs prison for examination.

REGULAR "NIGHT BEFORE"

Gardner and Hatfield Apparently Patch Up Differences

Boston, Oct. 4.—The time-honored "night before" of the Republican party of Massachusetts, which has been a marked date in the calendar of the American House many years, was on at that hostelry last night.

Congressman Gardner and his associates on the Republican ticket were in the ballroom to meet the rank and file of the Republican party, and stood in the same line-up as the Republican candidates of past years.

Gardner and Charles E. Hatfield, chairman of the Republican state committee, marched down stairs from the dressing room at the head of the column arm-in-arm and the crowd cheered.

Numerous Republicans from all parts of the state were present.

NAME FOR CUP DEFENDER

Sentiment Inclines to Give Honor to the American Indian

New York, Oct. 4.—Yachtsmen are discussing the naming of the next America's cup defender. Although the naming is entirely the privilege of the owner, those interested feel that a patriotic name should be given it.

American Indian names seem to predominate in popular favor. Sir Thomas J. Lipton has clung tenaciously to the name Shamrock, and this country's craft have had political and historical names, including the Puritan, the Mayflower and the Columbia. This time, however, sentiment inclines to give the American aboriginal the honor.

FOR PREACHING SABOTAGE

Imprisonment and Fine of $500 Imposed Upon I. W. W. Organizer

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 4.—Frederick S. Boyd, one of the organizers connected with the Industrial Workers of the World, was sentenced to prison for publicly advocating sabotage. His term will range from a year to seven years, depending on his behavior. In addition he was fined $500.

Boyd was convicted of having advised two audiences during the recent strike in the silk mills to destroy goods if they had to go back to work without obtaining their demands. This is the first conviction for advocating sabotage that has grown out of the strike.

Crack Duelist Meets Defeat

Toulon, Oct. 4.—M. D'Orcieres, crack duelist of Paris, met his first defeat in his 173d combat at the hands of a physician hitherto unknown as a swordsman.

THOMAS M. OSBORNE

He Is Studying Effect of Jail on Minds of Convicts

Photos by American Press Association.

Thomas Mott Osborne, alias Tom Brown, self sentenced inmate of Auburn prison and member of the New York state prison commission, was put to work unloading coal. Mr. Osborne is the millionaire philanthropist who decided to serve a voluntary term in prison and receive the same treatment as a regular convict in order to ascertain the effect of life in prison on the minds of the convicts. He is shown in the picture as he appeared before having his mustache shaved off preparatory to entering the jail. The tier of cells, one of which he occupies, is likewise shown.

HAS HAD ABOUT ENOUGH

Osborne Likely to Be Released From Auburn Prison Very Soon

Auburn, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Another hard day was put in by Thomas M. Osborne, chairman of the state commission for prison reform, as an inmate of Auburn prison. He continued his work in the basket shop, and will remain there until his full term has been completed.

How long that will be cannot be learned from the prison authorities, but it will probably be short, as the prisoner has got a complete notion of the hardships endured by the convicts, and does not want to prolong his experience.

TO TAKE COAT OFF UPON HIS RETURN

Roosevelt In Thick of Fray In Next National Campaign

New York, Oct. 4.—"We shall enter undaunted as a national party on another national campaign," was the parting declaration of Theodore Roosevelt to Progressives from all over the country at a banquet given him last night before his departure for South America.

Upon his return, he declared, he will take off his coat and work for all that is in him for the preservation and upbuilding of the party. He declared false the statements by opponents that he has any thought of leaving the party formed last year by the rallying of thousands around his standard.

He said he would never rest content until every single principle enunciated by the Progressive party is put into practical operation by the nation.

ACTIVITY OF TURKEY

Causes Feeling In Greece That Another War Is at Hand

London, Oct. 4.—The fear of war with Turkey is growing in Athens, but the porte is attempting to allay the feeling by announcing her determination to hold the islands in the Ægean subject to the decision of the powers.

It is claimed, however that Turkey is moving troops disguised as irregulars towards Kavala and Salonica. Turkey's irregulars are also reported to be in possession of Dedeagatch, which has been evacuated by Greece.

Another source of uneasiness for Greece arises from the warmth of the congratulatory messages which have passed between Sofia and Constantinople.

DISASTROUS FLOODS

Twelve Lives Lost and Property Damage of $6,000,000 In Texas

Austin, Tex., Oct. 4.—With twelve dead and a property and crop loss estimated at $6,000,000, the result of the worst floods ever experienced in south Texas, reports indicate that the rains have ceased in some sections and that many of the small streams are falling. Rice, lumber and cotton industries are heavy sufferers.

Service on seven railroads is demoralized by bridge and track washouts.

SOCCER LEAGUE SCHEDULE

All the Grammar Schools of the City Are Interested

The soccer football season of the Quincy grammar schools opens Monday and this season all games will be played on Merrymount Park upper field. The candidates have been faithfully practicing and have a fine knowledge of the game which has jumped into popularity within two years. Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director, is in charge of the sport and has completed the arrangements.

The Washington school for two successive years has produced championship teams and last spring lost the championship of the South Shore to the Goddard school of Brockton, 1 to 0. The players of the other schools are more enthusiastic than ever and it would not be surprising to see the champions pressed so hard that they could not successfully defend the title.

The schools are divided into two leagues and the winners of each will play the final games for the championship of the city. No designation has been given the divisions as yet. One will consist of the Quincy, Wollaston Montclair, Atherton Hough, Cranch Hancock and Washington schools.

The second division includes Massachusetts Fields, Gridley Bryant, Coddington, Adams, Lincoln and the Willard schools.

The schedule carries the games to Nov. 5, and the finals will be played as soon thereafter as possible, but the season may be extended on account of weather conditions.

An important rule which goes into effect this year is that relating to the age limits of boys which states that any boy 16 years of age before July 1 of the school year is ineligible to enter into any of the school league athletics.

The second important ruling of Dr Smith is that prevocational boys may not be drawn on to make up any regular team and for the present will not be represented in the league. They can be used on sub teams and in practice work.

The other rules follow:

The field will be 50 by 100 feet, or as near as the grounds will conveniently permit.

Grammar schools will be divided into two sub-leagues, each one playing two championships and the winners playing a series for the city championship.

Halves will be of 15 minutes duration and when two games are scheduled on the same evening the first two opposing teams to arrive will have the field, the first period of the second game being played between their halves.

The offside kick is eliminated.

The schedule follows:

PISTOL AND KNIFE FIGURE IN TRAGEDY

Man and Wife Alleged Slayers of Destroyer of Their Home

Boston, Oct. 4.—Agrippie Capra, 24 years old, who, it is alleged, was shot and stabbed by Joseph and Anna Cantania at their home in Chelsea yesterday, died last night.

Mrs. Cantania is held without bail on a charge of felonious assault. The charge will probably be changed to that of murder. Cantania succeeded in making his escape.

It is alleged that the assault grew out of Cantania finding his wife and Capra together about a week ago, and again yesterday. Mrs. Cantania is 25 years old and has two children.

It is said she stated at the time of her arrest that she had fired the shot, and had also stabbed Capra.

MISTAKEN FOR POLICEMAN

McDonald Compelled to Watch Robbers at Work on Bank Safe

Wrentham, Mass., Oct. 4.—Mistaking him for a policeman, three yeggmen hit James McDonald a heavy blow over the head while he was walking along South street and then, dragging him into the National bank at the point of a revolver, placed him in the president's chair and gave him a lesson in safe cracking.

McDonald sat mutely by and watched the three men drill the door of the big vault and insert a charge of nitro-glycerine. The charge exploded with a terrific roar, but the door did not come off and the robbers made off, threatening to shoot McDonald if he moved within the next ten minutes.

McDonald, thoroughly frightened, obeyed, but in a short time he managed to give an alarm.

Washington, Oct. 4.—Fatalities in the coal mines of the United States during the first seven months of the year numbered 1437, as compared with 1419 in the same period last year, according to reports to the bureau of mines here.

Pennsylvania leads the list with 763 deaths, an increase of 193 over last year. West Virginia, with 181 deaths, shows a decrease of 72 over the fatalities in the first seven months of 1912. Then in order follow Ohio, 99; Illinois, 97; Alabama, 55; Colorado, 47; Indiana, 32, and Tennessee, 25.

WRITING HIS LAST BOOK

Gorky Hastening to Complete Work Before Death Claims Him

Naples, Oct. 4.—Maxim Gorky, the author, is said to be considerably worse, but he insists on writing. He is feverishly trying to complete the book on which he now is at work before the white plague claims him.

Gorky aims for the posthumous publication of his last work to support his family after his death. Surrounded by his wife, son, daughter and three Russian physicians, Gorky is fighting tuberculosis, but the end is not far off.

Wilson Ousts Alaska Judge

Washington, Oct. 4.—President Wilson removed Judge Cornelius D. Murnane, United States district judge at Nome, Alaska. The resignation of Murnane was requested several weeks ago and the latter refused to resign until next June. This resulted in the president's summary action. It is said that the removal was made for the good of the service.

DEFIES THE KAISER

New Son-In-Law Will Not Renounce the Throne of His Family

Berlin, Oct. 4.—An utter deadlock has apparently been reached in the negotiations for the placing of Prince Ernest August of Cumberland and his bride, Princess Victoria Louise of Prussia, on the throne of Brunswick, and Emperor William may be disappointed in his hope of seeing his only daughter the wife of a reigning sovereign.

This has been brought about by the failure of the Prussian officials to realize clearly the determination of Ernest August and his father, the Duke of Cumberland, never formally to renounce their rights to the Hanoverian succession.

Ernest August declared flatly when urged to renounce his rights: "For me and my family, honor comes first, then love."

The authorized publication of this statement is taken as indicating that Ernest August still occupies the same standpoint. The Duke of Cumberland declares that under no circumstances will either he or his son renounce Hanover.

LOSES HIS ESTATE

Man Missing Twenty-Five Years Finds Himself Legally Dead

Belleville, Ills., Oct. 4.—After an absence of twenty-five years in the west, Walter Ludwig returned here only to find he had been dead legally for years and that his inheritance had been divided among other heirs.

Ludwig, whose real name was Walter James, was sent to Belleville as an orphan when his parents died in New York. He was adopted by Amandus Ludwig, with whom he lived for eighteen years. He then ran away and never was heard from again until he returned to Belleville yesterday.

When the elder Ludwig died fifteen years ago he left property valued at $4000 to his foster son. After seven years had passed with no word from the foster son, other heirs asked a court to declare him legally dead. This was done and his inheritance was divided.

FOSS NOMINATION PAPERS TAKEN OUT

Bay State Governor to Try Again as an Independent

Boston, Oct. 4.—Nomination papers in the interest of Governor Foss as an independent candidate for governor for a fourth term were taken out by ex-Mayor Hall of Cambridge, now a resident of Newton. Hall said the papers will probably be circulated all over the state.

It will be easy to get the names for an independent candidacy, inasmuch as the 1000 signatures can be obtained all in one county if desired.

Hall says he believes there is a state-wide call for Foss. He thinks the Foss reciprocity plank is a vote-winner, but places in the foreground the Foss anti-New Haven plank, prison reform, taxation reform, etc.

EXONERATES OELRICHS

Miss Singleton Frees Millionaire of Charge of Stabbing Her

New York, Oct. 4.—Lucille Singleton has changed her mind about her charge of stabbing against Hermann Oelrichs, millionaire student at Columbia law school, whose automobile met with an accident while the two were riding in it Tuesday night.

She declared in an affidavit that her injuries were caused by points of glass of the windshield through which she was thrown.

The felonous assault charge is expected to be dropped. Meanwhile, the district attorney's office will endeavor to learn Miss Singleton's motive for accusing Oelrichs and what prompted her to make the sworn statement yesterday afternoon.

AEROPLANE COLLAPSES

British Army Officer With Creditable Record Is Instantly Killed

Salisbury, Eng., Oct. 4.—Major George C. Merrick of the British army flying corps was killed while flying over the military aviation grounds at Salisbury Plain. His aeroplane collapsed and crashed to the earth and the aviator was picked up dead.

Merrick, who was an artillery officer, was 41 years old and one of the most distinguished of the younger officers attached to the general staff of the British army. He had seen much war service and had been decorated by the king with the distinguished Service Order for bravery in the field.

BOXING EXHIBITION

Quincy A. A. Have Several Events on the Card

The Quincy A. A., the only organization in the city privileged to conduct boxing exhibitions because of their charter, held a physical culture exhibition at Hibernian hall last evening in aid of the football team. The attendance was large and consisted entirely of members.

Edward Bennett, the West Quincy boxer, was referee and Bert Flaherty was timer. Charles C. McHugh was announcer and between the rounds piano music was furnished by Al Woods of Neponset.

Captain Mattie Cummings of the football team and Bob Gerstel had a fast bout and split the exhibition honors with Webb McDonnell and Billie Gerstel. Paul Mulligan and Joe McCarthy, and Vic Albonetti and Billie Walsh, had some classy rounds, and Loretto Tocci and Charlie Moberg had the fastest and most even bout of the evening. Eddie Marshall and Jockie Reynolds mixed it for three rounds, during which time neither man was able to outpoint the other. The affair was run on strictly exhibition lines and no decisions were made.

ON THE LONG TRAIL

Strange Things Happened There

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Beth Cushman was riding home by way of the long trail. It was a yielding to sentiment that Beth herself despised, but she could not help it when she came to the crossroads.

The long trail had been her favorite ride with Miles Hill, but that handsome cowpuncher had ceased to call upon Miss Cushman.

From the trail she could look down into a little canyon through the middle of which rushed a frolicsome stream. On the bank of the stream there stood a horse and rider, a girl on a cream colored pony.

Beth drew a jealous breath, for she could see that the girl was lovely in a blond, golden haired, pink and white way.

As she gazed down there, the white pony lipped the stream and, out from the rocks of the canyon, there dashed a horse and rider. It was Miles Hill, riding black Poncho. Beth caught her breath as the man rode rapidly toward the girl, bent swiftly to kiss her and, with his arm around her slender waist, the two forded the stream and rode rapidly up the canyon and disappeared from view.

Entirely heartsick, but with a brave smile on her lips, Beth sat down to supper that night.

Her uncle, a morose, taciturn man, ate silently and swiftly, and rising, went away on some official errand, for he was sheriff of the county.

Mrs. Colt and her two daughters breathed a little easier after his departure and began to talk to the two cowboys who ate with the family.

"Pa hasn't said anything, but I reckon he's off on that Tinkerman case," observed Mrs. Colt.

"I reckon he is," returned Link Paterson, buttering another biscuit.

"Some one said Miles Hill had disappeared from the range," went on Mrs. Colt, with a side glance at her niece.

"Jameson hinted that Miles was mixed up in the Tinkerman raid," put in Louise Colt eagerly.

"Jameson better try again. There ain't a squarer fellow nowhere than Miles Hill," muttered Link.

"Where is Miles, then?" demanded Cora.

"Miles? Why, I can't say exactly. It's sort of a secret, you know, ma'am." Link grew very red and looked at Beth's pathetic face.

Beth lifted her head haughtily. Her eyes flashed splendidly.

"I don't know why his whereabouts should be a secret," she said nervily. "I saw him today."

"Oh, you did?" queried Link, relieved, and Sammy Smith asked quickly:

"I reckon it 'twan't far from Little canyon, Miss Beth."

"It was right there. He was riding with a girl, a very pretty girl," said Beth bravely.

There was nothing more said concerning Miles Hill, and after supper Beth went to her room and rested her weary head on the sill, letting the cool, sweet air caress her flushed cheeks and dry the tears on her lashes.

Link and Sammy rode away, and from the overcrowded bunk house came talk and laughter and song as the cowboys prepared themselves for some merrymaking in the town, five miles distant.

After they, too, had clattered away and Sam Soy had ceased to rattle dishes in the kitchen silence fell on the ranch house and its inhabitants.

From the veranda below Beth caught the drift of voices now and then through the confusion of other sounds, but after it grew very still the voices came up sharply penetrating.

"I think your pa was too severe with Miles Hill," said Mrs. Colt. "He sure was plumb set after Beth, and it showed he was honorable to speak to Henry about it first."

"Miles isn't poorer than any other cowpuncher around here, and plenty of them marry and settle down," agreed Cora, who was fond of her little cousin.

"I heard him tell pa that if he'd name the sum he thought he ought to have before he asked Beth to marry him he said he would have it," put in Louise.

"How much did pa tell Miles he must raise?" asked Cora.

"Five hundred dollars," laughed Louise. "I heard poor Miles telling him it would take him a whole year to do that out of his pay and then his clothes would be so shabby Beth wouldn't look at him by that time!"

"What did pa say to that?"

"He just laughed, and then Miles got angry and said he'd show him a thousand dollars before he'd ask him, and he went off in a rage, and I haven't seen him since."

"Beth, poor child, said she saw him with another girl," worried kind Mrs. Colt.

"It's a shame!" cried Louise. "I'll just scold Pa Colt when I get hold of him! See if I don't."

Beth withdrew from the window and went to bed. There was a singing in her heart because Miles Hill had loved her, whatever his wandering heart was doing now. He had asked her uncle for her hand, and Uncle Henry had refused, but there was a measure of comfort in the thought that Miles had not been deliberately faithless. He had been turned away, and the blond girl had tempted him.

The girl fell asleep to dream of her lover and the pretty girl who had waited for him in Little canyon and who had received his kiss upon her lips with airy nonchalance.

It was perhaps a week after that Beth Cushman once more rode home by the long trail. This was not from desire. Stern necessity demanded the change of route because during a severe windstorm there had been several trees uprooted along the short trail and a landslide had completed its destruction.

So it happened that Beth rode slowly along the familiar way, her eyes fixed on the little space between Bonnie's brown ears.

She had passed Little canyon without a glance into its green depths and was climbing the hill when she suddenly came to the top, where a thrilling scene was taking place.

Riding straight toward her was a most villainous looking Mexican, and in the curve of his left arm he carried the slender form of the beautiful blond whom she had seen with Miles. Shouting down the distance came Miles, bending over his horse in vain pursuit of the Mexican.

While she paused there, startled at the scene, a shot rang out from the bushes bordering the trail, and Miles threw up his hands and fell to the ground. The horse cropped the grass undisturbed by the still form of his master lying so near.

All this happened in a breath. When Miles fell the Mexican was still coming toward Beth. A great rage filled her soul with a mad desire to kill, to avenge the life of her old sweetheart.

"Give her to me! Let go! I'll kill you if you don't!" she screamed in his ear.

He released his hold on the girl, and Beth clutched her in strong arms and swung her across her saddle; then she dashed past the Mexican and guided Bonnie to where the prostrate Miles lay on the ground.

"You're safe now," assured Beth as she helped the girl to the ground and then dismounted. To her surprise the girl stared at her rather impudently until a smile crinkled the corners of her rouged lips.

The girl laughed gleefully and clapped her hands at a stout, red faced man who came panting toward them.

But Mr. Fennell was grinning with enthusiasm.

"It was great—great—Flora!" he cried. "Young lady, I must have you in this. What say? Could you do that stunt again?"

Beth looked at him in a bewildered way, and her blushes deepened when she noticed that Miles Hill had risen quite unhurt and was regarding her with grave interest in his brown eyes.

"Perhaps you will explain it to me. I've never been called a tenderfoot before." Beth smiled at the girl called Flora, and the girl nodded back in a friendly way. The Mexican had approached and was nonchalantly rolling a cigarette, while from the underbrush there crawled another actor of the cowboy type. It was this worthy who had fired the blank cartridge from ambush at Miles Hill.

Mr. Fennell explained all about his company of moving picture actors and how this particular film was to be a star production if it turned out well. And he wanted Beth to help them out by repeating her rescue of Flora from the dark browed Mexican, who in real life was her husband.

So the camera man threaded up his machine again, and the scene was repeated to the great satisfaction of Mr. Fennell and all concerned.

At last the company separated, the actors going back to their headquarters at Red Ford and Miles Hill riding slowly home with Beth, who had so unexpectedly come into her own again.

"You thought I was dead, honey?" he asked after awhile.

She nodded. "And I saw you and Flora in the canyon the other day," she added.

"You mean where I kiss her and ride upstream?"

"Yes—I—er—believed it was true, Miles."

He laughed tenderly. "It couldn't be, dear, because there's only one girl in the world for me, and she's so fine that when she saw the girl she thought was mine being carried off by a no 'count greaser she just naturally would not stand for it, but rushed in and rescued the girl for me."

Beth blushed hotly, but her eyes were very happy.

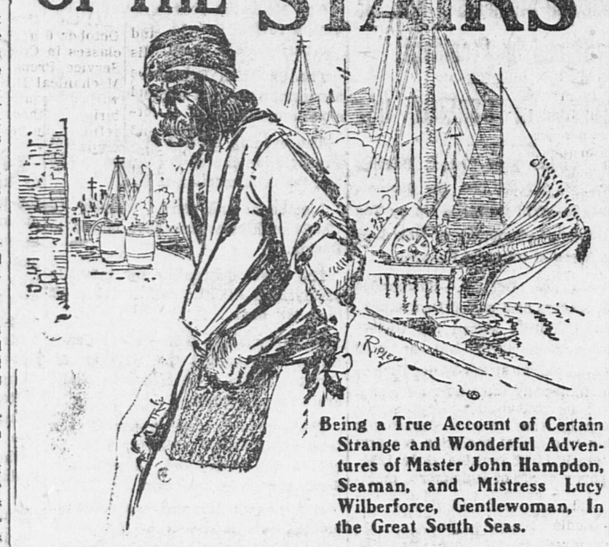
"I heard about your asking uncle," she said. "Is that why you are acting in this moving picture company, so that you can raise a thousand dollars?"

"To marry you at once," he smiled down at her. "You see, I'll have the money saved up in three months. Fennell's going to get out four more of these wild and woolly western plays, and I'm going to be in every one of them. I guess you might as well begin on your wedding clothes, dearie."

"And I thought it was the blond all the time, Miles," she whispered tearfully.

"Don't pin your faith on blonds, honey," he cautioned. "They always do the contrary things. This time it was not the blond; it was all for you."

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

"I see, and the island itself is a circle," she said, bending to inspect it more closely.

"Yes," said I, "and it is like no island that I have ever seen, for here be two great rings like a gigantic wall and a hill or something of the sort in the middle." I bent lower over it in my turn. My eyes are unusually keen, and I saw a word written on the outside of the island proper and between it and the coral reef. "See," said I, "the word 'Stairs!'"

"Stairs!" exclaimed the girl in amazement. "Did you ever see stairs on an island?"

"No, I have not, but these may be some natural means of ascent."

"It is most strange and meaningless," she said. "You have been a faithful, devoted servitor, Master Hampdon, and I have no hesitation in telling you all I know. My mother and father were distantly related—that is, they were descendants in the fifth generation from two brothers."

"Exactly," said I. "Your father's note says this parchment has been in his possession for five generations, and evidently it was in the possession of your mother's people for the same time. Who was the father of these two brothers?"

She thought a moment.

"Sir Philip Wilberforce was his name. He was"—

"A sailor," I exclaimed.

"Yes, he voyaged in distant seas in Queen Elizabeth's time. Geoffrey and Oliver, his sons, quarrelled over his property after his death, and"—

"There you have it. They divided his fortune and tore the parchment apart, it being thought valuable for some reason and each kept half."

"That is the tradition as regards the fortune, and it may account for the parchment."

"What next, madam?"

"The families drifted apart and gradually died out until Sir Geoffrey and my mother were alone left of their respective lines, and without knowing the relationship they met and married and I"—she faltered and put her hand over her face—"am the only one left of the family, of either branch."

"Now, here," said I, devoutly, for I fully believed what I said, "are the workings of Divine Providence. The parchment came from old Sir Philip, it was torn by his sons and the pieces came not together until in you the ancient lines were united."

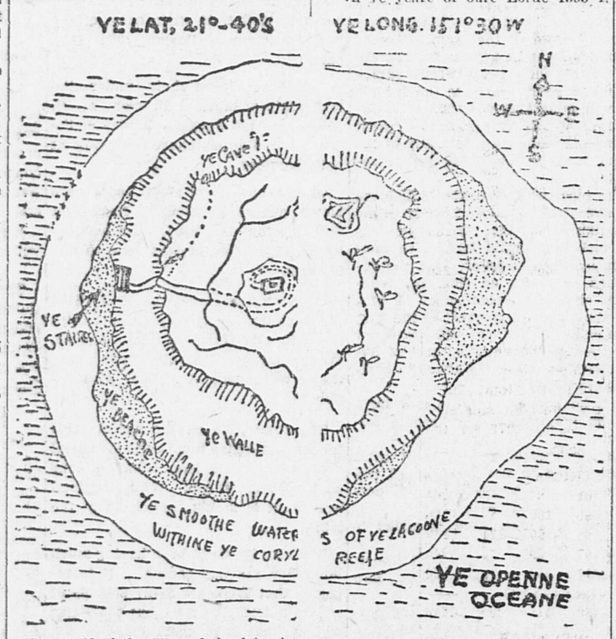
"Yes, but what does it mean?" she asked, turning to the table again. "There is writing on the back."

CHAPTER IV.

Wherein We Decide to Go Voyaging.

"LET'S put the two pieces together and take them to the light and see if we cannot decipher it," said I. "Mistress Wilberforce," I continued, "I have the sailor's premonition that we are on the track of something that will greatly better your fortunes." And I read:

"In ye yeare of oure Lorde 1505 I,



One Half of the Map of the Island.

Philip Wilberforce, Bt., of ye counue of Devon, being ye captaine of ye good shippe Scourge of Malice, didde take ye grate Spanisshe galleon Nuestra Senora de la Concepcion, after a bloudie encountre, wherein mine own shippe was sunke. Ye lading of ye galleon was worthe muche monaie, milliones of pounds esterling, I take ye. Withe manie jewelles and stones of price, pieces of eight and bullione, together with silkes and spicerie. Being blowne to ye southe and weste manie days in a grate tempeste, ye galleon was caste awaye on Ye Ilande of ye Staires. Wee landed ye tresor and hidde yt in ye walle. Alle my menne being in ye ende dead ye natives came over ye seas in their grate canoos and tooke me, being like a maddie manne. Godde mercifullie preserving my life. I escaped frome themm and at last am comme safe intoe mine owne sweet lande of Eng lande once more. Toe find ye mouthe of ye tresor cave, take a bearing alonge ye southe of ye three Goddes on ye Altar of Skulles on ye middel hille of ye Ilande. Where ye line strykes ye knicke in ye walle with ye bigge pamme tree bee three foote. Climbe ye stones, enter ye center one. Yt is there. Lette him that wille seek and finde."

When I had finished reading we both stopped and stared. There was much in it, of course, that we could not possibly understand. We could only comprehend it fully if we were lucky enough to stand beside the "Stone Gods" on the island itself. Still the general purport was sufficiently clear. Sir Philip Wilberforce had evidently concealed a very considerable treasure there. If we could find it our fortunes would be made, or hers, rather, for I swear I never thought of myself at all.

"Think you," my little mistress began at last, her pale face flushing for the first time, her bosom heaving quickly, "that the treasure may still be there?"

"Who can tell?" I answered. "The island may have remained unvisited since Sir Philip's day."

"But would treasure last so long?"

"Stored in a cave gold and silver would last forever. Everything else would have rotted away probably."

"How could we get there?" she asked.

"If you had a ship," said I, "well commanded and founded and manned you could reach the spot without difficulty."

"How much would it cost?"

Well, I quickly and roughly estimated in my mind the necessary outlay. Such a vessel as she would require might be bought for perhaps £2,500 or £3,000. Provisioning and outfitting, together with the pay of the officers and the crew, would require perhaps £1,500 or £2,000 more, or a total between five and six thousand pounds. And she had but two! I was about to tell her the prohibitive truth when the solution of the problem suddenly came to me. In one way or another I had been a fortunate voyager, and I had saved up or earned by trading and one or two adventures in which I had taken part something over £4,000, which was safely lodged to my credit in a London bank.

"I should think," I said slowly, "that £2,000 would be ample to cover everything."

"Ah," she said, "exactly the sum that Master Ficklin said was left of my mother's fortune."

"Yes," said I, and then I added in duty bound, "But you surely would not be so foolish, Mistress Wilberforce, as to risk your all in this wild goose chase?"

"If you were in my position, Master Hampdon, what would you do?"

"I am a man," I answered, "accustomed to shift for myself. I might take a risk which I would not advise you to essay."

"I must shift for myself, too," she said, her eyes sparkling. The Goddess Chance, which had ruined her father, was evidently jogging her elbow. "Indeed, I shall take the chance," she persisted.

"But you could easily live on £2,000 for a long while," I urged, against my wish, for I was keen to go a treasure hunting with her for a shipmate.

GOOD CHEER.

By The Deacon.

There is no pleasure where love doth not exist
And truly told
There is no loving heart that could resist,
The longing of the soul,
"It is in loving," not in being loved,
Thy heart is blessed,
It is in giving not in seeking gifts,
We find our quest;
Whatever be thy longing or thy need,
That do thou give
So shall thy soul be fed and thou indeed
Shalt truly live.

The first meeting of the season of the Wollaston Woman's club will be held at the Park and Downs church Tuesday afternoon at 2.30. After a short business meeting there will be a reception and social hour followed by refreshments.

Among those that participated in the entertainment at the home of Miss Mary McClay of Holmes street on Thursday evening were Miss Edna McClure Robert N. Marshal and James N. Butler who contributed piano solos and Miss Hazel Butler who rendered violin solos.

The pleasant Sunday evening service at Bethany Congregational church will be a source of inspiration to every one. The choir singing will be of the usual high order. The pastor will lecture on, "Keeping Sweet." Come prepared to share in the congregational singing.

In the Weymouth Gazette of Oct. 3 under the heading of "Twenty-four Years Ago," we find this interesting item, "Telephone subscribers are complaining that since the Quincy electric cars commenced to run that it is almost impossible to talk with Boston."

The hour of the meeting of the Sunday school of Christ church has been changed from 12.05 to 9.30. The change was made so that the officers, teachers and scholars might have a better opportunity to attend the morning service as well as accommodating many who could not attend the noon service.

TARRIFF GOES INTO EFFECT

Underwood-Simmons Bill Is Signed by President

ARTICLES IN GENERAL USE

Large Number Free-Listed, Causing Loss of $57,000,000 In Customs Revenue—Will Be Made Up by Tax on Incomes—Summary of New Law and Some of Its Chief Features

Washington, Oct. 4.—Surrounded by the leaders of a united Democracy, President Wilson signed the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill at 9:09 o'clock last night at the White House.

Simultaneously telegrams were sent to customs collectors throughout the country by the treasury department putting into actual operation the first Democratic tariff revision since 1894.

A happy group of legislators, members of the cabinet and friends encircled the president as he affixed his signature with two gold pens. He presented to Representative Underwood the pen that had written the word "Woodrow" and the one which completed his name to Senator Simmons.

In impressive silence, the president rose and delivered an extemporaneous speech that brought prolonged applause.

The president declared that the journey of legislative accomplishment had only been partly completed; that a great service had been done for the rank and file of the country but that the second step in the emancipation business was currency reform. He earnestly called upon his colleagues to "go the rest of the journey" with fresh impulse.

President Wilson's signing of the new tariff bill brings into effect one of the most far-reaching revisions of tariff rates and revenue laws enacted for many years. A new income tax, applying directly to the incomes of citizens; the abolition of all tariff on scores of items of immense importance to American industry and American consumers and a heavy reduction of tariff rates on most of the articles in general use in this country are its chief features.

While certain portions of the new law do not take effect at once, most of its provisions and almost all the direct tariff reductions do.

The federal government has been spending nearly $1,000,000,000 a year and the new tariff law will raise less than one-third of that sum. Recent estimates by tariff experts in congress predict that the rates will raise $249,000,000 a year; and that the income tax will raise $122,000,000. The remainder of the government's great revenue is made up principally of internal revenue taxes and postal receipts.

The income tax probably will bring the new tariff law most forcibly to the attention of citizens. President Wilson and Democratic leaders in congress believe, however, that the reduction of duties on clothing, foodstuffs and other necessaries of life, and the complete removal of the duty from many like articles will eventually bring a reduction in the "cost of living" without materially affecting business prosperity.

Average percentage of tariff rates as compared to the value of all imported merchandise—old law, 37 percent; new law, 27 percent.

Value of annual imports added to the free list $147,000,000.

Estimated revenue from all import rates—old law, $305,000,000; new law, $249,000,000.

Estimated revenue from corporations and income taxes—old law, $37,000,000; new law, $122,000,000.

Altogether consumers in the United States probably will receive from abroad free of all tariff more than $1,000,000,000 worth of merchandise during the next year. During 1912 the amount of "free imports" was more than $880,000,000, and when the tariff is entirely removed from wool, sugar, iron ore and cheap iron and other important items the total is expected to increase notably.

The free wool provision of the new law takes effect Dec. 1, 1913; the free sugar provision May 1, 1916.

The new tariff law, passed four years after President Taft signed the existing Aldrich-Payne law, is the result of more than nine months of work in congress. In the opinion of its makers, the Democratic leaders of congress, the most important features of the new tariff are:

The placing of raw wool on the free list, and a reduction of nearly two-thirds in the tariff on woolen clothing, especially of the cheaper grades.

A reduction of one-third (average) on cotton clothing.

Reduction of the sugar tariff and its ultimate abolishment in 1916.

A reduction of one-third (average) in the tariff on earthenware and glassware.

Abolishment of all tariff on meats, fish, dairy products, flour, potatoes, coal, iron ore, lumber and many classes of farm and office machines.

General tariff reduction on all important articles in general use.

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

Rabbi Sandolavitz Addresses the Young Hebrews

Rev. Julius Sandolavitz of the Congregation Ahavoth Achim addressed over 50 members of the Young Men's Hebrew Association in their rooms on Water street Friday afternoon. He took as his subject the "Past, present and future." After expressing his pleasure at the advancement shown by the association and approving the program planned for the coming winter he said he was optimistic of the future of the club.

Rev. Sandolavitz spoke at length on the past history of the Jews, of the many incidents that went toward the making of the Jewish Bible, and the suffering and persecutions the race has passed through as the children of Israel. He said that today the Jews are in an era of enlightenment, and are not being persecuted as were their forefathers, but by education are placed on an equal footing after many years of painful suffering. And, continued the eloquent Rabbi, for the Jews of tomorrow the young men of today are responsible. On their shoulders rest their welfare and it behooves one and all to make a New Years resolution to be good Jews and to take an ever increasing interest in the synagogue and its welfare.

Committee Selected to Act With the Directors

At the mass meeting in the interests of the Sachem club held in the Wollaston schol hall Saturday evening the men were told point blank that unless they did something that the women would shame them by building the club house themselves.

"We women have got to have a place to meet in" said Mrs. Edward E. Jameson. Here we have a women's club of 300 with a waiting list of 65 with no place to meet outside of a church. You men have got to build a place for us. Wouldn't you be ashamed to have us build a clubhouse? We will do it if you do not build it for us."

HON. ALBERT E. AVERY,
Judge of the Quincy District Court.

The principal speakers were Judge Albert E. Avery, president of the Cochato club of Braintree and William J. Follett, vice president of the Newton club of Newton.

The meeting resulted in the appointment of the following committee to act with the directors in formulating plans for the realization of the clubhouse: Mrs. Edward E. Jameson, Mrs. Charles M. Bryant, Mrs. Arthur P. Homer, George W. Stone, Herbert T. Whitman, Nathan G. Nickerson, John Buchanan, Arthur P. Russell, George W. Glover, Thomas H. Breen, Mrs. Elisha B. Bird, Mrs. William Dean Sanford, Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes, Dr. E. R. Johnson and Frank P. Waterhouse.

Eugene F. DeNormandie president of the Sachem club directors, called the meeting to order shortly after 8 o'clock. He recalled during the Community House campaign, the agitation by some of the younger element for a social club. Organization was then effected and incorporated with 24 incorporators of eight each from the Hill, Plain and Park respectively. The 24 men who incorporated had considerable pride and thought it would be a good thing to have something definite to offer. They would raise the money, purchase the land, build the club house and then take in members.

But raising money is a difficult task and these 24 took upon themselves a heavy burden. The response to the bonds was good but not as liberal as hoped. Then it was decided to hold a mass meeting, tell the public what had been done and secure co-operation as far as possible.

"This month," said Mr. DeNormandie, "is the time the public should take hold with those who have worked faithfully in the past. The nominating committee, to be appointed 30 days before election it is hoped will be made up of citizens not now in the club. It has an absolutely clear field to select whom it wants. Every officer or director is willing and ready at any time to hand in his resignation, but they are not shirkers."

Albert N. Murray was elected temporary secretary and Eugene F. DeNormandie temporary chairman. It was then voted to make the temporary organization permanent.

"Build a first class hall with a first class stage," said Mr. Follett, the first speaker. "Build some good bowling alleys. Have these two features sure, but if you would avoid trouble keep away from a restaurant. They are the bane of club life. They steal the food and the waste is something frightful. Don't have an architect draw the plans. Look over club houses until you see one you like. Take those plans to that club and ask them what improvements they would make."

Mr. Follett told of the conditions in Newton some 30 years ago which he said were like those of Wollaston today. Club life in Newton had not only resulted in increased real estate values but in a wide acquaintance among the people of the village.

"It is a pleasure to mingle with men" said Mr. Follett. "Successful men are the ones who have mingled with men. The ladies, however, are the ones who have made the Newton club so successful, and there they find the same facilities as the men."

EDWARD E. JAMESON.

"When I see the class of people you have here, it is a mystery to me you haven't had a club before. Make it quick, don't let it drag. If you can't get a man, get his wief. Put your shoulder to the wheel. Get what you want. The next time I come to Wollaston I hope it will be as a non-resident member of the Sachem club to enjoy the brand of hospitality I know you will offer."

Loud applause greeted the speaker's conclusion, and several questions were asked.

Judge Albert E. Avery told of the beginnings of the Cochato club of Braintree and the present good standing of the club. "A club benefits the community" he said, "by getting it together. New England ought to get together more. There is a certain self consciousness prevailing that a club by bringing people together causes them to forget. When you come to a club you forget your cares" and troubles in associating with the other members. There is not a New England village but needs the stirring up that a social club brings with it."

"In the Cochato club you have a vivid illustration in your midst. The Sachem club is a club you want, a club you ought to have, and a club you will have."

Following Judge Avery's speech the meeting was thrown open for discussion. In reply to questions Chairman

NEW TYPE OF PAVEMENT.

Small granite blocks are being used as a pavement around one of the docks in the Brooklyn navy yard. The blocks, which are cubes not over 31-2 inches in size, are laid in arcs of circles instead of in parallel rows, as is customary with larger blocks, says the Engineering Record. This type of pavement has been used with success abroad, where is has been found to be smoother and more durable than the pavements constructed with larger blocks.

CANDIDATE AT LARGE.

Councilman Charles W. Bailey who has been a member of the City Council from Ward Five for three years has taken out nomination papers as Councilman at Large.

SUBMARINE LAUNCHED

Miss Ruth C. McEnree, a Young Girl, the Sponsor

One of the largest and most formidable submarines built for the United States navy was launched Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Fore River yards. The vessel is known at K-2 and is one of a group of seven similar vessels.

The launching was in the nature of a private one, being witnessed by a small party of government and Fore River officials. The sponsor for the new submarine was Miss Ruth C. McEntee, the 10 year old daughter of Assistant Naval Constructor William McEntee. Miss McEntee carried a large bouquet of Richmond roses which had been presented to her by officials of the Fore River corporation.

The new addition to the navy was christened with a bottle of champagne which was encased in a wire mesh to keep the glass from flying. After the launch the bottle was encased in a teak wood box and given to the little sponsor as a souvenir.

But few facts in relation to the new submarine are given out by the government, other than her general dimensions. She is about 160 feet long and of 500 tons displacement. One of the new features of the vessel will be the installation of a two cycle reversible engine of the crude oil type.

The other six vessels of the same type building at the Fore River will be known as K-5, K-6, L-1, L-2, L-3, L-4 and M-1.

Mr. Tessier was born in Quebec, Canada, 53 years ago, and came to Boston when a young man. He learned the hotel business and was steward, manager and later proprietor of the Clarendon Hotel. In 1894, he associated himself with Achilles Labrecque of Adams Shore and until 1902 both conducted the Castle Square hotel. Since that time he has been devoting his time to a pharmacy at Houghs Neck, nearby his home.

He is survived by Mrs. Tessier, a son George H. Tessier by his first wife, who is connected with the business office of the New York American; a brother Philip of Dorchester, and three sisters, Mrs. Achilles Labrecque of Quincy and Mrs. Napoleon Emon and Mrs. John Boutin, both of Quebec.

ATTEMPT TO SHOOT OFFICER

Fortunately the Cap Did Not Explode

Lestiti Is Fined $50

Officer Henry W. Thorne came with an ace of being the victim of a murderer early this morning on Washington street. It was in the vicinity of 3 o'clock when Officer Thorne was walking up Washington street. Suddenly without warning a man jumped from behind a tree and placing a revolver to the officer's breast pulled the trigger.

Although as it was afterward learned the revolver was fully loaded, it fortunately did not explode. Quick as a wink the officer knocked the gun from the man's hand and placed him under arrest. In reply to where he was going the man said he was waiting for a car to take him to Fort Point, North Weymouth, and that he had just come from Brockton. As the officer started toward the patrol box with his prisoner he heard something drop, and stooping down he picked up a long and wicked looking knife which the man evidently had concealed about his clothing. At the police station the man gave his age as 27 years and his name as Leo Lestiti.

It appeared from later investigation that Sunday afternoon Lestiti and another man put in an appearance at the

The aviators will never rest satisfied with flying over the Mediterranean or any other sheet of water where there is a fair chance to get across.

The striking school pupils at Syracuse, N. Y., will make no trouble unless the teachers become unruly again.

What splendid foot ball teams could be developed if the players didn't get hurt, and if the faculty didn't make them study!

Butter has been cut out of the Vassar bill of fare, but as candy is the staff of life for college girls, the loss should not be felt much.

The transportation business will fully occupy the time of the railroads, even if they don't engage in coal mining, farming, and the operation of moving picture theaters.

Tom Lawson has presented to Congress de luxe editions estimated to cost $10 each, of his book on "High Cost of Living." The consumer who feels the pinch of high prices should secure one at once.

As a way has been found to expedite the anti-trust suits, the stockholders begin to entertain hopes of a slice of melon before long.

BE CAUTIOUS IN THE WOODS.

Every year the number of sportsmen increases, and the game and hunting area decreases. Human habitations spread out further into the woods, and more powerful arms are used. Hence the number of accidents during the hunting season constantly increases.

Formerly these mischances happened mostly when a gun was accidentally discharged and hit the huntsman or his immediate companions. Now one huntsman is constantly mistaking the motions of some concealed man for game, and long distance shots find their way to outlying homes.

During the autumnal shooting season, the woods are full of novices at the sport, to whom every rustle in the distant bushes means game. They have acquired none of the habits of observation by which trained woodsman watches for wild life. These beginners at woodcraft should have a care, or this increase of accidents will lead to strict laws against shooting by unfit men.

THE HIGH COST OF MILK.

Formerly all the consumer asked of his milk pail was that the fluid be white with a cream line, and a good cowey taste, (the latter mostly due to dissolved cow manure.) In many places milk was sold for five cents a quart.

As 50,000 babies die annually from contaminated milk in the United States the campaign for cleaner production is popular. But laundry work, cleansing of barns, and steadily rising cost of feed makes milk cost more. Prices of nine and ten cents a quart are now common.

The short corn crop promises to increase cost of production next winter. In many places contractors talk higher prices. No necessity of life has advanced more in price than milk.

Is it inevitable? The New Jersey experiment station's recent studies figure the cost of milk production at only about four cents a quart. The big item in the milk bottle is not so much feed or farm help as distribution. If a dozen milk carts traverse a single street, there is lost and duplicated motion. Probably a single company, under strict public control, could do it cheaper.

Some of the new dairies are costing $1000 per cow. Six per cent on $1000 is $60, as much as the gross receipts from some cows. Some men, naturally cleanly in their habits ,though operating an old fashioned equipment, will produce milk that will test up better than a finely equipped dairy that is poorly supervised. The inspectors need a lot of common sense.

Experts say clean milk can be produced in plants costing $1500 to $2000. Under scientific and efficient distribution the higher prices would be unnecessary. But the day of careless, unregulated production has gone by. It has caused infinite loss through disease epidemics. Milk produced in this way is the most costly of all.

HELD PENDING TARIFF CHANGE

Importers Preparing to Make Heavy Withdrawals

WAREHOUSES OVERFLOWING

New York Expects to Release $73,000,000 Worth of Goods, With $17,000,000 Worth at Boston—Effect on Market Is Problematical—"Most Favored Nation" Controversy

New York, Oct. 6.—Customs house officials estimate that importers, taking advantage of the first day of the new tariff law, had withdrawn from bonded warehouses merchandise valued at from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000. More than 4000 withdrawal entries were made at the custom house. The amount of duties turned over to the sub-treasury was $920,000.

There will be a greater strain on the custom house facilities today when the steamship lines and transportation companies have perfected their facilities for the moving of goods from the bonded warehouses. By the middle of the week the steamship and transportation companies are expected to have all they can do to meet the demands upon them.

It is estimated that merchandise worth $73,000,000 is now lying in the warehouses. What effect the heavy withdrawals will have on the market is a matter of conjecture. It is said that great quantities of supplies have been held in foreign countries awaiting the signature of the president to the tariff bill, and these will be sent here immediately.

It is predicted that the holds of vessels leaving European ports for the United States in the next few days will be loaded to capacity. The greatest quantity of merchandise which has been held for the tariff reduction has been in New York. Boston, it is said, has about $17,000,000 worth of goods so held.

There was much speculation here over the report from Washington that Great Britain, Germany, Austria and other countries, with which the United States has "most favored nation" treaties, will demand the same 5 percent discount granted to goods imported in American vessels.

It is expected the administration will refuse to grant this demand. The controversy may be thrown into the courts unless congress modifies this provision of the law, which is declared to be ambiguous.

Large corporations have engaged an extra clerical force to meet the great amount of extra work which will be necessitated in keeping the government advised concerning the holders of their various securities.

DEFICIT OVER $4,000,000

Elliott's Report Says New Haven Road Will Stop Buying Feeders

Boston, Oct. 6.—President Elliott's first annual report to the stockholders of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, made public today, shows a deficit for the year ending June 30, 1913, of $4,127,466.07, although dividends were reduced from 8 percent to 6 percent during the last few months of the fiscal year.

A significant part of the report is the definite statement by Elliott that the period in which the road's policy was to buy up adjacent transportation lines and operate them co-operatively with the New Haven is completed.

In the opinion of the directors, Elliott declares, the acquisitions were legally made, but the company, he continues, "has no desire to retain these investments except in conformity with law and sound public policy."

From Saturday afternoon until Monday morning at 6:30 the prisoners are confined to their four by seven cells, with only a short intermission for chapel exercises to break the monotony of the "long day."

It is expected that Osborne will leave the prison some time this week.

Italian Dying as Result of Duel In a Boston Street

Boston, Oct. 6.—As the result of a street duel with stilettos, Pietro Perello is dying, while Dominico Boutilleri is held on the charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill.

Boutilleri, so Perello claims, applied an epithet to Perello's wife, who is visiting relatives in Italy. This Perello resented, and they adjourned to the street, selecting North square as the battleground. Perello soon fell.

ENGINEERS AGAIN WARNED

Subject to Public Control Under Certain Conditions, Says Foss

Boston, Oct. 6.—Governor Foss made public last night a second letter to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in which he takes that organization to task for voting upon a strike before completing its negotiations with the New Haven road. He says the haste in voting indicates intimidation.

The governor states in his letter that the big railroad labor organization is just as much subject to public control as a railroad would be when it adopts "a course of action which would disorganize the business of our citizens, throw labor out of employment and interfere with the supply of food and fuel."

SULZER COUNSEL IN A QUANDARY

Governor Said to Have Concealed Large Contributions

AMOUNTED TO $10,000 EACH

New Evidence Obtained by Assembly Managers—Carnegie Books Expected to Show Accused Man Dealt In "Big Four" Stock Before His Marriage—Sulzer's Personal Statement

Albany, Oct. 6.—On the eve of the opening of his defense before the court of impeachment, it was learned that Governor Sulzer and his lawyers are in a state of confusion and there is possibility of a break between them.

While the real cause of the differences existing beween the governor and his lawyers is known to be the nature of the story that he is to teli on the stand, it was rumored that evidence had been obtained by the assembly managers of two contributions amounting to $10,000 each, which according to the rumor, the accused executive has kept from the knowledge of his lawyers.

From an apparently authoritative source it was learned that the newly unearthed evidence, said to be in the possession of the assembly managers, has completely upset the arrangements of the defense, and doubt now exists as to whether the governor will take the witness stand. It is known that the assembly managers have subpoenaed several persons prominent in the financial world, but the identity of these is being carefully guarded.

Besides the reported two $10,000 contributions it was learned that the books of the Carnegie Trust company will show that Sulzer was a heavy dealer in "Big Four" stock for some time before he married Mrs. Sulzer in 1908. The investigation of the Carnegie's books was a result of the testimony given by Melville D. Fuller, of the firm of Harris & Fuller, who said Sulzer had informed him that the "Big Four" stock which was held as security for his marginal account was the property of Mrs. Sulzer. The stock had been held for a loan to Mrs. Sulzer by the Carnegie, Sulzer told Fuller, according to the latter's testimony.

The Carnegie's books are now in possession of George W. Egbert, state bank examiner, who has charge of winding up the affairs of the institution. Egbert has been subpoenaed by the assembly managers to testify as to his knowledge of Sulzer's stock transactions which were credited by the latter to Mrs. Sulzer.

With the aid of Alexander S. Bacon and Samuel B. Thomas, who have come to be known as the governor's house lawyers, it is said Sulzer prepared a 3000 word statement in which he makes charges of conspiracy and attempted bribery against numerous prominent politicians. The making of this statement, though, is not countenanced by the attorneys of record, who insist that their client confine himself solely to the issues in the case.

Efforts are being made to bring about a compromise. One way that is being talked of to end the apparent chaos existing in the Sulzer forces is to have the governor answer only the questions put to him on the witness stand and at the same time make his sensational story known to the people through the newspapers. By this the would-be mediators say the desired end can be attained and still escape the severe cross examination that has been threatened.

SLUGGED WITH BLACKJACK

Boston Man Dies From Crushed Skull In a New York Town

Yonkers, N. Y., Oct. 6.—Children playing in a lot 150 yards behind the New York Central station at Ossining found the lifeless body of Michael J. Glavin of Boston, who came to Ossining to work in the piano factory. The authorities say the man was murdered, probably with a blackjack. His skull was crushed in.

No arrest has been made, but the police have obtained information as to where and with whom Glavin had been drinking. The contents of his pockets had not been touched, so it is concluded that robbery was not the motive.

SAWYER IS FREED

Found Not Guilty of Killing Monahan With Poisoned Whiskey

Auburn, Me., Oct. 6.—The jury in the case of Perley F. Sawyer, charged with the murder of Alfred P. Monahan last April, brought in a verdict of not guilty. Sawyer at once left for his home in Augusta.

The body of Monahan was found in a loft on Lisbon street. The medical examination showed Monahan had been killed by drinking poisoned whiskey. Sawyer, who had been in his company for several days, was charged with putting cyanide of potassium in the liquor.

Bondsmen Give Up "Wolf" Lamar

Washington, Oct. 6.—David Lamar, the "wolf," held on a charge of impersonating a congressman, was surrendered by his bondsmen before Commissioner Taylor. Lamar had been held in $3000 bail for trial in New York on Oct. 7. His lawyers appealed to the district supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Lynn Young Lady Betrothed to Wollaston Man

The engagement of Miss Hazel A. Schlehuber, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Schlehuber of 42 Estes street, Lynn, and Carl William Gram of Wollaston was announced Saturday, at an engagement tea given by Miss Schlehuber which was attended by 150 guests. Miss Schlehuber has taken a prominent part in amateur theatricals produced by Lynn club women and is much interested in the work of charitable organizations.

He was a member of the relay team which established a record for 1500 yards at the B. A. A. meet last winter. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore C. Gram of Wollaston. The wedding will take place later in the winter. At the reception, says the Lynn dispatch to the Sunday Globe, the guests were met at the entrance to the reception room by Miss Audrey Schlehuber and Miss Viola Marsters of Winthrop, who presented each guest with a rose, to which was attached the engagement card. Miss Schlehuber was assisted in receiving by her mother.

The house was prettily decorated in pink and green. In the dining room, where a buffet lunch was served, Mrs. Charles A. Burnham and Mrs. Arthur W. Pinkham presided at the table, and the servers were Mrs. Edward F. Breed, Mrs. Louis A. Bedard, Miss Lily Bennett, Miss Laura LaCroix, Miss Eleanor George, Miss Imogene B. Goddard, Miss Alice F. Titus, Miss Marjory Kimball and Miss Mildred Clapp.

SUNDAY IN QUINCY CHURCHES

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

Although the regular services at the Wollaston Baptist church have been held for the past month, they have been without the assistance of the choir. The latter, however, resumed its duties Sunday, rendering, "It is a good thing" at the morning service. The sermon was especially appropriate for communion Sunday, the text was John 12:21—"We would see Jesus."

This is a perfectly natural desire on the part of every man, woman, and child, and doubly so of Christians. If the report were circulated, and with a reason behind it, that Jesus Christ was to be in Boston, or New York, or Chicago on a certain date, would not multitudes flock to the city regardless of time or expense? "We would see Jesus" because of what He was and what He is and does. And those who truly desire to see Him, Jesus delights to honor. Think of the shepherds, the wise men, Simeon the priest, Zaccheus the publican; all these were honored with a sight of the Son of God.

Not only shall we see Jesus in the future but we may see Him with the eyes of faith and as seeing Him endure to the end more than conquerors. We may see Him now in the Bible; in the great movements, along temperance, missionary and other lines; in the constitutions; in all our experiences. His own words come to us, "Be not afraid, it is I"; in the lives of His people—every Christian has the opportunity so to live that men may take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus.

Lastly, we may see Him in the communion service. Unless we see Him in the bread and the wine we are eating unworthily.

"We would see Jesus"— it is the cry of the world everywhere. Men may not respect our creed, our Bible, but they study Him through us. If we had eyes to discern we should see Him, and this longing cry of mankind would be answered.

Song service at 7 in the auditorium. Short sermon by the pastor, subject: "Making the best of things." Special music by the choir—"The king of love my shepherd is;" solo, "Jesus, lover of my soul," Miss Ruth L. Hardy.

The dedication exercises have been postponed for a week. The services will take place Oct. 19. A supper appropriate to the occasion will be held in the new chapel Oct. 22.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

A good congregation, good music by the Girls Choir, and a strong sermon on "The law of heredity," all helped to make the service Sunday morning of help and value. Rev. Carl G. Horst chose for his text the words "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments."—Deut. 5, 9-10.

He said: "Thank God the law of heredity works in two ways. We inherit not only tendencies to sin and evil, but also tendencies to good. Not only the iniquities of the fathers are transmitted, but also purity, truth, honor, fidelity, goodness, culture and refinement. It is our privilege to widen and deepen the stream of good. If we would enter life we must keep the commandments of God. Therefore it is for us of this generation to live such lives as we shall wish we had lived, when we are summoned to give an account of our stewardship, and to hand down to those that come after us an inheritance that will be a blessing to them and help them to start upon life with health of body and mind.

Both the kindergarten and the Sunday school departments of the church resumed regular sessions Sunday. Every member of these departments was notified by a personal letter from the assistant superintendent.

The lectures in the normal course in religious education by Prof. Edwin D. Starbuck, Ph. D., a psychologist and an educator of the first rank, begin Saturday, Oct. 11, at 10 A. M., 25 Beacon street, Boston and continue every Saturday through October, November and December. The lectures are free and all interested are invited to attend. Subject for Oct. 11, "The submerged nine-tenths of life."

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, ex-president of Harvard University, will preside over the General Conference in Buffalo.

The recent Wollaston country fair, under the auspices of the parish committee, will be an annual event.

Under the auspices of the department of social service of the American Unitarian Association, Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer will give four lectures at 25 Beacon street, Boston, Thursdays in October at 10 o'clock. The subjects are: Oct. 9, The Submerged Tenth: How can Society care for them? Oct. 16, The Struggling One-half: How can Society help them? Oct. 23, The Successful One-Quarter: How can Society use them? Oct. 30, Social Leadership: How can Society heed and follow it? The public is cordially invited.

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL

Large congregations attended the Sunday services at Bethany church, especially in the evening when 450 were counted. The pastor's subject in the evening was "Keeping Sweet." In the girls vested choir were 25 voices and their selections were much appreciated.

The Philatheas will hold a regular meeting this evening.

The Bethany Womens Union will hold its annual meeting Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Theophilus King.

Bethany church has appointed a committee to secure a memorial to Miss Amelia L. Bumpus for many years a deaconness of the church.

HALL PLACE M. E.

An unusually large number attended the Sunday morning service at the Hall Place M. E. church. Dr. D. L. Martin, pastor of this church in 1903, now a practising physician in Dorchester, occupied the pulpit, and preached an excellent sermon from the text: "Anl He entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And he sat down and taught the people out of the ship." Luke 5-3. Dr. Martin said that the old boat represented Peter's business, his means of earning a living, and that in obeying the Lord Jesus' command, in placing the boat at Jesus command, Peter was giving his business to the Lord. He further said that Jesus was asking for a chance to preach through our lives and our business. The choir rendered "Nearer my God to Thee."

"Rally Day" was observed in the Sunday school with a special program Dr. Martin addressed the school also. The attendance was nearly double what it was a year ago on Rally Sunday.

Miss Maud Nichols led a stirring Epworth League devotional service on the subject "Choosing Chums." These devotional services each week are well attended and very helpful to all who attend.

Mr. Martin preached at the evening service from the Psalms.

Wednesday evening the Epworth League will give a reproduction of "The Country School" in the vestry.

Friday afternoon at 3.45 Mrs. D. H. McNeil will conduct the Junior League. This is a new departure from the old plan of conducting the League on Sunday afternoon, and one which it is hoped will be of special benefit to all.

IS MURDERER OF FOURTEEN

Shocking Confession of Man Under Arrest at Chicago

HELD FOR REXROAT MURDER

Killed Nine Others Besides Dancing Teacher In One Year—All but Two of His Crimes Had Robbery as Motive—Tells Story to Chief Detective and Squad of Reporters

Chicago, Oct. 6.—Mrs. Mildred A. Rexroat, dancing teacher, who was shot to death at Wheaton, Ills., a weeks ago, was a victim of a modern Bluebeard, who, according to his own confession, has killed thirteen others in as many years.

Henry Spencer, arrested in a room near the South Side levee district last night, confessed that he not only killed Mrs. Rexroat, but that he had slain fourteen persons.

He was positively identified as the mysterious Mr. Spencer with whom Mrs. Rexroat left Chicago on the night she was killed. Mrs. Rexroat's bloodstained rattan suit case was found in his room, as was the revolver with which he said he had killed her.

The police, while in doubt as to the full truth of Spencer's story, are confident they have found a wholesale murderer and that he will prove to have killed some of those whose deaths he described in a long confession.

The police explained that Spencer was being permitted to tell his story without interruptions or suggestions. He admitted that robbery was his only purpose in killing Mrs. Rexroat.

He told the police he had killed ten persons since his last release from the Illinois state penitentiary in September, 1912, and four, a man and a woman and Policemen Pennell and Devine, before that.

Except for the slaying of the policemen, who, Spencer said, were shot by himself and a companion named Murphy, in escaping arrest for burglary, the killings were all for purposes of robbery. Following is the list of killings Specer related to Chief of Detectives Halpin:

One man and a woman, about fourteen years ago.

Policemen Pennell and Devine, twelve years ago.

Two girls at Paw Paw lake, Mich., last August.

One man shot in Chicago this fall.

One old man shot in a South Side park two months ago.

One woman shot and burned on the northwest side of Chicago last summer.

One woman killed near Cook county hospital a few days ago.

The only victim Spencer was able to name was Fannie C. Thompson, who probably is the woman he said he killed before he started on his confessed career of murder.

Luman C. Mann, the son of a wealthy family here, was tried six years ago for the murder of the Thompson woman and was acquitted after a long and sensational trial. The evidence against young Mann was circumstantial. Spencer gave a clear account of the way he claimed he tied up the Thompson woman at the time of the killing, and his recital conformed to evidence that was brought out at Mann's trial.

The police are in doubt as to the possibility of establishing Spencer's connection with any of the other murders he claims to have committed.

Spencer told his gruesome story calmly to Halpin and a roomfull of detectives and newspaper men. He said he never drank liquor nor smoked tobacco, but that he chewed tobacco and smoked opium. He has not, however, the appearance of a drug victim, having a healthy complexion and clear eyes.

Important News In Advertisements

By HOLLAND.

THE valuable news of the day is not confined to the news columns. It is also seen in the advertisements. Of course it is important to know what President Wilson is doing, what the latest developments are in China or what baseball club leads the league. But it is also important to know where a bargain in boys' waists, garden hose, breakfast food or straw hats may be found.

These bits of commercial news are among the advertisements. Wise persons look for them and take advantage of them when they are doing their buying. The leading merchants are continually telling you news of their stores, news that is important because it often means a real saving and always means something new and worth while.

Read the advertisements if you seek important news. Read them regularly and always with the thought that back of each advertisement are the reputation and business standing of the merchant. He could not afford to deceive you even if he were so inclined.

Can We Help You?
(As We Helped This Man)

Herbert O. Russell is a farmer in North Hadley, Mass., who turned a threatened loss, not only to himself but to his neighbors, into a highly profitable business transaction by making judicious use of the telephone toll lines. He is the Mr. Blank of the following story which appeared in TELEPHONE TOPICS. We use his name by permission:

A HADLEY PASTORAL.

The fertile fields of old Hadley are especially adapted for raising tobacco and onions and especially onions, which are usually a very profitable crop. This year the crop was larger than ever before—bumper to the nth. Prices at once shrunk alarmingly until it came to be a grave question whether it was worth while to market the crop. Some farmers became discouraged and left the crop to rot in the fields. One gave the subject careful thought. While he was pondering the question his glance fell upon the telephone in his kitchen. Could that be the answer?

The next day he called on Manager Proctor for information. He secured full particulars about our toll facilities, then went home and planned a sales campaign by telephone. Each evening the family carefully studied the directories and made up a list of wholesale commission dealers in the large cities.

Early each morning Mr. Blank called them by telephone. Results were immediate and surprising. He made satisfactory terms in short order for the sale of his entire crop and before long he was shipping onions by the carload. After he disposed of his own crop, the commission merchants continued their demands for more onions, and Mr. Blank commenced buying his neighbors' crops, which he sold at a good profit. As a result of his work he has sold twenty-one carloads of onions. It need not be added that he is extremely grateful for the resources of our telephone service.

Our contract pressing system started with the establishment of our business in 1892. Now we offer in connection with this system a cleansing contract. Through these contracts we propose to keep men's suits not only Well Pressed but Absolutely Clean. Our contract system is not a method of doing inferior work at a price which warrants such, but the same high-grade Warshaw service at greatly reduced rates—work that for 21 years has stood the test of time and built our business to what it is today. Our contracts for pressing, and for cleansing and pressing, are for three, six and twelve months. All contract work is done in the same departments as our regular work, thus assuring perfect results.

It is a fact that a garment Thoroughly Cleansed and Well Pressed will always look better and outwear any garment not cleansed, or treated with inferior methods. Hence, the wise one will inquire about our contract system. Be Wise.

Lace Curtains received during Oct. 6 to 18 will be cleansed for 75c.; regular price, $1.00—$1.50 per pair.

MARATHON WINNER DEAD

William J. Hackett Had Won Many Races

William J. Hackett, the well known Marathon runner, and a product of the Fore River apprentice school, died at his home in North Weymouth ,on Sunday aged about 23 years.

His last great race was the Brockton fair Marathon in 1909 and since that time his health has been failing. After winning the Marathon he was selected as one of the American team for the Olympic games in London in 1911, but failing health obliged him to it up. He started training for the B. A. A. games in 1912 but this also he was obliged to give up.

Early this year he went to an open air camp for his health but did not remain long. After returning home his health continued to fail and he has gradually wasted away.

Hackett probably did more running in his short career than most any other young man in America. He was born in Somerville in 1889 but moved to North Weymouth when an infant and lived there ever since. After graduating from school he learned the machinists' trade at the Fore River ship yards in Quincy. While at work in the ship yards he first began to attract attention as a runner. His first public appearance was at Lynn in May. 1909, when he ran 10 miles under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and finished first. Later he ran 15 miles at Newburyport, finishing second, with a time of 1 hour and 32 minutes. The same year he finished third in a big field of entries in the cross-country run at Brookline, doing the 10 miles in 55 minutes and 15 seconds.

In the same year, 1909, he finished third in the five-mile New England championship run and finished second in the three-mile interscholastic meet doing the distance in 18 minutes and 26 seconds. Four days later, he finished second in a five-mile run under the auspices of the Fore River A. C. his time being 27 minutes and 20 seconds. That year he entered and won the Brockton Marathon, doing the 23 miles in two hours and 37 mnlutes. The following year, on Jan 15, he defeated Frank Bruce at Quincy in a 15-mile race and again on Feb. 1. the same year, he defeated Bruce in a 10-mile run. On Feb. 10 he defeated Ellis and Marshall in a match race at Brockton.

One of his best known feats in 1909 was in February, when he ran second to Jimmy Clark in the 20-mile invitation run in the Naval Brigade Armory in New York, forcing Clark to break the track record for 20 miles, which was done in 2 hours and 6 minutes.

His constant running began to tell on him and his friends noticed him failing when they had to pull him from the track in the South Boston A. C. runs in the Mechanic's Building, Boston, when Hackett ran himself blind. In 1910 he won the Brockton Marathon for the second time, and was given an ovation by the town of Weymouth. which presented him a diamond ring. The Holy Name Society of the Immaculate Conception Church gave a gold watch chain and charm and a banquet.

OUTLINE PARTY ISSUES

Points In Platforms of Bay State Democrats and Republicans

Boston, Oct. 6.—Here are the leading planks in the platforms adopted by Democrats and Republicans in their conventions in this city:

Democratic—Candidates should be required to subscribe to the party platform.

The New Haven railroad should be divorced from the Boston and Maine, and the steamship and trolley lines should be set on ther own legs.

The state should assume control of transportation to a greater extent than at present.

Pure food laws are imperative.

The lobby should be regulated or abolished.

The Wilson administration is endorsed, and a bigger navy demanded.

Republican—We favor caution in dealing with the railroads, but they must be run in the public interest.

We urge compulsory abritration of labor disputes involving railways and street railways.

We believe undesirable aliens should be excluded, and desirable aliens better distributed throughout the country.

We pledge ourselves to prison reform.

We favor a national convention of our party at an early date to reform the representation system.

We favor a permanent non-partisan tariff commission.

RECEIVES COPY OF THAW INDICTMENT

Felker Is Shown That Jerome Was Not Bluffing

Concord, N. H., Oct. 6.—Governor Felker has received a certified copy of an indictment voted against Thaw by the Dutchess county grand jury, and is now convinced that William T. Jerome was not bluffing when he said at the hearing that such an indictment had been voted.

In a statement to the governor District Attorney Conger of Dutchess county said a Thaw indictment had been found but was rescinded at the request of Jerome, who wanted time to secure evidence to present to the grand jury that would involve "a man higher up" in the alleged conspiracy to have Thaw escape from Matteawan.

TO EXHUME CARGILL'S BODY

State Police Take a Hand In the Mysterious Tragedy

Spencer, Mass., Oct. 6.—A man with a bullet in his heart—a vest pierced by no bullet hole—and a brand now, homemade blacksnake whip; these are the elements in the tragic mystery of the death of Joseph C. Cargill—a mystery that the state police are rigorously investigating.

The state police gave an order to a Washington, Me., undertaker to exhume the body of Cargill and send it to Worcester. After an autopsy an inquest will be held to which Mrs. Cargill, widow of the dead man, and a number of others have been summoned.

Cargill's body was found, on the night of Sept. 19, outside his own door. He was buried as a suicide, before the fact that the vest had no bullet hole in it was noticed.

BOTH CHEAP AND GOOD

Popcorn For Breakfast Will Help Reduce High Cost of Living

Washington, Oct. 6.—Popcorn for breakfast is Uncle Sam's latest advice to assist those who desire some relief from the high cost of living.

Department of agriculture corn investigation specialists declare popcorn is superior, when properly prepared for the table, to many of the breakfast foods now on the market. And $30 worth of popped corn in the form of 5-cent packages for the market represents an outlay of only about $1 or $1.50 for raw material, these experts say.

This amount of corn can be grown in a garden twenty by forty feet.

ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

Senator Lodge Expected to Be Out Within a Few Weeks

Nahant, Mass., Oct. 6.—The complete recovery of Senator Lodge from the illness with which he has been afflicted was predicted when Dr. Winslow declared that precautions now are being taken only to avoid the possibility of a cold or other complications that might result in a set back.

The senator has been taking considerable nourishment and is rapidly recovering from his illness. He has been able to sit up in bed for some time and has shown other signs of recovery. It is expected he will be out within a few weeks.

MOURNS DEATH OF FAMILY

Would-Be Suicide Curses Doctor Who Saves His Life

Pittsfield, Mass., Oct. 6.—L. B. Sexton, 65, a painter, attempted suicide in the Hinsdale livery stable by drinking two ounces of pure laudanum. Dr. Tucker saved his life with a stomach pump, but Sexton cursed him for his pains.

Sexton had been mourning the deaths of his wife and seven small children whom he lost in a fire at Des Moines, Ia., two months ago. He came east to get rid of the sorrow which hung over him.

KAISER YIELDS TO SON-IN-LAW'S CLAIMS

Action Follows Denial of the Reported Estrangement

Berlin, Oct. 6.—Official opposition to the claims of Prince Ernest Augustus of Cumberland, son-in-law of the kaiser, to the old kingdom of Hanover, has been withdrawn by order of the emperor.

Simultaneously with the announcement that the emperor had taken sides with his son-in-law, it becomes known that the reported estrangement between the Prince of Cumberland and his bride, Princess Victoria, is false.

The kaiser's edict was not issued until it was made clear to him that the prince and princess might retire to their estates in Austria unless opposition ceased.

ENTOMBED A WEEK

Miner In Apparently Good Condition When Reaching Surface

Centralia, Pa., Oct. 6.—Thomas Toshesky, the miner entombed 800 feet underground, was in good physican condition when he was released by the efforts of the forty men who worked in relays night and day to save him. He had lost no weight and declared: "I never felt better in my life." He had been entombed more than 155 hours.

As the rescuing party drilled away the last layer of coal and rock that separated Toshesky from liberty, the imprisoned man exclaimed: "Where is my wife? Is she here? I must see her at once. It's pretty good to be out again," he said. "I tell you it was mighty lonesome down there. I was in a space so little that at times I thought I would surely choke to death, even though you boys did pump lots of air down to me."

Toshesky was taken to his home, refusing to go to a hospital. After a careful examination, doctors declared the man seemed to have suffered no bad effects despite his long confinement in the earth.

MURDER OVER CARD GAME

Dying Man Managed to Seriously Wound Alleged Slayer

Rumford, Me., Oct. 6.—In a quarrel over a card game, Luigi Reias was killed and Mario Balba dangerously wounded. Balba has a bullet hole at the back of his mouth and is under police surveillance on the charge of shooting Reias.

According to the police, these two with others of a card party at Reias' home, engaged in a scrimmage, during which Reias and Balba rolled down a flight of stairs together, wrestling for control of a revolver, which Balba had. Although fatally wounded by a bullet from the weapon, Reias managed in his last struggle to turn it upon his antagonist, inflicting a throat wound. Balba is expected to recover.

McAdoo Not to Resign

Washington, Oct. 6.—"Absolutely without foundation," was the comment of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo upon the rumor that he will retire from the department at the end of the year.

Trolley Car Kills Boy

Boston, Oct. 6.—Robert Holland, 5 years old, of Dedham, was killed in front of his 14-year-old sister, Daisy, shortly after they left Sunday school on Spring street, West Roxbury, by a trolley car.

Fire Visits Japanese Homes

Penryn, Cal., Oct. 6.—Thirty buildings in the Japanese section of Penryn were destroyed by fire, entailing a lost of $40,000.

HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Weather Unfavorable for Quincy Medford Game

The football team of Quincy High school were dissappointed Saturday when weather conditions interferred with their game with Medford high. Both teams were in good form and the game was to be the first real contest of the local aggregation this season. Because the schedules of both teams are filled it will be difficult to assign a date until the season is nearly finished.

Faster development, grittier playing a better understandin gof rules and improved condition means a banner season at Quincy High and the scores of some of the opponents they will meet this season emphasizes the need of real work by the players.

Waltham, with whom they play their last game overpowered the snappy New Bedford High school Saturday, 60 to 0.

Cambridge Latin their opponents a week from Friday at Cambridge lost to St. Marks 10 to 0, but substitutes were used continually because of injuries to players.

Arlington High their Tuesday opponents on the Merrymount oval has shown a persistent spirit and if the field is not softened too much by today's drizzle the contest should be decided only after a sti struggle.

MILTON HIGH WON.

The football team of Milton High school defeated Milton Academy in the annual game Saturday afternoon, 7 to 0. The score came in the second period after Keiser made a long run and planted the ball on the Academy's 20 yard line. A series of rushes brought the points. Both teams exhibited fine ability.

GAME POSTPONED.

The poor condition of the Ward three playground and uncertain weather conditions caused the postponement of the opening of the Red Men's football season. The game arranged for last Saturday with the General Electrics of West Lynn will probably be played next Saturday.

—It is the custom of many newspapers to make a charge for all notices of church suppers or entertainments, social functions or other amusements for which an admission fee is charged. The Ledger does not enforce this custom, but, so far as such notices are legitimate items of news of general interest to the public, it is always willing to give suitable mention. In such cases we must be the judges of what is to be printed as news, but when the interested parties dictate the details or form of such a notice, beyond our own ideas of its news value, it becomes advertising matter and should be paid for as such. The newspapers are by no means niggardly in their handling of such matters, and doubtless because of that fact, some persons get the impression that the papers should boom their enterprises with no thought of compensation for the service, and express their displeasure if their requests are not complied with. We trust that if any of our readers come within the class referred to they will recognize the fairness of our position, and govern themselves accordingly.

HER PROPOSAL

A Story of Fisher Folk

By E. A. MITCHEL

The coast of Maine is dotted with villages, snugly located in the little coves which dent the islands, forming a continuous archipelago from Portland to the bay of Fundy. The men in these villages fish all the year round, except for a short season in midsummer, when they use the motorboats for taking out sailing parties on various excursions, for which they receive good pay.

In one of these villages lived two fishermen whose ownership and management of a boat gave them the title of captain. They were Captain Steve Williams and Captain Enoch Brown. Williams was older than Brown, but they were stanch friends. Both of them knew so well the rocks and shoals of the coast in which they were used to fish that they could sail around them or between them in the darkest night.

They set their nets just before darkness fell upon the ocean and took them in soon after dawn. It was a hard life, this being exposed to the winds and waves when others were asleep and sleeping while others were awake, but so long as they were young they did not mind it—that is, when the weather was fair. When it was stormy they did not go out to fish, but many a night a change would come, and, being out, they were obliged to endure the exposure till they could make the cove from which they had started.

Captain Steve Williams was married, and many a time when storms arose while he was out in his boat his wife would lie awake dreading with every shriek of the wind that it might be blowing her husband on some sunken rock. She would clasp her little daughter, Edith, tightly to her breast and mutter a prayer for the man plying his perilous vocation.

Captain Brown had no wife to pray for him. He had passed the heyday of youth and had not married, though he could have won almost any of the girls of the village. He was a well built man with a clear steel gray eye—an eye that bespoke courage and honesty. But the winds and the spray had begun to plow furrows in his cheeks, and a few gray hairs were beginning to appear in his sandy hair.

When Edith Williams was a little child she was sensible of there being a great trouble in the family. A man came to the house and took her father away with him, her mother clinging to her husband, weeping. Edith did not see her father for some time; then he came home, and the trouble seemed to be over. It occurred when she was at an age in which children forget, but she never forgot the scene of her father's being taken away. And there was another scene she remembered, her father holding one of Captain Brown's hands while her mother held the other, and they were talking to him with great earnestness.

But both these scenes, though not forgotten, grew dim in her memory as she grew away from them. Perhaps they were dwarfed by others that were present with her. Her father, who was never the same man after the misfortune that had come to him, began to dread going out at night on the black ocean to gain a livelihood for those dependent upon him. And his wife dreaded to have him go as much as he dreaded going.

Edith wished that the fish would go into the nets during the day as well as during the night. She wished that her father could devote himself to some other calling. And yet when now and then he would make a great haul and dispose of it for a large sum it would not seem so dreadful after all—at least he would not so consider it himself.

And so the battle for life with the winds and the waves went on. The two captains weathered every tempest, every fog, in which they were caught. At last a little germ so small that it could be seen only with a microscope got into Captain Williams' system and effected what the angry breakers rolling over some half hidden rock were powerless to do. The fisherman died quietly in his bed.

He had wrung from the sea enough to pay for the home in which he lived, besides a fund for an income by which, living economically, his wife and daughter might keep the wolf from the door. But his wife could not live without him. There was now nothing to worry her, but when the wind howled at night, from force of habit, she would waken and think of the little boat out on the dark, heaving ocean, the solitary man in it feeling his way like a blind person. While she was sinking away, at the slightest sound she would start, inquiring if it were not the melancholy foghorn or a gun from a sinking ship, and at the last she was sure she heard the thin clang of a distant bell buoy.

Edith was now alone. There were friends and acquaintances in plenty, but they were like persons in another boat, liable to drift away at any moment. One, and only one, seemed left of those she had been accustomed to regard a part of the household, Captain Brown.

A few days after the death of her mother Edith was sitting in the living room of her home. She had taken up some sewing more for occupation than anything else, and in her loneliness tears were dropping on her work. Hearing a sound, she looked up and saw Captain Brown. He had entered as he had been used to enter, without knocking. She smiled at him faintly through her tears. He was all that was left of the three who had composed her little world. He sat down before her and looked at her pityingly with his gray eyes.

"Edith," he said, "I've come to say something to you. Your father and mother being gone, you have no one to rely on."

"Yes; I have you. Father often told me that if he were taken away from me I could count on you for anything."

The fisherman winced. He had something on his mind, something he had dreamed without hope of its realization. He had long wished for Edith's love, the love of a woman, not a child, for a man. Now that she was left alone there seemed a possibility that he might induce her to look upon him as a suitor. But he had been twenty years old when she was born, and she had been accustomed to think of him as something akin to a father. Her reception of the opening of the proposal he intended discouraged him.

"But what is it you have to say to me?" she added, seeing that he was drawing back within himself. Her question was accompanied by a reassuring smile. It brought him courage.

"I don't see how you can live here alone," he said, "and you have no relative to come and live with you. I was your father's friend. He was like a brother to me, and I've missed him since he left us pretty nigh as much as you have."

She interrupted him. Whether it was to stave off what she saw was coming or from a sincere desire to know the truth he could not be sure.

"Tell me," she said, "what was the trouble that came to the family when I was a little girl, and what was your connection with it."

"Your father told me that if I felt it would be safe to intrust you with the secret after you had become a woman and he had gone I had his permission to do so."

"Intrust me! Did father doubt that I might safely be intrusted with any secret?"

"Not as a woman, only as an irresponsible child. I will tell you all. I ought to tell you, for there is a reason in it for my not saying what I have intended to say. There was a man, a miserly wretch, who held a mortgage on this house. Your father was having hard luck with his nets about that time and couldn't pay the interest. The old skinflint wrote him that he was going to foreclose the mortgage. Your father went to see him about the matter and there were high words between the two. The next morning the miser was found murdered."

Edith leaned forward to catch every word, a look of dread on her face.

"Your father was arrested charged with the murder. Nobody doubted that he was guilty, and since a number of criminals had shortly before got off by the inefficiency of the law a number of men determined in this case to be the law themselves. I got wind of the move and, taking my gun, went to the jail to help the sheriff protect your father. Nearing it, I saw the men advancing to attack it. Taking position behind a tree, I fired several shots at them."

The captain paused.

"Well?" queried Edith.

"I killed one of them."

"Go on."

"They supposed my shots came from the jail. They all went away. You are the only person now living who knows that there is blood on my hands."

She reached for the hand on which there was blood and asked him to go on.

"Not long after this the police ran in a criminal with some money and other property on him that had belonged to the murdered man. He confessed to the murder, and your father was released."

With a sigh of relief Edith drew away and, resting her head on the high back of the chair in which she sat, covered her face with her hands. Her companion waited for her to recover from her emotion. Presently she withdrew her hands and said:

"Go on."

"There's nothing more to tell," the captain said. "I wanted to give myself up and take the consequences of the killing I had done, but your father and your mother dissuaded me. They said it was perfectly legitimate and by it I had saved your father's life, for it turned out that the sheriff was unprepared to defend him and was ready to give him up to the men who had brought with them the wherewithal to execute him. I suppose this is true, but I think I would have felt better all these years if I had confessed."

"Never mind that now. What was it you were going to tell me before this digression?"

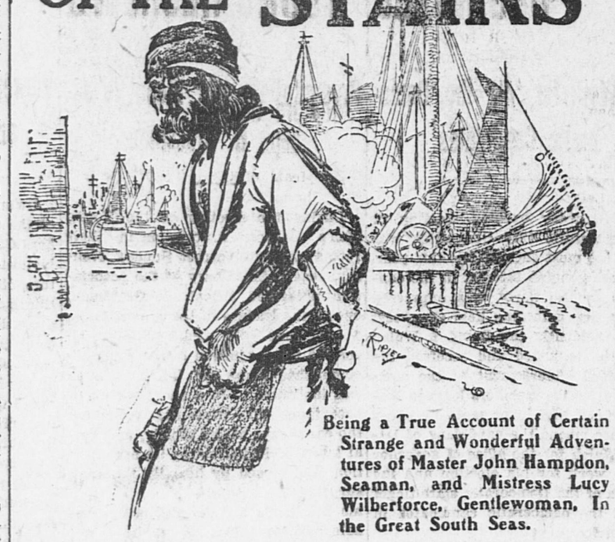
"I can't do it."

"Then I will."

She threw her arms about his neck and said: "You will need some one to take the place of those who doubtless did what they could to make you feel satisfied that you did right in defending an innocent man even though you took a life in doing so. I will be that person."

The story was told, though it was the woman who told it. And now another wife lies at night thinking of a fisherman out on the black waters under the dome of heaven waiting for the fishes to come into his net. When the moon glints the waves she sleeps calmly, but when she hears the wind rising or the deep moan of the foghorn she shudders.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare. From English fields to south sea shore their path thry follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

"Not such life as I crave. If I cannot have enough for my desires I would be worse off had I nothing."

Well, I was arguing against my wishes from a sense of duty, so I at last gave way. After all, the treasure might be there. If so, it was hers, and it would be a shame not to get it. The pulse of adventure leaped in my veins.

"So be it," I said.

"Will you help me to make my arrangements? You are accustomed to the sea, and"—

"I will do more than that," said I. "With your gracious permission I will go with you."

"To the island?"

"To the end of the world," I replied. Whereat she stared at me a moment, then looked away.

She extended her hand to me and I tried to kiss it like a gentleman. I made, no doubt, a blundering effort, but at least it was that of an honest man.

"I must go and get ready to go to Master Ficklin's in the town," she said softly. "You know the house."

I nodded.

"Come to me there tomorrow and we will talk further about the project."

When we broached the subject to Master Ficklin the next day at his house, he would not hear of it. He examined the parchment with interest, but poohpoohed the tale because, forsooth, it had no legal backing and was couched in the phraseology of the sea rather than in the dry verbiage of the law. He pointed out that he had only succeeded in saving this last £2,000 of my lady's fortune because he had skillfully concealed its existence from Sir Geoffrey. He asked pertinently what would happen to her when all was gone and she had found no treasure, the very existence of which he affected to disbelieve.

A very hard headed, practical person was Master Ficklin. I had stern ideas of duty, too, and Master Ficklin's good sense ever appealed to me. Yet when did mere good sense ever appeal to a woman against her wish? My lady had the gambling instinct, too—I wonder she did not have it stronger, since 'twas in her blood!—and she would fain challenge fortune.

The end of it was she made over her £2,000 to me without requiring me to give any bond, which Master Ficklin would fain have insisted upon and which would have been embarrassing indeed for me, for my bond would have been my own capital, which I was going to embark in the enterprise in secret. I had saved up that money with no one knows what foolish dreams. I realized those dreams would come to naught. I had no one dependent upon me. Brother or sister I never enjoyed, and father and mother were both dead. What need had I for money? Let her have it whose need was great and whose desire was greater. I might have bargained for a share of the treasure did we find any, but I scorned to do it. I would give all and expect nothing for it.

At any rate, not being in any hurry, although I was frantically urged by my lady, who could scarcely possess her soul in patience before she began her treasure hunting, I looked about a good deal in order to get just what I wanted. Finally from a merchant of Plymouth I purchased a stout little ship of three hundred and fifty tons burden called the Rose of Devon, which had been engaged in the West Indian and the American colonial trade.

It was my first design to have gone as master of her myself, and my lady would fain have had it so, but after reflection I decided it were better to have a much older man than I to command so long as she went as a passenger, and so I engaged a worthy seaman, one Samuel Matthews, old enough to be my father, with whom I had often sailed; in fact, the man under whom I made my first cruise. I did engage myself as mate, however, and I even tried in vain to induce Master Ficklin and his sister to go with us.

It seemed proper in venturing among islands filled according to common report with savage peoples to provide for fighting. Therefore, after consulting with Captain Matthews, whom I fully acquainted with the entire project in all its details, I shipped a crew of thirty men and I provided in the equipment plenty of muskets, pistols and cutlasses, with the necessary powder and ball, and in addition a small brass cannon which I mounted on the forecastle. Nor did our cargo lack means for friendly trading and barter should such be found practicable.

Naturally the unusualness of these preparations attracted attention, and Captain Matthews and I were overwhelmed with applications from adventurous men who desired to make the voyage, surmising that it was after treasure of some sort.

I left the work of engaging the crew to Captain Matthews. He had as boatswain a seaman named Pinball, in whom he placed great confidence. He was a villainous looking man with a white scar running from his left eye across his cheek, caused by a cut he had received in some fight, and the line of white showing against the bronzed, weather beaten cheek he sported did not improve his appearance. But that he was a prime seaman was evident. Captain Matthews seemed to have great confidence in him.

To anticipate, when we boarded the ship I liked the crew not much better than the boatswain. I will say this for them, however, that a smarter, quicker set of seamen never hauled on brace or laid on yardarm. It was not their skill or strength or courage that I did not like, but they were not the kind of men I would have sought for a ship of my own, and the presence of my lady and her maid, a worthy woman, a long time servant at the castle, who had elected to follow her fortunes, made me timid, yet I was not unusually apprehensive. I had a sublime confidence in my own ability to deal with any man or any group of men.

I did not stint the outfitting of the ship, and when I finished, having left nothing out that either my own or Captain Matthews' experience or imagination would suggest, there was left of our joint funds enough to pay the wages of the officers and of the men out and back and no more—that is, allowing a year for the round voyage. The lines of the Rose of Devon were unusually good. She had a reputation for being a speedy boat, and that was more time than enough. It was my purpose to go around the world with her rather than retrace our course about Cape Horn after we reached the island, if we ever reached it, so we staked everything we had on the future. If my lady had had the least knowledge of the value of ships she would have seen how little way her £2,000 had gone, but she was as guileless as any other woman on that subject, and Master Ficklin was not much better. I fled to them both with a good grace and with an easy conscience. It was for her sake

CHAPTER V.

Wherein the Duke Is Marked In Farewell.

BUT one thing strikes me as worthy to be chronicled before we embarked. When all was ready and everything aboard, I went back to Master Ficklin's in Tanstock, which was an easy day's journey from Plymouth sound, where the Rose of Devon lay, to fetch my lady and her maid. Master Ficklin's house was a somewhat large one and was surrounded by a walled garden, perhaps two acres in extent, which ran back from the house to a little brook which bounded the village.

Master Ficklin was at his office, although it was yet early in the morning when I called, intending to fetch my lady to Plymouth by coach, a special coach which I had engaged, by the way. His sister said that Mistress Wilberforce was in the garden and that she had company. She offered to show me to her presence, but I said I knew the way and could go there myself. I did not like the word company overmuch since her fine friends had more or less forgotten her.

I passed through the hall, out of the back door and into the garden. I stood a moment, hesitating, wondering whether after all I had the right or the privilege to break in upon such company as she might be entertaining, when a scream which came faintly from the end of the garden decided me.

I broke into a run and in a few moments came upon my lady struggling in the arms of a man. What man, you ask? The Duke of Arcester! He had his arms around her, and although he was no great shakes of a man, he was much stronger than the slight girl he was grappling with. He held her tightly by the waist with one hand and with the other was trying to turn her head so that he could kiss her.

I was upon them before they realized my arrival. I grasped the duke by the collar of his coat with my left hand and with my right I fairly tore him away from my lady.

"Thank God, you have come!" she cried, reeling and staggering, her face flushed, her hair disheveled, her dress in disarray.

WOLLASTON CLUBHOUSE

DeNormandie stated that the club now had an approximate membership of 130, and there had been $6000 worth of bonds actually pledged. The dues were to be $20 a year paid semi-annually in advance with an initiation fee of $20, one half to be paid on filing application for membership the remainder at call of the finance committee, but at least 60 days after the first payment.

General sentiment seemed to favor the club, but many questions were raised concerning its administration. Following the election of the committee named above, the meeting adjourned. The next move will be made by the joint action of the committee appointed and the present board of directors.

MISSING SINCE JULY 27

Wendell Quarry Pond Gives Up Body of Paul Dovell

The body of Paul E. Dovell, of 32 Elm place, missing since July 27, came to the surface Sunday at the Wendell quarry.

Dovell, who was a driver for J. F. Sheppard & Sons, disappeared on the evening of July 27. A few days later some clothing was found on the bank of the quarry leading the police to believe that he had committed suicide. The services of a diver were secured and the greater part of a day was spent by the diver at the bottom of the quarry.

The water in the quarry is very cold and the diver also complained that the muddy condition of the water prevented his seeing but a short distance. No trace whatever was found of the missing man and many believed that the man had simply gone away and had left the clothing on the edge of the quarry to mislead searchers.

Sunday afternoon a boy named Frank Giglio was near the quarry and saw a body floating near the edge of the quarry hole. The police were notified and Chief Burrell and Medical Examiner Dr. F. E. Jones visited the quarry. The Medical Examiner ordered the body removed to the receiving tomb. Mr. Dovell was considered by Messrs. Sheppard one of their best drivers, and he had been employed by them for many years. He leaves a widow and five children.

SILK FLAG FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL

Presented on Citizens Sunday by Womans Relief Corps

Citizen's Sunday was observed in a most fitting manner at the Sunday school session of the Universalist church, Bartlett Spooner, superintendent. The exercises were in charge of Mrs. Eliza A. Penniman, patriotic instructor of Paul J. Revere Woman's Relief corps, who presented a silk flag to the Sunday School. Remarks were made by the pastor Rev. Merrill C. Ward ,and by Mrs. Cylenda Richardson, president of Corps No. 108. Supt. Spooner is the grandson of a veteran, and the pastor is the son of a veteran. The salute to the flag was given, and America was sung by all.

FALSE ALARM BOYS ARRESTED

Chief Litchfield's Auto Disabled Going to the Box

Chief Litchfield and his chauffeur Richard Williams had a narrow escape from a serious accident Sunday afternoon while responding to a false alarm from Box 17 located at Houghs Neck. The Chief was near Mt. Wollaston cemetery speeding along toward the box when the front axle snapped. The car became uncontrolable and went over to the side, narrowly escaping striking a big telephone pole. When the car struck the street railway tracks it stopped with a sudden jerk throwing both Chief Litchfield and Driver Williams headfirst. Fortunately there was a plot of grass handy and they landed on this none the worse for their experience. Chief Litchfield grabbed his rubber coat and hailing a passing automobile went on to the box.

The alarm sounded a few minutes after 5.30. This same box was smashed some time ago and in the absense of the iron door a wooden door has been doing duty. It is alleged that some boys opened the door and pulled the hook down with a jerk so that it stuck and but one round was sounded.

People nearby declare that the box was pulled by some boys and Officer Corbett who was near at hand placed seven of the boys under arrest and took them to the Houghs Neck fire station, from which place they were later taken to the police station and locked up for sounding a false alarm.

It is alleged by people in the vicinity that the boys were seated on a bench near the box waiting for the car, and in the spirit of deviltry one of them ran across the street and opening the box pulled down the hook.

The police of station 10, Roxbury, were notified and through them the boys parents were informed of their arrest, but up to a late hour Sunday night none of their parents had come for them. They were all arraigned in court this morning.

This was the second false alarm that was sounded Sunday, the first being box 84 situated at Squantum, which sounded at 12.30, giving the Chief and Central station auto chemical a long run for nothing.

WALSH CLUB ORGANIZED

Will Work for All the Democratic Candidates

The Saturday evening meeting of the Democratic City Committee was one of the most enthusiastic this year, and more genuine interest in the candidates of the party was expressed than at any gathering held since last fall. Incidently the David I. Walsh Club was launched and received the unqualified endorsement of the committee after the members learned that its purpose was to promote by every legitmate means the candidacy of David I. Walsh for the office of governor and to work for his election and the election of the Democratic state ticket and of the democratic candidates in this district.

Campaigners in all sections of the city will be banded together with the one object in view, namely the success of the ticket ""from the bottom up" and to make doubly sure that the interest will not wane Edward J. Fegan. a local attorney and campaign manager here will meet the voters of each ward throughout this week and increase as far as possible the club membership.

Every section of the senaotrial district will be covered by chairman appointed at the meeting. and this week the enrollers will meet in Ward 1. Johnson building, Monday night; Ward 2. Ward Two Social Club, Tuesday night; Ward 3, Wednesday night; Ward 4, Thursday night and Ward 5 and 6 Friday night. The undesgnated places will be named wtihin a few days.

Each member is expected to contribute $1 which will be applied to the payment of campaign expenses of the district, to be expended under the direction of the campaign committee which will be chosen later.

Among the candidates present were David W. Murray, senatorial candidate Representative Michael T. Sullivan, candidate for re-election, Cornleius M. Duggan, representative candidate in the Sixth Norfolk district, William Good of Randolph, candidate for district attorney in Plymouth and Norfolk counties and Jeremiah O'Leary of Sharon, candidate for county commissioner. Thomas Griffin, presided.

The harmony of the meeitng was disturbed for a while by a discussion which arose over notification. Charles C. McHugh of West Quincy took exceptions to the work of William Sullivan, secretary, and stated that he had received no notice of several meetings. In reply Mr. Sullivan said that the gentleman in question had neglected to attend meetings and that it was wasted effort to mail them. The fires of discord burned merrily and probably would have blazed if several of the participants had remanied.

house of Francisco Madonna on Sumner street. They remained there all the evening and finally decided to remain all night. Lestiti and his friend occupied Madonnas bed, the latter making a bed on the floor.

During the early morning Madonna was aroused by a noise, and getting up he found that the two men had disappeared, and with them a revolver and a pair of shoes, the revolver having been taken from beneath Madonnas pillow. After leaving the house the two men must have separated as no one was with Lestiti when arrested.

When asked by the court to explain, Lestiti said that he did not own the revolver found and that he did not have a knife. He also denied attempting to shoot the officer, and declared that the officer had found the gun behind a tree. Officer Thorne said that he did pick the gun from behind the tree but it was where it had fallen when he knocked it from his hand. The revolver however was not the weapon that had been stolen from Madonna.

Lesti was arraigned for assault on an officer with a dangerous weapon and was fined $50.

Lestiti is being held by the police because his description answers that of an Italian wanted by the police at Toronto, Canada, for murder committed in 1910 and also for a murderous assault committed at Brockton within several months.

SUICIDE ON THIRD HILL

Howard Pitts Once Shoe Manufacturer at Fitchburg

The body of a man, later identified as Howard Pitts, aged 61 years, was found hanging to a tree on Third hill Wollaston, Sunday. The spot where the body was found was not far from the standpipe o fthe Metropolitan Water commission of which the man's brother Lemuel is the caretaker. Medical Examiner Dr. Fred E. Jones was notified after the body had been cut down, and after viewing the remains gave it in charge of relatives.

The unfortunate man lived on North Central avenue a short distance from Third hill. Pitts had always been regarded as a rather ecentric man and had been acting queerly of late but on account of his eccentricity but little attention was paid to him. He kept his own council and but little is known about him. At one time he was a successful shoe mnaufacturer at Fitchburg. He is said to have lost all his money in the brokerage business. He came to Quincy from Fitchburg to which place the body will be taken.

CONGRESSMEN DID NOT LAND

Viewed Shipyard from Water and Returned to Boston

Owing to lack of time the members of the Congressional Rivers and Harbors Committee, who are in Boston by invitation of the Port of Boston Directors, did not visit the Fore River plant this morning as expected. The party came down from Boston in a government tug arriving off the Fore River yard about noon. The tug steamed up the Fore River a short distance and then turning, headed back toward Boston. The only view the party had of the shipyard being what could be seen from the deck of the tug.

The party left Boston early this morning on the government tug, Gen. Jessup, first making a tour of the Mystic river and from there to the Weymouth Fore River, thence back to Boston where they were tendered a luncheon at the Algonquin club at 2 o'clock.

The committee is in Boston to see for itself the need of a 40-foot channel in Boston harbor, so that that port may handle the big express steamships which various lines have promised to put into service. It is therefore in the hands of this committee to decide if Boston is to have the largest and fastest steamships come into its harbor regularly.

The speakers at the luncheon this noon were Gov. Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald, Joseph A. Conry, Admiral Bowles, Elwyn G. Preston, William C. Brewer, Frank Fessenden Crane, Quincy's Dock and Water Front Commissioner, and Henry Howard.

Tonight the committee will attend a dinner given by the Waterways Association at Young's.

Mayor Stone was among the party at the luncheon this noon and will attend the dinner toight, but is not booked as one of the speakers.

ASK PASTOR TO RECONSIDER

Believing that they can effectively prevail on Rev. John E. Lillback to remain as pastor of the Finnish Congregational church the members have called a public meeting for Tuesday night when they will express their love and loyalty in his presence.

Rev. Mr. Lillback recently resigned after five years success as pastor to take charge of the Finnish Congregational churches at Brooklyn, N. Y.

The announcement of his acceptance of the call from Brooklyn was very surprising for his ever cheerful work among the Finnish people of the city and his antagonism to imperialistic and socialistic doctrines had brought him into such high favor that they want him as permanent pastor.

The rapid development of his church under his direction surrounded him with many friends and although Rev. Mr. Lillback positively states that his resignation is final they hope to defer his leaving for some time to come.

A regular meeting of the City Council was held Monday evening, and although there was a large amount of business it was put through with dispatch. The Committee on Streets practically disposed of all business which had been referred to it, most of the matters being sent over to next years City Council. The Committee on Ordinances and the Committee on Fire Department also practically completed all business before them.

There was considerable new business but the most of this also was practically completed at this meeting. No appropriation orders of any kind were passed at this meeting.

The absent members were Councilmen Bailey, Bass and Duffy.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the City Clerk relative to a warrant for killing unrestrained dogs. Laid on the table until later, Councilman Gilliatt offered an order for a warrant for the Chief of Police to kill or cause to be killed all unrestrained dogs. The order was considered a little too drastic as there were inquiries as to what was meant by an "unrestrained" dog. Order laid on the table.

AMENDMENTS.

The Mayor forwarded a comunication from the City Clerk relative to advertising proposed amendments to the constitution. That on account of the widening of Coddington street numerous changes and alterations were necessitated and that it will be necessary for the trustees to expend money of the library for such changes and alterations. That the Trustees are of the opinion that it is fair and reasonable that the city should pay the Library, if not the market value of the land taken, a sufficient sum to meet the expenses to the Library. Referred to Finance Committee.

That Old Reliable Contract System Revised

Our contract pressing system started with the establishment of our business in 1892. Now we offer in connection with this system a cleansing contract. Through these contracts we propose to keep men's suits not only Well Pressed but Absolutely Clean. Our contract system is not a method of doing inferior work at a price which warrants such, but the same high-grade Warshaw service at greatly reduced rates—work that for 21 years has stood the test of time and built our business to what it is today. Our contracts for pressing, and for cleansing and pressing, are for three, six and twelve months. All contract work is done in the same departments as our regular work, thus assuring perfect results.

It is a fact that a garment Thoroughly Cleansed and Well Pressed will always look better and outwear any garment not cleansed, or treated with inferior methods. Hence, the wise one will inquire about our contract system. Be Wise.

Lace Curtains received during Oct. 6 to 18 will be cleansed for 75c.; regular price, $1.00—$1.50 per pair.

CANDIDATE GARDNER SPEAKS IN QUINCY

Enthusiastically Received by Employees of Tubular Rivet and Stud Company

Introduced by President Richards of City Committee

Congressman Gardner, candidate for governor on the Republican ticket, made his last speech of the week at the Tubular Rivet & Stud Co. this noon to practically every employee in the building, and although it is understoood that the section hums with the Progressive party principles he was enthusiascally received and was given rapt attention throughout his 35 minutes of solid and substantial argument.

In his party was Ex-Senator Siberlick of Jamaica Plain and Fred Daggett of Boston. He was introduced by John R. Richards, president of the Republican City Committee. Edward J. Sandberg, candidate for representative in the Fifth Norfolk district, also spoke briefly.

Congressman Gardner spoke from an automobile and although his bronchial tubes are suffering from effect of ou-tof-door speaking was in fine voice. His clear voice echoed off the walls of the factory and his speech could have easily been heard on Hancock street. The slight drizzle that accompanied a fog bank which settled about the property had no terrors for the man who is recognized from both ends of the state as a ""real fighter."

He declared he had always been a Republican and always would be, and that his consistent principles called for his upholding the planks acceptable to the state convention.

He spoke on the immigration bill and the result the influx of labor had on trade conditions. He said we protect the workmen against the cheap labor of abroad but we do not protect them from the cheap workmen of abroad. He supplied every logical reason to support his contention that his wit could command and dismissed that topic by saying that the 1,400,00 foreigners coming here annually must have a tendency to lower the morals of the community because they work for cheaper wages.

Coming down to his views on increasing the powers of the minimum wage commission, he said he would send a message to the house, and demand that the powers be increased so that all should have an opportunity to rest in the protecting arm of the law. He advocated an enlarger scope and if neccessary a national 54-hour law for the laboring people of the country.

His treatment of the labor question was from an economic standpoint principally and not from the men and women angle. He believed, he said, that labor was the God given right and Five sets of nomination papers were taken out Monday by A. N. LaBrecque for Republican candidate for Mayor. He declined to state who the papers were for, although rumor has it they are for John L. Miller.

Other papers taken out Monday were Robert B. Craig, for councilman from Ward Three, William P. Thompson for Councilman from Ward One, additional papers were also taken out by Edward A. EVENING SCHOOLS OPEN

Larger Attendance Reported at All the Buildings

The evening schools at the Willard, Adams and High school buildings opened Monday night with an attendance, much larger than a year ago. At the Willard school last year the opening night registration was 90 and this year it was 115. The attendance of the Finnish class was very large, so much so that an additional teacher will have to be provided, making three Finnish teachers where there was but one last year.

At the Adams school the attendance Monday night was 174 as against 106 the opening night a year ago. At the Adams school there was a large attendance in the Hebrew class and the number in the Italian class completely filled one room.

At the High school building there was an attendance of 66 at the commercial school, and an additional teacher will be added to this class.

The evening industrial classes were also largely attended. In the dressmaking class there were enough so that the class was divided into two sections.

In the machinist class nineteen were received and it was necessary to turn away three or four who could not be accommodated. Tonight the sheet metal class will open at the High school.

The industrial class for the granite men also opened at the Adams school with an attendance of 20.

Owing to the fact that it will take the best citizens of New York fifteen minutes to vote, it is not thought there is any chance of beating Tammany this year.

Great enthusiasm has been manifested at the Good Roads congress at Detroit, and a unanimous conviction is expressed that it's up to somebody else to put up more money for highways.

President Hadley told the Yale freshmen to exercise self restraint, and they are doing their best to refrain from over study.

Although the leading journalists will be busy reporting the world's series ball games, it would seem as though the household hints writer might be left at home to do the editorials.

There is a strong feeling that the government should save money on its armor plate contracts, so as to have more for marble post offices.

THE MOST PERFECT THING.

Some enthusiast, writing about the world's series ball games, calls baseball "the most perfect thing in America." He goes on to compare it with the Olympic games of the ancient Greeks, which were a factor in developing that superb race. One reason why the Greeks were such perfect gymnasts was that every detail of athletic effort had been worked out to a final result.

Today the average man knows baseball better than grammar. If a previously fast team slumps, it loses half its gate receipts. A successful major league team can command unlimited money to organize the game according to the most scientific efficiency.

When the "Young lady across the way" attends one of the historic battles between the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Athletics, it is to her mostly the effort of lithe young athletes to knock a little ball over a distant fence, which they mostly fail to do. Baseball today, however, is far more intricate than mere hitting, running, and catching. It is a system of organizing nine men to do all these things by signals, with a precision like some swift and complicated machine.

The heat of a horse race is strung out over two minutes and odd seconds. A play at baseball takes place while a man covers the distance between two bases, about four seconds at best. And underneath all surface play, there is the mysterious sense of hidden and astute strategy. This excites indefinitely the curiosity and admiration of the spectator.

The Olympic games had their share in moulding the life of Greece. So baseball, itself a "projection" of the national temperament, reacts upon American character. It places a high premium on cool self command, the capacity for doing things with untroubled serenity under high nervous strain. It helps the sentiment for fair play. Few spectators sanction a decision that is manifestly wrong, even though in favor of the home team.

WOMEN SERVE ON COMMITTEE

Other Unique Features In Convention of Progressives

FIGHTING SPIRIT IS SHOWN

People In Galleries Permitted to Suggest Planks In Bay Staters' Platform, but Nearly All Are Rejected—Resolutions Drafted Some Weeks Ago Are Adopted

Boston, Oct. 7.—After a session lasting twelve hours the Progressive party convention adjourned at 10 p. m. The platform as presented by the committee on resolutions was unanimously adopted.

The delegates laughed out of the convention radical amendments calling for the abolition of the constitution of the United States and of the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The set of principles finally adopted were essentially the same as contained in the original draft presented to the party by the committee on resolutions of the state committee some weeks ago.

In many respects it was the most unique political convention ever held in this state. Many new precedents were set, notably that of permitting the people in the gallery to speak their mind. Eighty amendments were offered, but most of them were rejected.

Women were given representation on the committees and Miss Edna L. Spencer of Cambridge was elected as secretary of the convention. Forty women were elected to the state committee.

It was a red-blooded convention. The fighting spirit was in evidence at all times, but withal the contests were good-natured and enthusiasm ran high.

Ex-Speaker Walker, the presiding officer of the convention, stretched parliamentary rules to the limit to permit the widest latitude in the speechmaking, and the delegates talked to their hearts' content.

Regarded as a new political experiment the invitation to the people to introduce planks in the platform was not a success from a practical standpoint. It was impossible to handle these planks and the mixup was very general because the ideas expressed in them in most cases were contained in the platform.

Had the convention been less good-natured it would have been impossible to have put through the program.

OPPOSE CURRENCY BILL

Bankers Declare It Places Country Institutions In Danger

Boston, Oct. 7.—Country bankers from all parts of the United States placed themselves on record as being opposed to the currency legislation now before the senate in a conference at the Copley-Plaza.

They declare that unless the bill is amended to meet the recommendations and objections set forth in a set of resolutions they adopted they will be unable to continue business as members of the proposed federal banking system.

These resolutions will be presented before the committee on banking and currency of the United States senate, and a committee will be appointed to wait upon that committee to voice the objections to the bill.

They ask the speedy passage of the bill as amended.

ACCIDENT ON DOWN GRADE

Engine on Passenger Train In Vermont Is Badly Ripped Up

Burlington, Vt., Oct. 7.—Passengers on a local train of the Central Vermont railway were in peril when the middle driving axle of the ten-wheeled locomotive broke at the journal and the left drive wheel came off.

The train was two miles east of the station at Waterbury, and running upwards of forty miles an hour. Instantly the side rods on both sides of the engine snapped off, and the revolving ends flailed the locomotive.

The running boards, air tank and piping were swept away, the boiler covering was ripped off, and when finally the boiler itself was punctured a cloud of steam drove Engineer Holland and Fireman Cutting from the cab. Holland was badly hurt.

Reversed and with brakes set, the engine raced with the four cars nearly a quarter of a mile down grade and around curves before coming to a stop on an embankment fifty feet above the Winooski river.

YUAN ELECTED PRESIDENT

Becomes First Constitutional Head of Chinese Republic

Pekin, Oct. 7.—Provisional President Yuan Shi Kai was elected president of the Chinese republic for a term of five years by a two-thirds majority of the members of the two houses of the Chinese parliament in joint assembly.

Three ballots were necessary before a definite decision was obtained, as there were over twenty candidates. Most of these, however, were eliminated on the first ballot and Yuan Shi Kai and Li Yuen Heng, provisional president and provisional vice president, respectively, were left to fight the contest between them.

On the third and final ballot the figures were: Yuan Shi Kai, 507; Li Yuen Heng, 179. Yuan Shi Kai thus obtained a bare two-thirds majority.

Yuan Shi Kai, first president of the Chinese republic, is 54 years old. He was born in the province of Honan. During most of his adult life he has beeen an official.

MISS KENNEY AGAIN LANDS IN PRISON

Desperate Resistance by Militants When Arrest is Made

London, Oct. 7.—The militant suffragettes have been at least temporarily deprived at the outset of their fall campaign of one of their most noted leaders, Miss Annie Kenney, who was arrested on the platform of a London music hall at a meeting to plan the recommencement of hostilities.

The arrest brought about a scene of wild excitement in the crowded hall. The din was succeeded by a fierce struggle between some women who endeavored to rescue Miss Kenney and the officers who had her in custody, but with a flying wedge formation the policemen rushed her out of the building and into a waiting taxicab.

In the street the women fought and struggled furiously with the police, and their torn dresses and the rips in the policemen's tunics testified to the fierceness of the scrimmage. Eventually a solid phalanx of policemen cleared the way and the cab started for the Holloway jail. Two men, one of them a clergyman, and seven women were arrested.

CHARGED WITH LIBEL

Maine Minister Criticised Judge's Action In Liquor Cases

Waterville, Me., Oct. 7.—Rev. Wilbur F. Berry, superintendent of the Christian Civic League of Maine and editor of the official publication of that organization, was arrested on a charge of criminally libeling Associate Justice Haley of the state supreme court.

The alleged libel was contained in an article printed in the Civic League Record criticising the judge's action in settling seventy-five liquor cases in Bangor with fines.

Deputy Sheriff Quinn made the arrest. He took his prisoner to Portland, where he will be arraigned.

NOW SAYS HE KILLED TWENTY

Spencer's Story of Wholesale Murder Doubted by Police

HAS POSSIBLY KILLED FOUR

Says He Hates Women Because They Played Him For Money—Played Them For Diamonds In Return—Confesses Because He Expects to Be Executed Soon

Chicago, Oct. 7.—With the major portion of his astounding "confession" discredited as the dreams of an opium fiend, but with Chicago detectives convinced that he murdered Mrs. Mildred A. Rexroat and possibly had three or four others on his "death list," Henry Spencer, paroled convict, entertained detectives with fresh details of other gory crimes.

Telegraphic information received by the police caused an almost total collapse of Spencer's story, insofar as it concerned alleged victims in other cities. Authorities in most instances were unable to find any records of the murders Spencer declares he committed.

Captain Halpin of the detective department learned that while Spencer was a prisoner at Joliet as "Henry Stanzer," under sentence for burglary, he spent several months in the department for the criminal insane. Upon his release he came to Chicago.

"I am certain that Spencer killed Mrs. Rexroat," said Halpin, "and he has shown such an intimate knowledge of a number of Chicago murders that I have sent detectives out to attempt to corroborate his confession. But the more I question the man the more I doubt the murder statement."

His first wife, Spencer told the police, was his first victim. She was Helen Gould's maid, he said, and he murdered her for her diamonds, worth $800. The crime went undetected and started him on a series of murders, he declared, confident that he could always escape arrest.

Spencer told of a widow he married next. "We were coming to Chicago and stopped off at Detroit," he said. "We went to Belle Isle or Windsor. We walked down one of the walks in the park and I shot her. I got $600 and a diamond.

"Women, I hate 'em. They never did anything but try to play me for a sucker. I killed 'em just like I'd swat a fly."

Shaking his finger in Halpin's face, Spencer shrieked this accusation at the long list of women he claims as victims of his murderous pistol or hammer.

Spencer, who has confessed now to a series of twenty murders, calmly repeated the story he told under severe grilling.

"But what made you do it, man?" demanded Halpin. "Hadn't you any soul?"

"Some one brought me into the world," the prisoner said, his voice pitching higher. "Some one I didn't know, and I haven't ever seen. She threw me into the Home for the Friendless. Then a woman adopted me and turned me into the street. Made me sell papers for a living. Call that teaching you how to get a soul?"

Without interruption Spencer ran on. He told how he made his first appearance at Joliet penitentiary because he stole some clothes; how he came out with a brain full of burglars' tricks and how he started a criminal career that led him into a dozen prisons.

"But what made you kill these women?" insisted Halpin. This was the question that brought the tirade from Spencer.

"What made me kill 'em?" he screamed. "Why shouldn't I kill 'em? They played me for my money and I played them for their diamonds. Every time I saw a woman with a diamond I wanted to kill her on the spot.

"You have got me dead to right on the Rexroat murder," Spencer said, "and I know I shall be hanged in a couple of months. That is why I want to tell everything else and get it out of the way.

"I have been in and out of prison since I was a boy," he continued. "I have been hunted and hounded all my life. I am sore on the world. My own life does not amount to much and nobody's life has meant much to me."

The proceeds of Spencer's crime have amounted to more than $10,000 in the last year and he spent the money on women.

DAVID I. WALSH CLUB.

The first meeting of the David I. Walsh Club, launched at the meeting of the Democratic City Committee meeting Saturday night was held in the Johnson building Monday evening, and although the enrollment was not a record one its members expressed their hearty enthusiasm and said they would sound the slogan for Democratic success "from the bottom up" in all parts of the cty. They adjourned to meet again tonight in the rooms of the Quincy Point Social Club.

Edward Fegan, who is organizing the clubs in the district has been given the personal assurance of many voters that before two weeks a large enrollment will be secured. It was the opinion of those present that the first week should be devoted entirely to increasing the membership, and that the second should be one of campaign planning and the devising of ways and means to finance the campaign. Already substantial support has been given from unexpected quarters.

DISTURBANCE ON CAR.

Alfredo Caiozoi boarded a Quincy bound East Weymouth car Monday night and decided that he would run things to suit himself. He was more or less under the influence of liquor and started in by smoking on the rear platform, refusing to stop when requested to do so by the conductor. He then entered the car and used considerable profane language. The conductor kept his eye out for an officer and while coming through Quincy Point he saw Officer Johnson who placed the Italian under arrest. In court the Italian was fined $10 for creating a disturbance on a public conveyance.

The evening service opened with a rousing song service led by a chorus choir and assisted by Miss Holbrook who also sang a solo. The pastor chose for the subject of his discourse "Jonah and his modern successors."

The Ladies Aid Society held a meeting in the church parlor on Monday afternoon to discuss plans for a Japanese fair to be given early in December.

HIS PROPHETIC DREAM.

Curious Story of a Warning That Came From Slumberland.

The following prophetic dream was related by the president of a theological seminary:

It had been the custom of one of the professors to invite all the students, with members of the faculty, to dinner at a hotel on the annual Thanksgiving day. On the morning of that day the wife of this professor suddenly fell dead in her dressing room at 8 o'clock.

That morning at 7 o'clock one of the students woke up from a bad dream. He had dreamed that he sat down with the usual company at the Thanksgiving dinner and that immediately one of his fellow students rose in his place, saying that it was his painful duty to announce to the company that the wife of their host had suddenly died at 8 o'clock that morning.

This dream, however, he had instantly banished from his mind as an uncanny probability and had thought no more about it. But on going to the dinner and taking his seat with the company he was unspeakably amazed to see the student seen in the dream rise and to hear him make the announcement made in the dream.—Exchange.

SYMBOLS IN ARITHMETIC.

Origin of the Plus, Minus, Multiplication and Division Signs.

When you make the sign of + in a problem of addition, perhaps you do not know that you are really using the first letter of the word "plus" in a somewhat altered form. At first the capital letter P was used, but as it was made more and more quickly and carelessly the top part of the letter became merely a horizontal line drawn across the edge of the vertical.

The sign used in subtraction has even a stranger history. The word minus was first shortened into "mus," with a horizontal line above to indicate the contraction; after awhile only the letter m, with the line above it, was used, and finally the letter was dropped, and now we have only the hastily made horizontal line.

As multiplication is but a short form of addition, the plus sign was turned sidewise into a character resembling the letter X.

"Either" and "Neither."

There are two or three things about these two words that one should remember. In the first place, they should never be used in connection with more than two things—as: "It was either Tuesday or Wednesday," not "either Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday;" "it was neither Tuesday nor Wednesday," not "neither Tuesday, Wednesday nor Thursday." Then, either should not be used in the sense of each, as "they walked on, one on either side of the road." It should be one on "each" side of the road. The third caution is about the pronunciation. Some persons insist that they should be pronounced "i-ther" and "ni-ther," with the "i" long. But this is more an affectation perhaps than anything else. The best authorities agree that the right pronunciation is "e-ther" and "ne-ther."—New York World.

Sly Old Commodore.

"When Commodore Vanderbilt was alive," says a New York Central official, "the board of directors of the New York Central used to find their work all cut out for them when they met. All they had to do was to ratify his plans and adjourn. Yet they had their uses. Occasionally a man would come to him with some scheme which he did not care to refuse outright.

"'My directors are a difficult body of men to handle,' he would say. 'I'll submit it to 'em, but I warn you that they are hard to manage.'

"The matter would be submitted to the board when it assembled and promptly rejected.

"'There,' the commodore would say when his visitor came to learn the result. 'I did the best I could, but I told you in advance that my directors were an obstinate lot.'"

It Is Obtainable.

He was young, though of a serious turn of mind. Conversation was lagging, and she was earnestly hoping he would take his leave. Her musings were interrupted, however, by him asking:

"Do you think perfection is ever actually attained in this life, Miss Alice?"

"Yes," she answered quickly, "some people become perfect bores."—Denver Republican.

The Worried Widower.

"He says his poor children need another mother."

"Then why doesn't he take one home to them?"

"It seems that the children pay the rent, and they are very hard to convince."—Exchange.

Her Raven Hair.

"Some novelists don't know what they're talking about. Here's one who speaks of a girl's 'raven hair.'"

"What's wrong with it?"

"All wrong. Ravens don't wear hair. They wear feathers!"—Liverpool Mercury.

It is the mental and spiritual attitude with which one meets a crisis in life which makes the crisis one of victory or defeat.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

"Now, Ebenezer, what are your plans? I should advise you to find a good housekeeper, marry and keep your home. I've heard it mentioned that you thought of selling. Don't do that. If you do you'll be sorry. The house needs repairing. See to that, and in the meantime be looking about for a wife. I'd like to spend a month here later on, in August, perhaps, and I want the repairs to be done at once. I will advise about altering and making the house more convenient."

"Wait, Eliza Jane. Don't spend your strength along that line, as they say. I might get a wife, but I sartinly wouldn't be crazy enough to tear out these partitions and make over my dear old home—which I sartinly don't mean to sell. I want to die right here where the rest of our family hev, and be laid away out yender, where we hev jest put sister Mary Ann. She and me were pretty happy here together; and she loved everything about the house, no matter if it was unconvenient and beyond paperin' and paintin', which she was a calkerlatin' on; the repairs ken wait till I'm dead and gone!"

Ebenezer Halpin, having delivered perhaps the longest speech of his whole life, looked at his sister, Mrs. Monie, with a sort of determined meekness which somewhat surprised her.

"Why, Ebenezer, you wouldn't think of asking any woman to come here with such an unhandy house to do work in. I couldn't think of allowing you to do so."

"Wall, Eliza Jane, I'm of age, I calkerlate. The farm and everythin' on it belongs to me. I shan't ever ask any woman to marry me, 'tain't 'tall likely, for I'm old fashioned enuff to b'lieve a man and wife should love each other, and I don't think any one is a goin' to fall in love with such an old crank as I am, to say nothin' about the other side of the question. It'll be lonesome enuff, the land knows, for I'll miss sister Mary Ann every time I turn round. You hev a habit, I can see, of hevin' your own way 'bout most things. You allus did I calkerlate, afore you left home to get an eddication, likewise a rich husband and everything along that line. Me and Mary Ann just worked along here, talked things over and fixed them up together, and we are still goin' to be partners, if she is a silent one." The man's voice broke, ending in a sob.

"Well, well, Ebenezer, I am surprised! I want to help you, and I am sure I never supposed you had so much independence. However, I'll say no more. As you say, you have a right to your own way with your own property. I have been intending for several months to return here for Old Home Week, and it is so quiet among the hills I would really love to spend the entire month of August here if you are willing. I had written a letter to sister Mary—here it is—asking if I could come, and enclosed this check, thinking it might please her to receive a little present. Then the telegram came telling of her sudden death. Will you accept it, brother Ebenezer?" and Mrs. Monie extended the letter in a deprecatory manner.

"No, thank ye, Eliza Jane. Me and Mary Ann allus got along on the money we scraped together 'mong these old rocks and hills, and I calkerlate I'll hev enuff to git me thru life if I don't scrape up eny more. Come and make a visit if you want to."

After a moment's pause he continued: "We never made money so much an idol as we might hev, at the same time we saved up some 'gainst a rainy day. I calkerlate there's lots of sinnin' 'long jest that line, lovin' the stuff and hoardin' it up. Now old Mis' Graves, over t'other side of the hill, she's allus talkin' about money. Me and Mary Ann jest lived a day at a time; tried to love the Lord better'n we did our money, and we had powerful good times. Seems like I'll miss her more'n I can bear!" and Ebenezer Halpin arose from his seat on the broad piazza, which overlooked the dear old hills he so fondly loved and passed down the flower bordered walk, through the June sunshine to the open gate, through which, earlier in the day, his twin sister had been borne by the loving hands of his neighbors.

The days and weeks sped by. Old Home Week came and passed, but Mrs. Monie did not return to the Old New Hampshire hills. People talked, wondered and speculated as to what Mr. Halpin would do, and more than one interested female renewed former attempts to secure his favor, but all in vain.

One morning in September his nearest neighbor Deacon Plowman, was quite surprised to see him driving up to the door, dressed in his Sunday clothes, his face wearing a happy expression, his whole manner indicating pleasant anticipations.

"Wall, wall, Eben, what's to do? Ain't goin' to surprise us after all these years, air ye?" said the deacon jocularly.

"Wouldn't wonder a mite if I did do a little suthin' 'long that line," chuckled Eben. "I called to see if you'd let your hired man do my chores for a day or two, perhaps longer; can't jest say how long I'll be gone. Take the milk right home, what's left after the calves are fed. I brung along what cream I had on hand. Think you could spare 'im?"

"Sartin, sartin; allus glad to do ye a favor, and haven't forgotten my own young (?) days when I went sparkin'," returned the deacon laughing at his own joke.

The news spread, and after passing through several hands or mouths, assumed this form: "Ebenezer Halpin has gone to get married. Deacon Plowman says he has gone to Manchester and will be gone a week or so when in truth the good deacon had only remarked, when quizzed about his neighbor's plans, that he "knew no more'n the dead where he had gone. He went down the hill, he may be in Manchester; he may be gone a week, but I don't know a thing about it."

Three days only had gone by when, passing up the long hill which led to Ebenezer's home, a load of furniture drawn by a span of horses, was seen in the late afternoon. It was driven into the long open shed adjoining the house. The horses were taken to the stable and fed, the driver making his own meal from a lunch-pail he had brought along.

"Wall, stranger, you better come down to the house and sleep to-night. Suppose Mr. and Mrs. Halpin won't be along 'fore to-morrer," said Deacon Plummer's hired man, as he arrived on the scene just as the stranger had finished his supper.

The man grinned as he replied, "Thank ye, thank ye! No. I don't think Mr. Halpin and his wife will git here 'fore that time. I'm goin' to unload and after the horses have baited and rested shall hitch and start back hum. Mr. Halpin said as how you'd prob'ly be here and would be glad to help me with the load. I've got a key to the back door, and we'll just set the things in the kitchen."

"Whew! a wheel chair!" ejaculated the hired man as the stranger unloaded that useful article, pausing to note the look of astonishment with which it was greeted his own face full of fun.

The hired man continued after a pause.

"Say, I'm sort o' cur'us to know who he's married to anyhow. I hope she ain't a cripple!"

"Call her what you please, the woman who is comin' here has to use that chair all the time," was the answer.

"All the time? Wall that beats me. I allus thought Eben Halpin an odd stick, but to go and marry a cripple at his time o' life! Wall, 'taint none of my bizness," wisely concluded the hired man.

The sun was nearly out of sight the following day when Ebenezer Halpin's old sorrel horse, wearing a new harness and drawing a new canopy topped two-seated carryall containing an old, old lady and a girl of ten or twelve years of age, came slowly up the hill. Apparently Ebenezer was unconscious of the eyes peeping at him between open places in stone walls, and from behind trees which lined the road on either side, but a close observer would have noted the twinkle in his eyes, and the lines about them which showed his merriment. When he had driven up to the door of his home, he turned to his companions and said:

"Welcome to your home. Feel that it is your home, and be happy." Then apparently not seeing the tears which were running down the aged woman's face, he alighted from the carriage and entering the house brought out the wheel-chair to the piazza, and a moment later had lifted the crippled woman in his strong arms, and placed her in it.

"Now, Clara, take Kitty Budge right in the house in his basket, and I'll unload the other stuff, put up old Sorrel, and then we will see what there is for supper. Tomorrow we'll hav' a woman here to work and make our butter, a man to help about the farm work while me and you'll do odd jobs and take care of grandma," and with a heart full of happiness, that kind which comes with the doing of a good deed, Ebenezer proceeded to take care of his horse.

It was late in October. The leaves from the beautiful trees around the farmhouse had many of them fallen, and the winds were gently blowing through the branches, and sighing through the numberless pines in the "pine woods" back of the barn. Towering above all the rest was "Father Pine" the grand old tree, the first to come, and from which had sprung the lesser ones, which people said were to fill Ebenezer Halpin's purse whenever he should decide to sell.

Many would-be purchasers had sped up the long hill in their autos only to go down again without having attained their object.

"Ain't ready to sell. Don't know as I ever will be," the farmer would say, and then gaze lovingly at his trees, and think of his sister who with him had watched their upspringing and steady growth.

Out in the cemetery a double shaft had been placed, of roughly hewn granite, while a small pine had been planted near by. Here Ebenezer always stopped on his way to church every Sunday morning, rain or shine. Loving, tender-hearted as a child, he cherished his twin sister's memory, and seemed to think of her as still with him in spirit. So closely had their lives been interwoven that he thought he knew what her wishes would have been, and always deferred to what he imagined her plans might have been.

On this glorious October afternoon Mrs. Monie flew up the hill in her auto finding the newly organized family all seated on the piazza. Astonishment sealed her lips at first and, fearing an outbreak which might wound the feelings of "his family," Ebenezer promptly wheeled the old lady indoors and sent her granddaughter after her.

By the time this was accomplished, his sister had found her tongue and exclaimed:

"Who on earth have you here, Ebenezer?"

"Go slow, go slow, Eliza Jane; only some folks I've invited here for a spell!"

"For how long?" continued the wondering lady.

"Wall, that sort o' depends on how long I live or how long they live, Eliza Jane!"

"Will you tell me who they are and what you have done! Mrs. Monie's face was a study as she asked the question.

"Sartin! Sartin! 'Twon't take long to tell the hull story. One day the first of last month, I was over to the postoffice, waitin' for the mail which was late. Me and our minister fell to talkin' 'bout the hard times poor folks was hevin' most everywhere. We hed talked some little spell 'long that line, when he drawed a long breath, and sed he'd jest got a letter from a friend 'o hisen, in a place where he uster preach, tellin' him of a sad case of a family he knowed well. Fust of all the wife took sick and died, leavin' her husban' and little girl of eight years old. Her husban's old grandmother had a home with them. 'Twan't very long arter she died when her husban', John Carter, put his money inter a 'vestment that went under, an' worryin' over that an' other things wore on Carter some considerable. Then the old grandma in tryin' to do the work with the little gal's help fell on the floor and broke her hip. Carter got clean discouraged, couldn't get work, and finally he took sick and died, leavin' the poor old woman and little Clara to go to the poorhouse. They was to be taken there the very next week arter the minister told me on't.

"I came home that night and dreamed a powerful funny dream. I thought that Mary Ann came back and told me to go and git that old lady an' little Clara; anyway to take care on her and not let her go to the poorhouse I didn't stop to think it over much afore I went to see the parson, and when I told him my bizness, I declare he broke right down and couldn't speak at fust. Wall, he give me a letter to give the s'lectmen of the town where they lived, and I started off the very next day arter them. I didn't have any trouble. They was real glad to come and the s'lectmen were glad to hev them. The fun of it was, everbuddy here thought I'd gone to get a wife," concluded Eben with a chuckle.

Drawing himself up to his full height, he turned toward the auto, smiled and said:

"That machine cost a pile of money! You got it for the sake of the enjoyment you could git out of it, I s'pose. Wall, I can git a lot more out of my 'vestment I'm calkerlatin'; and, 'side from a two-seater, and a new harness for old Sorrel, me and Mary Ann allus meant to have when we had 'dopted somebody; we meant to when the chance come 'long. I've not paid out nigh onto fifty dollars yet. It'll cost more of course. Clara takes to me fine, and she is goin' to be eddicated enyhow. Goin' to hev papers fixed day arter tomorrow, so it will be all right if anythin' happens to me. Now, let your man drive your machine into the barn floor, and come in an' stay a week or a month with us, and git 'quainted with my family, won't ye?"

"Ebenezer, you were rightly named, 'A stone of help.' I am proud to call you brother. Yes, I came to have a rest in the old home, and I'll stay for awhile and help you all I can to make your family happy." Holding out both hands to her brother as she alighted from the auto, she raised her face, with eyes full of tears, to receive the caress Ebenezer was only too ready to bestow.

DIED AT BRIDGEWATER.

Rodney McDonald, who was committed to the State Farm at Bridgewater, Thursday, after he became delirious in the Quincy Point hotel, died there Monday. He was a driller at the Fore River shipyard and has a sister in Dorchester whose address is unknown. The police are making an effort to find her.

—It seems to be the custom further South, where the weather is supposed to be warmer than it is here, for young men to assault those who wear straw hats after a certain date, destroy the hat and incidentally maltreat the wearer. There were a number of arrests in New York for this offense and hat smashers have also been arrested in Providence, Washington and other cities. Straw hats are still being peacefully worn in Quincy and do not attract attention even, which is something to our credit, if there are some things we object to people doing.

ST. MARY'S TO HAVE LEAGUE

Committee Appointed for a Six Team Tournament

The first fall meeting of the St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. Society was held in their hall Monday evening with a large attendance. James Cusick of Atlantic, deputy to the society, was present and gave an extensive report of the convention held at Boston Saturday. President Daniel Duggan presided.

The topic of interest was the formation of a bowling league, and after a long discussion it was voted to choose a committee to complete arrangements for a six team tournament. Those appointed were Joseph Morrisette, James Fitzgerald, John Welsh, Joseph Fitzgerald, Roderick Connelly and Bartholomew Flaherty .

The installation of new alleys last fall resulted in an intensely interesting winter sport, and this year's spirit will probably equal that of last year. Many of the members took as naturally to bowling as a duck to water with the result that some of the younger men made surprising scores. This encouraging sign may mean that the St. Mary's will enter a team in a City league if one is organized.

FOUNDRY TEAM WIN.

The Foundry team at the shipyard defeated the Government Draftsmen 4 to 0 in a league match on the Coliseum alleys Monday night, the losers showing the need of Poehler, their anchor man, who did not roll. None of the scores were extraordinary, and as a matter of fact were considerably less than the average of the bowlers. A large crowd of spectators, increased because of poor weather, packed the City Square alleys Monday night and rooted for the bowlers of the Mold Loft league. The pinfall was not heavy, the best total reaching 267 and being credited to Cadman. Byers of the winners had high single, getting 99 in the first string. The score:

GAME CANCELLED.

The second game between the Colonials base ball team and the All Stars will not be played because the season is over as far as local contests are concerned. The first was one of the fastest ever played in the city and resulted in a 6 to 0 score for the Colonials.

BANDITS GET $16,000

Troops Capture One of Supposed Highwaymen In Connecticut

Stonington, Conn., Oct. 7.—Skirmishing through the woods in the northern part of this town last night, United States coast artillerymen captured a man believed to be one of the two masked highwaymen who, with drawn revolvers, held up Carl A. Koelb, paymaster of the American Velvet company, and took from him a satchel containing $16,000 in coin and bills.

The booty was quickly recovered from a hole under a wall into which the bag had been tossed.

Then the pursuit of the two bandits began, first by a posse of townsmen who had taken the trail of the men, and then by 200 soldiers who were in the neighborhood for field exercise.

The prisoner refused to say a word about himself. He acted with surly indifference. He answered in height and build the description given by Koelb of one of his assailants. In a pocket of his coat was a cold chisel.

The second bandit escaped. It is believed he is making his way through the woods to the north.

Koelb collapsed from nervous shock and was attended by physicians.

STICKING TO BECKER

Gunmen Getting Money From Underworld to Aid In His Defense

New York, Oct. 7.—When the police of Philadelphia rounded up as gunmen four New Yorkers and a number of their Philadelphia "pals" there was found in the possession of each of the prisoners subscription lists indicating that an organized movement was on foot by members of the underworld of eastern cities to raise funds for the local defense of former Police Lieutenant Becker, under sentence of death in Sing Sing.

It was also found that subscriptions from denizens of the underworld were being solicited to raise money with which to buy a tombstone to be placed at the head of "Big Jack" Zelig.

In the pocket of each of the prisoners was found two subscription lists. The one for Becker said all subscriptions would be personally acknowledged by his wife.

INDEPENDENCE FOR THE PHILIPPINES

Natives Receive Assurance From President Wilson

Manila, Oct. 7.—Francis B. Harrison, the newly appointed governor general of the Philippines, arrived here on board the steamship Manchuria and was greeted by thousands of persons. He was driven to the Luneta, where he delivered his inaugural address.

The address embodied instructions received from President Wilson stating broadly the administration's policy toward the Philippines. The instructions declared that every step would be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands. Also, it was announced that the first step, to be taken at once, will be to give native citizens the majority in the appointive commission and thus a majority in both houses of the Philippine legislature.

ADMIT MANY ROBBERIES

Three Boston Children Carried Guns Stolen From Pawnshop

Boston, Oct. 7.—Three boys, 9, 10 and 14 years of age, who were arrested in the South End, were armed with revolvers which they had stolen from a pawnshop on Columbus avenue.

To the surprise of the police the eldest boy broke down and confessed that he and his two companions had committed thirty-five burglaries in the South End district during the last few months. The names of the boys were withheld by the police.

The pawnshop on Columbus avenue was entered by the boys through the rear, into the basement. The boys cut out a space of the flooring above, and then crawled up into the store. They took six revolvers and $50 in cash.

They were fined $100 and costs each, appealed and gave bonds.

While in the courtroom a new warrant was served on each of them charging illegal transportation of liquor.

The Spartan was built by Charles W. Morse, the banker, and used by him as a yacht. She is extravagantly fitted inside. Recently she came into the possession of A. L. Wells of Boston, and when she was stolen last Wednesday she was being overhauled and painted off the South Boston Yacht club.

WASTE OF LIFE AND INGENUITY

Osborne Finds Much In Prison System That Needs Reform

IS CRUEL AND INEFFECTIVE

Declared a Form of Slavery, as Prisoners Become Irresponsible Automatons—Driven From Normal Uses of Senses of Sight and Speech—Dungeon For All Offenses

Auburn, N. Y., Oct. 7.—Thomas M. Osborne, chairman of the New York state committee on prison reform, after spending a week in Auburn prison as an inmate for the purpose of studying the prison system from first-hand sources, ended his self-imposed term and has returned to his desk. He praises State Superintendent of Prisons Riley for recent reforms and condemns the present system.

Osborne was pale and tired and showed the marks of his ordeals, but he was enthusiastic over the success of his experiment, which included a taste of every experience that is possible for an inmate to undergo aside from electrocution. He even committed misdeeds of sufficient moment to cause his incarceration in the "dungeon" cells and he lay on his back on the board floor in the prison jail from 3 o'clock Saturday until 6 o'clock Sunday morning, his ration consisting of three gills of water and three slices of bread.

He declared this part of his experience took him into the "lowermost circles of inferno," and he is positive that the fruits of his week's stay in prison will be very valuable to the commission in the work it has before it.

"I am more than ever confirmed in my previous opinion," he said, "that the prison system is singularly unintelligent, ineffective and cruel. In many respects the material welfare of the convicts is well looked after. While it is not advisable for me to attempt to formulate any detailed criticism of the prison system at this time, because I am tired and bewildered as a result of my experiences, there are one or two things that it will be well to mention while they are fresh in mind.

"First, the prison system is a form of slavery. The great truths enunciated by Lincoln and others against slavery are equally applicable to prison slavery. It takes from the convict his own initiative and freedom of action and he becomes an irresponsible automaton, unable to guide his own destiny when he returns to the outside world.

"As one instance of the unintelligence of the system, there is the attempt to drive prisoners from the normal uses of their senses of sight and speech. After seven days of marching and countermarching, I am utterly unable to tell you about the appearance of the men of my company and can only describe the haircuts of about twenty men who marched and sat in front of me.

"Another unintelligent aspect is the way the system inevitably tends toward making punishment for small offenses the same as for great offenses. There is no difference, for instance, between the offense of a man who speaks in the shop and a man who tries to kill his keeper with a crowbar. Both are treated to the dungeon. I obtained from my night in the punishment cell a glimpse into the lowest circles of inferno, and it will be best for me not to try to analyze my impression about it at this time.

"There is a frightful waste of human life and ingenuity; there is such awful waste in the utilization of the principle of reformation. Realizing the considerable number of degenerates and other undesirable citizens included in the ranks of the prisoners, I was amazed at the amount of splendid courage, fine feeling and neighborly interest displayed by the inmates towards each other.

"What a cruelty it is to forbid a man to write more than one letter a month. Think of it! He has been, perhaps, carried away from wife and family. His friends are full of sympathy. He is plunged into this strange and lonesome prison world and then by a refinement of cruelty he is denied the privilege of writing. What is gained by such restrictions? I hope to translate these experiences into something of great value to convicts, to myself and to the people of this state."

Plums to Be Given Out

Washington, Oct. 7.—President Wilson expects to send to the senate this week the nomination of H. M. Pindell of Peoria, Ills., to be ambassador to Russia, and that of Mayor Whitlock of Toledo to be minister to Belgium. There is still a possibility that Wiliam F. McCombs will be nominated for ambassador to France.

Women Must Not Wear Aigrettes

Washington, Oct. 7.—A woman entering the United States wearing an aigrette in her hat violates the new tariff law just as much as a man with a pound of opium in his pocket. That is the unofficial view of officials here.

The Flammerton Record

It Overtopped That of Silas Jones

By MARGARET LEE

"Mr. Jones," said Lord Flammerton, "I have called to ask you to do me the honor to give me in marriage your daughter, Miss Sophia."

Mr. Silas Jones, who was traveling abroad with his family and sojourning at a London hotel, looked as solemn as if his lordship had asked for his daughter to cut off her head. He slowly turned his eyes up at the ceiling, then lowered them to the floor, while his face indicated that he was suffering from a pain in his stomach. Presently, after clearing his throat, he said:

"I assure you, my lord, that I am sensible of the honor you, a peer of the realm of England, do me in asking for the hand of my daughter. But there is a reason why it would be better that you should withdraw your request. While it is true that I can make settlements upon Sophia that would enable her to restore Flammerton castle, she would bring a bar sinister to your family arms. It is not proper that so noble a lineage as yours should be marred by a marriage with one who is not only a commoner, but who has descended from a criminal."

His lordship remained silent.

"Yes, my lord, a criminal," continued the other. "Roger Jones, my great-grandfather, in 1703 was convicted of selling rum to the American Indians, was tarred and feathered, ridden on a rail and hanged to an apple tree."

Mr. Jones groaned not only in spirit, but audibly. Lord Flammerton sat watching him with a curious expression on his face. His lordship did not seem so appalled at receiving this information as might have been supposed. Instead of taking up his hat and bidding Mr. Jones good morning, he sat quietly where he was, fumbling with his watch chain, waiting for the paroxysm to subside; then he said:

"Permit me to commend you, Mr. Jones, for your candid confession. I will be as candid as you. I am aware that you Americans have an idea that our British aristocracy was reared from seed sent down from heaven. We who know the history of our own families from the beginning do not fool ourselves, though we permit others to fool themselves as to our honorable ancestry.

"The earliest of my ancestors mentioned in 'Burke's Peerage' was Hugh Hunker, a sort of Robin Hood without Robin's better traits, for Hugh robbed anybody, whether a bishop, a miser or a poor peasant. However, he was not considered very bad until he entered a house where a corpse was lying surrounded by burning candles and stole them for the tallow there was in them to grease his boots.

"Nevertheless Hugh Hunker was a good deal of a swell for those times and is recorded as being quite a lady killer. At any rate, he had a son and a grandson, who at a later period, when England had become more civilized, were prominent at court. One of the family is supposed to have been the man whom the Duke of Gloster employed to murder the young princes in the Tower. I have, however, looked into the matter and have concluded that he was merely an assistant at the murder."

The earl paused in the recital, and Mr. Jones gave vent to an expression of disappointment.

"The Hunkers," the former presently continued, "became noble in the time of Henry VIII. I have unearthed a bit of secret history from the records stored in the Tower of London which reveals the fact that when King Henry VIII. beheaded Catharine Howard the state executioner had just died, and no one could be found to do the job until Henry offered Andrew Hunker a baronetcy if he would wield the ax over the unfortunate queen. Hunker consented and was made Baron Worrington. Then when Henry made a wholesale confiscation of the church property he created the baron a sort of sheriff to eject the clergy and seize their belongings. The commission that my noble ancestor received for this amounted to a large fortune and enabled him to take higher rank, which was conferred upon him in the title I bear.

"I have been some time getting to the story of my immediate progenitors, but a candid statement of the case has rendered necessary the details I have given.

"Andrew Hunker made ducks and drakes with his fortune, and his grandson, Andrew, earl of Flammerton, was forced to take to the road to get a living. Don't understand that there was an especial taste in the family for robbery. The calling was at that time one that invited the more adventurous young men. The earl was one day riding alone near the estates of a country gentleman named Forbes when he met a young lady, Elizabeth Forbes, who was out hunting with her falcon. This young robber, who was more on the Robin Hood order, became at once enamored of the young lady, but unfortunately for the success of his suit he had recently plundered her home, and her father had sworn to bring him to the gallows.

"On the occasion of this first meeting between the highwayman earl and Elizabeth Forbes he took a gold chain from about her neck, saying at the same time:

"'Tell your father, who has sworn to hang me, that I will return this chain to you in his own home.'

"With that he bent low before the lady, took the tips of her fingers in his and kissed her hand. Now, this young fellow was a handsome rascal, and no calling was more popular with the ladies of that day than the profession of highwayman. Mistress Forbes straightway fell in love with the man who had robbed her and trembled at his boast that he would return her chain to her under her father's nose. Being discreet, she returned to her home and said nothing about the meeting.

"On the coming of age of Robert Forbes, Elizabeth's brother, the old gentleman gave a ball, the guests to be dressed in fantastic costumes. There was a man present who had adopted the garb of a headsman. There is no dress better fitted to show off a handsome figure than that of this official of that period. The man, instead of carrying a wooden ax, held in his hands a veritable steel weapon such as was used in lopping off human heads.

"The moment Elizabeth Forbes saw this person she recognized in his figure—his face was masked—the robber earl. He advanced toward her and, throwing a gold chain about her neck, asked her to dance. She accepted the invitation, trembling for him, for, though he was armed with an ax, many of the men guests present wore swords or were provided with other weapons suited to the characters they represented.

"The presence of this fantastic personage was noted by the guests, and it was not long before the host's attention was called to him. The robber perceived that he would soon be obliged to give an account of himself and in a few quick sentences begged Elizabeth to fly with him. She consented on condition that he would go at once, thinking to get him out of danger, and when they saw her father advancing to ask who this unknown guest might be she slipped her arm in his, and the two were passing out when Forbes, followed by others of his guests, pushed after them. The earl turned and, raising his ax, brought it down on the host's head, splitting his skull. Several men who wore swords drew them, and there was a combat, in which the earl put them out of the fight. Then, drawing Elizabeth with him, he disappeared in the darkness.

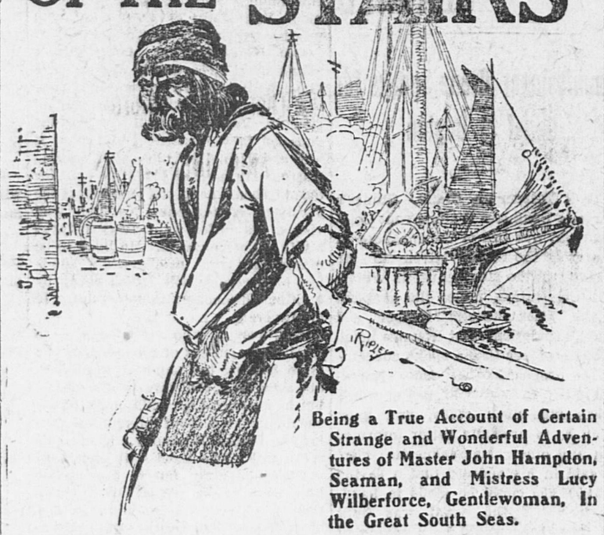
"There is no record of a marriage between Andrew Hunker, the robber earl, and Elizabeth Forbes, but since she was a commoner and he a noble it is quite possible that she did not expect marriage. However, she had a son—my grandfather—who was declared legitimate by King Charles II. and given his father's title and property, the latter consisting of plunder acquired on the road. It is quite possible that the king's favor was gained from the fact that Elizabeth Forbes became one of his favorites, though she is not given in the list by historians.

"You see, my dear Mr. Jones, that beside the record of my ancestors for criminality that of your great-grandfather, who sold rum to the Indians, was tarred and feathered and hanged, sinks into insignificance.

"To return to my proposition. I possess valuable estates, but I need ready cash. Your cash made by the sale of the Acme salve has been more honorably acquired than my estates, which were partly taken from the church and partly from unfortunate travelers, many of whom were doubtless murdered. Nevertheless the two together will enable me and my wife to maintain a high social position, and fortunately I am not judged by the deeds of my ancestors. On the contrary, I live in the glamour of what is supposed to be their greatness."

Mr. Jones' views having been altered by the man who would become his son-in-law, he consented, and the earl and Sophia became engaged. A few months later the London society papers printed a notice of the wedding which occurred in a fashionable church between Andrew Charles Dudley Fortescue Blake Hunter, Baron Warrington, Earl of Flammerton, of Flammerton castle, etc., and Sophia Ann Jones, daughter of a prominent American citizen. There was no mention of how the title had been obtained or of the Acme salve.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

I heard that much and then the duke was upon me. Gritting his teeth and swearing frightful oaths he got to his feet—I had thrown him prone—dragged out his sword and rushed at me.

"You dog!" he cried. "You have balked me before and you interfere now. I have had enough of you and the world has."

He did not intend to give me any chance to defend myself apparently. My little mistress screamed. I heard her call my name and I suppose she thought I was done for, but sailors are proverbially quick witted, footed and handed, and I was not the least alert of seamen. I was wearing a hanger, a heavier weapon than the duke's dress sword, but its weight was a matter of no moment to an arm like mine. I stepped aside as he lunged at me, drew it, and the next moment our blades clashed in earnest.

Now, I am a good fighter and no mean fencer. I can cross blades with any one on earth. My swift play must have looked to the duke as if I were surrounded by a wall of steel. Therefore he realized at once that his only chance lay in the energy and rapidity of his fence. Lunge succeeded lunge with lightning-like speed. I will admit that I was hard put to it for a time. It was with the greatest difficulty that I parried, but my lord was not built for the continuance of such violent exercise. Sweat came into his eyes, his thrusts grew less swift, if not less vicious, in their intent. After a few moments I saw that I had him. It was now my turn to attack. Something of the fury of my Saxon ancestors suddenly filled my veins. I beat down his defense by a series of terrific blows and finally shivered his sword. He stood before me panting, weaponless, yet, to give him his due, more or less undaunted. I raised my own blade.

"Would you strike a defenseless man?" he cried haughtily, still not blanching.

"You had no scruple in attacking a defenseless woman," I replied. "Nay," I thundered as he made a sudden motion, "stand where you are. What I shall do to you depends upon what I hear. If you move I swear to you that I will beat you down like the dog that you are."

I was amazed afterward at my temerity in thus addressing a duke, but you will understand my feelings. Without taking my eyes off of him I next addressed myself to my lady.

"Will you tell me now, Mistress Lucy," said I softly, "what this man purposed or said? I can see what he tried to do, but what was his meaning and intent?"

"He—he—wanted—me to go with him," faltered my lady.

"He renewed his offer of marriage?" I asked, with a sudden sinking of heart.

"No," whispered the girl.

"My God!" I cried. "Did you dare to"—

"Why should I marry a penniless baggage?" he sneered.

"I shall insure that you will remember." I said quietly, although I was blazing inside. "all the days of your life what you tried to do—the insult that you put upon this lady."

"Would you kill me?" he cried, as I stepped nearer to him.

"No," said I, "that would be too quick and easy an end to your punishment. I will put my mark upon you, her brand as a coward. Everybody who sees you will ask you about it, and you can explain it as you will. Two persons at least will know what the mark signifies, my lady and myself."

He stared at me absolutely uncomprehending, but before he could make a move I caught him around the breast, pinioned both his arms to his side and then I deliberately shortened my sword, holding it by the blade, and cut two long, deep gashes in his left cheek. He struggled and shrieked horribly as I did so, and my lady screamed as well, but I held him close, until I finished.

"Now," said I to Mistress Lucy, "before I release him, one more question. Did—did he kiss you?"

"No," answered Mistress Lucy faintly.

"Good!" I continued grimly. "Had he done so I would have marked the other cheek.

He was a handsome man, but those two scars roughly crisscrossed would never be eradicated, for I had cut deep with deliberate purpose. After that I released him, and he staggered away spitting blood, his cheek bleeding, a horrible looking object.

"That will be a lesson to your grace," said I, "not to insult an honest woman. I have no doubt there are many who would rejoice to see you now."

"I will have the law on you. I will have your life," he sputtered out.

"You can have anything you want," said I recklessly. "I am your master with the sword and with everything else. Now go!"

I Hold Him Close Until I Finished.

He turned and staggered away and that was the last I saw of him. I heard later that he had the devil's own time explaining those marks. He proclaimed that they had been inflicted by a madman, which was nearly the truth, but in some way the story leaked out, and I should judge that my vengeance for the insult to my lady was as adequate as anything could be.

"I am come to take you to the ship," I said to her. "We must get there tonight to sail with the beginning of the ebb tomorrow morning."

"I am ready," she said, putting her hand upon my arm.

We went into the house and from there to the coach, with her maid and her baggage, after making her farewell to her kind hostess. In the evening we got aboard the ship, where I saw her safely bestowed in the comfortable cabin I had arranged for her and for her woman. When day broke and she came on deck we were under way for the Island of the Stairs. The great adventure had begun.

* * * * * * *

I pass over the events of the next six months, but not because they were uninteresting. Oh, no. One could not sail from Plymouth, England, to the south seas, touching at Madeira, the Canaries, Rio and Buenos Aires and rounding the mighty and fearsome Cape Horn, without seeing many things of interest and participating in scenes as dangerous as they were exciting. But I am not writing a book of travels.

We were drawing near to the island we sought, according to the calculations of good Captain Matthews and myself, when something happened.

I had brought it on myself I realized, but that made it no more bearable. Indeed, I was mad, mad all through; outraged in dignity, humiliated in self respect, and were it not foolish to speak so of a man of my years and sturdiness I should say I was broken in heart.

My mistress had been so kind to me that I had dwelt in a fool's paradise. I awoke to realize that she had not forgotten the difference between our stations. I had forgotten it in these long months at sea. By heavens, the sight of her was enough to make a man forget anything if he loved her as I!

There! The secret is out, but I make no doubt you guessed it long before. But she had not. There was no mirror in the cabin, but I could well guess that the sight of me was not sufficiently prepossessing to make any woman forget. Yet she had been so kind. I was her only confidant or companion in the ship. I had forgotten. I had endeavored to leap the gap. I had fondly hoped that the one thing in me that was truly great—my passion for her—would land me safely by her side. I did not see how she could fail to comprehend it, though I did try to disguise it.

Well, that love of mine, it had not brought her nearer. On the contrary, it had put me under lock and key. And here I was, shut up like a criminal in my own cabin in her ship, or mine, for that matter. Come to think of it, that moment I believe love had completely disappeared. I could recall—and can to this day, for that matter—the fierce, burning rush of color to her cheek where I had kissed it; the fire of rage and surprise mingled which sparkled in her eyes. The Duke of Arcester I had marked for life for less than this, I recalled in shame. I hardly recollected the fierce blow of her hand upon my face. That was nothing. But I was undone. All the patient devotion of years, all the restraint of the long voyage, had come to naught.

Josephine Gustafson petitioned for the apportionment of her sidewalk assessment. Later in the evening on motion of Councilman Bryant the assessment was apportioned.

LICENSES.

Several applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the Committee on Licenses.

The Committe on Licenses reported a number of orders granting minor licenses which were adopted: Later the order transferring the Sunday fruit licenses of A. Tararita to F. Sangito & Co. was reconsidered. A motion to lay on the table was lost on a rising vote.

Councilmen Bryant, Richards and others opposed the transferring of a license from one party to another and after some little discussion the order was rejected.

JUNK ORDINANCE.

The Committee on Ordinances reported a substitute order for the order amending Ordinance 62 fixing a penalty for violation of junk ordinance. The substitute order provided that no person should store junk in the City of Quincy without first obtaining a license from the City Council, this order however, not to effect persons granted a license to drive wagons for the collection of junk or persons licenses to run a junk shop. The fee for the license to be $10 and the penalty for violation to be $20.

The object of the ordinance is to prevent persons who hold junk licenses in adjoining towns from bringing their junk into Quincy and storing it here. The substitute order was accepted. A motion of Councilman Sandberg to lay on the table was lost and the order was ordered to a second reading .

BUILDING ORDINANCE.

The Committee on Ordinances reported ought to pass on the order amending the building ordinance relative to three tenement houses. Report acepted, rules suspended, and order passed.

The acceptance of this act permits the City Council to establish a building line on streets. That is, the City Council may after a hearing establish a building line on streets which at some future time may be widened. For instance under this act the Council can establish a new line of Washington street, and no building hereafter could be built outside of this line, although the Council might not actually widen the street for several years. In this way when the Council decides to widen the street the city would not have to pay for any new buildings that might have to be moved back from the new street line.

OLD TIGER HOUSE GONE

Years Ago Was Moved from School to Hancock Street

The march of progress has removed another old building of a somewhat historic nature about which volumes might be written. The building in question was one of those situated on the easterly side of Hancock street which has just been razed to make room for the new block which Henry L. Kincaide is to build.

This old engine was purchased in 1844 and for many years was located in the building near the corner of School and Franklin streets. When Quincy became more modernized and horse drawn apparatus began to replace hand drawn tubs, as they were called, the old Tiger was sold. The building remained vacant for a time, and then it was moved to the lot on Hancock street where it has been located for a number of years, the lower or street floor used for store purposes. Now the building has gone, for the march of progress decreed that it should be torn down.

It is not without a sigh of regret, however that many who were affiliated with the old engine company in its palmy days or who while not an active member of the tub always rooted for it whenever its powers were put to test with one of the other tubs.

It was great sport in those old days after a fire to see the old hand tubs form in a line to fill the reservoirs that had been lowered by water used in extinguishing fires. This was done by stationing one engine at some brook which pumped water through a hose into another engine several hundred feet away which in turn forced the water to a third engine and so on until the last in the row threw the water into the reservior. These engines were the Niagara, Tiger, Granite and Vulture.

The trick was for one company to give another company water faster than the company beyond could take care of it, and "wash her." As there was always great rivalry between the several companies, these contests were always keen ones, and formed the subject for discussion for several days. Then when it was all over the tub returned back to quarters where the company and such small boys as were able to get by the man on duty at the door, regaled themselves with hot coffee, crackers, cheese and strips of cod fish.

Many are the wonderous times that took place in the old Tiger house when it was the home of the active company, and if the old boards could talk, many a strange story they would tell. Now however like the old Tiger itself the building has passed into history.

NEW MACHINE.

The new planing and polishing machine recently perfected by Ercole Cavicchi, the South Quincy inventor, is being given its first real test on the dance floor of Hibernian hall. The machine is a simple one and experts say it surpasses anything perfected to date. A series of sand paper strips revolve around a large wheel and do the planing, and a wheel, similar in principle to the granite polishing equipment is directly applied. The success of the machine was demonstrated from the start and many have seen it at work.

MOORHEAD—NELSON.

Miss Hilmer Dalha Nelson of 153 Whitwell street, and George Kerr Moorhead of 28 Curtis street, were married by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, pastor of the Bethany Congregational Church, at his home on Monday evening. The ceremony was a quiet one and witnessed only by the immediate relatives and friends. The couple left shortly afterward on a wedding trip Mrs. Alice Andrews of 29 Euclid avenue, a sister of the bride, was her attendant, and James Moorhead, a brother of the groom, was the best man. The bride is one of the best known young ladies in the Cranch Hill district and the groom conducts a retail milk business. They will be at home to their friends at 29 Euclid avenue after Nov. 15.

BIG SAVING CLAIMED

Commissioner Crane Speaks for Canal to Boston

Frank Fessenden Crane, Quincy's energetic Dock and Water Front Commissioner, was one of the speakers an Monday at the dinner given to the delegates to the Massachusetts Waterways Convention, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Harbor and Land Commissioners at Young's hotel.

Commissioner Crane spoke concerning the proposed canal from Narraganset bay to Boston harbor of which he has made much study, and upon which he is probably better informed than any other Massachusetts men. He said in his address that a saving of $1,000,000 could be made in handling freight if the canal was built and that there would be a saving of $400,000 in marine insurance, as well as a saving in loss of life that annually occurs by sailing around Cape Cod.

He felt that the girl of today who earned money for clothes and amusement and was obliged to fall back on the parents for actual support should be so situated that she could earn a sufficient amount to entitle her to all the commodities, and that the girl whose condition required that she earn her clothes, and amusement money should be on an equal basis with the girl aforementioned.

Mr. Gardner was given generous applause when he finished, and before leaving held a reception beside his automobile at which many voters were presented, some of them oldtime friends from Essex county.

SUDDEN DEATH.

A death supposed to have been infantile paralysis took place at Atlantic early this morning when the 5 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Thomas of 42 Hunt street passed away. The child attended Sunday school at the Atlantic Methodist church on Sunday, and was apparently as well as usual. Monday morning she was taken ill and several physicians were in consultation that afternoon, but all to no avail for the little girl passed away early this morning. The family have not resided in Quincy long coming here from Revere.

Satisfying a Customer Carried to an Extreme

By HOLLAND.

A WOMAN who bought a dress which she found was not just what she wanted went with it to one of the biggest stores in the world and said it did not suit her. She wanted her money back, but explained that she had lost the sales slip. The sum she claimed was given to her.

Two days later she found the sales slip and discovered that she had not bought the dress at the store to which she had taken it, but had bought it at a rival establishment. She went to the store and explained.

"We knew you had not bought the dress here," explained the manager, "but you were palpably dissatisfied with it, and our aim is to satisfy all our customers. If we have impressed on your mind the fact that we are more than fair we are satisfied. We covet nothing more than such a reputation as we are sure you will give us."

Many will think that this was carrying fairness too far. Perhaps it was, but it was done by the greatest retail merchant of this age, one whose name is known wherever the English language is spoken and whose expenditures for advertising run up to a million dollars a year.

Successful advertisers know that satisfied customers are an invaluable asset. You have an advantage in dealing with the liberal advertisers.

Beef prices are climbing and the working man must economize by eating terrapin.

FATHER GREAT PIPE.

Eccentric Will of the Famous Dutch Smoker, Von Klaes.

In "Holland of the Dutch" Demetrius Boulger tells the story of the famous Van Klaes of Rotterdam, who was known as "Father Great Pipe."

Van Klaes smoked about half a pound of tobacco a day and to save himself trouble used an enormous pipe, hence his nickname. He built a mansion in Rotterdam, with a fortune amassed in the Indies, and turned it into a museum for pipes and antique instruments used by primitive man for burning hemp or weeds long before the discovery of tobacco. No man who visited his curios went away without a gift of choice cigars. He lived to be ninety-eight and made, while smoking, an eccentric will, which began by inviting all smokers in the country to his funeral.

Each person who attended was to receive ten pounds of tobacco and two pipes bearing the name of the donor, his arms and the date of his death, but he imposed the condition that they should smoke without interruption during the funeral ceremony. Finally his coffin was to be lined with the wood of his old cigar boxes, and beside him were to be placed his favorite pipe, a supply of tobacco and a box of matches, for, as the will sententiously sets forth, no one knows what may happen.

WHISTLER'S ODD WAYS.

A Portrait That Was Slashed as Soon as It Was Painted.

Lord Redesdale once gave a description of Whistler's methods to a meeting in London in support of a memorial to the great artist. The eccentric master was painting, he said, a portrait of a lady.

Whistler took up his position at one end of the room with his sitter and the canvas at the other end. For a long time he stood looking at his model, holding in his hand a huge brush full of color, such a brush as a man would use to whitewash a house. Then he rushed forward and smashed the brush full of color into the canvas. Then he ran back, and forty or fifty times he repeated this. At the end of that time there stood out on the canvas a space which exactly indicated the figure, the form and the expression of the sitter.

There was a pathetic story attached to the picture. The bailiffs were in the house when the picture was finished. That was quite a common occurrence, and Whistler only laughed, but he went around his studio with a knife and deliberately destroyed all his canvases, including this picture, which was to have been his (Lord Redesdale's).—Dundee Advertiser.

Banquets In Elizabeth's Time.

In Queen Elizabeth's time the first course of a banquet is given as wheaten flummery, stewed broth or spinach broth, or smallage, gruel or hotch pot. The second consisted of fish, among which are lampreys, poor John, stockfish and sturgeon, with side dishes of porpoise. The third course comprised quaker puddings, black puddings, bag puddings, white puddings and marrow puddings. Then came veal, beef, capons, humble pie, mutton, marrow pasties, Scotch collops, wild fowl and game. In the fifth course all kinds of sweets, creams in all their varieties, custards, cheese cakes, jellies, warden pies, suckets, sillibubs and so on, to be followed perhaps by white cheese and tansy cake; for drinks, ale, beer, wine, sack and numerous varieties of mead or metheglin.

Her Only Thought.

The late Duke of Sutherland, who was the largest landowner in Europe, had at Dunrobin castle a small private railway line and often amused himself by driving the engine.

There is a little story that illustrates the reverence in which his highland tenants held the duke.

He was driving his little train one afternoon when he ran down an old woman. She was not seriously hurt—the amateur engineer never went very fast—and after ten or fifteen minutes she came to.

Her first words were these:

"Is the duke very angry?"

Answered.

"Do you dance on your toes, Miss Quickwit?"

"Never, Mr. Clumsey. Other people do that for me."

Dancing Closes Program

A very pretty party indeed was the concert and dance given under the auspices of the Educational Committee of the Quincy Women's Club at Alpha hall Tuesday evening and the many who attended had an enjoyable evening. It was perhaps the first social event of importance of the season and it called out many of the society people from all sections of the city.

Theconcert which preceded the dance was of unusually high order, and those who contributed graciously responded to the hearty encores. The program opened with a selection by Dickenson's orchestra. Others contributing were Zabelle Panosian soprano soloist of the Boston Opera Company who was down for two numbers, her first being from the opera Mignon and her second Proff. Kalfaian's Armenian Oror. To each of these numbers she responded with an encore. It is not often that one hears grand opera sung in Quincy by so accomplished a soloist and her numbers were a rare treat.

Miss Marion Lee Johnson violinist was also down for two numbers her first selection being Hubay's "Hejre Kati" and her second one of Schubert's serenades arranged by Mischa Elman. Miss Johnson has an exquisite touch and showed herself to be a master of the violin. She also responded to encores

The other contributor was Mrs. A. Isabelle Davis who is almost too well known in Quincy audiences to need any additional words of praise. Mrs. Davis gave two of Lawrence Dunbar's selections "The old apple tree" and "Angelina." Mrs. Davis received a very warm welcome when she made her appearance on the stage showing that the audience held a warm place in their hearts for her.

The two accompanists who added greatly to the program were Miss Seviahe Meloon and Miss Margaret Carruthers.

The program closed with another selection by the orchestra.

Dancing followed the concert program. The matrons, who occupied a cosy corner at the right of the platform being Mrs. Jethro R. Mellen, chairman of the Educational Committee, Mrs. George W. Abele, Mrs. Walter E. Burke and Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann.

Mrs. Mellen wore a handsome blue messaline with front piece of beaded lace. Mrs. Abele a white Charmeuse with a garniture of lace, Mrs. Burke a rainbow crepe de chine with front beaded panel and Mrs. Pfaffmann an old rose underdress, with blue embroidered overdress, with point lace fichu.

Near the matrons was little Miss Isabel Crane with a basket of dance programs. It was a rather trying position for the little miss but she was equal to the occasion.

High Tax Rates Go with Big Debts

Reduction in a Few Cities

Although Quincy is 20th in population, and 19th in valuation, among the cities of Massachusetts, it is 14th in amount of debt, 5th in percentage of indebtedness to valuation, and has the highest tax rate.

In comparing the city debts, City Treasurer Tifft of Springfield deducts the "water debt and other income debts," which leaves the "net funded debt" of Quincy on July 1, 1913, as $1,532,906.

In the summary below, the cities are given in the order of their net debt in 1913, the largest first. The only city with less population than Quincy which has a larger debt is Chelsea. The following cities which are larger in population have a smaller debt, viz: Malden, Salem, Haverhill, Fitchburg, Holyoke and Everett.

Again Chelsea is the only city with less valuation which has a larger debt than Quincy. The following cities with a larger valuation have a smaller debt, viz: Beverly, Malden, Salem, Haverhill, Holyoke and Pittsfield.

In 1895 Quincy was 24th in Massachusetts in net debt, with a total of only $302,520.

Since 1895 three cities,—Waltham, Marlboro and Northampton—have decreased their indebtedness, but most of the cities have a much larger debt.

Nineteen of the cities have doubled their indebtedness. Among these Springfield's jump is the most marked, being 12 to 13 times larger, but now her percentage of indebtedness to valuation is low. New Bedford's debt is nearly six times larger, and Quincy's debt is over five times larger, while Fall River, Lawrence and Pittsfield are four times larger, and North Adams and Taunton three times larger.

Probably Quincy would not make as good a showing in the list if the water debt was included, for Quincy has a water debt of $684,000.

Here are City Treasurer Tifft's figures of city debts for July 1, 1913, and July 1, 1895, which afford an opportunity for study:

CITY POLITICS QUIET

Democratic Papers Taken Out Today

Johnson Has No Rival

There is nothing new in the municipal political line today, although something is likely to break at any time. There is still but one avowed candidate for Mayor, and that is Charles H. Johnson. There have been rumors that Representative Leslie might become a candidate but nothing has developed as yet. Rumor has it that a meeting was held in Ward One Monday night to look over the Mayoralty field, but as far as known they did not accomplish anything. The time is getting short now, so something is likely to drop at any minute. Why not make it unanimous for Johnson?

Among the Democrats, things remain about the same. No one has taken out Democratic nomination papers for Mayor, but that the party will have a candidate is assured.

It is quite well known that pressure is being brought upon James H. Penniman who was the party standard bearer last year to be a candidate this year, but up to the present time Mr. Penniman has declined to enter the political arena this year. It is understood that he is being earnestly urged to become a candidate and that he is to give the committee his final answer within a day or two.

Although he has not as yet taken out nomination papers Councilman Griffin will probably be a candidate for re-election as Councilman from Ward Two this year.

In Ward Four ex-Councilman Peter T. Fallon is being urged by many of his friends to become a candidate this year. Ward Four is well recognized as a strong Democratic ward and there is but little doubt that Mr. Fallon runs on the democratic ticket he would be nominated and elected.

Up to noon today no additional nomination papers of any kind had been taken out.

Latest—This noon Michael Guess took out five Democratic nomination papers for Mayor. He did not state who they were for.

GREAT GOOD ACCOMPLISHED

R. F. Claflin Endorses Work of Associated Charities

Editor Daily Ledger:

I am deeply concerned at the apparent apathy in Quincy concerning the work of the Associated Charities. I think it proceeds largely from a misapprehension of the work accomplished.

In the past year the secretary has called upon 1775 families; she has investigated 259 cases, and has written 1128 letters. That is a small part of the work accomplished by the Association through its secretary.

It would seem to me that if the citizens generally recognized what has been done in the past year to improve the condition of the needy, and the work that has been accomplished in eliminating the unworthy from the aid furnished by the benevolent societies of our city, there would be a very general disposition to sustain the Association.

The purpose of the writer is not to solicit in any way funds that cannot be spared by the citizens of Quincy, but simply to ask that the citizens will wake up to some sort of an appreciation of the splendid work that has been accomplished. The average individual, when solicited for funds, rarely has time enough to properly investigate and determine whether in any specific instance the would-be recipient is entitled to his help, and whether or not he is doing good or evil in parting with his money.

As it now stands in Quincy, any citizen who is asked for a contribution from an apparently needy individual can and should refer such an applicant to the secretary of the Associated Charities, who will make an investigation of a sympathetic character and if it is found worthy of support, will call upon the benevolent orders of our city for aid, which will be forthcoming. Indiscriminate charity is unquestionably a positive evil, tending to break down independence and self-respect.

Let me assure the citizens of Quincy that I believe as this work is being conducted through the Associated Charities a great good accomplished.

The secretary is to be found in her office at 148 Goffe street, Quincy, in one of the rooms of the Women's Clubhouse, between 11 A. M. and 1 P. M. daily, excepting Sundays. Any caller will be gladly welcomed who sees fit to visit the secretary, and such statements as he or she may make will find a very earnest, cordial spirit of co-operation and efficient help.

FORTY-FIVE TOURNAMENT.

QUINCY HIGH VICTORY

But It Should Have Been More Decisive

Defeat Arlington 6 to O

Arlington High school opened its season on the Merrymount oval Tuesday afternoon and were defeated 6 to 0 by Quincy High school, although the local victory should have been more decisive. The oponents trooped onto the field as green as the grass on the oval, as far as developed football tactics go, but Quincy, outside of the brilliant work of Paul Larkin, has but little to boast of.

Of course the rainy season has sadly interferred with real practice and the men who had reached top notch condition seemed to have slumped, and the time outs were so frequent that the fans remarked that Quincy needed to commence training all over. The dousing of mud made the players look like subway excavators and the slippery surface spoiled several good plays because of the poor starts.

The game demonstrated that Quincy is sadly in need of a quarterback, not that Paige does not meet the requirements, but excitement to him is intoxicating, and he overlooks fine opportunities. In fact he worked Paul Larkin to death, passing him the ball every other rush and although Paul came across with a beautiful showing of ground gaining his workout Tuesday was more than was good for him and may slow him up a great deal.

In the first period Arlington carried Quincy away with whirlwind action, and in the second the local boys awakened and play was confined between the 30 yard lines. Quincy suffered from 55 yards of penalizing and two fumbles resulted in the loss of the ball at important moments.

As the beef packers are buying meat only one and one half cents a pound less than last year, it is believed that prices to the consumer must be higher.

There is a widespread feeling that prosperity will be restored and all national problems solved if the world's series of ball games comes out right.

While the baseball season is almost over, the make-up of next year's teams now claims the first attention of the thinkers of the nation.

The Vassar girls have to sleep on hair mattresses. They can probably stand it unless they are required to make their own beds.

COLLEGE HAZING.

Formerly the college freshman said good-by to mamma with tearful premonitions of battle. Visions of midnight baths under the cold town pump were seen by female relatives.

If of a shrinking and timorous disposition, he "sported his oak," following the old English phrase for barring his door. A good stout bolt was a necessary armament. This spirit of reserve only tempted the militant sophomore to tease him the more. Freshman of greater confidence argued that if you look a wild beast in the eye he lets you alone. They trusted to social graces "to win their way without friction," and usually succeeded.

In justification of hazing it was commonly said that only the fresher and more "smarty" youths were attacked, and that those received a needed training in humility of spirit. Undoubtedly many supercilious young sprouts did receive some highly profitable lesons.

One trouble with hazing was that physical penalties were commonly resorted to. A college sophomore is not an expert in physical culture. While cold bathing is beneficial, a ducking in the college pond on a cool autumn night is not necessarily wholesome to all types of physical development.

One one side there was the advantage of a year of physical growth and muscular training. The sophomores were well organized, banded together under known leaders. If the freshmen attempted to do battle for God and native land, the chances were two to one against them.

Thus the custom violated the principle of fair play and is steadily dying out. Modern fraternity initiations take its place to some extent. As their aim is mostly to put a fellow in absurd positions rather than subject him to physical hurts, this is pretty much harmless.

ELKS SERVICE.

The funeral of Eugene N. Tessier, one of the best known French residents of the city, who died suddenly on Sunday, took place this morning from his home, 1272 Sea street. Services were held at St. John's Church by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan. The acting pall bearers were Arthur J., Eugene P. and Alfred N. LaBrecque, nephews of the deceased and Olaf Blomquist, a long time friend. A delegation from the Boston Lodge of Elks of which the deceased was a charter and life long member, headed by Exalted Ruler McCarthy, acted as honorary bearers. The floral tributes were many, among them being offerings from the Boston Lodge of Elks, Boston council, Royal Arcanum, Quincy Yacht Club, and the present management of the Castle Square hotel of which Mr. Tessier was a former proprietor. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery where the Elks committment service was read by Exalted Ruler McCarthy.

NEW SQUANTUM VOTERS.

The registrars of voters held a busy session Tuesday night at Atlantic, when they added 85 names to the voting list in just 87 minutes, which was nearly one every minute. A greater part of the new registration came from the Squantum district showing that the voters of this section propose to have something to say at the coming municipal caucuses and election.

FELKER GRANTS JEROME DELAY

Thaw Extradition Decision Deferred Until Oct. 20

PROBE IN NEW YORK COUNTY

Said to Have Yielded Important Developments—Thaw's Counsel Also Granted Delay, Thus Preventing Decisive Move In Granite State Before First of Next Month

Concord, N. H., Oct. 8.—It was announced by Governor Felker that he would not make his decision on Harry K. Thaw's extradition case before Oct. 20.

Bernard L. Jacobs, New Hampshire representative of William T. Jerome, informed the governor that it would be impossible for Jerome to complete his investigation in New York county before next week.

Counsel for Thaw have asked and have been granted a week after Jerome's case is in, for meeting any new points that may be developed. It is practically certain, therefore, that there will be no decisive move in the Thaw case so far as New Hampshire is concerned before Nov. 1.

Important developments in New York county are said to have made it impossible for Jerome to complete his case before the grand jury this week, as he had planned. Just what the developments are that necessitated the delay until next week the governor did not know.

Attorney Shurtleff, for Thaw, and Attorney Jacobs, for Jerome, conferred with Felker last night, and as a result the chief executive agreed to delay his decision until on or after a week from Monday.

The Thaw counsel did not want to have the decision made next week, as William A. Stone, of the defendant's counsel, is to be out of the state. It is thought here that it will be at least between two and three weeks before the governor will make known his disposition of the case.

Thaw and his lawyers do not appear to be worried much over the activities of Jerome to have the fugitive from Matteawan indicted in New York county.

It is known that Jerome had planned to complete his case in New York before the end of this week. When the governor was requested yesterday to hold off until next week, it became evident that Jerome was busy with some new developments that necessitated more of a delay than he had anticipated.

Mrs. Mary C. Thaw, the prisoner's mother, arrived from Pennsylvania last evening.

Boston, Oct. 8.—Symphony hall was transformed last night, and from 8 o'clock in the evening until 2 o'clock this morning hundreds of beautifully gowned women and men in evening clothes danced and dined there amidst great overhanging bowers of green.

The occasion was the ball given to the delegates and guests in attendance at the convention of the American Bankers' association by the Associated Banks and Trust companies of Boston. It was one of the most elaborate functions in the history of the city.

Fully 5000 persons attended, while hundreds outside tried to catch a glimpse of the festivities within.

HUTCHINS IS DEAD

Second of Laconia Football Team to Die From Infantile Paralysis

Laconia, N. H., Oct. 8.—Lewis M. Hutchins, 17, died at his home late last night of infantile paralysis, being the second member of the Laconia high school football team to die of the disease. The first was Morton W. Burnham, who died Monday.

The school has been closed until further notice, and the health officers have fumigated the building.

At a game played last Wednesday an agate iron pail and a sponge were used, and when the players wanted water the sponge was placed in their mouths and the infection may have come in this way.

AIRSHIP HITS SPECTATORS

Kills One and Seriously Injures Another When It Gets Beyond Control

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Miss Ruth Hildreth, daughter of W. E. Hildreth of New York, aged 20, was killed, and her sister, Dorothy Hildreth, 18, was perhaps fatally injured in Hammondsport when Lincoln Beachey lost control of a 100-horsepower aeroplane, and it swept the roof of a small building used as headquarters by naval aviators, from which they were watching the exhibition.

Ruth Hildreth fell upon an automobile and her skull was fractured. Among those slightly hurt were Lieutenants Richardson and Bellinger of the United States navy aviation corps, and Beachey.

Dorothy Hildreth has a broken arm and leg, and may have internal injuries. Her condition is said to be critical. Bellinger and Richardson escaped with cuts and bruises that are not serious. Beachey sprained an arm and ankle. His machine was wrecked.

STORM ABATES AT NOME

Five Hundred People Homeless and Much Suffering Likely

Nome, Alaska, Oct. 8.—The storm that devastated Nome is abating. Three unidentified bodies have been washed ashore. Five hundred persons are homeless, and help from outside will be necessary.

The storm that began beating in from Behring sea was the worst ever known here. Men and women worked in the icy water to save their household effects. The electric light plant was wrecked and telephone service cut off. The loss is estimated at a million and a half dollars.

There will be much suffering, for it will be impossible to get in needed supplies. All the small boats on the beach were destroyed. Fire attacked the Pacific cold storage plant where was stored the chief supply of meat for the winter, and the fire apparatus was destroyed in the gale.

O'Shaughnessy Makes Report to Lind at Vera Cruz

Vera Cruz, Oct. 8.—A report on affairs at the capital brought by Nelson O'Shaughnessy, charge of affairs at the American embassy in Mexico City, was laid before John Lind, the personal representative of President Wilson, in an overnight conference.

It is said he brought no roseate picture of conditions at the capital, but reported assurances from the national palace that fair elections would be held and early pacification of the country accomplished. O'Shaughnessy returned directly to the capital.

Lind will remain in Vera Cruz. Unless invited by the Mexican government or instructed by President Wilson, he will have no direct communication with the Mexican administration.

GET CONCESSIONS

Employes of Slater Mills, on Strike Two Weeks, Will Return to Work

Webster, Mass., Oct. 8.—The management of S. Slater & Sons, Inc., granted concessions last night to the 400 operatives who have been on strike in their woolen mills for two weeks, and representatives of the state board of conciliation and arbitration said the strike would be settled today.

Exactly what the concessions are, the state board representatives would not say. It was learned that the mill officials are willing to give trial until Jan. 1 to the strikers' demands for fifty-eight instead of sixty hours a week, without reduction in the wages of those paid by the week, and that other conditions of work will be changed, particularly the joint operation of woolen and worsted looms.

Mysterious Ailment of Czarevitch Continues to Puzzle Doctors

St. Petersburg, Oct. 8.—Mud baths are being tried for the mysterious ailment of the czar's son, who is staying at the imperial castle at Livadia. A thousand wooden cases of mud from the Salt Lake baths, near Odessa, have been ordered shipped there.

It is said the consensus of opinion in medical Russia is that the throne will pass from the present czar to one of the grand dukes.

The czarevitch, according to reports, is so weak his chances of attaining manhood are negligible.

Counsel for Defendants Requested to Cite Decisons

A hearing was held before Judge Avery this morning in the cases of the five Italians who were summoned into court by Inspector Goodhue for unlawfully soliciting sales of liquor in Quincy. The arraignment of the men is the result of a car load of wine which arrived at Quincy Adams some days ago containing 3,780 gallons of wine which was delivered to different parties in Quincy.

It is claimed by Inspector Goodhue that the defendants solicited orders for wine from their countrymen and when orders enough are received for a car load a shipment is made direct from California to Quincy.

The defendants claimed that the Italians had a club with president, treasurer and secretary, and that when they wanted wine the members paid their money to the secretary who forwarded a check to the California firm, and when the wine arrived it was delivered to the several club members.

After hearing the evidence the cases were again continued for a week in order that counsel for the defendants might be able to cite decisions bearing on the matter to the court.

It has been reported that if convicted in the lower court the cases will be taken up to the superior court and even the supreme court if necessary.

APPEAL WAS IN VAIN

Rev. J. E. Lillback Not to Withdraw Resignation

Practically every member of the Finnish Congregational church attended the meeting Tuesday evening held as a protest against Rev. John E. Lillback accepting a call to Brooklyn, N. Y., and although he stated that he would not withdraw his resignation they continued to make personal appeals after the close of the meeting.

The edifice was crowded with parishoners who have labored for the church in the past five years under the direction of Mr. Lillback, and so much has been accomplished during his regime that his associates hope to delay his departure as long as is possible.

Resolutions were submitted to him referring to the regard in which he is held by the congregation, and speeches complimentary to the man himself were made in his presence, but without avail. Alex Kukko was temporary chairman.

Rev. Mr. Lillback submitted his resignation nearly two months ago and its acceptance is pending the choice of a successor.

The Democratic senatorial campaign committee met in the Johnson building Tuesday evening to consider general matters. The purpose is to spread Democracy throughout the district. Fred H. BOSTON WOMEN'S CITY CLUB.

One of the great projects of this year has been the organization of the great women's club in Boston which will enter its new home, the former City club headquarters in the spring of next year. The new club will doubtless have at that time a membership of 3000 or more as the charter members have already made a noble record in gaining the signatures of hundreds of women throughout the city who are interested in the enterprise.

The club will have all the advantages of a social and entertainment centre and there will be library, reading rooms, parlors for the use of the members. A part of the building will be used for a dormitory and the club membership numbers some of the most influential women of the city. The inauguration of the club and its value as an influence tending toward civic welfare is counted as one of the great forces of the day and shows the advance made by women from the small club to a great democratic institution. The names of prospective members are proposed or recommended by two charter members and the committee in charge of the work report unprecedented interest in the request for enrollment. The club will open in May of next year.

WOMEN'S WORK IN FINLAND.

In an account of women's work in Finland, the author, Rheta Child Dorr, recounts in the Metropolitan magazine the fact that a large proportion of the board—school teachers—are married women, and many of them are mothers of families. She adds, to deny a woman teacher the right to marry and bear children as we do in America would be considered grotesquely antediluvian in Finland. They have a curious theory there that mothers make better teachers than maiden ladies; they even claim to have demonstrated that teachers make excellent mothers, and that the children of teachers are of a superior grade of intellect.

"Public opinion sustains the right of women married or unmarried to fill any position their abilities warrant. Women practice law and medicine and they fill important official positions, their formal appointments reading 'notwithstanding sex.'"

ALMOST UNLIMITED FIELD.

Mrs. Robert E. Park of Wollaston, a member of the Quincy Women's club and for two years head of the legislative committee of the club writes as follows in a recent issue of the Boston Sunday Globe in a symposium on "For what business enterprise are women best adapted?"

Chesterton says that "when a woman puts up her fists to a man she is putting herself in the only posture in which he is not afraid of her." But if she goes into business across the street, is he then afraid of her? I do not know; I know, though, that a woman's judgment in buying, and woman's tact in selling are back of many of the big businesses for which men are getting the credit.

Women are born helpers. Perhaps any kind of business that helps to use the peculiar knowledge and power that women have is the kind of business enterprise for which women are best adapted. When women do not try to be men, but take their own talents, raising them to the "nth power," as it were, they get the best results.

There are a long list of occupations where women have "made good" alone, however; for one can easily see that a woman's past experience and hereditary training in the household arts, in the care of the sick, in meeting social problems, and amusements, in determining the question of dress and food, and housing for the family, is bound to help her to a business sense as to what the public needs, and is willing to buy.

Perhaps the best moving picture house in the country is run by a woman, right here in Boston, Mrs. Josephine Clement; and the greatest forum for the free discussion of vital subjects, Ford Hall, is tremendously indebted to the ability of its secretary, Miss Crawford, next to the genius of its founder, George W. Coleman.

Last Spring Austria decided to employ women on the administrative staff of the Army, with a view, if the experiment proved successful, eventually of substituting them for men in the health equipment and provisional departments. Since then Mme. Jane Dieulafoy, the only woman in France who has the privilege of wearing trousers, has asked the Minister of War of France the privilege of being the first woman of her country to participate in the National defense. As a soldier, woman's talents would be in the direction of conserving and directing.

A detective is in business, but is also a kind of soldier of peace, for the public good. Miss Amelia de Santis is an Italian girl of 21 and one of the best store detectives in America. Whether it be man or woman, she marches the light-fingered person to the office of the manager, where the culprit must either make a satisfactory explanation or be turned over to the police.

Another kind of business woman, also a soldier of peace, fighting, this time, dirt and disease, is Mrs. Caroline Bartlett Crane. Fifty-two cities have asked Mrs. Crane to make them what she calls a "sanitary survey," and gladly pay $100 a day for her services. This seems to me the apotheosis of the housekeeper idea. And yet time was when the housekeeper was said to have no business at all. The census reports are still unconvinced, asserting "no occupation" for mothers, while the tired housewife wonders why.

America's only woman judge, Miss Mary Bartelme of Chicago's Court for Delinquent Girls, has made many of us wonder why there are not such judges in every juvenile court, since now it is seen that no man can well do her work. She is the forerunner of others.

A poor young girl, Frances Keller, wrote articles and made investigations which started the North American Civic League for immigrants; this league is exerting a tremendous influence in the fortunes of human beings.

Miss Lathrop, head of the Children's Bureau at Washington, is using as much business sense as a man in saving the race. When I think of how Jane Addams has Chicago under her thumb, I see that it is not necessary to be President or Governor to be efficient and be a power and to show for what business women are best adapted—Clara Cahill Park.

QUINCY DAY NURSERY ASSO.

The annual meeting of the Quincy Day Nursery association was held Tuesday afternoon at the Women's Clubhouse on Presidents hill. The election of officers was postponed until a later date. Among the annual reports that of the secretary is given below in full:

This annual meeting brings to a close another successful year of the Quincy Day Nursery Association.

All the meetings have been held in the Woman's Clubhouse with an average attendance of ten.

Through the efforts of some of the ladies over thirty new members have joined the Association.

Some changes, also, have come during the year, in the resignation of the President, Vice-President from Atlantic, Secretary, Treasurer and also the Matron of the Nursery.

One of our number, a loyal friend and worker, the Vice-President from Wollaston, passed away this winter.

The attendance of children this year has been 3,533 and shows an increase of 1,206, over 2,507 of two years ago.

Some of the things that the Association has done this year for the benefit and convenience of all are as follows:

Provided special cards for acknowledging donations.

Revised the constitution and by-laws.

Taken steps towards incorporating.

The matter of incorporation was first considered in November and was discussed throughout the winter. In March it was voted to incorporate and all needed changes were made in the constitution and by-laws. On May 17th a special meeting was held at the Clubhouse at which the articles of incorporation were signed and on October 20th there will be a hearing on this matter at the State House at which the President, Secretary and Treasurer must be present.

Throughout the year the subject of a new playroom for the Nursery has been discussed but as yet nothing has been decided owing to lack of funds.

The usual parties were held this year. The Christmas party at the Nursery was a decided success. There were 38 children present and many of the mothers. The program consisted of songs and recitations by the children after which came ice cream and cake furnished by friends of the Nursery. Before the children received their gifts, Mrs. Doble, the President, was presented with a beautiful bunch of pinks—the gift of the children. On the tree, were gifts for the children and each one went home happy.

Several dances were given this year for the benefit of the Nursery.

The annual Valentine Dances held on the 8th and 14th of February, one in the afternoon, in charge of Mrs. Charles M. Bryant and her assistants; the other an evening assembly, under the management of Mrs. Wm. H. Doble Mrs. John Johnson, Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann and Mrs. Edward E. Jameson. Three others were given for the young people by Mrs. John Johnson. All were successful both financially and socially.

A "Donation Party" was held, December 11th, under the auspices of Bethany Circle. The Circle kept "open house" and served tea and cakes to the friends of the Nursery who brought gifts of clothing, provisions and money.

This year it was voted to change "Tag Day" to "Flower Day." This day was September 30th. Flowers were sold by young ladies organized in groups. Also, in some parts of the city a house to house canvas was made by some of the ladies. Although the day was stormy the receipts amounted to nearly three hundred dollars.

The visiting committees have reported each month that all was going well at the Nursery. The children are well and happy and the matron kind and much interested in the work.

May the friends of the Nursery continue their kind and generous support.

All members of the association are cordially asked to attend the meeting.

WOLLASTON WOMEN'S CLUB.

The first meeting for the season of the Wollaston Women's club was held Tuesday afternoon in the Park and Downs church with a large gathering that filled the auditorium. The floral display was most pleasing, banks of choice blossoms adorning the altar and platform.

A spirited and interesting business meeting was opened with an address of welcome by the president, Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes. Mrs. Charles M. Bryant treasurer and Miss Fanny L. Johnson and Mrs. William Dean Sanford recording and corresponding recretaries read reports.

Mrs. Arthur P. Homer reported for the Arts and Crafts committee, and Mrs. Edward J. Badger for Civics. The latter committee is engaged with plans for beautifying the surroundings of the railroad station and bringing its facilities to a higher standard. The placing of waste cans at convenient intervals through Wollaston was another move mentioned.

Mrs. Edward E. Jameson reported for the Custodian committee and Mrs. William E. Keyes for the committee on Education.

For the House committee, Mrs. William E. Rowe reported plans for an $18,000 clubhouse including a hall with 500 seating capacity, convenient committee rooms and kitchen equipment.

The methods used by the Dorchester Women's club in raising funds for the construction of its clubhouse were thoroughly gone into. Mrs. Arthur P. Homer displayed plans by Architect Arthur Sprague of Wollaston and a brief account of the recent mass meeting of the Sachem club was given.

No definite action was taken in reference to the clubhouse and the matter was referred to the executive board. Should the club decide to build Mrs. Thomas Fenno has offered to donate a large lot of land on Hancock street.

Mrs. A. P. Thompson reported for the Hospitality committee; Mrs. John O. Short for Home Economics; Mrs. Harold P. Waterhouse for Legislative and Mrs. Joseph K. Barber for Literature and Library Extension. Miss Florence G. Olney for the Music committee reported the formation of a choral society with classes underway under the leadership of the well known conductor, John A. Crowley.

Mrs. Charles R. Safford reported for the Program committee. For the Social and Industrial committee, Mrs. Charles S. Adams announced that Oct. 21 would be observed as Donation day when contributions of jellies and other delicacies for the Quincy district nursing would be received. Mrs. Herbert H. Albee gave the report of the Woman's Exchange.

At intervals during the meeting Mrs. Edith Carey Page rendered several pleasing soprano solos accompanied by Miss Florence G. Olney. Among the numbers were: "Beloved, it is morn," by Aylward; "Adamnse" by Cadman; "Rosemonde," by Shaminade; and "Go not happy day" by Whelpley.

Mrs. Percy L. Davidson, Mrs. David H. Goodspeed and Miss Hattie E. Turner, delegates to the twenty-first anniversary of the State Federation of Women's clubs, held in Boston last May, gave interesting accounts of those meetings.

Discussion was indulged in concerning the Spanish War Veteran"s Civil Service bill, now pending, and resolutions in opposition were voted.

Following the meeting a delightful social hour was enjoyed in the church parlors where tea and light refreshments were served, the pourers being: Mrs. Frank C. Blake, Mrs. Clifton H. Baker, Mrs. Wallace Bennett, Mrs. A. L. Baker, and the commitee Mrs. William M. Chase, Mrs. Wyman H. Streeter, Mrs. William H. Whitney and Mrs. W. Everett Simmons, Jr. As will be a feature of this hour, articles of the Woman's Exchange, including cooked foods and basketry, were on sale.

STATE FEDERATION.

Mrs. George Winslow Perkins, the newly elected president of the Massachusetts Federation, says of the work the coming year:

"Officially, October is the month that marks the opening of club activity for the year. Actually, the work has been going on all summer and the plans for the winter's program have been carefuly laid out and perfected as far as possible during the vacation period.

"Officers and committees have been working busily since last spring so that now with the announcement of meetings and conferences the season's labors are well under way.

"I have high hopes that the year will be a notable one in the history of the Federation, not only in the matter of growth and increased influence, but also as regards the accomplishment of work to which we are pledged. For instance, the endowment fund of the general federation is a matter still with us, and the completion of the full amount allotted to Massachusetts is a very definite task to be accomplished before the biennial in Chicago next spring.

"Then there is the matter of International peace—much may, and will, we trust, be done to arouse and educate public opinion regarding this movement.

"The work of the Federation this year will have, as it always has had, for its central motive—the basis on which the structure of effort will be erected—the welfare of the child and the home.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly that this is the reason for the existence of the federation and the end toward which it is always working; that it is, so to speak, the hub from which radiate the various spokes of endeavor exemplified in the different departments—art, civics, civil service reform, conservation, education, home economics, industrial and social conditions, legislative affairs, literature and library extension, music, public health.

"The great desire for conferences on the part of the different clubs shows a deep interest in the activities of the federation. Nearly every department will have at least two conferences, some of them will have three and four.

"At the fall presidents' conference, which will be entertained by Old and New of Malden on Oct. 28, the first part of the session will be devoted to a brief outline by the different department chairmen of the lines of work suggested for this year. The second hour will be given over to the discussion of the modern club, touching upon the various phases of organization, departments, program, social service and social life."

BRAINTREE PHILERGIANS.

Tuesday afternoon, the Philergians of Braintree held the first meeting of the season in Cochato club hall.

The president Mrs. George O. Wales was in the chair and welcomed the old and new members, outlining the work of the Woman's club in the town. She said: "the women's club is a great and moral force in the community and recognizes each progressive movement for the betterment of the locality."

The Home Economics, Civics and Conservation committees were thanked for the very excellent work accomplished during the summer. The stage was deccrated with flowers furnished by all the school children of the town. The Woman's Exchange table bore an interesting exhibit of vegetables.

Mrs. Jennie B. Worster of Weymouth read a most interesting report of the Washington Council last April.

The group of songs rendered by Mrs. F. Wilbur Mottley were given with much expression and were greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Frederick V. Kolb was a delightful accompanist.

The next meeting of the club will be held in the town hall Oct. 21 and will be a musicale furnished by Miss Ethelynde Smith, accompanied by Miss Mary Seiders and Mrs. Daniel Roy Freeman pianist.

TEMPERANCE LEGION.

The Loyal Temperance Legion of Quincy, composed of boys and girls under twenty, is anticipating an active winter, under the brilliant leadership of Mrs. Isabelle Davis, who has been in the work several years and whose professional experience as a reader, makes her way of telling stories and illustrations most interesting.

The Legion meets at Protection hall, over Johnson's market, the first Wednesday, now, of each month, changing the day from Thursday so as not to interfere with the Junior Endeavor of Bethany church and on the first Wednesday of November expects a royal good time, at Protection hall at four o'clock. Boys and girls remember this date.

There will be the annual gold medal speaking contest on Saturday evening Nov. 29th and the medals will be on exhibition at C. F. Pettingill's store "Temperance Poster" week Oct. 19 to 26.

MERRY MUSICAL COMEDY.

Monday and Tuesday afternoon and evening large audiences were on hand at Kincaide Theatre to enjoy the merry-making of the Thompson Musical Comedy Company, and one and all were delighted with the bright and breezy program presented by these twelve talented artists. "An Oyster Fry" is the name of the farce which is fun from beginning to end. It abounds with comical and absurd situations, calling forth hearty laughter and almost continuous applause. "An Oyster Fry" will be given again tonight, and Thursday's matinee an entire new comedy called "Lodge Night" will be presented.

In the third period, White of Quincy crossed the line after Hamlin advanced the ball 10 yards as a follow up to a 45 yard run by Larkin. Bert Woodlock of the Boston Globe, who umpired the game, came in for his share of comment at this point because the visitors claimed that the forward progress of the ball was stopped and should be put in play on the centre of the field. Larkin in making his run broke away from the clutches of six men and was downed by a pretty tackle by Cousins, who also tackled him from behind as he was headed for Arlington line in the fourth period.

The visitors got their punts away in good style and had plenty of time since Quincy did not break through the line, and the backfield receiving the punts allowed the ball to strike and bound instead of catching it in midair, something which could have been done very easily.

The game closed with an exchange of punts and short rushes, neither team displaying brilliant work. The score:

Smith will have Connell and Kiley on his team and two others, the cream of the Fore River league.

GIANTS DOWNED BY ATHLETICS

National Leaguers Get Four Runs to Americans' Six

BAKER LIVES UP TO HIS NAME

Smashes a Homer When Two Men Are Out In the Fifth—Slugging Too Hot For Marquard, Who Is Taken From the Box—Replaced by Crandall and Tesreau

New York, Oct. 8.—Philadelphia won the first game of the world series here by defeating the New York National leaguers by a score of 6 to 4.

New York's first run came in the third when, with two out, Doyle singled, scoring Merkle from second.

Philadelphia came back strong, however, in the first half of the fourth when Collins, first up, tripled. He scored on Baker's single, which was too hot for Doyle to handle. Baker was sacrificed to second by McInnis, but was caught at third on Strunk's rap. Barry doubled, however, and both scored on Schang's three-base hit.

The Athletics added two more after two were out in the first half of the fifth. Collins was passed, and Home Run Baker lived up to his name with a tremendous drive into the right field stands for a home run.

New York became threatening in the fifth. Merkle singled, and McCormick, batting for Marquard, did likewise. Shafer advanced both men with a sacrifice. Barry's low throw on Doyle's rap allowed Merkle to score. Fletcher then singled, bringing in McCormick, and Doyle scored on Burns' grounder to short, making three runs in all.

The American leaguers increased their lead in the eighth when Collins bunted safely. Baker singled, and McInnis doubled, scoring Collins. Crandall, who had replaced Marquard, was taken from the box and Tesreau substituted. Strunk fanned, however, Baker was run off third by McInnis, and Barry flied out to Collins.

The victory did not increase the confidence of American league rooters, for they were already as confident as they could be. Nor yet did the defeat terrify the Giant partisans. For, while the Athletics won, they did not by any means crush the McGraws.

If Bender's work is high water mark of Mackian twirling efficiency, the Giants should do about as much slugging as the Macks in this series. Still, the Athletics hold the edge. More of their hits were long drives that had the right ring.

Both teams hit the ball for double figures, but the Athletics "got the breaks," and they also made far fewer mistakes than the Giants. It is quite possible to figure out how they might have won merely by their refraining from doing the wrong thing. On the other hand, to subtract also New York's gift runs, would still be to leave the Mackmen ahead. That home run of Baker's was what tipped the beam.

The game was witnessed by a gathering of spectators that taxed the capacity of the New York club stadium and swelled the coffers of those financially interested to the extent of more than $75,000. The exact number of fans who paid admission to the stands was 36,291, and the day's receipts amounted to $75,255. The score:

SULZER SOUGHT MURPHY

Ryan's Sensational Testimony In Impeachment Proceedings

Albany, Oct. 8.—Governor Sulzer attempted to secure the influence of Charles F. Murphy to stop his impeachment trial, and in return therefor said "he was willing to do whatever was right," according to the testimony of Allan A. Ryan at the trial.

The testimony was given after the court, by a secret vote of 41 to 14, had decided to admit upon the record Ryan's previous testimony. This was that Sulzer asked him to see Senator Root and request him to induce State Chairman Barnes to influence the Republican votes of the members of the court to declare the impeachment proceedings illegal because they were brought during an extraordinary session of the legislature.

The admission of this testimony, which had been stricken from the record, afforded opportunity for Ryan's account of Sulzer's alleged attempt to make peace with Tammany Hall on the eve of his impeachment.

MUST HOLD EDDY PROPERTY

Order of New Hampshire Supreme Court to Administrator

Concord, N. H., Oct. 8.—Under a decision of the supreme court Josiah E. Fernald of Concord was ordered to hold as administrator the property of the late Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, until trustees are appointed by the probate court.

The court holds that Mrs. Eddy created a public trust to be administered by the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, under the court's supervision.

The trustees of the Mother Church, as the Boston church is known, had contended that the property should be turned over to them without further proceedings. The court ruled, however, that Mrs. Eddy did not intend to give the property outright to the church to be administered as a part of its corporate assets.

POSTMASTER'S SHOT LAYS OUT YEGGMAN

Fires In the Dark at Men Working on Postoffice Safe

Troy, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Frank Stumpf, postmaster at Stillwater, aroused by the sound of an explosion in the postoffice, about 100 feet from his residence, took his rifle and fired at random through a window by the side of the safe, instantly killing an unknown man who was attempting to rob the safe.

One of the burglars stationed outside the postoffice was armed with a repeating rifle and fired three shots at Stumpf, one of which just missed the postmaster. Two men ran away from the building and made their escape. The third was found dead by the safe, a bullet having entered just behind the left ear.

HIGHWAYMEN CONFESS

Relieved Paymaster of Velvet Mill of the Company's Payroll

Stonington, Conn., Oct. 8.—Walter Arnold and Joseph Rushnow confessed to the police that they held up and robbed Carl A. Koelb, paymaster of the American Velvet company, as he was on his way from the bank to the mill with the company's $16,000 payroll.

Both are former workers in the mill. Both were bound over to the January term of the superior court in bonds of $5000.

A touch of humor was added to the court proceedings when Justice Breed identified the coat that Rushrow was wearing as one that had been stolen from him.

WILL CUT HER ANNUITY

Threat of Saxon Government If Princess Produces Comic Opera

Leipsic, Oct. 8.—Signora Tostelli, formerly Crown Princess Louise of Saxony, will find herself again in trouble with the Saxon government if she produces the comic opera of which she has written the libretto.

The government declares that, if the work contains any attack on the Saxon royal family it will cut down the princess' annuity, which has already been once reduced owing to the princess' literary endeavors. The authorities will, however, abstain from any criminal or civil prosecution, which they consider would only advertise the work.

HYPNOTIZED BY ANOTHER PARTY

Mrs. Shackford Says She Was Influenced by Farmhand

ADMITS KILLING HER HUSBAND

Says She Remembers Aiming Revolver at Him as He Slept but Does Not Remember Firing—Finding of Death Weapon, Bought Five Weeks Ago, Leads to Confession

Ossipee, N. H., Oct. 8.—That she was hypnotized by her lover when she fired two shots from a revolver into her husband's head at their home in Freedom, killing him as he lay asleep, is the statement of Mrs. Bessie L. Shackford to the police.

The woman's husband, Edward A. Shackford, was killed Monday night, Sept. 29, twenty-four hours after she had been in the company of William Bean, a farmhand, who she now says had a strange influence over her.

Sheriff Chandler said: "Mrs. Shackford made a statement to us which is virtually a confession. She told us she remembered aiming the revolver at her husband's head as he lay asleep, but that she didn't remember firing. She said she was hypnotized by another party and that she was under the mental control of another when the deed was done."

Chandler said Bean was the person she referred to as "another party." He is now held as a material witness. When asked if a charge would be preferred against Bean, Chandler said: "That depends on the developments of the next few days."

The sheriff said he did not believe Mrs. Shackford was telling the whole truth about the murder. He classed some of her statements as "equivocations." He said he did not believe her when she said she did not remember firing the bullets into her husband's head. He said it was evident she was trying to throw the blame on Bean.

"She said Bean wanted to marry her, but that she had refused to agree to the proposition several times," said the sheriff.

It was not until the revolver with which Mrs. Shackford committed the crime was found by Chandler under the meeting house that Mrs. Shackford broke down and confessed she was the slayer..

When she was told the revolver had been found she told the whole story to Sheriff Chandler, Deputy Tyler and Detective Hildreth. Later she repeated it and it was taken down in shorthand by a stenographer.

After confessing the deed Mrs. Shackford seemed relieved. Mrs. Edward Littlefield, mother of the confessed slayer, is in a critical condition as the result of the affair.

The investigators learned that Mrs. Shackford purchased the revolver about five weeks ago from a mail order house in Chicago. She sent a money order for $1.58 and received the revolver in return by parcel post to her home in Freedom. She also purchased a box of fifty .32-calibre cartridges at the same time. The police officias say this shows that the woman planned the murder a long time before she carried out her purpose.

A short time after she purchased the revolver her husband found a box nearly filled with cartridges in the cellar. The discovery not only mystified him but made him uneasy.

"TATTOOED" MAN SUCCUMBS TO FEVER

Bellfontaine Was One of Best Examples of the Art

Boston, Oct. 8.—One of the few surviving "tattooed" men of the old-time circus, Frank Bellfontaine, died here of typhoid feber.

Bellfontaine, according to theatrical men, had upon his chest and back some of the finest examples of this fast disappearing art ever known.

The shading and blending of various colors, something seldom attempted by artists of the ink-covered needle, had been successfully accomplished in his skin. Full rigged ships, mermaids and various nautical scenes were indelibly recorded. For a number of years he followed the circus and museum business and amassed a considerable fortune in this unique business.

TAXATION OF SQUANTUM

Improvement Association Replies to Recent Comment

Editor of the Quincy Ledger:

Squantum has been taken to task through your editorial columns for its position in demanding certain improvements from the City of Quincy. We wish to thank you for this, and the many other attentions which you have given this section of the city. Squantum believes in publicity. If facts do not warrant, we do not ask or want $1 of the $20,000 which will be paid in taxes from Squantum into the city treasury at Quincy this year. We are fighting in the open. We invite public discussion. We believe our demands are just. Even in view of your editorial, we have yet "to be shown."

We ask your indulgence for further use of the space of your valuable newspaper to explain at some length our position. First, let us discuss your editorial of Friday night last, paragraph by paragraph.

You say that any ward or section of a city which expects that for every dollar paid in taxes the city shall spend one hundred cents in that ward or section is on the wrong track. We agree most heartily. This has never been our contention. We grant we should pay our share of the State and County taxes.

Your second statement is that one-third of the total tax raised by Quincy is paid by Ward One, yet that this ward gets but a small proportion of the improvements. Mr. Editor, can Ward One show the same proportion of increase in valuation that Squantum has shown in the past five years, which is 300 per cent. And this increased valuation is where practically no improvements have been made.

Compare the improvements in Squantum with those of Ward One. Assuming that Ward One does pay one-third of the city tax, have you ever yet heard of a city where the business section does not contribute to its outlying sections. What makes the business section of Quincy except its outlying sections. How long would it prosper except for the support of all its citizens irrespective of location.

The quoted figures of $40,000 as taxes paid in five years should have read for three years. This was an error in reporting the speaker on this subject. You analyze; please permit us to. Forty thousand dollars in three years is raising $13,000 a year on the average; one-half of this goes to the State, county, Metropolitan district and payment of debt. What debt, Mr. Editor? The debt incurred for the benefit of the Squantum section? No, Mr. Editor, the debt to give other sections of the city accepted streets, generous fire and police protection, lights, sewers, parks and playgrounds, new school houses, macadamized streets and sidewalks. Improvements which other sections of the city enjoy which we do not.

We do not object to paying our share for these improvements. We pay graciously and willingly. But, Mr. Editor, when we are called upon to pay our share of the public debt, and do not get our share of the public improvements, then we rise in just and righteous indignation. We are delighted to pay our share for granolithic sidewalks and macadamized streets and to pay for oil to keep down the dust upon these streets, and we would thank the City of Quincy for a few loads of gravel.

Upon your own analysis there is left of Squantum taxes after paying the above items, $6,500. If nearly one-half of this is for maintenance of schools, it would reduce the $6500 to say $3500. And you further say, of course in error as you will admit, that Squantum should pay more than $2000 for general city expenses such as salaries of city officials, fire department, police department, street department, etc.

We would have left $3500, and surely no fair-minded person could say that we should pay anything like $3500 toward these expenses. Do you realize, Mr. Editor, that so far as the fire department is concerned, we have no apparatus. On police department we have no police department except in the past year during a few of the summer months, and then a few hours a day only. No police officer of the City of Quincy is seen in Squantum from October first until the middle of June, except upon the very rarest occasions. You cannot expect us to contribute very much towards the maintenance of departments which only come when they are telephoned for.

If you average our protection over three years we have had much less than this. If we were to make an analysis which would be entirely proper we should take this year's taxes as compared with this year's improvements when the balance would be very much greater and more favorable to us.

Now let us take up the matter of that much talked of $18,000 for the causeway from Atlantic to Squantum. This has been an accepted street from common usage for years before Quincy became a city. Very little gravel was put upon that street for 35 years. Previous to this $18,000 expenditure this street though accepted was in no sense a passable thoroughfare. At high tide there was from one to five feet of water over the street level. The electric car trips from Neponset were omitted at high tide. This street we contend should not be charged alone to Squantum. Do you charge the expense of Neponset bridge to Atlantic? Is the Granite bridge charged to Montclair? Is the Fore River bridge charged to Quincy Point?

We agree, Mr. Editor, that the sum of $18,000 was a big amount spent for re-building this accepted street, considering the fact that there was no land damage and practically all the material was given from Squantum free.

Whether Squantum should wait 25 years for a school house is a question which its citizens are very willing to leave to the good judgment of Quincy's very able school board to decide.

If Quincy wants to co-operate with Squantum why does it not give us some of the many needed improvements to the mutual advantage of the city and to Squantum.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, we extend a cordial invitation to you and any members of your staff to attend the next meeting of the Squantum Improvement association which is Tuesday evening, October 14, at the Vacation House.

Very truly,
Executive Committee Squantum
Improvement Association.

Editorial Note—For the same reason that the Squantum Association objects to charging all the expense of the Squantum causeway to Squantum, it cannot object to paying its share of the total debt of Quincy, which includes the Hingham bridge, Fore River bridge, High schoolhouse and other new schoolhouses, etc., etc.

We do not think it too much to expect Squantum to contribute annually $5000 toward the general expenses of the city which include: maintenance of water supply, sewer system, fire department, police department, street department, street lights, removal of snow, care of public buildings, health and poor departments, assessing and collecting, election expenses, salaries of city officials, cemeteries, public library, etc., etc. An assessment of $5000 is less than one-fortieth of the amount raised for general city expenses, aside from schools.

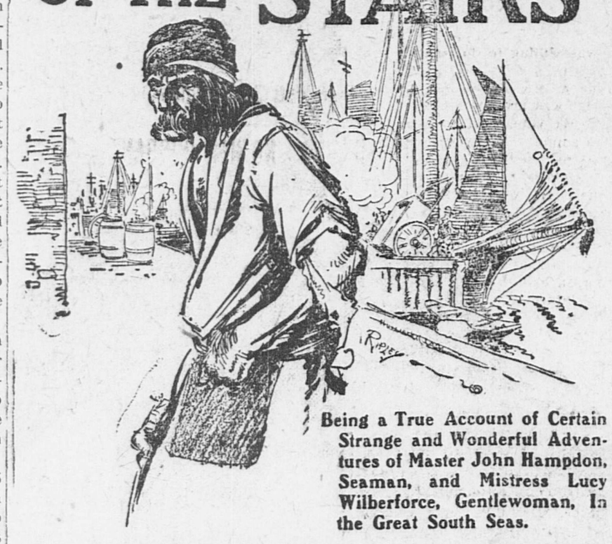
THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful throat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

There was plenty of bright starlight on deck. She had stepped out from the dark shadow of the spencer, and I had followed on her heels. The first night watch had not yet been called, and the men, idled about the decks waiting the boatswain's shrill whistle, had noted it all. I can see their sneering, laughing faces even now.

As it was, I drew myself up and waited while she sent for good old Captain Matthews and, vouchsafing no explanations, imperiously bade him stow me below as a prisoner in my cabin. He didn't relish the job, but went about it forthwith. Indeed, I did not wait for further orders after her look and glance. I stalked below as haughtily as you please. It was her ship, as she had said and as she certainly believed, and had it not been, who could deny her anything? Not I, forsooth. I could steal a kiss, but not balk her will. And here I was the mate of the Rose of Devon, and but for my own renunciation I had been her captain, engaged in this wild goose chase, this foolish search for treasure, for so it seemed to me then, locked up below like any mutinous dog at the behest of a woman that I could have broken between my thumb and finger. And after all I had done and sacrificed for her too.

Come to think of it, I had always loved her, ever since those days when I, the gardener's boy, had been her faithful and devoted slave. And through the long years when I had been far voyaging in distant seas I had kept her memory fresh and sweet and true. Although I had been in many rough places I had seen life from the seamy side, and the common lot of a sailor of my day had been mine.

There are no better seamen in narrow seas or broad than I. I had worked my way up through the forecastle to the quarterdeck. I had a natural gift for figures. I could take a sight and work out a position as well as any book taught navigator, and I had been a great reader too. My private cabin was ever crowded with books. Much of my earnings were spent that way. I had wit enough to choose good books, too, and perseverance enough to study them well.

I knew more than she—oh, much more!—about everything but the usages of good society, and I had at least learned something of good manners in her company since her father's death. My shipmates used to laugh at me for being a book delver—a worm, they were wont to call it. Well, they didn't laugh very long. There was nothing physical for which I need stand aside for any man. I was over six feet high and built in proportion. I could, unaided and alone, hold the wheel of the best ship in the fiercest storm.

CHAPTER VI.

Wherein My Lady Is Placed In Great Peril.

NOW I was a prisoner. I said I didn't feel that blow on the cheek, but as I thought on it it fairly seared me. I hated her. I hoped that—no, I might as well be honest with myself. I didn't care how she treated me, how disdainful were her words, how unjustly she punished me, I loved her. I couldn't help, I didn't want to help it. I would kiss the deck plank she hallowed with her footsteps.

There was another side to my confinement, and I presently took thought on that. I swear that I was not thinking of myself, but of her. I was ever thinking of her. I could see dangers that beset her as perhaps no one else could, and my confinement added to her peril. She didn't realize that; nobody aft on the ship realized it. There was a peril, imminent, menacing, about to break, I feared.

You see, the fact that we were treasure hunting had got about. I had not thought much of the crew, including the villainous looking boatswain, Pimball. We had shipped a lot of smart seamen, about the average in quality and above the average in smartness. I decided as the days had passed with nothing happening, but Pimball had signed some I could wish had been left ashore.

Her presence on the ship, too, was a mystery. Alone in the little Rose of Devon with thirty men. By evil mishap the maid she had brought with her had died after a brief illness two weeks out. Captain Matthews and I were for turning back, but she said no she would go on. We had lost too much time already and her all was embarked. We were now plowing the blue waters of the Pacific, and I, mate of the ship and the only other officer to be trusted, locked up!

We were nearing the latitude and longitude of the island. Suppose the men rose in mutiny! I ground my teeth in rage. The men liked me well enough, and I had been particular to keep them in good humor, passing over many a thing for her sake that I would have followed with a blow had she not been there. Captain Matthews had complained once or twice of my laxity, but I knew things that he didn't and I had done what I deemed best for her. I pledge you my word that I didn't care a farthing for the treasure. I had never given it much thought. I grew to believe in it less and less as we got further from home, and if I had been stronger for my duty and weaker in my love I would have dissuaded her from the voyage, following Master Ficklin's lead.

Now, that she was poor and alone, neglected and forgotten, I had enjoyed a foolish dream that I could be a companion to her—a life shipmate!—for the captain was a rough, plain old sailor. What a fool I was! And yet it had worked in some way as I had intended. We had been thrown into closer intimacy by the loneliness of her position and my faithful and, until that night, most unobtrusive, self effacing devotion.

I suppose it never entered her head that I could presume to love her, consequently she was less careful than she had been otherwise, and that very night when I had poured out my declaration to her she had had no words with which to meet it. I thought her silence was consent. I see now that it was amazement. I seized her in my arms like the brute she must have thought me, lifted her up and kissed her fair on the lips and then on her averted cheek. Arcester, the blackguard, could have done no worse. I will never forget how she stigmatized me—"brute, coward, low born." I don't believe she had railed at that scoundrel duke so fiercely.

Well, I didn't care what she had called me. Her safety, her life, her honor demanded that I be released. That was the paramount concern.

I listened. I thought I heard a foot fall in the outer cabin. Could she be there? I suppose that I had been locked up for perhaps an hour. Aye, on the instant the bell forward struck three. We kept man-of-war customs at her fancy. The sound came to me faintly as I listened. Half past 9. She could not have gone to her berth yet. She must be there in the great cabin. I ventured to call.

What it cost me any man can imagine—and to humble myself to ask her mercy too. I am a man of fierce temper, as you have deemed, but I can control it on occasion, and I did it now. I shook the door of the cabin gently at first and then vigorously and called once and again. There was no answer. I beat upon it. I raised my voice. I scarcely thought I could be heard on deck. The wind was blowing, the sea was heavy, and the ship was pitching wildly. The straining, the creaking, the groaning of the timbers would have prevented such a noise as I made from attracting attention unless some one were in the cabin.

But all in vain. No heed was paid to me, and yet I could swear that somebody was there. I don't know how exactly, but I was conscious of her presence. Perhaps because I was so in love with her that I could always tell whether she was about. I can to this day.

It made me madder than before to go thus unheeded. I was on the point of giving over my endeavor, but I thought of the peril in which she stood.

"Madam," I whispered softly, and then more loudly, "Madam!"

I did not venture to say any other

WOLLASTON DISASTER.

Today is the 35th anniversary of the railroad accident, near what is now the Norfolk Downs station which resulted in a large loss of life. Among those killed was Patsy Reagan, the national champion oarsman, who had won a race on the placid waters of Silver Lake earlier in the day. The train which was wrecked was an excursion train from Silver Lake where there had been a great rowing race. As the train sped through Wollaston toward Boston it ran into an open switch into a freight train which had just backed onto the siding leading to the Wollaston iron foundry. The road at that time was known as a left hand road, that is it passed other trains on the left. When the collision came in the early evening the engine piled over the freight and the cars on the excursion train were telescoped and thrown in all directions.

CIVIL WAR VIVIDLY RECALLED

Reminiscences of Past Commander Gilman

Local Veterans With Him

The appearance of John E. Gilman, past commander in chief of the Grand Army, at Colonial hall Wednesday evening, was the occasion, for a demonstration of love and affection by his comrades, the members of Post 88, G. A. R. and by his brothers, the members of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, under whose auspices he gave reminiscences of the Civil war.

The surviving members of Post 88, the honored guests of the evening occupied the front seats. Surrounding them were the members of the council and their friends, and the hall decorated with flags, bunting and potted plants had a very patriotic aspect.

Mayor Eugene R. Stone and Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, chaplain of the council, were present and each contributed a few remarks to the entertaining program which opened with the singing of "My Country 'Tis of Thee." There were solos by Arthur Holmes, whistling solos by Matt. Fay, and piano solos by John Mahan and Peter M. Sullivan, and the program closed with all singing the "Star Spangled Banner" while a large silken flag was waved over the heads of the veterans and Commander Gilman by Peter M. Sullivan.

The evening was truly interesting for the thrilling reminiscences of Commander Gilman were inspired by the sight of two comrades of his company in the 12th Massachusetts, George L. Phillips and Warren S. Dunbar of Quincy. They, probably better than any one else in the hall, could tell how the venerable commander lost his right arm at the battle of Gettysburg for he was in their firing line.

As commander Gilman entered all arose to a man and he received an ovation which breathed welcome ni every echo. He affectionately referred to his "dear comrades" throughout the evening and the eyes of more than one in the hall filled with tears as he touchingly described the trials and tribulations of the boys that made the present union of the stars and stripes a possibility.

And, as he said, the war was fought by boys, for figures show how many of the soldiers were under age and more than ever to their credit is it for they had to "lie" to the recruiting officer in order to join the army, and preserve the Union. It was their heritage and one which they were not slow to claim. They enlisted prepared to do or die and after the battle of Antietam alone only 32 of the 12th Massachusetts lived to tell the story.

Commander Gilman spoke of his regiment being recruited by Col. Fletcher Webster, a son of the noted Daniel Webster, and in depicting incidents he highly praised the gallant colonel who died fighting for his country. But, said he, as he extended his hands out over the heads of the attentive veterans, it was not all fighting. In my company we had but one fight a month and between them we marched and marched and marched, through heavy woodland and over roads impassable in some spots because of the heavy rains. Others were confined in the prisons, and the tales Commander Gilman unfolded of the horror of Andersonville and the tyranny of Wirts, its adventurous commander and froze the blood cold because of the cruelty of the officers, and then caused it to course warmly as thoughts of the devotion and patriotism of the "Boys" of 61" came home to the gathering.

And some evenings, I remember, how a piece of candle was stuck in a bayonet and that stuck in the ground so the boys could have light to play poker, and I ro belive, said he that some of them played for money. At this point the interest of the veterans could no longer be restrained and James W. Pierce of Granite street called out, "not money, for percussion caps," and stronger than ever the loyalty of the veterans came home to those present.

Through the whole speech Commander Gilman recited their love of the flag, and when he told how the colors were lost under a pile of bodies at Antietam and how they were cast aside as though human blood had never ran through their veins in order that the stars and stripes might be recovered all held their breaths.

Old Glory, said the commander, was our continent and the Massachusetts flag, our house, and God alone knows of the sufferings incident to the defense of both.

In closing he said that he hoped that the remaining days of the veterans would be one of peace and happiness, and as a fourth degree member of the Knights of Columbus he assured them that when answering the final summons to have no doubts about the protection extended the Union that was saved through their efforts, for a more loyal set of fellows never breathed than the members of the Knights of Columbus, and they, as quickly as the veterans of the Civil War, would rush to the defense of the flag and aid her in her hour of peril.

Mayor Stone in his remarks took the opportunity of telling the audience and the Post that his convictions for a Memorial Hall were as strong as ever, and that he hoped one would be placed at the disposal of the veterans before many months.

Father Coan spoke of his pleasure at hearing the eloquent lecture of Commander Gilman, and said that from the spiritual standpoint the lie told by the boys in order to get the opportunity to fight for their country would not be a serious offense because it was born in their patriotism.

The second annual dance of the Orient Athletic association will be held Friday evening. As a special feature of the evening the committee have secured the Knickerbocker cabaret quartette of Boston, while Hamilton's orchestra will furnish the music for the dance.

MILLER STILE INN

One of the Beauty Spots of Quincy

Also Noted in History

Although work is still in process at the new Miller Stile Inn on Miller Stile road, some of the appartments are now occupied, and the dining room is opened for occupants of the house. Rev. Dr. Hudson of the First church and Mrs. Hudson are very pleasantly located there. Also Mrs. John L. Gow and her daughter Miss Eleanor Gow. Mrs. Wilson Tisdale, Miss Charlotte J. Burgess and others are expected in a few days. Mrs. Anna Roach recently of Worcester is in general charge of the inn and has private rooms in the annex with her daughter Ethel and Miss Elizabeth F. Faxon.

The opening of the inn is the result of the enterprise of Henry M. Faxon, who has preserved an old historic house, and at the same time made a delightful home for many. It is one of the beauty spots of Quincy and has been greatly improved of late.

Miller Stile Inn undoubtedly takes its name from Miller Stile road which runs from Bigelow street to Elm street. It is part of what was once the Miller family estate, which was once bounded by Elm and Washington streets, Revere road and Mechanic street. The estate stood in the name of the Miller family for nearly two centuries, came down to Rev. Dr. Ebenezer Miller, the first rector of the Episcopal church and later to his great grandson, Charles Edward Miller, who was the last male heir in the family and who died Dec. 23, 1873. Later the estate passed by inheritance to Mr. Bigelow the eldest son of the late Judge George T. Bigelow and a nephew of Charles Edward Miller and still later the mansion became the property of the late Dr. William Everett.

According to Pattee's history Miller's stile, so called, connected Elm street with Sea street, (later Canal street and now Revere road,) and was laid out as early as 1655, viz. "11th, 12th m., 1655—Upon the same day there was laid out a foot-way to by from the rock by George Ruggles, straight over the fresh brook in the convenientest place, and so straight along by the foreside of Francis Elliott's barn, and so straight over his lot in the convenientest place, and so to the end of the highway that goes up by Mr. Flint's."

For many years this stile was used by the public without interruption on the part of the owners. Then the owners decided that they would close up the way to public use and started to do so.

Then the citizens became aroused and brought the matter into court where it was decreed that the way having been open to the public for more than twenty years the public could not be prevented from using it. Furthermore the court required the owners to build a substantial gravel path through the estate and a short flight of steps was provided on the Revere road side near the present residence of John Hall, so as to be more convenient.

The pathway known as "Miller Stile" was discontinued by vote of the City Council in 1895. Two years later or in 1897, Miller Stile Road was laid out as a public street of the city, 35 feet in width running from Bigelow street to Elm street. It was just previous to this time that part of the estate was laid out into house lots and put on the market, the first street through the property being Bigelow street which was laid out and accepted as a public street of the city in 1888 at a width of 35 feet.

PENNIMAN NOT A CANDIDATE

Uncertainty About Dr. John H. Ash

Papers Out For Councilman

It has been definitely settled that James H. Penniman will not be the Democratic mayorality candidate this year. The city committee were in hopes that he would consent to be a candidate this year, believing that his chances of winning at the election were more than good. Mr. Penniman however still refused to be the party bearer again this year. He is planning a European trip next Spring, which he would have to give up should he be elected to the office of Mayor.

Papers were taken out Wednesday for a Democratic candidate for Mayor and it is reported that they are being circulated for George H. Wilson of Revere road who was the party's standard bearer several years ago.

There have been many rumors that Dr. John H. Ash would be a candidate but he has refused to say whether he would, or would not go out for the nomination.

Papers were also taken out by the Democrats Wednesday for five councilmen at large but the committee has not decided as yet who the five candidates will be. As but thirty names are required to place candidates at large in nomination it will not be a difficult mater to obtain the required number of signatures.

Charles H. Johnson, who is circulating papers as the Republican candidate for Mayor, has tendered his resignation as a member of the Republican city committee and as chairman of the Ward One Republican committee. The resignation will be acted upon at a meeting of the Ward One committee tonight.

DIVORCE LIBEL.

A libel for divorce has been filed at Dedham by Ethel Hodge Slee of Quincy against her husband, William Fitzclarence Slee of Boston. She alleges cruel and abusive treatment in the years 1910 and 1912. Mrs Slee asks for the care and custody of minor children, Ursula Gwendolyn, 7, Jean Fitzclarence, 5, and William Redfern Hodge, 4, and prays for the right to resume her maiden name, Ethel Hodge. The Slees were married in Boston, Sept. 20, 1905.

ATTACKED BY MAD BULL

Aged Inmate of Snug Harbor Roughly Handled

Malcolm McRitchie, the 70 year old inmate at the Sailor's Snug Harbor, who is at their hospital suffering from injuries received Tuesday evening when attacked by an infuriated bull, is reported as doing well today. An examination showed that a horn of the bull had fractured two ribs but had not punctured the lungs. His body, which was trampled by the animal, is severely bruised and it is possible that internal injuries may develop.

The bull, a powerful light cream colored Guernsey, weighing about 1600 and double ringed for safety, charged Mr. McRitchie after they passed through the open door, tossed him into the air and trampled on him as he lay on the floor. It took the combined efforts of three men to overcome the animal only after they had beaten him unconscious were they able to extricate McRitchie from his perilous position.

The bull a blue ribbon winner at several cattle shows has been gradually growing violent, and about a month ago gored a cow to death. He has attacked several employees, and one man is known to have escaped injured by hitting him behind the ears with a heavy club which floored him.

Mr. McRitchie has been leading the bull back and forth from the pasture for several months and did splendidly up to Tuesday night when the call for battle resounded through the barn. The roar was loud enough to be heard some distance and several answered its summons. Their prompt action is alone responsible for McRitchie's narrow escape from death, and as it is he may not survive the shock.

The Sailor's Snug Harber is an endowed institution and in years past has been the home of many old salts. Its president is Charles Francis Adams, 2nd, and it is in charge of B. W. Hoffes, a retired sea captain. McRitchie has been an inmate at the home for about 15 years and is well liked by his associates.

John L. Miller, who has been in New York ten days, arrived home Wednesday evening. He reports a good time and a successful business.

Ty Cobb has become a bank director, another example of the readiness with which great Americans engage in any honest though humble occupation.

Americans are rapidly fleeing from Mexico, and great satisfaction is expressed by the Mexicans that they won't spend any more money down there.

Argentine beef is four cents cheaper than the home grown product, but that is no reason why the dealers should ask four cents more for it.

An aeroplane record of 125 miles an hour has been made, but it is not stated whether they were able to catch up with the automobiles running along the country roads.

THE CROWDED COLLEGES.

Reports from the leading colleges are to the effect that this fall's entering classes are much larger than ever before.

In a town known to the writer some 20 years ago, only two boys had been to college for a generation. Within the past five years a delegation has gone from every high school graduating class. This tremendous change is found almost everywhere.

Ten years from today there will be a vastly increased body of highly educated men and women. They will be a powerful force in behalf of good government and social progress.

As the college doors open wider, college degrees become cheaper. Many men are going to college for a four years' loaf and sports, or to form personal pulls to help them in business later. The colleges are judged not only the kind of men they turn out, but by the number they throw out.

WHEN DIAZ RETURNS.

Shortly before Porfirio Diaz was forced to give up the presidency of Mexico he made this portentous remark to a representative of the Cosmopolitan Magazine:—

"Anything that benefits the Americans in this country benefits Mexico, and anything that injures the Americans injures Mexico." Since he left, this proposition has been reversed.

When Diaz left Mexico some really great advances has been made. True, the old general, knowing the peppery Mexican temperament, was too slow in giving them any real democratic government. But he truely boasted that a new Mexico was slowly being erected on the double foundation of the farm and the school.

In some provinces illiteracy had been greatly reduced. Parents were so anxious for education for their children, that they would often give them up to employers of labor, on condition that they should be allowed to attend school. The best schools were progressive, with free text books, medical examinations, and industrial training.

If Gen. Diaz obeys the command of his country to return he will find that three years have made great changes. American property worth $110,000,000 has been destroyed. The Mexicans have had their dance, now they must pay the piper.

President Huerta is reported as recognizing that these claims must be dealt with. If the Mexicans wish light, water, railroads, and all the machinery of civilization, they must stop converting the property of foreigners into junk, and they must listen with some respect to the views of foreign peoples.

President Diaz had his faults, but he was too big a man for bantam statesmanship. His government in its extremity has done well to seek his help and advice. He will be able to tell his fiery compatriots some elementary things that other peoples learn in their early school days.

S. M. GIRLS.

The meeting of the S. M. Girls was held Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Marguerite Welch of Miller Stile road. The officers for the coming year were chosen:—President—Miss Annie Nightingale; Vice President—Miss Marguerite Welch; Treasurer—Miss Florence Nightingale; Secretary, Miss Margery Morrison. After the meeting a luncheon was served and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Arnold at Randolph.

ATHLETICS GET TEN GOOSE EGGS

Giants Win by Batting Out Three Runs In Tenth

MATHEWSON'S GREAT PITCHING

Comes Through Extra Session Unscathed In Game In Which He Never Showed to Better Advantage—Meyers and Merkle Added to List of the Giants' Cripples

Philadelphia, Oct. 9.—In the second game for the world's baseball championship the Philadelphia Athletics lost to the New York Giants by a score of 3 to 0. It was a pitchers' battle from start to finish.

The first five innings saw a pitchers' battle between the veterans, Plank and Mathewson, honors being even, and neither team being able to score. Each managed by high-class boxwork to extricate himself from several difficult positions.

Remarkable fielding also featured the contest, one of the stellar plays being a catch by Burns of a short fly by Strunk. Coming in on the dead run the New York left fielder took the ball just before it struck the ground.

Fletcher, the Giant shortstop, contributed another fine play on a hard smash by Baker over second base. The fielder knocked down the ball with one hand, and, making a quick recovery, threw his man out at first.

It was not until the ninth inning that either team really threatened to break through the long string of goose-eggs. Strunk led off with a single and went to third on Mathewson's wild throw to catch Barry. He was out at the plate on Lapp's tap. Barry was also caught at home on Plank's bunt, and New York pulled out of a bad hole when Murphy was thrown out by Mathewson.

In the first of the tenth New York scored its first run. McLean singled, and was replaced on first base by Grant. Wiltse's sacrifice advanced the runner to second. Mathewson then came through with a long single to centre field, and Grant came across the plate.

Collins made a wild throw on Herzog's bunt, and Doyle was hit by a pitched ball, filling the bases. Fletcher then singled, scoring Mathewson and Herzog. Burns struck out, however, and Shafer flied to Murphy.

Plank, the veteran slabman of the Athletics, wasn't equal to the extra session and a heartbreaking error by Collins was disastrous.

Mathewson at His Best

Mathewson, who had proved himself immune to heartbreakers, came through the extra session unscathed. In his thirteen years of big league performance Mathewson never showed to better advantage. The contest was clearly one in which victory was due to the wonderful work of the veteran rather than to any below-par performances of his opponents.

That he was aided somewhat in his coup by bad judgment on the part of Mack scarcely need be denied. With three men on bases Mack started to send a pinch hitter in for Plank, and then changed his mind. The Athletic pitcher was an easy out and Murphy was quickly snuffed.

In the batting practice Chief Meyers of the Giants hurt his hand, thereby adding another to the long list of the Giants' cripples and McLean found himself in his first world series game.

Besides Meyers, McGraw was without the services of Merkle, his regular first baseman, and after the first part of the third inning Snodgrass was lost. Merkle sprained his ankle. Snodgrass, despite his charleyhorse, was started at first base, but he limped so badly that he was relieved by Wiltse. The score:

OLD CARTOON REAPPEARS

Tillman's "Allegorical Cow" Once More In Congressional Record

Washington, Oct. 9.—Senator Tillman's "allegorical cow," sketched eighteen years ago to accompany an attack by the South Carolina senator upon Wall street and the "money power," illustrated the same article in yesterday's Congressional Record.

One view shows the cow—an elongated animal, symbolic of the national resources—feeding on the farms of the south and west, while her golden milk is being drawn in New York and New England. Then the cow is shown turned around but the supreme court is choking her as she attempts to feed on income taxes and the western and southern farmers are getting no milk.

Unanimous consent for inserting the article with illustrations into The Record was obtained by Tillman, who said he made the request "because so much that was mere surmise and prophecy then has come true."

FOUND IN CORNFIELD

Hospital Inmate's Body Lay Undiscovered For Twenty-Three Days

Boston, Oct. 9.—Investigation is under way to fix the responsibility for the death of Mrs. Annie Kogan of Woburn, whose body was found in a cornfield less than half a mile from the Danvers insane hospital, of which she was an inmate, after it had lain there twenty-one days.

Her husband charges that the officials of the institution have been derelict in their duty, and that had proper search been made for her she would have been found alive or her body would have been recovered within a short time after she escaped. The hospital is criticised by Kogan for its failure to find his wife in so long a time.

REBELS' REPRISALS AFTER LONG BATTLE

General and Staff and 125 Federal Soldiers Executed

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 9.—Federal General Alvarez and his staff and 125 federal soldiers were executed in Torreon, Mex., under orders of General Villa of the constitutionalist forces, according to information from reliable sources brought here.

With the city of Torreon, the rebels captured practically all of the federals' arms and artillery. The battle lasted four days, with heavy losses to both sides.

BUT ONE DISSENTING VOTE

Four Thousand Bankers Go on Record Against Currency Bill

Boston, Oct. 9.—With but one dissenting vote, the more than 4000 delegates to the convention of the American Bankers' association yesterday went on record as opposing the Glass-Owens currency bill, which now is pending the action of congress.

The vote by which this stand was made was taken not directly upon the bill itself, but upon the report of the currency commission of the association. This report calls for the removing or altering of twenty-one of the twenty-seven sections of the Glass-Owens bill.

The meeting of the bankers held in Symphony hall was the most largely attended, and in turn the stormiest in the history of their organization. Cheers and jeers intermingled as the pros and cons of the famous currency measure were extolled.

NOME CALLS FOR HELP

Public Assistance Necessary to Care For Hundreds of Homeless

Nome, Alaska, Oct. 9.—Though the waves are still high and the wind is blowing about thirty miles an hour, fears of further destruction from fire and storm are over and the work of repair and of helping the hundreds of needy is under way. Mayor Jones has issued the following appeal:

"A tidal storm destroyed one-half of Nome. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000. Five hundred persons are homeless, most of them destitute. Winter is approaching and public assistance is necessary. Funds should be sent to the city treasurer of Nome."

DEPUTY SHERIFF KILLED

Incurred Emnity of Strikers by Whipping Six In Fist Fight

Calumet, Mich., Oct. 9.—James Pollack, a deputy sheriff, was killed by copper mine strikers at the Isle Royale mine. He was shot in the back of the head and attacked with clubs by a party of ten men and died an hour later.

Pollack was particularly active as a deputy and had incurred the wrath of the strikers by vanquishing six of them in a fist fight a few days ago.

Old Dartmouth Teacher Dead

Hanover, N. H., Oct. 9.—Dr. Charles F. Richardson, for nearly thirty years a teacher at Dartmouth college, died at his summer home at Sugar Hill, N. H., of pleuro-pneumonia. For years he was regarded as one of Dartmouth's strongest men.

Cotton Mills' Enormous Dividend

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 9.—The Union Cotton Manufacturing company distributed to its stockholders $600,000. This is the amount of the 50 percent dividend that was recently declared.

THE COUNTRY SCHOOL

Entertainment Presented by Epworth League

Epworth League of the Hall Place M. E. church again successfully raised their colors as entertainers at an entertainment given in the vestry Wednesday evening. The program consisting of piano selections by Miss Myrtle Brown of Norfolk Downs; vocal solos "Husheen" and "Goodnight" by Miss Helen Martin, and Harold Norris, violinist, accompanied by Miss Jessie Burke, played "Silver threads among the gold" and "That girl of mine."

The hit of the evening was the reproduction of "The Country School" and although none of the characters ever saw a country school and were not used to country ways they easily passed themselves off as country children. Daniel W. Thompkins, the teacher's pet was very much in evidence as were also his overalls and the contents of his lunch pail when he quite accidentally stumbled into school late. Christopher Columbus Fitts who stuttered managed to make a fairly intelligent excuse for tempting Martha Washington Hibbs to eat carrots in school, said Martha Washington having already indulged in pickles Julius Ceasar Smith, although quite young for his age, (being not quite five years old) showed his ability, also his need of an education in the various questions he asked. Seth Crane was brought to school by his mother who grasped him firmly by the ear and presented him to the teacher after he had decided to play hookey.

The cast of characters was

Teacher, Miss Snodgrass — Mrs. J. M. Francis
Daniel W. Tompkins — J. Lawrence Martin
Martha Washington Hibbs — Hilda Frances
Maria Sophrony — Florence Manhire
Sophia Barker — Helen Martin
Sue Delaplane — Jessie Burke
Jonathan Kline — Julius Fuller

Benjamin Franklin Squeers — Charles Hodgkinson
Martha Washington's little brother — Herbert Fuge
Mrs. Crane — Edna Burke

MILLER IS CANDIDATE

Quincy Wednesday night. This morning a conference of a number of citizens interested in municipal affairs was held at which it was decided to request Mr. Miller to become a citizens candidate. After the conference Mr. Miller was waited upon and after considerable persuasion he consented to run.

Last year the Progressive party was not entitled to participate in the caucuses, but at a caucus of the Progressives held in the Council chamber, Mr. Miller was nominated, and his name appeared on the official ballot at the municipal election on Progressive, Citizens Nomination Papers.

This made a three cornered contest, the result of which was that Mayor Stone received a total of 1790, James H. Penniman the Democratic candidate 1652 and Mr. Miller 1556. The many friends of Mr. Miller think this the opportune time to run and believe that he can be elected.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

The white marble of which the great $2,000,000 Lincoln memorial temple is to be built on the banks of the Potomac in Washington is to come from the Sopris national forest, Colorado. This is said to be the first great building in the east to be constructed of this stone, known to the building trades as Denver marble though much of it has been used as an interior finish in public buildings.

—It is said that 90,000,000 broom handles are used annually in the United States; one for each man, woman, and child.

BERNHARDT BUILDS TOMB.

"Divine Sarah" at Work on Her Final Resting Place.

News comes from Belle Ile en Mer, where Sarah Bernhardt lives, that the divine Sarah is building her tomb with her own hands. It stands at the water's edge and is washed at high tide. Far across the waves toward the mainland, at the Grand Be rock, Chateaubriand rests. Will it be possible that these two great geniuses will communicate with each other across this narrow stretch of water?

To work on one's own tomb is not a pleasant occupation, but Sarah, having lost the follies of a youth supposed to be perennial, knows that her day, perhaps her hour, is approaching, and she wants to be fully prepared.

Sarah carries with her on steamer, train or sleeping car a wonderful shroud of silk. She thus follows the custom of the Chinese mandarins, but the custom is new to Europe.

When death finally comes the great actress should not undergo any sensation strange to her, because for half a century and almost every evening Mme. Bernhardt has succumbed on the stage to every known kind of death—by hanging, poison, the dagger or by fire, by suffocation, being crushed, drowned, strangled, asphyxiated or falling a victim to her great emotion. No method of passing from this life is unfamiliar to her, and if she does not well play her role when the final call comes it will not be from failure to rehearse it.

TO SELL CANAL MACHINERY.

Goethals Expects to Realize $25,000,000 on Salable Equipment.

With the opening of the Panama canal only a few months off preparations are rapidly being made by Colonel Goethals to dispose of the machinery used in the construction work. Much of this will be on the market soon after the water is turned into the Culebra cut, when the excavation work will be taken up almost entirely by dredges.

Just how much is to be saved to the government by the sale of the canal machinery cannot even be guessed at, but it will run well into the millions of dollars without question.

The dry excavation on the canal is done by steam shovel and the digging under water by dredges. In the dry work 600 steam drills are used in drilling the material for blasting, 200 steam shovels dig the earth and rock and lift it upon dirt cars, 5,000 cars carry it to the dumps and 158 modern locomotives—many of them oil burning—haul the trains. In addition to these, there are 1,000 cars in general service and 1,560 freight cars on the Panama railroad, 112 old French locomotives, 32 narrow gauge locomotives and 12 electric locomotives in use. Miscellaneous equipment for the dry excavation consists of 50 machines for spreading soil on the dumps, 10 machines for lifting long sections of railroad tracks, ties and all; 20 for unloading soil from the flatcars, 60 locomotive cranes and 20 pile drivers.

The equipment for wet excavation is on just the same sort of scale, and in addition there is the machinery for mixing and laying the cement and the most complete shops for repairing the machinery ever built.

Figured in dollars, the cost of the canal will be $375,000,000, but the salvage on material and machinery will easily total $25,000,000, so that in round figures the cost will be $350,000,000.

THE DRESS QUESTION.

What to Wear and How to Get It—Sensible Styles go Cheek by Jowl With Flamboyants.

People who have the requisite introductions have seen all the models launched for this season, but only a prophetic vision can tell which ones will achieve success. It is always safer however to buy the model that is becoming, for even if this proves too popular, a few minor changes can be affected that will individualize it for the wearer, and its complimentary effect remains a permanent satisfaction. No style is good style for the wearer unless it suits her personality and surroundings.

SILKS.

Taffeta is back in favor again for dresses, trimmings and blouses, but in weaves that drape nearly as closely as Charmeuse. Plaids and brocades and Pompadour figures of taffeta ground are all very much to the fore, though Charmeuse and all the related satin finished silks remain popular as heretofore, and the wool backed satins will be extensively used for suits, wraps and combinations. Moires, crinkly crepes and chiffons printed or brocaded with big, sprawly velvet figures, and metal brocades for vests and trimming effects are all in the running. Silk gowns and suits are more worn in the street this Autumn, than has been customary for a long time.

SHORT GOWNS.

Short gowns are the rule for all occasions, for the dancing craze has made these desirable however elaborate, the get-up, and shoes and hosiery are increasingly varied and fancy in style and coloring to keep pace with their importance in the effect of every sort of toilette. From tailored street frock to split dinner dress the object seems to be to display a well dressed foot to best advantage. Bronze leather with cloth uppers to match or contrast makes stunning boots to go with dresses of brown or to match the brown fur used as trimming. Suede or buckskin dyed to exactly match the dress with or without foxings of black patent leather, are especially pretty. More tan shoes are worn than ever, owing to the vogue of browns and yellow tones, though of course, the majority of women still cling to the all black boot that makes the foot appear small and goes with any toned costume.

COLORS.

Yellow in all tones is exceedingly fashionable so much so that yellow fox skins have climbed to hitherto unknown heights in favor and in price. All sorts of furs are dyed yellow for trimmings and moufflin in clear mustard tone is very much used for collars and trimmings on handsome wraps. In fact the newest fad is to dye skins in any color desired as a match or contrast with no regard for nature's hues. Brown in all tones especially a very dark shade hardly distinguishable from black, and in red Havana tone and rich purples, greens from Nile to bottle shades, including sages and olives. Red like currant juice in color are used for girdles and smaller dashes to emphasize lines or make for becomingness and silver, especially silver lace is the trimming touch par excellence of the latest modes.

ACCESSORIES.

Bags of brocaded taffeta in soft rounded shapes, hung on moire handles with slides for their adjustment, with linings of cream bengaline accord so perfectly with new Fall costumes that they are irresistibly attractive. Belts of plaided and brocaded taffeta finished with bows and metal buckles are worn with plain colored frocks and blouses. Adjustable fichus with wired Medici ruffles dress up plain waists and transform low cut blouses into suitable street lines.

NEW BLOUSES.

Transparency is the dominating note in waists of all types, but well bred people conceal these under suitable wraps, when walking or going about in public places and vehicles.

Properly worn these styles are both pretty and comfortable, in the rather overheated rooms to which we are accustomed. Net makes most of the foundations and the overlays are shadow laces, chiffon cloths, other nets, and empiecements of ribbon, lace or embroidery, while a line of narrow fur, skunk or sable, or their imitations is notable in the trimmings of many of the smartest and daintiest models.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

LARGE NIGHT SCHOOLS

Remarkable Increase In Attendance

School Notes in General

Wednesday evening, the second in the night school term, produced an increase of atendance that is remarkable, in consideration of the fact that the attendance last year was supposed to have reached high water mark.

The Adams school had 225 people present, compared with 110 last year the corresponding night. The Willard school had an attendance of 124 against 90 of last year on the corresponding night.

The Adams school is seriously handicapped by the fact that the new building is not ready, as then the small seats could be taken out of two more rooms in the old building and larger ones substituted, so that accommodations could be made for all without crowding.

Notwithstanding the discouraging weather, the evening school classes have opened in a most promising way. It has been the aim of the superintendent of schools each year to make a gain in the attendance of those residents of the city who are unable to read and write. Two years ago, the School Committee tried the experiment of having some teachers on its evening corps who were able to speak the language of the foreigners who come to school, with a success that has led to an enlargement of the policy each succeeding year.

This year pupils speaking either French, Egyptian, Syrian, Finnish, Italian or Yiddish can find a teacher who is able to converse with them freely, and to whom they may be assigned for elementary instruction. One interesting fact noted on Monday night was the presence of a great number who have never been to evening school before. At the Willard school of the 115 people who entered, more than 100 had never been in the school before, which is some index of the shifting character of this population.

The class for English speaking people in elementary and commercial subjects was so large that a third teacher has been required who will devote all his attention to those preparing for civil service examinations.

Shipyard Register.

The Superintendent of Schools received a letter Wednesday from the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, stating that they were preparing a register of all their employees who have taken advantage of any of the trade courses offered by the City of Quincy. They state that they need this information and register for use in considering employees for vacancies as they may come in their various departments. It is expected that the register will serve as a valuable aid in making selections of employees who have qualified themselves for advancement. The lesson to be drawn from this letter is so plain as to require no comment.

Soccer Football.

Lovers of clean school boy sport will be interested in the annual series of soccer football games now scheduled between the teams representing the different grammar schools. The schedule calls for games all through the present month and until the school championship is decided. The soccer game is making great headway with the school boys and has long since passed the experimental stage and become a favorite sport. The schedule should have started Monday, but the weather has been unfavorable.

School Gains.

The summary of monthly attendance at the public schools, printed last week, shows some interesting variations over the September average attendance of 1912. The High School gained 65, Atherton Hough 10, John Hancock 15, Lincoln 28, Massachusetts Fields 10, Quincy 40, Washington 28, Willard 17. On the other hand, the only pronounced loss was at the Gridley Bryant 21. This school has been losing school population steadily for a number of years.

Convention Opened.

The annual convention of the Massachusetts Branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers Association begins today in Gloucester, and continues through the week. A very attractive program has been prepared for the entertainment of the delegates, and several of the associations in Quincy will send representatives. The number of these associations in Massachusetts is increasing steadily, and a great deal of effective work is being done by them.

Coddington Association.

A meeting of the Parents-Teachers' Association of the Coddington school will be held in the Assembly Hall, Wednesday evening, Oct. 15, at 8 o'clock. Robert O. Small, Deputy State Commissioner of Education, will speak on "Some suggestions relative to vocational training for the grammar school student." Mrs. Ada Scholes will favor the association with vocal selections; Miss Bertha F. Estes will preside at the piano. Light refreshments will be served. A large attendance is desired.

Washington School.

The first meeting of the season of the Parents and Teachers association of the Washington school was held Wednesday evening at the school at 8 o'clock, acting president, Elijah P. Barrows, presiding. After the reading of the records of the last meeting, Mr. Barrows announced as the subject of the evening's discussion the proposed plans for the enlargement of the school building.

Principal Pollard spoke of the present condition of the school, stating that a former dressing room and the teacher's room are now in use as school rooms on account of the lack of accommodations in the school rooms.

Mr. Barrows explained the plans for enlargement by the addition of four rooms and a hall as submitted by Mr. Wright, the architect, and endorsed by the School Committee.

Councilman Griffin told of how far the matter had progressed before the City Council.

Arthur W. Newcomb of the School Committee,who was largely responsible for having the plans prepared, spoke of ways and means of arousing public interest, and urging upon the Council the importance of the proposed addition. He advised the appointment of a committee to have general charge of the campaign.

Councilman Duffy spoke of the heavy expenses of our city and the difficulties that might be encountered in carrying the scheme through. Before adjournment it was voted that the appointment of the committee proposed by Mr. Newcomb be left to the executive committee of the association to report at the next meeting.

DAILY LEDGER MISREPRESENTED

People of Quincy who prize photographs should hesitate to give them to strangers. Quite frequently people come to the Daily Ledger office and request the return of photographs borrowed for some Quincy paper. They are usually photographs of women which the Daily Ledger never solicits or prints. They are wanted for certain Boston papers which do not hesitate to misrepresent the facts. Photographs loaned to such men are seldom returned. The Daily Ledger will pay a reward for information which will convict a person who misrepresents himself as a representative of the Daily Ledger, either personally, by letter or by telephone.

ATLANTIC IMPROVEMENT

Society Interested in Many Needs of Ward Six

The Atlantic Improvement Association at its first meeting of the season in Ward Six Patriotic Association hall took in more new members than at any other meeting since the Association was organized. Men from all parts of Atlantic and some of the oldest residents were received.

A committee on street car service was elected to act in conjunction with the Squantum Committee to confer with the railway officials and ask to have the 7.30 A. M. car go direct to the high school.

President George Baker gave a strong address on the need of better postal service stating, that the letter carrying force had not been increased sufficiently, if any, to correspond with the growth of Atlantic and that the letter carrier was loaded more like a pack mule than any man that was representing Uncle Sam. A committee was appointed to confer with the Postmaster General and let him know conditions.

A committee man was also appointed to look into the police conditions of Atlantic . Some reported that Wollaston and Wollaston Park were by far better policed than Atlantic, and one man answered that it was to Atlantic's credit that we did not need police.

The sentiment was strong that the association would not meet to have a constant kick at the administration and men who are handling public affairs, but if things were not satisfactory to quietly see the men who have charge of departments. Words of appreciation were spoken of the councilmen of the ward as men of integrity, ability and large sightedness.

F. E. Brooks gave a talk on the shores being polluted by the sewerage and stated that it was his conviction that the trouble did not come from Moon island as it was drained in the most scientific manner when the tide was one hour on the ebb. He rather thought that the Houghs Neck pumping station that discharges continuously was where most of the pollution came from.

Ex-president Kenyon of the Squantum Association spoke on the Boston Harbor sewerage and confirmed all that Mr. Brooks said.

John R. Nelson of Squantum spoke on the development of the city and its problems, and said that things were brought about by one thing that is "work." He outlined in detail much that Squantum has done and attributed all of the success to the work of the committees.

C. E. Carlson was introduced as the next councilman of Ward Six. Mr. Carlson outlined a plan that would save the property owners from the large taxes and develop the city so that people would want to come and build homes here. He showed how the city could in thirty years be entirely free from debt and enlarge its population so as to be a wide awake energetic city.

One of the new voices was John Abbott of Ocean street. Mr. Abbott spoke enthusiastically for Atlantic,—that he was delighted with his home and surroundings and the sociability of the people. He seemed optimistic that Quincy city affairs would go in the right direction and that developments would come.

C. N. Wood was introduced and applauded for opening up Ocean street to the Boulevard at his own expense.

After the meeting refreshments were served.

—We are again in receipt of complaints, says the Milford Gazette, that the Gazette does not reach some of our subscribers within a reasonable time. Papers which leave the local post-office for the 1 o'clock train Friday noon ought to be delivered in towns within a few miles of Boston before the following Monday, but that has been the experience of one of our subscribers for the past two weeks. As the newspapers must reach the Boston post-office by 3 o'clock, it is natural to conclude that the cause of the delay is in that office. The attention of the postal authorities has been called to the matter in the hope that the trouble may be remedied. The Gazette has the sympathy of the Patriot as it is often unable to get the Patriot through the Boston post office before Monday or Tuesday to subscribers within two miles of the office of publication. Let's unite and kick. Something is surely rotten in Denmark.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

In the hurry of the present day world we often want the latest writings on current subject and one of the best means of obtaining them is from the magazines of which the library has a good selection. The material is made easily accessible by the Readers' Guide to periodical literature which stands at the left of the delivery desk as you enter the library. This comes once every month, and gives reference under author, subject and title to all the material contained in the magazines which it indexes of which there is a list in the front of each volume. In order to find out for which of these periodicals the library subscribes it will be necessary to refer to these lists which have been checked.

Readers' Guide began in 1900 and for material preceding that year, Pooles' index may be consulted. This covers the period from 1802 to 1902.

The annual Library index includes several magazines not indexed in Readers' Guide and covers the years from 1892 to 1910. Since then it has given us the indexing of periodicals and has taken as its main feature the the indexing of dates of current events. It also gives a necrology of writers deceased during the year, bibliographies published and other news of like character.

Readers' Guide is now including some of the magazines formerly in the Annual library index, such as Munsey and Literary Digest.

In these indexes the name of the periodical, the number of the volume, the inclusive pages and the month and year are given in the above order.

Readers" Guide also indexes some of the latest books of interest, a list of which is given in the front of each index, this list being also checked to indicate those which are in the library.

TWO CAPSIZED.

The rear wheel of a motor cycle, driven by Charles Yule and carrying Joseph Betts as a passenger, got caught in the car tracks near North street Wednesday morning and when the cycle upset both young men were heavily thrown but escaped without injury. Yule was hurled over the handle bars like a shot out of a gun and struck on the curbing, and Betts was thrown to one side, landing on the sidewalk. The wheel got caught as they turned onto the track to avoid the danger of riding on the slippery surface of Washington street and had just headed eastward when they were tossed. The accident was witnessed by a car crowded with passengers and the drivers of several teams. The machine was not damaged.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE SCHOOL.

Washington, May 28—"Why Girls Leave School" is the title of a bulletin issued today by the United States Bureau of Education based on an inquiry made by its experts into trade and labor conditions among girls in Worcester, Mass. The claim that children are forced to leave school work because their parents need the money is repudiated by the officials of the Bureau. They found that from one-half to three-fourths of the girls at work in the factories could have had further schooling if they had desired or if their parents had insisted upon it.

Various reasons were assigned by the girls for their refusal to attend school longer according to the Bureau. Some said "they did not like school"; others "could not get along with the teacher and were not promoted," while many simply "wanted to go to work." Only 17 per cent of the girls questioned had finished the grammar schools while most of them had left in the sixth and seventh grades.

"Conditions such as were found," says the bulletin, "emphasize the imperative need for special training of a practical sort for girls between the ages of thirteen and fifteen. Not getting the kind of training they might have liked and would have profited by, they blindly joined the army of shifting, inefficient discontented girls that go from one monotonous factory job to another, and because of their lack of training, rarely rise above the class of low-paid unskilled workers."

EAGLES WILL PARADE.

John Adams aerie of Eagles chose Hugh J. McLeod conductor of their degree team at the meeting Wednesday evening in Electa hall. They voted to march in a body in the Columbus Day parade at Brockton and a place in the line will be assigned them close to the North Dakota float, which is now in the hands of the Brockton aerie. Arrangements for transportation will be made at a meeting of the committee on Friday evening. The degree team will go to New Bedford the latter part of the month to conduct one of the largest class initiations ever held in the state. It was at New Bedford they won the championship title in competition with the best in the state and they hope to present as fine an appearance on this visit.

ADAMS A. A. BANQUET.

The Adams A. A., a social club of South Quincy which was represented several years ago by the fastest amateur base ball team in the city, will hold its reunion banquet at the United States Hotel, Boston on their anniversary date, Oct. 23. The committee in charge is exerting all its efforts toward a program that will outdo any of their past successes and a fine list of speakers will be secured for the occasion. The team suspended its base ball triumphs and was succeeded by the Orients, who find it difficult to keep up to the standard.

TOO RAINY FOR SOCCER.

Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director of the grammar schools, is practically convinced that the rainy season intends to interfere with his soccer football schedule throughout the whole season for to date he has had no opportunity to open his season on the Merrymount Park field. The players are becoming anxious and from the indications today the opening will again be delayed. If Friday is good Quincy and Washington will play, but who knows anything about this kind of weather.

THREE NEW BATLESHIPS.

The aim of the Wilson administration in shaping its naval policy for the December session of Congress is three new battleships, it is said. It became known this week that in all probability Secretary Daniels of the navy department would put into effect his idea of "less money ashore and more afloat" and advocate using a large part of an apropriation of $148,000,000 to build three powerful warships, one more than the usual quota, though only a single battleship was obtained after a sharp contest in the last Congress.

NEIGHBOR SAW SHACKFORD DIE

Hurriedly Summoned by Wife of Murdered Man

THREE BULLET HOLES IN HEAD

Says Woman Was Unaffected by Death Bed Scene—Calmly Rocked Baby Throughout Husband's Last Moments—Accused Woman and Her Hired Man Occupy Cells In Jail

Freedom, N. H., Oct. 9.—An important witness, who was in the room with Edwin Shackford before he died of wounds his wife confessed to have administered, was found late last night. He is Milton Towle, a farmer living near the Shackford home.

Towle promises to be a most important witness for the government. He was the last man to see Shackford alive, after he had been shot.

"About 3:30 on the morning of the murder I was called from bed by Mrs. Shackford, the accused woman," said Towle.

"'Hurry, hurry,' she cried, 'Edwin has been shot.'

"I got out of bed, looked out of the window and saw Mrs. Shackford outside in the yard. She was fully dressed. Again she told me to hurry, as her husband had been shot by robbers who entered the house. In her arms she held an 18-months-old baby. My wife got up at the same time.

"I told Mrs. Shackford I would be right down. She went back towards her own house and I dressed and went in an opposite direction for Nathaniel Roberts, a neighbor. Roberts and I went to the Shackford house.

"Mrs. Shackford was in the room where her husband lay in bed. She was rocking the baby. Shackford lay on his right side. I turned the light up. She was not crying. During this time she did not speak.

"I looked at Shackford as closely as I could in the dim lamp light. There were three holes in his head. 'Edwin,' I cried, 'don't you know me?'

"He did not answer. The only sound was a continuous gurgling as he breathed. Roberts hastened away to telephone for Dr. Martin of Eaton. Just as the doctor came, he died without a groan. The doctor put his hand on Shackford's bosom and turning to Mrs. Shackford, said: 'He is dead.'

"'No, no, no,' she cried, still sitting in the chair. 'It isn't so.' I went out then and left her there alone with her baby, still sitting in the rocking chair. Later in the day I saw her out in the yard bringing wood from the pile near the barn to the kitchen. She seemed to be all right and was not crying. She brought in about five armfuls of wood."

The accused woman spent yesterday at the county jail at Ossipee. In the cell room with her were three other prisoners. Mrs. Shackford talked incessantly. In a loud, strident voice, she could be heard condemning the newspapers and reporters and expressing her determination to ignore them.

Mrs. Shackford's home is closed. The doors are tightly locked. A man comes twice a day to tend the stock. The Shackford children have been at the home of their grandmother, Mrs. Edward Littlefield, at Eaton. There are four, the oldest being a boy of 7.

Hollis Bean, the hired man at the Shackford home, was unable to furnish the $1000 sureties necessary for his release, so was remanded to the county jail by Sheriff Chandler.

AN ARTIST'S LAST REQUEST

Suicide Would Have Body Fed to Homeless Cats and Dogs

New York, Oct. 9.—An artist and a poet and unsuccessful at both, Alexander Bock took his life by inhaling gas in his studio, 519 East Fifteenth street. He surrounded himself with oil paintings and charcoal drawings—his own work. This letter lay in his lap:

"I do not believe in any kind of religion or in any God. The authorities of this city may feed my body to the homeless dogs and cats of this city."

PLAGUE LAID TO RATS

Mysterious Malady Kills Nearly Dozen Children In Few Days

Bellingham, Wash., Oct. 9.—Nearly a dozen children have died here within a few days from a mysterious malady, and a number of others are not expected to recover.

Dr. Kelly, state health commissioner, issued a warning, saying the disease resembled an oriental plague introduced into this country by rats. Health authorities are trying to devise means to keep rats from getting ashore from ships.

No Moving Saloons In Ohio

Columbus, O., Oct. 9.—On and after Nov. 4 no mint juleps, no cocktails, not even whiskey straight, sour wine or beer, will be served on railroad dining cars in Ohio. Attorney General Hogan has found the constitution forbids a moving saloon.

Severe Storm Visits St. Louis

St. Louis, Oct. 9.—A heavy hailstorm, succeeded by a cloudburst and a high wind, broke over the western part of St. Louis, flooding streets, breaking windows and tearing down trees and sign boards.

END OF WAR IN HAYTI

Peace Brought About by Good Offices of the United States

Santo Domingo, Oct. 9.—The American minister to the Dominican republic, James M. Sullivan, has induced the warring factions in this country to sign a peace pact and the revolution headed by General Vasquez against the government of Provisional President Valdez is thus brought to an end.

The American minister's action in bringing about a settlement of the differences between the government and the rebels is the first successful application and administration of the United States government's new Latin-American policy with regard to the Dominican republic, which is to the effect that the force of arms can never again settle any question in this country.

The American policy has been accepted joyously by all parties, regardless of political affiliations.

FOSS PAPERS FILED

Governor Has Enough Names to Run as Independent Candidate

Boston, Oct. 9.—William H. Dyer, formerly president of the Middlesex club, a famous Republican organization, dropped a bomb into the political situation by filing with the election board nomination papers for Governor Foss. There were 547 names upon the papers.

Until the filing of the Foss papers by Dyer it was not known who any of the active men in the Foss campaign were, with the exception of Ex-Mayor Hall of Cambridge, now of Newton, who a few days ago took out about 100 Foss papers.

Hall now has a sufficient number of names to nominate Foss. He stated that there would be more than twice as many as are needed. The law prescribes only 1000 names from any part of the estate.

KILLS THREE AND COMMITS SUICIDE

Young Church Worker Overcome by Religious Mania

Liverpool, Oct. 9.—A fit of religious mania caused a youthful church worker here, William McDonald, to run amuck with a loaded revolver, with which he shot dead three of his fellow church workers and then committed suicide.

McDonald paid a round of visits to the residences of his colleagues in church work at about midnight and shot them down in turn, afterward battering their bodies with a bludgeon.

Apparently there were no witnesses of the series of tragedies, and the only evidence found was a nearly empty revolver and a bloody bludgeon clasped in McDonald's hands when his body was discovered.

The four young people were active workers for a sect known as the "Church of Humanity."

FIVE DIE FROM GAS

Rabbi and Four Children Are Suffocated While They Sleep

New York, Oct. 9.—Solomon Schasser and four of his children, Samuel, 12 years old; Bessie, 7; Goldie, 6, and Herman, 3, were found dead in the Schasser apartment, overcome by gas. The mother and a daughter were removed to a hospital unconscious, and are not expected to live.

Twenty-five cents' worth of gas filled the three small rooms in which the family made their home on the East Side. Someone had put a quarter in the meter, and the Schassers went to sleep with gas escaping from two jets that were turned on slightly.

Schasser was an itinerant rabbi who had been in this country but a few months, coming from Russia.

VERMONT'S MAPLE TREES

They Produced 6,682,063 Pounds of Sugar and 455,403 Gallons of Syrup

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 9.—Just how much genuine Vermont maple sugar has reached the markets has hitherto been a matter of some dispute. The last legislature provided for a census of the crop and this has been completed.

It shows that last spring 6,682,063 pounds of maple sugar and 455,403 gallons of maple syrup were produced in this state. To obtain this amount of sweetness, 5,076,375 trees were tapped. According to the census report, 4,808,947 trees available for use were not tapped.

Negroes Must Keep Out

Sulzer's Secretary Tries In Vain to Save His Chief

SOME DAMAG NG ADMISSIONS

Big Contributions to Campaign Concealed by Governor—Responsibility For Inadequate Accounts Brought Close to Executive—Defense Rests Without Calling Sulzer

Albany, Oct. 9.—Without calling either Governor Sulzer or his wife to the witness stand, his counsel rested their defense.

According to Mr. Herrick, chief of his attorneys, Sulzer decided not to defend himself in person because he did not want to be placed in the position of shielding himself behind his wife—for it was for Mrs. Sulzer, according to the testimony, that Sulzer had his Wall street dealings.

Out of a maze of interrogations which moved through hours, responsibility for Sulzer's inadequate election expense account was brought very close to the impeached executive.

Despite the attempt of Louis A. Sarecky, former confidential secretary to Sulzer, to shoulder all responsibility and save his chief, he was pressed to the limit and finally admitted:

That although he prepared the incorrect affidavit of expenses which the governor swore to, at Sulzer's request, the candidate never told him of cash or checks received by him personally, and some of those were included.

That he destroyed all records of campaign receipts.

That he destroyed all records of campaign expenditures.

That he destroyed all cancelled checks and all stubs.

That although he destroyed all this evidence he was perfectly familiar with the operation of the corrupt practices law.

That while he recollected receiving heavy contributions from brewers and the liquor interests, he could give no good reason why only a single one of such contributions was included in the expense account.

That although he realized the $2500 contribution received from Jacob H. Schiff was far and away the largest contribution he personally received, he could not "think of a single reason" why he omitted it from the sworn statement.

This testimony was put in the record only after a long, hard legal fight.

In effect it showed the governor had a double-barrelled system under which the little fish went to Saracky's net, while he kept the big fish for his own, and that when the task of making a report on the catch came, the keeper of the little net was left with the job, without having any tidings as to what the major fisherman had caught.

In the main Sarecky made a fine witness and stuck very close to his original story. But he was forced to leave material gaps in the fortification he was constructing about his chief by his failure to suggest plausible excuses for his many acts.

PREVENTS SLAYER KILLING HIMSELF

Child Saves Man's Life After He Murders Wife

Bangor, Me., Oct. 9.—Rance Grasse, widely known as one of the most daring river drivers in the state, shot and instantly killed Mrs. Nettie G. Appleby, 37 years old, his divorced wife, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Florence Torrens, in this city.

Marcia Torrens, the 12-year-old niece of the murdered woman, ran into the kitchen just as her aunt died. As Grasse pressed the smoking revolver to his own temple to blow out his brains, the child seized his arm and pulled the weapon away.

After calling in one of the neighbors Grasse walked away. The police and a posse of deputies from the sheriff's office are patrolling the roads in automobiles in an endeavor to intercept the fugitive before he reaches the big north woods.

HELPING HER LAWYERS

Mrs. Eaton of Great Assistance In Planning Her Defense

Rockland, Mass., Oct. 9.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, who will next week go on trial for the murder of her husband, the late Rear Admiral Eaton, has given her counsel great assistance in the preparation of her case, according to a statement by Attorney Morse, who is directing the defense.

"We are not only confident that she will be acquitted," said Morse, "but her trial will show plainly that she is innocent of the charge.

Mrs. Eaton's counsel declared that their refusal to let District Attorney Barker's alientists examine her was that they did not think, after six months, that she should be subjected to such a hardship.

A SINGULAR MARRIAGE

It Was to Serve a Legal Purpose

By EDNA C. TRASK

My father died when I was nineteen, leaving me a fortune. He had made it by building up a business in which he was much interested and always regretted that I had not been born a boy that I might succeed him in its management. Since that could not be he made arrangements before his death for the succession, but left the greater part of the stock of the company to me. At the time of his death his lawyer, Mr. Crocker, who was also his most intimate friend, was abroad, but was expected home within a few weeks. Nevertheless my father had named Mr. Crocker to be my guardian.

Mr. Crocker was taken ill abroad and was a long while regaining his health. Not considering himself fitted for business, he remained away nearly a year longer than had been expected. One morning immediately after his arrival I received a telephone message from him to come to his office at once. It was then 11 o'clock, and I promised him that I would be there within a quarter of an hour.

The moment I arrived he took me into his private office and shut the door.

"Are you engaged to be married?" he asked quickly.

"No."

"Is there any young man whom you would like to marry?"

"No. Why do you ask these questions?"

"The extension of my trip abroad has turned awry your father's intentions for you. He had no faith in a woman's ability to manage property and appointed me your guardian till you reach the age of twenty-one years, or the 21st day of November, which is today. He also willed that if you married with my approval of your husband your fortune was to be turned over to you. If you were not so married by noon today the estate was to be kept in the business, you to receive $100 a month from it, the principal to be ultimately used to found an institution to bear the testator's name."

Great heavens—a hundred dollars a month! I had been used to spending more than that for pin money.

"What shall I do?" I cried. "I know no one I wish to marry or who wishes to marry me."

"I think I can save your property to you by formally complying with the provisions laid down. You can marry, but need not live with your husband and in time get a divorce. These persons who try to tie up property after their death usually make a mess of it. I have had only an hour in which to act, for I did not read the will till I came to the office an hour ago, but I have already made an arrangement by which you may be married at once. There is now waiting in another room a man who will marry you, with the understanding that the marriage is merely to conform to the law. If you don't care to live with him"—

"Care to live with him! Of course I won't care to live with him!" I exclaimed.

"In that case, in due time I will see that you secure a divorce."

"Why does the man consent to marry me?"

"I will see that he doesn't suffer by the transaction—that is," he added, "in case he does not fall in love with his wife."

"Let me see him," I moaned. "No, I don't wish to see him. I am to marry him to evade the law. I don't care who or what he is."

"Your decision?" queried Mr. Crocker.

"On the terms," was my reply, "I'll marry Old Nick."

A tap on a bell brought an attendant, and Mr. Crocker directed him to summon the two gentlemen in the outer room.

"Oh, heavens!" I exclaimed. "Are there two of them?"

"One is a clergyman," Mr. Crocker explained, with a faint smile.

The moment they entered I stared at the groom to be. I gave a sigh of relief, for in case anything should go wrong I felt that I might have every confidence in him. He did not show the same eager curiosity in me that I had for him, looking at me with a reassuring smile. Mr. Crocker introduced him, but I did not hear his name or the complimentary things that were said about him. All the young man said was that he would be happy to help me out of a difficulty and that I need not fear for a moment that he would take advantage of the legal knot that was to be tied between us. As for me, I didn't open my mouth, but submitted to be led like a lamb to the slaughter.

In order to keep up appearances—that is, to avoid a swoon or a breakdown of some kind during the ceremoney—I exercised my will power to fancy that I was a happy bride, marrying the man of my choice. I got on tolerably well till I heard the words "man and wife;" then things began to grow confused about me, and I knew nothing more till I found myself lying on an office lounge, looking up into the most sympathetic, kindly, loving—yes, it was loving—face I ever saw.

Then I heard persons leaving the room, and presently all was still. I judged that I was alone with my—legal—husband.

"Poor child!"

"I hope," I said, "that you don't consider my breaking down in this way any want of compliment to you. It was the suddenness of it, the—the"—I was stalled.

"It would be very foolish in me," he said, "to consider my individuality of any importance whatever in the matter. I am simply that legal party, Mr. John Doe, who is constantly disputing with Richard Roe. You, being a woman, can't be Richard Roe. I suppose, however, you might be Richarda Roe. But we need never have any of the legal squabbles of these two ancient and honorable parties, for we are not to be together, and you can rely on Mr. Crocker to get you out of it without any trouble whatever. I see no necessity of your giving up your maiden name except in signing documents. This legal condition need not last a year, I am sure, and will be scarcely a ripple on the surface of your life."

"You are very nice about it, and I have every confidence in you. How did Mr. Crocker come to select you for the purpose?"

"I am under great obligations to your late father."

"You! Under obligations to papa!"

"Yes. Fifteen years ago, when I was a boy, he took me into his business and advanced me till at the time of his death I was his principal manager."

"You are not Edward Keane?"

"I am."

How singular! I was married to Edward Keane. Ten years before a young man of twenty had come one day to the house from my father's office with a message for him. I was then a girl of ten and saw him but a few moments. Since then I had heard of Edward Keane, whom my father was intending to place at the head of his business when he should leave it. The young man had been to the house a number of times since, but I had always been away, either at school or visiting, at the time of his coming. I was lost in wonder at this happening and was tongue tied. Presently I asked him if the marriage was the carrying out of a plan laid by my father before his death.

"I only know," he replied, "that not two hours ago Mr. Crocker summoned me here in great haste and told me that my benefactor's daughter must be married before noon or lose her inheritance. He asked me if I would consent to be a legal husband till the property could be turned over to you and would pledge myself to leave you free and consent to a divorce at any time you desired. I told him that I would do anything in my power for your father's daughter. Besides, I have seen you once or twice when you have not seen, or perhaps have not noticed, me."

"And you did not marry me for a—for a consideration?"

"Yes; the consideration of being of service to you."

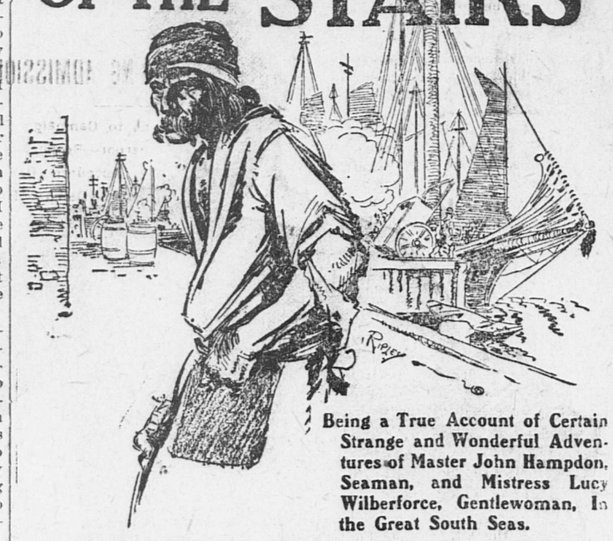
We chatted some time longer, when my husband prepared to call in Mr. Crocker and ask him for a full statement of the case. He came and told us that it was my father's wish that I should marry Edward Keane. My father had stipulated that I was to do so or the provision already stated was to be enforced. Mr. Crocker was relied on to make this match, if possible. His failure to return as soon as expected came very near costing me a fortune. When he found that he must act at once he did so with his accustomed rapidity and talent for management. He had married me as my father desired, and it remained with me and my husband whether we should make the marriage real as well as legal. After giving us this explanation he retired, leaving us again alone together.

"What shall we do?" I remarked, as much to myself as to him.

"You can do nothing unless I ask you to be my wife till death do us part, as your father desired. Will you?"

We remained together where we were for an hour longer. At first I was disposed to put off a decision, but before we left I had consented. There was nothing more to do but make an announcement of our marriage and go on our wedding journey.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS



Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea an the treasure isle, of long hu gems and bad men's guile, o perils on land and wave wel met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

From English fields to south sea shore their path they follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

"Well, sir?"

The words came to me through the partition. She was there, then, as I had divined. She had been there all the time, trying me.

"I would fain have a word with you," I answered, putting everything else by and speaking most entreatingly and with a humility I did not altogether feel.

"I desire no speech with you," was her cold and measured answer.

I could hear her turn as if to move away.

"Think of my long and faithful service," I urged, "and of your gracious friendship for me, often expressed."

"You yourself forgot it tonight."

"For God's sake," I cried desperately as I heard her go, "just one word."

"An apology? Do you beg forgiveness?"

"No—yes—anything!" I finished in confusion.

"I will not listen. I wish to convince you of the enormity of what you have done, the grossness of your presumption. I will give you time for quiet reflection, sir."

"I am convinced already," I urged hurriedly.

"So easily?" she mocked.

"Madam, if you love life and honor I pray you hear me. It is not of myself I think, but of you. You are in grave peril," returned I with the utmost seriousness.

"What peril?"

There was a note of alarm in her voice in spite of her effort to be indifferent. I seized upon its promise eagerly.

"The men of the ship—they are not what they should be. Captain Matthews is alone. Pimball is a villain. I trust no one but"—

"And is this the plea on which you seek enlargement?"

"That is the only plea."

"You did not discover this danger until I locked you up, did you?"

"I tell you that it is not for myself I fear, but for you," I persisted.

"And was it for that you insulted me on the quarterdeck before the men? I will hear no more. It is a foolish plea. The men are devoted to me and"—

"For God's sake, Mistress Lucy," I cried, but this time she was gone.

I heard the door of her cabin shut violently. There was no help for it. Well, I must devise some way unaided, for I must get out for her sake. The cabin was lighted by an air port closed by a deadeye. I measured it, drew back the thick glass and examined the opening, although I knew it was a futile proposition. A slender boy might have slipped through, but not a man such as I. My mighty thews and sinews and great bulk required a door, and no small one either.

The wind had ceased blowing hard outside, and some spray came in through the port as the waves slapped the side of the ship. I closed and secured it. There was nothing to be gained there. I must seek some other way.

I was not weaponless. Nobody had thought to search the cabin, and a brace of pistols which I always kept loaded and ready for an emergency were locked securely in my chest. My hanger hung at the side of my berth. The door was a strong one. It was locked and barred without. I might have broken it down; I could have done so if I had had space enough in which to run and hurl myself against it. I might even have kicked it to pieces with my heavy seaman's boot. Certainly I could easily have blown the lock off with my pistol, but any of these endeavors would have roused the ship.

I had one other hope. If Captain Matthews should come to the cabin I would appeal to him. For the rest I determined not to sleep that night. Some strange foreboding possessed me.

We were near the latitude and longitude of the island we were seeking, if indeed there were such an island as was thought to be, and I reasoned that the men would argue now and it would be a good time for an outbreak, especially since I was removed. Would it come that night? Would it come at all? Was I mistaken in the men?

I have often wondered why women were made, and since they were made, why men should be such fools about them. Here I was helpless just because I had snatched a kiss from one. And now that I am in the mood for confession, I might as well say that I fully rejoiced in that kiss.

Well, whatever happened, I had the memory of that kiss. She would never forgive me. Of course there was absolutely no hope that she would return my suit, even in her poverty. She was not for such as I, and if there was anything in this old buccaneer's parchment, if there was an island and if she did get the treasure, why, the world would be at her feet again. And I like the fool I was, was helping her to get it, to bring it about. I was mad aye, mad, with impotent helplessness that night.

I sat there in the dark, no light being vouchsafed to me, and the lights in the outer cabin not having been lighted for a long time. The wind rose and rose. The ship was pitching madly. My room was on the starboard side of the cabin, and presently I heard all hands called to reef the topsails. Captain Matthews was alert and ready, of course. Presently he put the ship about, and with the canvas off of her she was steadier. There did not seem to be any especial danger in the weather, and for that I was thankful.

I must have dozed. I was awakened by the last echoing of the bell forward. I didn't know what time it was, because I didn't know whether I had heard it begin to strike, but I could count three couples, which meant that it was 11 o'clock at least. I didn't know, of course, that it was eight bells, midnight, until the voice of the boatswain came to me through the bulkhead that separated the cabin from the quarterdeck:

"A—a—all the port watch!"

I could hear the men below grumbling and cursing as they turned out. They had evidently been sent below to the hammocks after the topsails had been reefed for a couple of hours in. I could hear scraps of conversation.

"Now!"

"Kill him!"

"This is the best time!"

"The old man's alone!"

What I heard filled me with dismay. I picked up the pistol and pointed it at the lock in the door. I had made up my mind, come what might, to blow off the lock and get free. Before I could press the trigger I heard a call on the deck above me, a shot, a rush of feet, a scuffle, a groan, a fall!

Mr. Willmott, pastor of the Bethany church was present and spoke of the ways in which the union might direct its efforts during the coming winter. These were improvements to the chapel, a memorial window to Miss Bumpus, and repairs to the Kitchen. Mrs. H. E. ASSAULT CASE IN QUINCY COURT

John Peterson was fined $10 in court Wednesday afternoon for assault on John P. Wickland at Quincy, and thereby hangs a tale.

Mr. Wickland up to a few weeks was a widower and Mrs. Wickland a widow. They agreed to get married and the ceremony was performed in due form. Last Friday Wickland missed his wife and upon going to look for her found her at Peterson's house where a beer party was in progress. Wickland's appearance started something and when he took his departure a few minutes after both eyes were closed up. It was Tuesday before he was able to see enough to get a warrant against Peterson which was given to Inspector Goodhue to serve.

Word was received that Peterson was seeking a new field of labor in North Carolina and that he was about to leave. Inspector Goohue visited the South Station and as the New York train was pulling out Peterson came running down the platform and jumped aboard the moving train. Inspector Goodhue grabbed him, and the brakeman pulled the bell rope stopping the train.

Peterson appeared in court late Wednesday, and paid $10, and in the afternoon he again started for North Carolina.

TO MARRY SATURDAY.

Lieut. Francis L. Gastaldi, a member of the Argentine Commission which superintended the construction of the superdreadnought Rivadavia at the Fore River yards, will be married at the Little Church Around the Corner, in New York on Saturday to Miss Jessie E. Rollins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rollins of Schnectady, N. Y. The ceremony was to have been performed last spring but owing to the illness of the bride was postponed.

—It appears that the Boston University law school has secured a tenstrike in securing ex-President Taft to deliver a course of lectures on "Legal ethics." That is a phase of the general subject upon which he feels strongly and expresses himself in no uncertain terms. It is also one that cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of young men preparing themselves for the practice of the legal profession. Unless they have some fixed standards to guide them in the application of what they have acquired, the exigencies of practical experience may sometimes pervert their methods no matter how high the general ideals with which they started out. Not merely the law students but the lawyers themselves might be benefited by taking a course in the ethics of their profession such as Mr. Taft is qualified to give.—Boston Transcript.

—A short time ago a brother journalist stated that one of his patrons, a grocer, who told him that he did not believe advertising paid,—as few read advertisements,—was induced to try the experiment of offering a two per cent discount on cash sales. He soon after acknowledged that it paid to advertise along that line, and that the two per cent discount on cash sales not only obtained for him many new customers, but induced a number of his old ones to purchase for cash instead of running long accounts, which often times caused him much annoyance to collect, besides tying up so much of his capital, and the expense for bookkeeping. It certainly seems fair that those who buy for cash should buy more cheaply than those who buy on credit, and only those who put the grocer to the expense and annoyance of running accounts, should pay for his trouble and make up his losses by bad customers.—Athol Chronicle.

CUP NIGHT OF QUINCY YACHT CLUB

Many Valuable Trophies Won the Past Season by Yachts of the Club

Address by Col. Kincaide, Mayor Stone and Others

Once a year the Quincy Yacht club holds what it is pleased to call a "cup night." The gathering takes place at the close of the season, and after a banquet the trophies won by the club yachts during the season are awarded This year the affair took place Thursday evening and was the occasion for a large gathering of members of this wide awake club and many of their friends and well wishers.

The evening opened with a banquet which was served at 6.45 by C. C. Whitemore, and was participated in by nearly 200. During the dinner, music was furnished by Childs orchestra with vocal selections by the Quincy Yacht club glee club. Their numbers included many of the popular airs such as "Be my little bumble bee," "In my Harem," "Row, row, row," "The trail of the lonesome pine", and other songs of a like character. In addition to these songs the chorus had many cheers which they sprung at every opportune time, the main cheer being, "Q. Y. C., Q. Y. C., Ready about, hard a lee" another was "Dollar, Dollar ,what do you expect for a dollar?" and so on. Some of the cheers were made up on the spur of the moment and they were sharp and right to the point.

The head table was laid crossways of the hall and at this table were seated, Commodore Harry S. Crane, who presided; Vice Commodore Edgar W. Emery, Secretary John O. Hall, Treasurer George S. Morse, ex-Commodores, Eben W. Sheppard, Frank Fessenden Crane, Herbert S. Robbins and Ira M. Whittemore; Col. Henry L. Kincaide, President John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade; Clarence Nickerson, Mayor Stone, Commodore Thompson B. Crane of the Town River Yacht club; Herbert Curtis, W. H. Huy, P. W. Laing, John Harland, president of the Interclub association; Will Carleton, Harry Strom and others.

The menu of the dinner included turkey, escalloped oysters, chicken and potato salad, mashed potatoes, cranberry sauce, rolls, coffee and ices of all kinds.

Nearly an hour was spent at dinner and after cigars had been lighted Commodore Crane briefly welcomed the members and guests. He said that he was glad to see so many out at the bringing to close of what has been a successful season. We have had good weather, good racing and many good times at the club, and he hoped that the efforts of the officers had been appreciated. The first speaker of the evening he said, would be a gentleman who had been a member of the club for twenty years although time did not permit of his attending many of the functions. That was Col. Henry L. Kincaide who had taken a sailing trip the past year to South America and he would tell the club something of this trip.

Col. Kincaide spoke for nearly an hour giving an interesting as well as instructive talk of the trip of the Chamber of Commerce party. He spoke first of the Panama canal, telling of what an enormous undertaking it had been, and how this stupendous piece of work had been successfully carried out. He also gave many details of the construction of the canal, and what the United States had done for its defence, with its concealed forts and regiments that were constantly on duty.

The trip had been one of 16,000 miles and was the greatest of any commercial organization. Everywhere the party went it was received with the utmost kindness and hospitality. He described at length the resources of the countries visited, its people, their mannerisms and customs and their methods of doing business, as well as the exceptional opportunities for the investment of American capital. During the three months trip, nine different nations had been visited and everywhere they were received with a kindly feeling. The one thing the trip had taught him was that the best way to enjoy the territory was to study the places you want to see.

Especially interesting was his description of his visit to Argentina, Brazil and Chile, the three great South American countries known as the A. B. C. He also spoke of the extremes in weather experienced in some of the places visited ;in one case, one side of a street showing a temperature in the morning of 32 degrees and the opposite sde a temperature of 64 degrees. Coal was very scarce, and at $50 a ton few used it.

He also spoke of some of the wonderful scenery that was seen, especially that across the Andes mountains. Another remarkable thing about the trip was that there was not a rainy day in the whole three months trip. That the seasons in South America were directly opposite from North America for when it was summer here it was winter there. Owing to the length of the program, Col. Kincaide was obliged to cut his talk short somewhat, although the applause that greeted him at his close was evidence that the party would have liked to hear more of this wonderful trip.

Mayor Stone spoke of the great

SHAKE UP IN POLICE ROUTES

Most of Officers Have New Assignments

In Effect Saturday Night

The wholesale shakeup in the Police department as, announced by Chief Burrill, will be in effect by Saturday night, and one of the most important changes is that the desk at the station will be in charge of Lieut. Hanson and Sargents Bishop and Larkin. The reason for the change, as given by Chief Burrell, is recognition of seniority of service, several of the older men being assigned to day routes. Formerly but two men were on the station desk .

The new police manual has been accepted by Mayor Stone and is now in effect. Several important sections of the old manual have been revised and humane killing of animals has been added. Copies of same are in the hands of the officers.

An expected change, but one which cannot be brought about because of the shortage of finance, is the continual duty of the Chauffeur Cahill. It is probable that before many months the auto will be in charge of a day and night man.

As yet Chief Burrell has not decided what his assignment of desk men will be, but it is safe to say that Lieut. Hanson will remain on days.

CHIEF FRANK E. BURRELL.

The new day assignments are as follows; Officer Crooker to Atlantic, Officer Curtin to Wollaston, and Officer Donovan to Houghs Neck.

The night assignments are: Officer Broberg in place of Officer Dhooge at Quincy Point; Officer Dhooge to Officer Thorne's Fore River beat; Officer Thorne to Norfolk Downs in place of Officer Donovan; Officer Ford in place of Officer Avery on Adams street; Officer Doran to the beat of Officer Ford in Bigelow park and Ward One; Officer Avery to Wollaston hill beat in place of Officer Doran; Officer Duane to Officer Curtin's beat in West Quincy Officer Dineen in place of Officer Duane in South Quincy; and Officer Corbett in place of Officer Dineen in South Quincy. The other South Quincy beat will probably be assigned to Officer Malone.

JOHNSON ENDORSED

Squantum Political Club Unanimous for Him

The meeting of the Squantum Political Club at Squantum on Thursday evening was one of the warmest ever held in that section. Before adjournment John R. Nelson resigned from membership after a heated controversy in which all joined.

Charles H. Johnson, candidate for mayor on the Republican ticket, was present and opened his campaign. He talked on a more equitable system of taxation, and even distributions of appropriations and the better regulations of several departments of the city. He so impressed the members that they eagerly gave him their unanimous endorsement and signed his papers.

The resignation of Mr. Nelson was the outcome of his taking out papers for the council for Ward Six. At a recent meeting C. E. Carlson, a prominent builder of the city was selected as the candidate of the club. Mr. Nelson at that time in a speech concurred with the will of the majority but since then has decided to run himself. This did not meet with the aproval of the club members who claimed a violation of the club by-laws and when the debate was at its height Mr. Nelson resigned.

Mr. Carlson, the choice of the club has been a resident of Squantum for many years and plans to conduct a vigorous campaign. His friends believe he is eminently qualified to serve in the council of the city and they were instrumental in registering the large number at Atlantic Tuesday night when 85 new names were placed on the list in 87 minutes. Mr. Carlson has developed much property in Quincy and is at present devoting his attention to a large area on Beale and Adams street.

The opening game in the Soccer league of the grammar schools will probably be played this afternoon.

PROGRESSIVES HAVE MAYORALTY CANDIDATE

W. G. Shaw, the City Square Merchant, Prevailed Upon to Enter Race

Edward J. Fegan May be Democratic Candidate

As the time for filing nomination papers grows shorter, interest in the city primaries increases correspondingly, and unless all signs fail there will be plenty of Mayoralty candidates in the field.

Up to the present time there are three avowed candidates. That is Charles H. Johnson as a Republican, William G. Shaw as a Progressive and John L. Miller who is to run on nomination papers at the election.

Mr. Shaw came into the field at the meeting of the Progressives held at Wollaston. Mr. Shaw was first approached ten days ago but turned a cold shoulder to the proposition. Since that time he has had many people call him up by telephone while others were continually calling at his place of business yet he steadily refused. Then came the meeting which Mr. Shaw attended. He was in favor of nominating John L. Miller who was the party candidate last year, but it was found that the warm feeling which the Progressives had for him a year ago had cooled, and this year they would have none of him.

According to all accounts some hot shot was fired at the meeting and a spade was called a spade. Mr. Shaw spoke twice urging the meeting to settle on the name of Mr. Miller, but all to no avail. Mr. Shaw moved to place Mr. Miller's name in nomination, but it is reported that when the votes were counted Mr. Miller had received but one vote, all of the others having been cast for Mr. Shaw. Then it was that Mr. Shaw said that he would step into the breach and accept the nomination.

No action was taken at this meeting in regard to candidates for councilmen but this comes at a meeting to be held next week. Complete sets of nomination papers for Ward Councilmen from all wards and for Councilmen at large have been taken out and will be put in circulation at the meeting next week when it is decided who the party candidates will be.

Among the Democrats, the situation as far as real facts are concerned remains unchanged . There are still rumors that Dr. Ash is to be a candidate but he has up to the present time refused to so state in response to questions asked of him. There is also a rumor that George H. Wilson is to enter the contest, but here likewise all is in the air.

This morning an entirely new name was sprung on the unsuspecting public as the Democratic candidate, and while no papers have been taken out in his behalf as far as known, that would not alter the situation, as it is well known that the Democratic City Committee has sets of nomination papers in its possession. This new candidate is Edward J. Fegan, a well known member of the bar. Mr. Fegan could not be found this morning but there were rumors in City Square that he was to enter the field and that his papers were in circulation or would be before night.

The meeting of the Ward One Republican Committee scheduled for

Possibly it is not easy.

Applying it to storekeeping, it would be quite easy.

X—because it is the cleanest market and grocery in the city;

X—because of the obligingness of its clerks;

X—because of its fullest stocks.

X—because of its freshest assortments;

X—because of its returnability sale clauses;

X—because of its dependability.

As one of the New York players was heard to sneeze the other day, depesters have figured it out that Philadelphia wins the world's series.

It is proposed that hunters wear red hats and coats so as not to be shot at. As there isn't much game left, this would seem to spoil the entire sport.

The new reorganized simplified spelling board will no doubt do good work unless the members have wasted time studying orthography.

The plight is so pitiful of the office seekers that have been hanging around Washington, that they should be given jobs running some of the new aeroplanes the war department has called for.

RALLY DAY.

Many of the Sunday schools and churches are holding a "Rally Day," usually at some date in October. Sluggish pupils are rounded up by the use of colored post cards.

Every Sunday used to be a rally Sunday in the old time churches. But that was before automobiles were invented. Many people now feel that God can only be worshipped satisfactorily at a rate of 40 miles per hour.

Then too, the danger of going to church in the rain is appreciated as never before. Showery clouds constitute a warning that should not be lightly viewed. Of course nothing could be done in the churches during September, as the congregation had not recovered from summer heat.

October removes some of these excuses and the congregations begin to fill up. The small boy must soon consider the approach of Christmas. If a sense of fair play is cultivated, he can perhaps be made to feel that he should give at least two months attendance in return for the Christmas present .

—There is no doubt that population is increasing faster than the national meat supply, as the meat packers point out, but the aforesaid packers cannot dodge responsibility for fancy prices for the product they handle. For a number of years they have been able manipulators of rates, notwithstanding explanations in some quarters that the concerns are in business mainly for their health.—Salem News.

SULZER A MAN OF INTEGRITY

"Poor Business Ability" His Chief Failing, Says Marshall

A DENIAL OF ALL CHARGES

Declares There Has Been Neither Larceny Nor Perjury—Parker Denies Every Contention of Defense and Says Governor "Must Be Removed From Office He Has Disgraced"

Albany, Oct. 10.—Contending that the removal from office of William Sulzer would substitute anarchy for law in the state of New York, Louis Marshall made a dramatic appeal for the acquittal of the impeached governor to the high court.

For nearly three hours he discussed the evidence brought out at the trial now nearing its end. He placed responsibility for the proceedings at the doors "of men whom the governor prevented looting the state."

Marshall discussed at great length the charge that Sulzer misappropriated campaign funds. The moment these moneys were sent to the candidate, he argued, the title to them was vested in him and not in the donors. Whatever use he made of them was for him to say.

Marshall declared the charge of perjury was groundless because the law did not require an affidavit to a campaign statement. Further, he argued, the governor thought the statement correct when he signed it.

In speaking of the governor as a man of integrity but of poor business ability, which he declared was his chief failing, Marshall pointed out that many statesmen had been poor financiers—notably President McKinley and Daniel Webster—and had depended on the gifts of friends to aid them.

In answer, Alton B. Parker denied every contention of the defense. He declared there was no question of the power of the court. He suggested that the fact that Sulzer did not answer the charges in person indicated he had no valid defense.

The facts before the tribunal, Parker contended, all indicated guilt. Under no possible hypothesis of innocence, he asserted, could the acts, it proven, be justified. The duty of the court, he said, was clear, and the respondent "must be removed from the office he has disgraced."

Attorneys for each side have been allotted five hours—virtually a full day's session—for making their summing up address. It is believed that at the end of the arguments tonight court will adjourn over Monday, which will be observed as Columbus day, until Tuesday. Then voting on the constitutional objections to the impeachment articles, brought by attorneys for the defense, and the impeachment articles themselves will begin.

It is probable all of the voting on the objections to the articles of impeachment and the testimony will be done in executive sessions. The plan is now said to be to vote on each of the eight articles separately, if all of them are allowed to stand.

There is no question that the action of the governor's attorneys in refusing to call him hurt his case. But Sulzer acquiesced in the decision of his lawyers when they told him he could not take the stand without involving Mrs. Sulzer, and that this would very materially hurt his case. He will, however, make a statement after the verdict is announced.

SIX MONTHS FOR USURY

Sentence Imposed Upon Tolman In a New York Court

New York, Oct. 10.—David R. Tolman, notorious as a loan shark, was convicted of violating the state law against usury and sentenced to serve six months in the penitentiary.

The complainant, a clerk, testified that he had paid interest at the rate of 200 percent a year for the use of $10 for three months.

The defendant said he had conducted between forty and fifty loan offices throughout the United States.

"TAINTED WITH SOCIALISM"

Reform Currency Bill Denounced by Railroad Magnate Hill

Boston, Oct. 10.—Declaring that the passage of the Glass-Owens currency bill would open the way to distrust, with the probability of a great business depression, James J. Hill of St. Paul, apostle of agricultural development and pioneer railroad man of the northwest, yesterday joined the more than 4000 bankers in their stand against the pending currency measure.

He figuratively tore in pieces the proposed measure, declaring it to be tainted with socialism and menacing to the future welfare of the nation. He said its central reserve board would be an autocracy, and that the concentration of the nation's gold in Washington, as proposed by the measure, would invite foreign attack.

THROWS BLAME ON BEAN

Mrs. Shackford Says He Forced Revolver Into Her Hand

Ossipee, N. H., Oct. 10.—In the county jail here Mrs. Bessie Shackford, who is charged with murdering her husband, Edward, at their home in Freedom on the night of Sept. 30, said Hollis W. Bean, a hired man on the Shackford farm, had threatened her life and forced a revolver into her hand and then led her about on the night her husband was slain.

She said she remembered nothing for some time after Bean had placed the revolver in her hand.

Although Mrs. Shackford insists that her story is true, relatives of the farm hand say that he was at his own home in Snowville on the night of the murder. Bean is held as a witness under $1000 bonds which have not yet been secured for him.

In the same room two years ago the body of Sing's American wife, Grace K. Sing, was found with a bullet in the head. The coroner's jury pronounced it suicide.

It is said Sing's success in business had aroused much jealousy among other Chinese in the local colony. A bankbook showed a balance of $8000. Sing also owned much real estate.

CUP NIGHT OF Q. Y. C.

pleasure it had given him to come to the gathering. That while Col. Kincaide had been doing things in South America we had been doing things here. He then spoke of what had been done in the way of deepening the channel and basin near the club house to the public landing, and of some of the things that ought to be done for the benefit of Boston harbor. The credit for what had already been accomplished was due to the tireless energy of Quincys efficient and energetic Dock and Water Front Commissioner Frank Fessenden Crane.

His Honor also spoke of attending the Waterways banquet in Boston last week, and of the astonishing things he had heard, and that Boston was not receiving nearly as much money for the development of its harbor and channel as some of the southern places, although the revenue received from Boston was by far greater. He also touched upon the public dock question for Quincy, and said that its establishment would give a competing means of transportation that would be of vast benefit to Quincy. He also urged that the club and all others do what they could with our congressmen to see that Boston got its share toward its port development. There was no question but what we could get it if we asked and worked for it.

Ex-Commodore Eben W. Sheppard said it felt like coming home to come to the club house. When he was commodore the club was but an infant, now it was a full grown child and an active one. He was glad to see it so and wished the club all success.

Will Carleton, chairman of the regatta committee of the Corinthian club, spoke of the sportsmanship of the members of the Quincy club and how much the Marblehead club was indebted to it for the aid it had given in stimulating yachting and by participating in the Marblehead races.

John Harland, president of the Interclub association, spoke briefly of the work of that association. He also said that he admired the racing element of the Quincy Yacht club. There was not a club on the coast that has such a racing element as the Quincy club. He also spoke briefly of the plans of his association for the coming year.

In introducing ex-Commodore Crane the presiding officer said that although the gentleman was a brother, he alone was responsible for the deeper water front which the club now enjoyed. He did not know what we should have done if he had not taken off his coat.

Ex-Commodore Crane said that he had been talking waterways all the week and did not propose to burden the guests at this time with a waterways speech. There was but one word he had to say. That was give the boys a chance, for it is the boys that will do the sailing when we old fellows join the arm chair fleet.

Ex-Commodore Herbert W. Robbins spoke briefly and he only regretted that more time could not have been given Col. Kincaide.

Ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore was introduced as the "terror," and his Dartwell was certainly a terror to other yachts in class D in the season just passed. He said there seemed to him to be no excuse for the Quincy Yacht club to go backwards, for with our splendid channel and facilities for racing there was no reason that the club should not reach its full membership, and he hoped that every member would do all he could to get at least 100 more members. He also wanted to thank the board of judges for their splendid and hard work.

Commodore Thompson B. Crane of the Town River Yacht club said that he would like to have ex-Commodore Crane some up to Town river and take off his coat, and get them a little more water so that they could have some good races. He told of his experience in the first and only "Bang and go back" power boat race in which he had ever participated. The Town River club was a small club but if it could only get a little water they would hold some good races.

This closed the list of scheduled speakers although every skipper when he received his trophy was supposed to make a few remarks. The bang-and-go-back power boat races came in for considerable bantering, that is the method of the judges in figuring out the results did, but it was all in a good-natured strain. One of the speakers paid a glowing tribute to the grand work that was being done by George S. Morse, the clubs treasurer ,and every speaker spoke of the address of Col. Kincaide and how much it had been enjoyed.

The speaking was interspersed by the awarding of cups and other prizes won during the season. The awards were as follows:

The James L. Edwards cup which had been offered this year to stimulate racing among power boats was awarded to the Capt. W. F. Packard of the Emma E.

The Ayer cup put up for small sail boats was awarded to Herbert Ayers captain of the Yarita and a son of the donor.

The second prize, a cup in this class went to the Capt. A .E. Acorn of the Wanderer.

A ship's lantern was given to Capt. F. Freeman of the Little Iris in the bang-and-go-back race.

Capt. Herbert W. Robbins of the Clara received a thermos bottle for the run from Marblehead to Quincy, and the Commodore's cup for the run from Quincy to Marblehead.

Capt. Z. P. Rupert of the P. A. L. 2d received a barometer for the launch race to Marblehead.

Capt. H. A. Jones of the Gleamer also got a compass for the run from Quincy to Marblehead.

A pair of marine glasses was given to Capt. E. T. Folsom of the Marcel Wave, who also received a fire extinguisher for the prize in the speed boat class.

A third prize of a cushion life preserver went to Clarence W. Putnam of the power dory class.

The club pennants were then awarded. The Clara received the cock-of-the walk pennant and a bunch of red white and blue pennants.

The Gleamer received the cock-of-the-walk pennant in her class and also a bunch of colored pennants.

Bunches of pennants were also awarded to Vice Commodore, Edgar W. Emery of the Mudjekeewis, Capt. F. F. Crane of the Iris, Capt. Debes of the Cinderella, Capt. John Kitson of the Hush, Capt. Ira M. Whittemore of the Dartwell, Capt. Walter Elcock of the Takalong, Capt. Harold Morse of the Souki, Capt. Pickard and Capt. Coffin of the Imp, Capt. Frank Brown of the Brownie, Capt. A. J. Shaw of the Moondyne, Capt. Hollis Burgess of the Evangeline, Capt. Ralph Winslow of the Lomora and Capt. A. H. Acorn of the Wanderer.

At the close of the awards, Commodore Crane said that he wanted to thank the officers and committees for the hearty support given him during the season, and he also wanted to especially thank the owners of power boats for their kindness in placing their boats at the disposal of the club at all times. In closing he wished all club members a happy winteer and that early spring would see them all at the clubhouse.

Three cheers for the Quincy Yacht club and its officers closed what had been a most enjoyable evening.

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED

Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Dimmock

One of the most completely surprised couples, in the city Thursday evening was Mr. and Mrs. William R. Dimock of Prospect avenue, Wollaston. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage, and it was their intention to observe it quietly, but relatives and friends thought otherwise, and about eight o'clock a good company rang their doorbell for admittance.

Mr. and Mrs. Dimock were completely surprised, but after a few minutes were able to welcome all cordially. In the party were relatives and neighbors, some coming from Stoughton, Wakefield, Reading, Cambridge, Woburn and Mrs. Dimock's sister, Mrs. A. O. Seaman and son Robert all the way from Nova Scotia.

Another surprise was given Mr. and Mrs. Dimock before the evening's pleasures were over, a beautiful silver service being presented to them. Social chat, cards, games and refreshments rounded out the evening's enjoyment.

—To elevate the art of poster advertising is the undertaking of the Municipal Art society of New York. It finds that European posters which are plastered on the scenery are artistic and refined and it is hoped to encourage American advertisers to follow the same course. In some European cities, especially in Germany and Austria where the money which can be obtained is sunk in military expenditures the cities maintain artistic bill boards on the street corners and collect a very handsome revenue from them.—Taunton Herald.

Important News In Advertisements

By HOLLAND.

THE valuable news of the day is not confined to the news columns. It is also seen in the advertisements. Of course it is important to know what President Wilson is doing, what the latest developments are in China or what baseball club leads the league. But it is also important to know where a bargain in boys' waists, garden hose, breakfast food or straw hats may be found.

These bits of commercial news are among the advertisements. Wise persons look for them and take advantage of them when they are doing their buying. The leading merchants are continually telling you news of their stores, news that is important because it often means a real saving and always means something new and worth while.

Read the advertisements if you seek important news. Read them regularly and always with the thought that back of each advertisement are the reputation and business standing of the merchant. He could not afford to deceive you even if he were so inclined.

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

In "Blue Jeans," which John Craig will produce at the Castle Square next week, playgoers will see one of the most popular dramas of recent times. It is a story of Indiana life, of rural characters, and of the love of a rustic belle for a worthy young man. The scheming of a girl of gypsy parentage give plenty of thrills to the play and its most exciting scene of all comes in the last act when the hero is imprisoned in a sawmill and is only rescued by the intrepidity of the woman who loves him. The pictures of Indiana life will be faithfully portrayed on the Castle Square stage, and it will be made true both to nature and to human nature. The cast will include Mr. Craig's entire company with William P. Carleton and Miss Doris Olsson in the leading roles of Perry Bascom and June.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

There are several good reasons why "Les Miserables," now in its sixth successful week at the Tremont Temple, Boston, is enjoying such a big success. In the first place the production is admirably produced and presents, accurately, the absorbing story of Hugo's world-famous novel. Secondly the pictures are unlike the variety commonly seen, and are unusually excellent for clarity and vividness. If you desire a wider knowledge of Hugo's world-famous story don't fail to see this production. There are daily matinees at a popular scale of prices. The management announces a "Victor Hugo Night" for Tuesday, Oct. 14, on which occasion there will be present representative French people, including the French consul at Boston. This particular night is set aside to fittingly pay tribute to the memory of one of France's greatest writers, whose works have been universally read.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

William A. Brady's production of "Bought and Paid For" the Broadhurst play which ran for over one year and a half at Mr. Brady's playhouse in New York, will be seen for the first time in Boston next Monday afternoon, Columbus day matinee, at the Majestic theatre. "Bought and Paid For" has all the elements of popular success, sentiment, drama and fun, and plenty of the latter. It is substantial in fibre, consistent in story, strong in interest, and fresh and natural no less in the drawing of the characters than in the flow of the dialogue. The play is in four acts, the scenes of which are laid in New York at the present time. The story told by Mr. Broadhurst teems with interest through the acts with an equal sprinkling of laughter and wet handkerchiefs. "Bought and Paid For" is a play for those who are married or who expect to be. In the cast will be seen Charles Richman, Marie Nordstrom and Allen Atwell of the original company and others.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

Miss Julia Sanderson is now in the fourth week of her engagement in Boston in "The Sunshine Girl" at the Hollis Street theatre, which thus far has been to practically capacity business as Charles Frohman's radiant little star and her joyous musical comedy have caught the public taste to such an extent that they have become quite the vogue and their stay has been extended indefinitely. Miss Sanderson has had many splendid opportunities in recent musical successes, particularly in "The Arcadians" and "The Siren" but as Dora Dale the little Sunshine Girl in the Port Sunshine Soap works she easily has her best role. Paul Rubens has contributed a tinkling collection of catchy numbers to "The Sunshine Girl" and one hears then whistled on the street corners and played in cafes on every side. Joseph Cawthorn, Miss Sanderson's featured comedian is funnier than ever before in the role of Schlump the bibulous cabby and to him falls the biggest musical hit of all, "You Can't Play Every Instrument in the Orchestra" which is said to be the funniest topical song ever written. The vogue of Tango dancing has been catered to in "The Sunshine Girl" by the Tango named after the piece and danced by Miss Sanderson and Alan Mudie . Others in the cast are Basil Foster, Flossie Hope, Florence Morrison, William Sellery and Queenie Vassar and a large and beauteous chorus.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

The three-star alliance, composed of Gertrude Hoffmann, Mme. Polaire and Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson which comes to Boston next week for twelve performances at the Shubert theatre will give local patrons their first glimpse of the three international stars in their newest sensations. The engagement is for one week only and begins with the Columbus day matinee. Miss Hoffmann is offering her new "Revue" which requires a company of forty people, twelve changes of scenery and in which she is introducing her newest startler, "The Mermaid Dance" said to be more thrilling than her Salome. Mme. Polaire, the vivacious French actress said to be the ugliest woman in Paris with the smallest waist in the world, is presenting her new dramatic thriller, "Le Visiteur" in which her own company of French players from the Vaudeville theatre, Paris take part. Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson, daughter of the Duke of Sutherland and the first descendant of a King to adopt the stage as a profession, will offer the four classic dances which created so great a sensation at the Palace theatre, London, and which all New York stamped as the most daring of the 1913 season. Several other features are offered by Comstock and Gest for appearance "between the acts" as it were. The three-star organization traveling in private train, is comprised of over seventy-five people, including special orchestra of thirty pieces, three directors, three stage crews and private chefs, waiters, etc.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

On next Monday George Arliss, who is appearing in "Disraeli," will begin the third and second last week of his engagement at the Plymouth theatre, Boston. While there is every indication that the play could remain for a longer time, the previous bookings necessitates its departure. Therefore Mr. Arliss' farewell performance of Parker's delightful comedy will be given on Saturday evening, October 25. There is hardly anything else that can be added to the volumes of praise showered upon the play. While both star and play are virtually appearing in the 22nd week of their engagement in Boston, (its former engagement running for nineteen consecutive weeks the present interest emphasizes the fact that this brilliant play has lost none of its charm. Mr. Arliss' characterization of the great Prime Minister is still one of the finest pieces of acting the stage has witnessed in years. To see this play is to learn why it has achieved such a magnetic hold upon theatregoers wherever presented. If you have not yet witnessed the charms of Parker's masterpiece, the opportunity still presents itself, although only in a very brief and limited time. To see "Disraeli," is to be happy that you did not miss it. The play shows the great English statesman at the height of his career, in the early seventies, striving to obtain possession of the Suez Canal for England, the intrigues that developed with the undertaking and through all a delightful love story. It is a part admirably fitted to Mr. Arliss' artistry. The production scenically is most attractive and interesting, particularly the brilliant esemble effects in the last act, just before the presentation to the Queen. The matinees are as usual, Thursday and Saturday, in addition to a special matinee on Columbus Day, Monday, October 13.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Two Quincy girls will be brides of two well known Milton men the coming week. They are Miss Ellen F. Connors of 87 Garfield street, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Connors will marry George Edward Nelson, and Miss Louise Barry of Rogers street, a well known young lady, will marry George Cushing of the New State section. Both ceremonies will be performed in Quincy and the couples will make their homes in Milton.

Regular services at the Mission of Our Saviour church opened Sunday morning and at the session of Sunday school which followed there was a large attendance.

William Graham of State street is seriously ill at the Cunningham hospital, where he was taken two weeks ago suffering from a severe attack of typhoid fever.

G. Paolucci, the East Milton tailor, has removed from his quarters in the Ellsworth block to the new Palisi block, having taken the street store.

Dr. J. McGregor of Boston has opened up a dental office in the Ellsworth block.

Politics have been humming in East Milton since the primaries and more active than ever are the Progressives. As a challenge to the most prominent Democrat, Representative John J. Gallagher, they have strung a flag over Adams street , almost opposite his home. It is hung from a wide border bearing the words "Progressive Party." The town committees are talking in the interests of their respective candidates and the interest is more active than for years past. The senatorial contest is shaping up with the odds favoring Louis F. R. Langelier of Quincy who is opposed by David W. Murray of Hyde Park, and L. P. Winchenbaugh of Hyde Park.

The elimination of the grade crossing at East Milton is not being kindly considered everywhere, according to the sentiment expressed Thursday. The movement which commenced several weeks ago has no solid supporters as yet although several representative men are in favor of it. Others, particularly those with large interests in or near East Milton square strongly object to elimination, because they feel that in its event the lowering or raising of the tracks would injure their properties. At present the rail shoots through the centre of the section on the street level and the passing public is protected by gates and a flag man. The day officer of the police force, James Travers takes his stand there several minutes before a train is due and directs traffic until danger is over. In busy seasons it is conservatively estimated that he saves on an average one life a day. A heated controversy may break out in the district any time on elimination.

The freedom from fires and the fine protection offered when one is discovered has been instrumental in placing Milton a few points ahead of Quincy in the table recently issued by the Board of Insurance Underwriters. Both are in the second class, but Milton will equal Brookline the only first place community, if several changes are carried out as proposed.

PROGRESSIVES CANDIDATE

Thursday night did not take place, owing to the absence of a quorum. Some of the members of the committee were out of town, another was sick, and others were at the Quincy Yacht club cup night. The members present therefore confined their work to getting out voters to register. Another meeting will be held next week Thursday evening.

QUINCY CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first rehearsal of Quincy Choral society held Tuesday evening brought out a large and enthusiastic gathering of singers from all parts of Quincy, Weymouth and Milton.

T. B. Pollard, president, called the meeting to order, and after some very pleasing and appropriate remarks of welcome to the new and old members, introduced the new conductor, George S. Dunham of Brockton and Boston, who came forward and took his place amidst a greeting of loud and hearty applause.

Music for the first concert, date of which is Dec. 10, was sung through and all expressed great delight with the selections which are sure to work out most artistically. The next rehearsal will be held on Tuesday evening, Oct. 14, at 7.45, at New Hancock hall. A most cordial invitation is extended to all singers, professional or amateur to join the society and enjoy the season's work which promises to be extremely attractive. The executive board members are putting forth every effort to make new members and especially those who are strangers in our city feel acquainted and at home in the club, thereby adding to the enjoyment of all.

GOOD WISHES EXTENDED

Lieut. and Mrs. J. D. Willson Leaving Wollaston

A large number of friends and neighbors gathered in the Park and Downs church Thursday evening to bid farewell to Lieutenant and Mrs. James D. Willson who are to leave Wollaston shortly.

Lieutenant Willson who until recently has been stationed at the Charlestown Navy Yard has been assigned to three years sea duty on the repair ship "Vestal," that sails for Newport News on October 18.

The "Vestal" will later proceed to Pensacola, Florida, where she will be stationed for sometime, and there Mrs. Willson will make her home with the two children Eleanor Jean and James D. Willson, Jr.

Since coming to Wollaston three years ago Lieutenant and Mrs. Willson have formed many close friendships. Both have interested themselves in the Park and Downs church, where Lieutenant Willson is a member of the standing committee and Mrs. Willson prominent in the ladies organizations. They have resided on Kemper street.

Out of respect to the wishes of Lieutenant and Mrs. Willson, the reception tendered them was of a very simple nature. Arrangements were in charge of a self appointed committee of friends consisting of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Holmes, Mrs. William M. Burrell, Mrs. Ryder, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Colby, Mrs. Frank C. Blake and Mrs. Celia Mackay.

Included in the evening's program were vocal solos by Mrs. W. C. Crane and readings by Mrs. Fred Robinson. Mrs. Ervin Whittaker sang to the accompaniment of Mrs. William M. Burrell with a violin obligato by Miss Emily Bjorkman. Solos by Miss Louise Steffens were also enjoyed.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Willson were much touched at the friendship and good wishes evidenced and expressed their regret at leaving Wolloston. Light refreshments were served by the committee in charge.

DELAY AT ADAMS SCHOOL

Difficulty Encountered in Making Sewer Connection

There have been many inquiries as to when the new Adams school would be ready for occupancy. Commissioner Tupper when seen this morning stated that the building was all completed and that the furniture was in position, that a fire was being kept constantly in the furnaces and that it was only waiting for the completion of the sewer. It is quite a difficult job to get the sewer pipe to the school building on account of the ledges, and coupled with this has been the very bad weather However it is expected that the building will soon be opened for school purposes.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

At the regular meeting of the Ladies Benevolent Society of Memorial church Wednesday, Mrs. Wilson Marsh and Miss Purchase of the Associated Charities of Quincy gave addresses on the work that has been accomplished by that society during the year. Words of appreciation were spoken also by some of the ladies who knew what the society had done. One important thing accomplished by Miss Purchase was that she had put the professional tramp and beggar out of business.

Mrs. Butler, president of the Benevolent society, outlined plans for the annual harvest supper to be held Tuesday evening and appointed committees.

Mrs. A. H. Hall reported that Mrs. W. F. Cummings had accepted the chairmanship of arts and crafts table for the Christmas fair. Mrs. Isabel S. Smith, the delicatessen; Miss Maud E. Read, candy; Miss Louise Kobb, fancy; Mrs. B. F. Thomas, apron; Mrs. Welcome Young, Christmas grabs; Mrs. M. F. Badger, useful table and Mrs. William G. Hersey, doll table. Several chairmen have to be appointed yet.

After the meeting, light refreshments were served, the committee in charge being Mrs. George W. Hight, Jr., Mrs. C. F. Letteney, Mrs. A. H. Hall, Mrs. R. E. Dennison and Mrs. T. W. Davison.

Milady's Mirror

Beauty and Borax.

To remove the shiny look common to some complexions add a pinch of borax to the water in which the face is bathed. A weak solution of borax is highly recommended as a wash for sore eyes, redness of the edges of the lids and for tired and smarting eyes. The same solution is also an excellent mouth wash. It is a healing lotion for slight cuts and scratches.

To soften and whiten the hands bathe them in moderately warm water to which a good sized pinch of borax has been added.

To remove the odor of perspiration use borax with a powder puff under the arms after bathing. A solution of borax and bicarbonate of soda, used as a wash for face, neck, arms and hands when going out and returning to the house and especially when visiting the sick, is considered very efficacious in warding off contagious diseases.

If the water for bathing is hard the addition of a little borax will soften it, and a pinch of borax added to the water in which infants are bathed tends to strengthen the skin and prevent chafing. The strength of the solution may vary somewhat according to the purpose for which it is to be used. A teaspoonful to a pint of water is not too strong for the most uses, but for infants and very young children it may be made weaker.

Health and Beauty.

It will be absolutely necessary for you to get a good rear view of your hat as well as a front view. Don't count any minute wasted that is spent at the mirror when purchasing a hat. Look at it from every angle. You will gain much pleasure in wearing a hat that you know is just right and remember its good qualities long after you have forgotten the bill.

Cool baths suit some temperaments and hot baths bring the best results in others. Morning baths act as a tonic for some, and the evening tub is the most appropriate for others. The best thing to do is for each individual to experiment until she has found which seems to have the best effect in her own case and then abide by the rule. Don't make the rule an unbreakable one, however, or you will be laying up trouble for yourself.

If you once get the shower bath habit you will never give it up, so begin tomorrow morning. When using the regular shower be sure to protect the hair with a rubber cap, use pure soap and warm water first; then, when all the soap is rinsed off, rub the body with a handful of sea salt. Shower again with water cool enough to give a pleasurable shock, rub briskly with a coarse towel and a moderately stiff flesh brush and then spray the body with a lotion.

Fine Skin Tonic.

Exercise is a splendid skin tonic. A brisk walk, no matter if in the rain, will freshen the complexion, even as it freshens the flowers, and a simple aperient will do wonders for a muddy skin. It remains for all women to preserve such beauty as they have and to cure the defects which are peculiar to them or that time has wrought. Every skin is different and must be treated accordingly, and it takes a reasoning woman to experiment carefully and find out the proper method of treatment for her skin.

Lack of sleep ages a woman possibly more than anything else. Most women who are inclined to be nervous require from eight to nine hours. Six or seven hours of rest suffice for others. The hours before midnight contain the magic wherein beauty is dispensed freely. One hour before 12 will do more good than two afterward.

Sleep without a pillow, if possible, or a very small one of couch size.

The feet should be higher than the head. This makes the flow of blood over the heart even. Sleep on your right side, with the limbs outstretched and the arms down at the side rather than over the head, which, it is said encourages bad dreams.

Starching Humans.

From London comes the news that starch will have the same effect in human laundry as it has upon the family wash. Taken in the bath, it will stiffen the muscles and smooth out the wrinkles of care. Here is the formula for its application:

All you have to do is to buy a pound of ordinary pure starch from your grocer. Then dissolve the starch in a saucepanful of hot water and pour the solution into a well filled bath of water at a temperature of 95 to 98 degrees, but not exceeding blood heat. Then to take the cure lie down flat in the bath—with all but the face and hair immersed—and remain there for at least twenty minutes. No more hot water must be added or the beneficial effect will be considerably marred. Paris is raving over the stimulating effects of such baths, which impart to the flesh a feeling as though one had bathed in rich cream. A starch bath is restful and soothing to the nerves and leaves a delightful sense of exhilaration for several hours afterward. The bath is best taken before breakfast or before dressing for dinner.

FISHER—GERMAIN.

At the parish house of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Atlantic, Miss Dora Cecilia Germain of Wollaston was joined in marriage to Louis Philip Fisher of Buffalo, New York, on Wednesday morning, by Rev. Fr. Cuff in the presence of relatives and friends of the pair.

The bride was attired in white silk crepe de chine and point Venice lace with veil caught by lilies of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and roses.

She was attended by her sister Regina E. Germain who wore yellow crepe de chine and carried chrysanthemums of that color. J. Andrew Fisher, brother of the groom, was best man.

A reception in which the happy couple were assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Germain the bride's parents, was held at the latter's home, 9 Willow stret, Wollaston, after which a wedding breakfast was served.

Among those present were: Mrs. Elizabeth Felix of North Adams; Mrs. J. H. Cronin of Albany, N. Y., Mrs. Samuel Ryan of Buffalo, N. Y., Miss Edna Ruble of Buffalo, N Y., Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Felix of Dorchester, Dr. Thomas J. Coyne of Roxbury, Mrs. Marie Felix of Dorchester, Miss Helen Bresnan of Dorchester and Mrs. Susan M . Pentland and Mrs. Samuel Chapman of Wollaston.

Many beautiful presents were given the pair. The bride until recently has been in the employ of Lee Higginson and Company of Boston and last week was tendered a shower by her friends in that concern.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher left Wednesday afternoon on a wedding trip to Montreal and Quebec, following which they will make their home in Buffalo, New York, where the groom is employed as a draughtsman.

—One can easily add to Victor Hugo's list of horrible English words. "Genteel," for instance is an adjective that sets the teeth on edge, and "select" (used as an adjective) is another word that only a second rate person would select. "Emerge" and "transpire" are both repulsive to use and any breakfast is always spoiled when a correspondent "thanks him in anticipation," or a tailor asks him to come and try on his "esteemed favor"—meaning trousers.

DAILY LEDGER MISREPRESENTED

People of Quincy who prize photographs should hesitate to give them to strangers. Quite frequently people come to the Daily Ledger office and request the return of photographs borrowed for some Quincy paper. They are usually photographs of women which the Daily Ledger never solicits or prints. They are wanted for certain Boston papers which do not hesitate to misrepresent the facts. Photographs loaned to such men are seldom returned. The Daily Ledger will pay a reward for information which will convict a person who misrepresents himself as a representative of the Daily Ledger, either personally, by letter or by telephone.

VERY PLEASING CONCERT

Vocal and Instrumental Artists at Park and Downs

An audience that filled the Park and Downs Church attended a concert given there, Wednesday evening, for the benefit of current expenses. The artists were three in number: Mas. Gertrude L. Holt, soprano; William Howard, violinist; and S. Newton Cutler, organist and pianist.

All of the numbers were heartily encored, and the artists well merited the applause offered The opening number was a concert overture by Faulkes, rendered by Mr. Cutler and followed by "Fantasie" for the violin from "Souvenir d'Haydn" played by Mr. Howard.

Mrs. Holt rendered two songs "A birthday" by Woodman and "My Laddie" by Thayer most acceptably. Mr. Cutler followed with a group of three instrumental pieces "Andante religioso" by Parker, "Canzonetta" by Marshall and "Traumerei" by Schuman.

The "Berceuse" from "Jocyln," a soprano solo with violin obligato, closed very effectively the first part of the program.

Wieniawski's "Legend" for the violin by Mr. Howard and Salter's "Cry of Rachael," a solo by Mrs. Holt preceded a paraphrase of "The lost chord" by Sullivan.

The last named selection was the work of Mr. Cutler and Mr. Howard and as played by them was most pleasing.

"Nuptial March" by Guilmant rendered by Mr. Cutler closed the evening's program.

The ushers were: Earle Gilliatt, John Dingwell, Allan Painten and Stanley Smith

Candy was sold by a committee of the ladies consisting of Mrs. Alonzo Bissett, Mrs. A. J. Podbury, Mrs. Artemus Dingwell, Mrs. Frank W. Knowlton, Mrs. Charles L. Gilliatt, Mrs. Seth P. Crocker, Mrs. Eugene Blaisdell, Mrs Charles A Richardson.

ALL STARS WIN MATCH

Santa Cruz Makes a Record of 14.3 Total 329

Poehler's "All Stars" beat the Weymouth five at the City Square alleys Thursday evening in an exciting and interesting match, 1417 to 1346, and incidently two men surpassed the champ's high single and one of them Santa Cruz, a member of the Argentine Commission, secured 142 in his last string. He was substituted when Archie Walsh could not be present and opened up a steady harvesting which would have gone higher had he gotten a well deserved strike in the eighth box.

Shea of Weymouth a staid bowler did well at his first single but Referee George White got his nerve when he called several actual fouls, and the old time bowler fell down badly in his second and third.

Griffin and Taylor and Poehler are all members of the strong Chauncey team of the Boston City league, Quinn is the New England league umpire, and Santa Cruz commenced to roll last winter.

Herb Smith of the losers was the only one that held in any way to his form and he tripled, averaging a century for each string. Kiley was way down which was a big surprise, and so was Connell, while another Smith was short of a good average. The team total of the All Stars in the third string was 508. The match developed so much rivalry that a return one will be rolled next Thursday. The single of Santa Cruz was:—

McDONALD WINS CASE

Sued by Miss Sullivan for $10,000 Damages

The case of Ellen T. Sullivan of Granite street, against Michael McDonald, also of Granite street, which has been on trial all the week at Dedham, in the Superior court, before Judge Fox and a jury, was disposed of Thursday afternoon. The case has attracted considerable local attention, and the outcome has been awaited with interest by friends of both parties.

Miss Sullivan claimed that during an altercation between herself and McDonald, concerning the location of the boundary line between adjoining estates on Granite street, early in the morning of August 5, 1912, Mr. McDonald grabbed her by the throat and so violently threw her back that she fell over and ruptured the semi-lunar cartilage of the right knee joint, from which she has suffered ever since, and it was claimed by her and her physicians that she would suffer from it for a long time to come.

Mr. McDonald admitted assaulting her but claiming he was justified, as she was attempting to damage some of his property.

Considerable medical testimony as to the extent of Miss Sullivan's injury was offered by both sides.

Miss Sullivan brought suit to recover $10,000 damages from Mr. McDonald. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant McDonald. John H. Blanchard of Boston appeared for Miss Sullivan, and J. W. McAnarney was the attorney for the defendant McDonald.

TESREAU SOON POUNDED OUT

Athletics Score Five Runs In First Two Innings

THEIR GAME ALL THE WAY

Bush Makes Good In the Box and Is Never In Danger—Giants Find Him the Greatest Puzzler of the Three Pitchers So Far Tried by Mack—Schang Scores a Home Run

New York, Oct. 10.—Before a crowd of 35,000, the Philadelphia Athletics took the lead in the third game of the world's series here by winning from the New York Giants by a score of 8 to 2.

Connie Mack's first kid pitcher made good. Bush, the Salt Lake City youngster, had the Giants at his mercy and let them down with a scant pair of runs and five hits. Meanwhile the Athletics got to Tesreau and Crandall, the Giants' slabmen, for eight runs, the result of twelve safe slams.

Conditions were supposedly ideal for Tesreau in this third game. A dark day was considered to make his great speed even more than usually effective.

The Athletics took the jump in the first and second innings, in each of which they bunched hits off Tesreau. Three hits in each inning netted them three runs in the first and a pair in the second. Again in the seventh the Athletics got to Tesreau for a triple and two singles, which netted them another pair of runs and sent the Ozark Giant to the bench.

Crandall, who succeeded him, started off nicely, but Schang caught one squarely on the end of his bat and warped it into the right field stands for the second homer of the series.

It was the Athletics' game all the way. With the game stowed away, the Athletics went along under wraps, but there was never a moment when Bush was in any serious danger.

The Giants' first run came when Murray drew a pass, stole second and took third on Schang's bad throw to Collins. Red came home when McLean came through with a single. The threatened rally was nipped in the bud, however, when Merkle, Tesreau and Herzog were stowed away in order.

Schafer threatened to start something in the seventh, when he opened the frame with a double, the Giants' second extra base hit of the series. Murray singled and Tillie came home with the Giants' second and last run. Schang caught Murray on an attempted steal, and Bush braced quickly.

Of the three pitchers so far trotted out by Mack, Bush was easily the greatest puzzler for the Giant stick wielders, whose efforts were lamentably feeble throughout the game. Not a single Giant was able to secure more than one lone hit. In contrast, Collins fattened his batting average with two singles and a triple in three times up.

Two Spectacular Plays

But two really spectacular plays marked the contest. One of these was a double play worked by Bush, Barry and McInnis, from Burns and Fletcher in the sixth, and the other was a dashing double put out contributed by Doyle in the seventh, when he pulled down a sizzling line smash from McInnis' bat and doubled up Baker at second. The score:

TAFT LAYS CORNER-STONE

Other Men of Note Attend Services of Boston City Club

Boston, Oct. 10.—The corner-stone of the new building of the Boston City club, the club which is the pioneer of like organizations all over the country, was set into place yesterday afternoon by a trowel-wielding ex-president, William H. Taft, blessed by Cardinal O'Connell and bidden Godspeed by Governor Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald and other lesser dignitaries.

Ex-President Taft, in his tribute to the club, paid a high compliment to Boston by saying that the city is more than the Athens of America, in that it has its own characteristics, which have made for the betterment of the country by inculcating in its government and citizenship the Puritan or Yankee spirit, which is a practical public spirit.

In the evening the scene shifted from the corner of Somerset street and Ashburton place, where the new clubhouse is soon to raise its towers, to the Hotel Somerset, where nearly 1200 members of the club heard the history of their club, its past glories and future prospects and possibilities.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 10.—Uhlan, the world's champion trotter, owned by C. K. G. Billings, hitched to a running mate, lowered the world's record for a mile to 1:54½. Uhlan set the previous record at 1:58 last year.

Uhlan was driven by Charles Tanner, and was favored with a perfect track and beautiful weather conditions. Trotting in magnificent form, he made the quarters in 28¾; 57¼; 1:25¼ and 1:54½. Horse and driver were given an ovation at the finish.

INVESTIGATION OF BEEF TRUST COMING

Is Expected to Produce Sensational Results

Washington, Oct. 10.—Congressman Kinkead of New Jersey, who recently introduced in the house a resolution for an investigation of the beef trust, has been assured by leading members of the house judiciary committee that the committee will make a sweeping investigation the coming winter.

Kinkead declares that if the investigation is made there will be no question of the startling exposures that will develope. He believes it inevitable that it will open the way to criminal prosecution. He says he has evidence regarding the operations of the trust in New Jersey that alone will reveal abuses of a grave sort which ought to be punished by sending the men responsible to jail.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IN JAIL

Wife of Warden Kills Her Son and Takes Her Own Life

New York, Oct. 10.—The Queens county jail in Long Island City was the scene of a midnight double tragedy which was probably a case of murder and suicide.

Henry S. Schleth, warden of the jail, found his wife and 4-year-old son dead, each with a bullet wound in their right temple. Near Mrs. Schleth was found a revolver with two chambers empty. Both mother and child were in their nightclothes.

Schleth could suggest no motive for his wife's act.

ROADS WATCHED BY ARMED MEN

General Hunt Begun For Slayers of Policeman Heath

THOUGHT HIDING IN WOODS

Yeggs Who Committed Murder After Robbing Postoffice Will Be Shot If Sighted by Those Hunting Them—State Officers Join Police In Search Around Salisbury

Salisbury, Mass., Oct. 10.—One hundred men, all crack shots, who are ready to shoot on sight the yeggmen who shot and killed Policeman William W. Heath, are guarding every road and path leading from the town, allowing no one to pass through their lines unless they properly identify themselves.

A thorough search for suspicious characters is being made, as it is believed the yeggs, who are believed to be still in hiding in the woods, will make a desperate attempt to escape.

After a conference between Selectman Stevens and State Policemen Flynn and Griffin fifty special police officers were sworn in, and this morning these men and 100 citizens entered the woods in an effort to ferret out the yeggs.

Every available policeman in Amesbury was pressed into service and policemen from Newburyport and Haverhill are aiding the local authorities. Many former members of Company B, Massachusetts militia, of Amesbury, and scores of citizens are guarding the roads leading from the woods into their city.

Word has been sent to the authorities in New Hampshire and Maine to watch for suspicious persons, because there is no possible way to escape except through the woods to the north.

The burglars were discovered by Elbridge Collins, night watchman of the electric railway station, who noticed lights in the general store where the postoffice is located. Collins notified Heath, the only officer on guard in this section of the town, and together they hurried to the postoffice. Collins was unarmed and Heath had only his club.

As they approached the store they caught sight of two men standing between that building and one adjoining. One of the men discharged a revolver and the shot passed between Heath and Collins. Heath rushed at the men. Again the revolver flashed and Heath dropped with a bullet in his heart. He died a few minutes later.

The burglars dashed into the woods back of the postoffice and Collins soon lost sight of them. He telephoned to Chief Beckman, who was at Salisbury Beach, and the hunt for the men was begun.

It was found the men had entered through a window. A hatchet, two drills and a fuse were discovered on the floor. The men had not time to attempt to open the safe and secured no booty.

This is the third time the local postoffice has been broken into in recent years. The two previous breaks were in 1907 and 1908.

Officer Heath was 56 years old. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

THE BAMBOO UMBRELLAS

An Incident In the Lives of Two Tourists

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The narrow, crooked streets of the walled native city blazed hotly under the direct rays of the sun. The little breeze that puffed over the pointed roofs merely swayed the hanging signs at the shop doors. Below, under the thin cotton awnings, it was stifling, and the air was heavy with the multifarious odors of a Chinese city.

In the shadow of the temple of the Ten Gods an umbrella vender squatted, exchanging doubtful compliments with a seller of sweetmeats who was resting in an opposite doorway. Save for these two, the long, tunnel-like street was empty.

In the distance appeared two men, white skinned and clothed in snowy linen. Both were lean jawed American tourists, and one of them mopped his heated face and peered anxiously into the narrow windows of the little cell-like shops.

"If you're thinking of something to drink, Vaill, you're up against it," remarked one of the men testily.

"Thought we might try some of the stuff they call 'tsew.' Fellows at the hotel said to be sure to get some if we came in here," explained Vaill.

Haller snorted scornfully.

"Guess the chaps at the hotel wanted to see us brought home on a stretcher," he growled. "I happen to know a man who drank some of the deadly stuff. Took him six months to get over it. No one but a Chinaman can stand it."

"Pretty stiff sort these Chinese," murmured Vaill. "I never thought much of them till I made this visit to China. There's plenty of ways that they can beat the Yankees; beat the Dutch, too," he chuckled.

"I never saw the Chink yet who could get ahead of a Yankee," challenged Haller. "Say, this is hot, Vaill. Whatever prompted us to leave the electric fans of the hotel and come into this blasted heat anyway?"

THEY STARED FOOLISHLY AT EACH OTHER.

Vaill laughed.

"Your love of adventure, old man, nothing less. Recollect how you suggested that modern Shanghai was too much like Paris to be really interesting and that if we wanted to see the real thing we must get out of the foreign settlement and come down here into the walled city. Here we are. Where's your romance, your adventure? You murmured something about dim temples and the smoke of incense and"—

Haller threw up a protesting hand. "I take it all back. Let us buy a couple of umbrellas from this fellow and get back to civilization."

"Done," agreed Vaill readily.

The vender of umbrellas straightened himself as the sound of European boots echoed on the pavement. He peered across at the seller of sweetmeats and said that two foreign devils were approaching and that he meant to sell them his finest umbrellas.

The seller of sweetmeats cracked a melon seed with his strong teeth and rearranged his basket of confections. There were hundreds of foreign devils in the settlements outside, but few of them ever strayed within these high walls into the noisome native city.

"Buy!" screeched the umbrella vender out of his small stock of English words picked up in the settlement.

"Buy!" echoed the seller of sweetmeats over the way.

The Americans looked at the umbrellas.

They were quick to choose from the assortment of gayly colored paper and printed silk sunshades a pair of handsome ones whose covering was a delicately woven network of fine bamboo threads. So closely was it woven that no lining was required to shut out the rays of the sun, and the covering was as soft and pliable as silk.

"How much?" asked Vaill.

The vender named a price far above the value of his entire stock in trade.

Vaill dropped the umbrella and turned away with a gesture of disgust. The umbrella man blocked his going by a swift movement.

Whereupon in a dolorous chant he gradually lowered the price of bamboo umbrellas until his customers were convinced that he was not charging more than double their actual worth; then they purchased.

As the Chinese thrust the money in his capacious sleeve, which did duty as money drawer or cash register, he shook his head sadly.

"I have been robbed," he mourned. "Much virtue here!" touching the bamboo umbrellas with a long nailed finger.

"Virtue, eh? How?" The imaginative Haller was instantly interested. When one buys umbrellas in crooked streets it is not unreasonable to hope for an adventure of some sort, even if the day is beastly hot and there is not a drop to drink short of the Astor House beyond the wall.

"Much virtue, much virtue," repeated the vender suggestively.

"Virtue? Tell us about it," insisted Haller, producing some copper cash that immediately disappeared into the voracious sleeve.

In spasmodic English, punctuated by shrill screeches to properly emphasize the interspersed Chinese words, the vender of umbrellas managed to convey the legend of the extraordinary nature of the bamboo umbrellas just purchased by the two Americans.

It appeared that the umbrellas had once belonged to a very learned physician, who, sitting beneath their shade, had in deep concentration of mind become possessed of the wisdom of all the past ages; consequently he became the wisest man in the entire world.

"Pshaw, the umbrellas have lost their virtue by this time!" laughed the skeptical Vaill.

But the narrator of the legend protested loudly and called upon the seller of sweetmeats to substantiate his statements. And this the latter did, swearing by his ancestral tablets and the grave of his great grandfather in so convincing a manner that the tourists tossed each of the rascals a dollar and grinningly entered the temple of the Ten Gods to put the story to a test.

The temple of the Ten Gods was supposed to offer the quiet and seclusion necessary to carrying out the scheme of concentration of mental forces, all of which was quite essential to attaining the wisdom of all the ages through the medium of the bamboo umbrellas. Thus had spoken the two Chinese.

Within the temple it was dim and dark and cool, and it smelled of dead incense smoke. The squatting idols in their shrines showed here and there a glimmer of gilt. There were no priests in attendance, and the tall prayer screens afforded a deep shadow where one who desired to meditate might hope to do so quite undisturbed.

"Of course it's all rubbish," remarked Vaill carlessly as he opened his umbrella and twirled it over his shoulder; "but, inasmuch as we are going to rest in here awhile and cool off, we might as well have a try for the wisdom end of the affair, eh?"

"Surely I shall try it," declared Haller solemnly. "As nearly as I can recollect, he said that he who meditates for three hours under one of these bamboo umbrellas will at the end of that time be possessed of all the wisdom of the ages. In other words, be the wisest man in the world."

"There will be a pair of us. We will have to divide the honors," laughed Vaill as he sat down on a pile of mats in the shadow of a prayer screen.

"Of course some of these oriental beliefs sound foolish," said Haller.

The air grew warmer as the day advanced, and finally the meditations of the tired tourists became merged in somnolence.

At last the rays of the declining sun pierced the carved screen in front of the doorway and awakened the sleepers.

They stared foolishly at each other, and with one accord each one reached for his timepiece to mark the hour.

Their pockets were empty.

An incredulous smile dawned on Vaill's face and faded. Slowly he arose and closed his bamboo umbrella with a sharp click.

"I've discovered the wisdom of the ages," he said dryly.

"Yes?" muttered Haller, his round face wearing a dazed, hurt expression. "What is it?"

"That we are fools. I recollect a Chinese proverb that says, 'He who discovers himself a fool, no man can tell him more; therefore he is a sage.'"

They stumbled out into the deserted street, and they knew that among the thousand mazes of the ancient city it was useless to search for the two thieves.

Silently they tramped toward the gate that gave upon the Bund, where were life and civilization.

When they reached a favorable spot on the river front, with one accord they flung the bamboo umbrellas far into the sluggish waters of the Hwangpo.

And the long look they exchanged was an unspoken interchange of promises that the affair of the bamboo umbrellas was a closed incident.

Back in the walled city, on another crooked street, squatted the vender of umbrellas and the seller of sweetmeats. They were in high good humor, for each one was admiring his American gold watch. The seller of sweetmeats cracked melon seeds with his strong teeth and grinned as he listened to the words of the umbrella vender. Said the latter:

"'He who discovers himself a fool, no man can tell him more: it is the wisdom of the ages.'"

Then they both laughed heartily.

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare. From English fields to south sea shore their path they follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

CHAPTER VII.

Wherein I Bargain For a Woman.

WHAT had happened I could well guess. Captain Matthews had been attacked. He had promptly shot one of the mutineers, and thereafter the rest had got him. My first impulse was to blow open the lock of the door and rush to his rescue, but wiser counsel prevailed, and I did nothing. I am, I think, somewhat cool headed in a crisis, and surely this was one. I could wait. A loaded pistol was better than an empty one, and to deal with me they would have to come to me for whatever purpose they might entertain, either to murder me or to release me. In either event I could do more than if I rushed into the fray now. I could not help Captain Matthews. I was sure that whatever fell purpose they might entertain for my little mistress would be in abeyance until they had settled with me.

I listened with every nerve strained to the utmost. I also waited most anxiously for the opening of the after cabin door, which was her own, but she must have been in a sound sleep, indeed, for the door did not open. Evidently she had heard nothing. I waited. It was not an easy task, but I judged it best.

Fortunately I had not long to wait, for in less time by far than I have taken to tell it the hatch was opened and the heavy booted men clattered down the companionway. The key was in the lock outside, and I could hear them turn it. I loosened my sword, which I had slung by its belt around my waist, picked up the two pistols, sent my back up against the side of the ship and made ready for whatever came.

The door was pushed open abruptly, and I saw the cabin was crowded with men. At least half the crew were gathered there, and it was a little cabin, the Rose of Devon being but a small ship. The rest, I guessed, were on watch. I could not see the boatswain. Evidently he had the deck. The vessel couldn't be left unwatched on such a night as this and in such a sea, and he was the fittest man to take charge of her. The steward had lighted the cabin lights, several of the men carried lanterns which they had brought from the forepeak, and others had drawn their sheath knives. There was plenty of illumination to show their villainous faces.

They were surprised to find me so prepared, and I gave them no time to recover.

"The first man," I hissed out, "that steps across that threshold without permission gets a bullet through him!"

"We mean you no harm, sir," spoke out one who seemed to be a ringleader, a man rated as boatswain's mate, whose name was Glibby.

"What are you doing here?" I asked, "in the cabin at this time of night?"

"Softly, softly, sir," replied Glibby; "we are here to ask questions, not to answer 'em."

"What do you mean?" I cried.

"We are masters of the ship."

"Captain Matthews?"

"He will captain no more ships on this or any other seas," answered Glibby, with truculent emphasis.

Now, it rose in my mind to shoot him then and there, murderous brute that he was. If I had been alone perhaps I would have done it without reckoning the consequences to myself, but I had another to think of. Unless craft stood me in good stead her case was hopeless. And bad as Glibby was, Pimball was the chief villain.

"Serves him right!" I broke out with well simulated heat. "He disrates me and locks me up here just for stealing a kiss from a maid, and"—

"Spoken like a man of spirit, Mister Hampdon!" cried Glibby. "What did I tell ye, mates; he's with us!"

"With you!" said I, loosening my hold on the pistol, but taking good care to keep ready. "I am with you, all right. What do you propose? I am sick of the treatment I received, and"—

"We want that treasure for ourselves."

"And you shall have it, provided I get my share with the other men," I answered, scarcely startled by their words, for this I had expected.

"We will share and share alike in everything," answered Glibby. "Am I right, mates?"

"Right you are!" came from the deep voices of the men.

How I longed to clutch him by his throat and choke him! My temper rose again, but this time, as before, I managed to keep it down, but with immense difficulty, as you may suspect.

"Come into the cabin, Mister Hampdon," said Glibby, "and we will talk it over."

"Wait," said I. "Who is in command of you?"

"Why, Mister Pimball, the bo's'n," answered Glibby.

"Very good," said I. "I must talk with him about the future. Do you go on deck, Glibby, and send Pimball below, and he and I with the rest of you will soon settle this matter."

"All right," answered the boatswain's mate, turning to the companionway. "Pimball can talk; him and you can come to terms, I make no doubt."

Now I couldn't allow myself to hesitate for the thousandth part of a second. Ostentatiously I shoved one pistol into the belt that hung at my right side, the other I dropped carelessly into the pocket of my coat, and as Glibby cluttered up the ladder, I walked fearlessly, to all appearances, out of the berth and into the cabin, the men giving back respectfully enough to leave me gangway.

"Now, what is it that you propose, Master Bo's'n?" I began, sitting down at the cabin table, while the rest ranged themselves about it, some standing, some sitting on the transoms at the sides, as Pimball came lumbering into the cabin.

"We know," began Pimball insolently, without further preliminaries, "that this ship's cruisin' for treasure. We know all we'll git out of the cruise is what we signed for an' nothin' else. We've made a good guess that the treasure is hereabouts, and we mean to have more than our wages. We're goin' to have our share of whotever's found that we're after."

"So you shall," I said, "I am with you in that. I want something more than my wages too."

"What's this woman anyway?" broke out another. "Why should she get it all? She's a mere girl."

"You have said right, mate; who and why indeed?" I answered smoothly, marking him down for my vengeance when my turn came. "Now, what are your plans?"

"We want that there map or chart that you have been seen readin' in your cabin," said Pimball.

It was in a little bag around my neck. I reached down, pulled out the bag, took the torn parchment from it and threw it on the table. There was not the least use in my pretending ignorance or in refusing to give it up. They could kill me and take it any way.

DISTRICT COURT.

The seven boys who were arrested at Houghs Neck in connection with the false alarm of fire last Sunday came up in the juvenile session of the court Thursday afternoon. After a hearing the cases were continued until Oct. 23.

Jeremiah O'Leary was fined $15 for drunkenness at Quincy.

William Brown was fined $10, John F. Gately $10, Patrick O'Shea $100, and Guy C. Goodell $15 for exceeding the automobile speed limit on the parkway at Milton.

—It is easy to charge the inevitable results of spending all the money in sight and borrowing all the money possible to the system says the New Bedford Standard, but the cold truth is that the habit of not counting the cost is much more responsible.

DANCE AT ALPHA HALL.

The annual dancing party of the Daughters of the Viking, which was given in Alpha hall Thursday evening, was one of the prettiest affairs held by the organization, and the guests of the evening who were present from Milton, Dorchester, Cambridge, Boston, Roxbury, Weymouth Braintree and Quincy had a most enjoyable evening. The decorations were potted palms and plants and music was furnished by Hamilton's orchestra. The affair was in charge of a committee that acted as officers of the dance Mrs. Maria Thompson and the Mises Anna Lund, Elvira Thompson, Esther Helquist, Alice Helquist.

THURSDAY EVENING CLUB

Annual Meeting and Banquet at East Milton

The Thursday Evening Club opened its winter season Thursday evening with a banquet in the basement of the Mission of Our Saviour church, East Milton, which was largely attended, after which the annual meeting was held in their rooms in Electa hall. Rev. Boyd Edwards, rector of the mission, holds the presidency by virtue of his position, and George Ellis was chosen vice president, George Arnold was re-elected treasurer, and Albert Woods secretary. The permanent committee consists of Jacob A. Turner, Rev. Boyd Edwards and George Arnold.

The question of incorporating a building association, so funds could be secured for the erection of a new clubhouse, will be discussed at the next meeting. The proposition was presented by Mr. Turner last spring and during the summer a committee has been investigating and will probably make a report.

The social season of the club will be an extensive one this season and one of the dances to be held is dated for Thanksgiving eve in Ellsworth hall. A list of speakers has been completed and monthly talks and short entertainments will be part of the program.

John Shields and Sam Woods have prepared interesting papers and these will be given at the next meeting. Events in the growth of East Milton is the theme of both papers.

SAYS BULL NOT VICIOUS

But Don't Play As Easy As a Kitten

Malcolm McRitchie who sustained injuries at the Sailor's Snug Harbor Tuesday from a Guernsey bull, is at their hospital and exhibits signs of complete recovery. Two ribs were fractured and he suffered a severe shock. McRitchie is 70 years old.

"The article which appeared in the Ledger Oct. 9, regarding the sailor who got hurt is not entirely correct. The bull is a well-bred registered Guernsey, but has never been entered for ribbons. He is not vicious and never has shown any signs of being so. I have handled him since he was a calf eight months old and have broken him well to harness and do lots of work on the farm with him.

"The man Malcolm McRitchie who got hurt was told to keep away from the stock as he was getting incompetent to handle them. Any spirited young bull will roll a barrel or box about for exercise, and will keep right at it until they become tired. Even a person who understands handling them, if they should slip down and not have hold of the nose ring, if the bull was in a playful mood, might get bowled along and a bull don't play as easy as a kitten.

"When I was called, I ran out and got the bull alone, and put him in the barn and he was not mad. I never heard of any bull goring a cow. The farmer forgot to fasten him with the nose rope and he slipped the chain over his head."

"The president of the institution is Francis W. Sargent, but Arthur Adams is treasurer."

THE FOUR UMPIRES

Rigler and Klem, National; Connolly and Egan, American

Photos by American Press Association.

In a most interesting article one of the best known baseball experts in the world compared the managers of the Giants and Athletics. He pointed out that they were of entirely different schools of baseball McGraw is a fighter, umpire baiter, and never gives in at any point. He no doubt gains the long end of many decisions by such tactics. On the other hand Mack is quiet and never raises a howl. He never allows his players to protest against a decision. But McGraw is up against a different proposition in the world's series. The umpiring is the best there is, and no complaints are tolerated a moment. Here are the men who are the arbitrators: Rigler and Klem of the National league at the top and Connolly and Egan of the American league at the bottom. They rule with an iron hand.

SUICIDE OF A PLUMBER

O. M. Rogers, of Braintree, aged about 54 years, a master plumber was found hanging in the back room of his shop at 947 Washington street at 11.30 today by Lester Tobey, who was employed by Rogers. From what can be learned, Tobey returned to the shop from a beam and apparently dead. He work and entering the back shop was surprised to find his employer hanging from a beam and apaprently dead. He immediately sounded the alarm and the police and physicians were notified but life was extinct. No cause is assigned for his rash act. Rogers was married and lived at 76 Franklin street. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

According to Mr. Rogers' family, he had been complaining of late of overwork, and it is presumed that in a nervous collapse he ended his life. According to Dr. Merriam who was called he had been dead fully an hour when found. He was a deacon of the South Congregational church and a member of Delta lodge of Masons.

Mr. Rogers was at one time located at West Quincy in the building now occupied by the wet wash on Copeland street, near the depot. George A. Mayo was then an employee.

—While the child labor law which went into effect the first of this month was right in intent says the Old Colony Memorial there are arising some questions as to the soundness of its actual appliance. Already many textile centers are effected, and employes are complaining because their children cannot work, but the overseers of the poor are having increased demands made upon them, while at the same time the school authorities are having to provide for 20,000 more scholars who have been thrown out of employment.

THINK MILL GIRLS "LOOK LIKE LADIES"

Foreign Visitors Are Su prised at Styles In New Bedford

New Bedford, Mass., Oct. 10.—Richard Walff, owner of a linen mill in Germany, and John Eddleston and Harold Heyworth, joint owners of a large cotton mill in England, after having inspected the cotton industry in this city said their greatest surprise was at the manner in which the feminine mill operatives of New Bedford dress.

"Why, they look like perfect ladies," one of the mill magnates said: "In our own countries, where the wages are not much different from what they are here, it is customary to see the young women going to the mills in worn-out dresses, with shawls covering their shoulders. And here in New Bedford the operatives dress as up-to-dately as the finest ladies in the land."

BLOOD MONEY BURIED

Negro Was Paid $500 to Kill Christian Science Practitioner

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 10.—Detectives set out for Tijuana, Cal., to dig for the $500 "blood money" said to have been buried near that place by Burr L. Harris, the negro who confessed the murder of Mrs. Rebecca P. Gay, a Christian Scientist practitioner of this city.

Harris gave them minute directions for the finding of the money which he declared he had received as payment for his crime. The police have the name of another negro declared by Harris to be the man who delivered the money for the instigator of the plot.

PLAGUE RAT KILLED

First One Found on Seattle Water Front In Many Years

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 10.—A bubonic plague-infected rat was killed on the water-front here, the first in years, and the health department immediately spread poison in the neighborhood and took other steps to exterminate rats.

For many years Seattle has paid a bounty of 10 cents on each dead rat brought to the health department and has employed rat catchers besides. The danger of plague is always present because rats jump overboard from Oriental boats and swim ashore, sometimes a mile.

Brandeis In Rate Cases

Washington, Oct. 10.—Louis D. Brandeis of Boston has been retained by the interstate commerce commission to represent the opponents of the 5 percent increase in freight rates proposed by the eastern railroads.

DECISION AT PLATE COST ATHLETICS GAME.

It was in the last of the ninth of the second game. Strunk was on third and Barry on second. No one was out. Lapp, next up, hit to Wiltse, who was playing first for the Giants. Strunk dashed home. The decision was close. It could have been called either way. Umpire Connolly called Strunk out, the game went into extra innings, and the Athletics never had another chance.

DR. ASH IS A CANDIDATE

Has Taken Out Papers for Democratic Nomination

It has now become an assured fact that Dr. John H. Ash is to be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Mayor at the City Primaries next month, for he took out five nomination papers for Mayor Friday evening. He is up to the present time the only avowed candidate although Mr. Fegan may come into thec ontest before the date filing papers which expires Oct. 25.

As for the Republican nomination there has been no outward change since Friday. There are plenty of rumors however and it is quite certain that Mr. Johnson will have an opponent at the primaries for the nomination. Just who he will be is not publically known.

A week ago the name of Dr. N. S. Hunting was being mentioned for the office but evidently this plan did not materalize, for nothing has developed in that direction.

This morning the name of another prominent gentleman is being mentioned in connection with the Republican nomination in the person of Richard R. Freeman of Wollaston. It is reported that efforts are being made by certain citizens to get Mr. Freeman to consent to be a candidate. It is probable that the first of next week will see further developments.

POLICE HEADQUARTERS.

Commencing today the new shifts at police headquarters go into effect. The day is now divided into three eight-hour shifts between Lieut. Hanson and Sergts. Bishop and Larkin.

Under the new regime, Lieut. Hanson will be in charge of the desk at headquarters from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M.,Sergt. Bishop from 4 P. M. until 12 midnight, and Sergt. Larkin from 12 midnight until 8 A. M. This means that the three officers will have eight hours continuous duty without opportunity to return home for meals, so that if they desire anything to eat they must carry their lunch with them.

HOWE-RIPLEY WEDDING

Quincy Man Goes to Springfield for a Wife

Frederick Griggs Howe, manager's assistant of the Citizens Gas Light Co. of this city, and Miss Mary Day Ripley of Springfield, were married at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. James H. Ripley on Thursday, by Rev. John Luther Kilbon, pastor of the Park Congregational church.

The bride was given away by her father, and Walter R. Howe, a brother of the groom, was the best man. The matrons of honor, were Mrs. Dwight R. Winter and Mrs. Walter R. Howe, and six little girls were ribbon bearers. The bride was dressed in a simple robe of white satin slightly draped and cut with a narrow rounding train. Beautiful Duchess lace, an heirloom from the paternal grandmother partly covered the bodice and edged a draping of tulle which fell over the skirt. With the robe was worn a veil of tulle, surmounted with a dainty wreath of lilies of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of the same flowers.

The house was decorated with masses of oak leaves, relieved here and there by clusters of chrysanthemums. Palms banked the room in which the couple were assisted in receiving by their parents and the bridal party. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Adams of Quincy.

Mr. and Mrs. Howe left on a honeymoon trip and will be at home at 41 Greenleaf street after Jan. 1.

Mr. Howe has been associated with the Citizens Gas Light Co., for about three years and in that time has gained the friendship of many people in this city.

SQUANTUM BREAK.

The police made an investigation Friday of the reported burglary at the house of Baron Von Schelly at Squantum, but as far as they or the family could learn, if the house was visited by burglars, they went away without taking anything of value with them.

Mrs. Annie Berman of Franklin street is entertaining friends from Beechwood for a few days.

CONTEST WAS CLOSE

Cambridge Latin Wins from Quincy High

Quincy High lost its second game of the season to Cambridge High and Latin at Cambridge on Friday, 6 to 0. The slowness of the winning backs and the fine defense of the local boys pervented further scoring.

Quincy claim to a touchdown in the last period was not allowed by Umpire Ferguson. In the beginning of the period they punted the ball from the middle of the field and it landed on the 25 yard line and bounded behind the posts. A Quincy man fell on it and the players argued that a score should be allowed.

The ball was declared dead because no Cambridge man had touched it and it was placed in play on the line it bounded from.

Quinsy's offensive work was poor, Cambridge breaking through the line so frequently that Quincy resorted to a kicking game. They played a stiffer game than they did against Arlington, although they had but little opportunity to get in real practice because of the weather.

Murphy's ankle is all right and he played three periods, being relieved in the last by Crosscup. Mullin went in place of Brown but no other changes were made. The squad consisted of 15 men. The score:

DISASTER REPORTED IN MID OCEAN

Steamship Volturno Bound for New York Burned and Many Lives Reported Lost

Over 500 Reported to Have Been Saved by Other Steamers

Dispatches from Fishguard, Eng., chronicle another great marine disaster in which it is estimated fully 136 of the passengers and crew lost their lives when the Steamship Volturno of the Uranium Steamship line was burned in mid-ocean while on her voyage from Rotterdam to New York.

In this disaster, as in many others, the wireless played an important part, its S. O. S. bringing ten steamships to the rescue, whose crews, by their heroism succeeded in saving 521 of those on board the steamship. The first steamer to answer the call for help was the Cunard steamship Carminia. Capt. James Barr, who received the call when 78 miles distant.

Capt. Barr crowded on full steam and with exra stokers made over 20 knots an hour in the teeth of a terrible gale.

A wireless from the Carminia states that the Volturno caught fire in mid-Atlantic and that the flames raged so furiously in the gale that the abandonment of the steamship followed on Thursday morning. A few details coming through by wireless promise a graphic story of the fight made by the crews of 10 trans-Atlantic steamships who responded to the Volturno's call.

The Volturno sailed from Rotterdam on Oct. 2, for New York by way of Halifax, where it was due to stop next Monday.

It is believed that the steamship carried 24 cabin passengers, 540 steerage passengers and a crew of 93 men. The wireless reports say that 521 persons were saved, and that 300 persons are unaccounted for thus far.

DISTRICT COURT.

The liquors seized from James Harvey at Weymouth were forfeited.

Patrick Fitzgerald of Weymouth was sent to the house of correction for three months for drunkenness.

James W. Bailie was fined $1.00 Gustave Olson $10, and Jeremiah McCarthy $10 for drunkenness at Qunicy.

Henry M. Jackson was sentenced to two months in the house of correction for larceny. Sentence suspended until May 28, 1914, on payment of $25 costs.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

Monday, Oct. 13, will be generally observed as COLUMBUS DAY, a legal holiday in Massachusets. The office of the Daily Ledger will be closed all day, no paper being issued.

Is it Monday or Saturday today? The clothes lines would indicate it is wash day. The man of the house may have an excuse for not attending church on Sunday, because he has no clean linen.

COLUMBUS DAY.

The American people have never been strong on holidays. Formerly the farm boy scarce expected to get July 4th off the hay-field. Even now many merchants in small cities keep stores open holiday mornings.

Columbus day, now a legal holiday, Oct. 12, in 24 states, is the latest in the family of popular celebrations. To many industrious persons, a public holiday is an occasion of popular dissipation, at the best a time when people take wearisome jaunts, unfitting themselves for work. To them the growing observance of this October festival means simply stoppage of production, loss of wages for working people, and the waste of purposeless loafing.

To elderly people who remember when there were few holidays and no vacations, often 12 hour periods of work in factories, present day habits of loafing seem absurd. They forget that in the simple old times, while there was great persistence in labor, there was little speed. The man who could stop an hour at the bench to gossip with his neighbors took his holidays as he went along.

In these days of efficiency when every motion is timed to the revolutions of machinery or the office clock, the human body is under severe strain. There are none too many breaks. A day in the woods may leave the escaped worker tired at night. But a wholesome break has been made in the grey monotony of toil.

As for the occasion that draws one out in the sunshine, it makes little difference. Christopher Columbus is worthy of any honors that may be offered to him by those who recognize the real significance of the day. In a time of ignorance and fear, he stood for enlightenment, progress, and heroism. Had this continent been properly named, it would have been called Columbia instead of America.

RELIGION AND BUSINESS.

The series of sermons which is being given at the First Parish Church by Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson on the general relation between religious ideals and the practical occupations of men is attracting the more attention because of the unusual opportunity enjoyed by Mr. Hudson to know something about the practical side of life during the ten years in which he practiced law before he took up the work of the ministry.

This was especialy true of last Sunday's sermon on the professional type as represented by the laywer; and will no doubt give no less general interest to the discussion of the theme announced for next Sunday: "The Business Man."

NAKEDNESS OF HIS WRONGDOING

Parker Says Sulzer Made Frantic Effort to Cover It

HIS CHARACTER IS ASSAILED

Declares Executive Stands Stripped of Disguises Before Court and Public —Guilty of Misconduct So Gross as to Necessitate His Removal From Governor's Chair

Albany, Oct. 11.—Never since the impeachment trial of Governor Sulzer opened has he been subjected to such a severe verbal flaying as Alton B. Parker administered in his argument for the board of managers.

"Before this bar the defendant stands guilty of the offenses charged by the impeachment and proven by uncontroverted evidence," he said. "Before the bar of the court of public opinion this defendant stands condemned on the evidence here presented and on the further damning testimony of his shifty defenses and of his futile efforts to dodge by technicalities the trial of the issues before this high court.

"That same public opinion takes congnizance of the fact that the defendant here is suffering from such a severe attack of moral nearsightedness that even when directed by a myriad of scornful fingers he cannot discern the dishonest, criminal and dishonorable nature of the acts proven.

"Even justice must see through its severe eyes something of the pathetic in this defendant's frantic efforts to cover the nakedness of his wrongdoing. Defiance, defense, justification, prevarication, denunciation of his accusers—attempts to suppress and falsifiy testimony and efforts to cast the blame elsewhere—each in turn has been stripped from his quaking flesh until he stands now naked before this court, without a rag of his attempted vindication clinging to his deformed and mutilated manhood.

"Every disguise has been torn from his back, from the petticoat in which he trusted for safety to the armor of defiance in which he threatened to attack and expose a political leadership to which we have found him suing for a merciful obliteration of his misdeeds and offering the bribe of submission.

"No act of his shows more perfectly the complete baseness of his character, unfitting him utterly for any public or private trust, than does his effort to coerce the members of this court through channels which his warped intellect mistakingly trusted held the power of coercion.

"Regardless of the origin of these charges, regardless of any personal infliction of discomfort, this court must, we feel certain, find on all the evidence that this defendant has been guilty of misconduct so gross as to necessitate his removal for the honor, peace, prosperity and good government of this community.

"And to this court we shall commit the decision of the case against William Sulzer, securely confident that the honor, safety and welfare of this, the Empire State, are assured of the protection contemplated by the constitution in the creation of this high court."

Parker's contentions were upheld in equally strong language by his associate, former Senator Brackett, who denounced Sulzer in the most biting terms.

Parker and Brackett were both sharply answered by Sulzer's chief attorney, Mr. Herrick, who, claiming the court was unfriendly, demanded that its members respect their oaths and decide the case on its merits. Herrick plainly told the members of the court of appeals their decision would go on trial before the people of the state. If it was not justified, he intimated, the day of the recall of judges and judicial decisions would be hastened.

The high court of impeachment adjourned until next Monday afternoon. Upon reconvening the court will decide upon its plan of balloting, whether it shall be done in open or executive session, and then take up the constitutional objections to the impeachment charges that have been raised by counsel for the governor. If the judges hold adversely in whole or in part to the contentions of Sulzer's counsel, a vote on his guilt or innocence will follow.

The next question to be decided will be whether he should be removed from office. Should this be decided affirmatively the judges then will vote on whether additional punishment, disqualification from ever holding public office in this state again, shall be meted out to him.

DR. SHAW WANTS $1000

Thinks Guarantee of Over $1500 to Mrs. Pankhurst Is Unjust

New York, Oct. 11.—Dr. Anna H. Shaw, president of the National Woman Suffrage associataion, cancelled her engagement to speak at the meeting arranged to welcome Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant English leader, here next week.

Dr. Shaw said her unwillingness to speak was due to the fact that while Mrs. Pankhurst had been guaranteed $1500 and part of the gate receipts, she (Dr. Shaw) had been unable to procure a guarantee of $1000 for her cause.

"I do not object to Mrs. Pankhurst's receiving any price she can secure for her lectures here," said Dr. Shaw, "but I feel very strongly that co-operation implies an obligation on both sides. It does not mean that one party shall receive all the benefits while the other party is simply used to further the interests of the party benefited."

SEEKS SEPARATION

Mrs. Blake's Suit Follows Proceedings Against Mrs. Mackay

New York, Oct. 11.—Mrs. Joseph A. Blake, wife of an eminent New York surgeon, has filed suit for separation in the supreme court. Desertion for more than three years and non-support for the past three months are alleged.

Mrs. Blake recently sued Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, wife of the head of the Postal Telegraph-Cable company, for $1,000,000 damages for alleged alienation of Blake's affections. The present suit for separation is the outcome of that suit, although it was never brought into court.

Mrs. Blake seeks alimony for the support of herself and her two boys, the elder of whom is at college. The younger boy, 12 years old, is with his mother in this city.

LAST PANAMA DIKE OUT OF THE WAY

Destruction of Gamboa Unites Waters of Two Oceans

Panama, Oct. 11.—The Panama canal is a reality. The waters of the Atlantic met those of the Pacific in the greatest of man-made waterways when the Gamboa dike, the last obstruction separating the waters of the world's two greatest seas, was blown up.

President Wilson, in Washington touched the button which set off the explosion. There was a rumble, as of a giant earthquake, a roar and the torrent of dirt and rock as forty tons of dynamite was exploded. The destruction of the slide, or dike, allowed the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific to mingle in a constructed ditch for the first time in history.

COUNT KATSURA DEAD

Administration of Premier of Japan Was a Stormy One

Tokio, Oct. 11.—Count Taro Katsura, three times premier of Japan, is dead. His death is apt to throw Japan into another political chaos. As premier he headed the government party which has of late become very unpopular with the masses.

Katsura was born in 1847. He was premier from 1901 to 1906, and again became premier in 1809. He resigned a second time. When a cabinet crisis arose early in 1913 several statesmen declined to take the post and Katsura was again chosen to form a ministry. From the outset his administration was a stormy one.

ONE TELEPHONE TO ELEVEN

Remarkable Growth of the Quincy Exchange

The telephone business in Quincy is growing very fast, and the extent of the industry is surprising. At the present time there are about 2940 subscribers connected with the local exchange. One year ago there were 2523 subscribers, showing an increase of 417 in twelve months. These totals do not include several subscribers in the Atlantic ward who are in the Dorchester exchange, possibly 300 more, making a total of over 3200.

About 14,100 telephone calls are made on an average every day by Quincy subscribers. There are 47 young women in the operating force and 16 operators can work at the switchboard at one time. Quincy is the headquarters of a district and a number of men are employed here. miles of telephone wire in the city.

The number of direct lines between Quincy and surrounding cities and towns follow: Boston, 98 lines; Braintree, 15; Brookline, 4; Cohasset, 4; Dorchester, 26; East Boston, 2; Hingham, 10; Hull, 10; Hyde Park, 1; Jamaica, 4; Milton, 18; Randolph, 4; Roxbury, 9; South Boston, 4; Weymouth, 17; Brockton, 3.

Quincy has a population of 36,000, so that there is one telephone to eleven people. Quincy has 7300 houses which would give nearly every other house a telephone.

FORMER QUINCY BOY HONORED.

William Norbert Pierce, son of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Pierce formerly of Quincy now of Forest avenue, Brockton, has signed a contract with the Chicago Symphony orchestra. LAID TRAP FOR HIM.

Harry M. Jackson of Newbury avenue, Atlantic, was arrested by Sergt. Larkin last night for the larceny of a magneto valued at $45 from J. N. Rice, and an automobile shoe valued at $38 from Albert L. Hall. The arrest of Jackson came about through his leaving a peculiar screwdriver at the garage of Mr. Rice when he stole the magneto. This screwdriver had been used to unfasten the magneto from the car and had accidentally been left behind. It was traced to Jackson and a trap set to catch him. He was asked by Mr. Rice if he knew where he could buy a good magneto as someone had stolen his.

Jackson agreed to get him one which he did, and later he appeared on the scene with Mr. Rice's own magneto which Jackson had tried to disguise with a litle paint. The number of the magneto gave the snap away and Jackson instead of getting the price of $25 which he asked for the magneto, got arrested. After his arrest he admitted under the third degree that he had stolen the new automobile shoe which he had hidden at his home and which was recovered.

This morning in court Jackson pleaded guilty to both complaints and received a sentence of one month in the house of correction on each, which sentences were suspended until May 28, 1914, on the payment of $25 costs. The court however told Jackson that a reoccurence of a similar case meant that the suspension would be revoked.

WASHINGTONS AND QUINCYS

Win Games This Week in Grammar Soccer League

The opening of the soccer league of the grammar schools resulted in three contests and five postponements on account of rain, so that a fair chance has hardly been offered the fans to see just what can be expected this year. The unplayed games will be run in during the schedule. As yet the two divisions of schools have not been designated.

Friday the Quincys defeated the Cranch, 2 to in what was an ordinary game because the losers have played soccer but seldom and are inclined to bunch their play. The winners were more open and in this way succeeded in bringing about the scores. The field was very heavy.

The week results were:
Washington, 4—Wollaston, 0.
Willard, 0; Massachusetts Fields, 0
Quincy, 2; Cranch, 0.

COLUMBUS DAY ATTRACTIONS

Columbus Day will be generally observed in Quincy on Monday, but very little variety is offered in the athletic line.

The Quincy A. A. secured a date Friday night for a football game with the Fitton A. C. of Roxbury on the Merrymount oval. The negotiations were completed shortly before midnight. The visitors played Quincy its hardest game last season and their knowledge, coupled with their aggressiveness, always makes it interesting for the local champs. And, by the way the Fittons came close to taking the title from them last season.

In the morning the Red Men A. C. of South Quincy will play an eleven from Whitman which averages about 175 pounds, some heavier than the South Quincy boys. The Ward Three fellows have been training hard and have managed to get in a lot of practice this week even though it did rain. It will be their opening game.

Manager Wardwell of the Kincaide Theatre announces for the holiday and also Tuesday and Wednesday a big feature bill of vaudeville and pictures that cannot fail to please the thousands of patrons of that pretty playhouse. Albers' eight polar bears "the real discoverers of the North Pole," will be seen in an interesting exhibition of animal sagacity. Right from Hammerstein's New York playhouse comes Lieut. Eldridge with his novelty act from the Orient. Howe & Edwards present a pleasing comedy skit entitled ""The Arrival of Mr. Dooley." Music lovers will welcome Anita the gypsy violinist. Pathe's Weekly, always most interesting, has some splendid pictures of the Quincy built battleship ""Rivadavia. The photoplays are all new and right up to the usual high standard of this clean cozy house.

At Braintree, it will be a monster benefit day for Harry Burrill, the Braintree catcher who is recovering from a shattered mastoid received in a game on Labor day, when a high inshoot delivered by Carson, his pitcher, curled in behind his ear and rendered him unconscious. A ball game will be played between Braintree and Quincy nines, the Braintree team consisting of Drinkwater, left field; DeYoung, short stop; Riley, second; Mulligan, centre; Dineen, first; Hanson, third; Pettipit, catcher; Ross, pitcher and Pratt, right field. The Quincy nine is the best bunch of all stars recruited here this year and consists of McDonald, catcher; Michaels, pitcher; Hoyt, first; Flynn, second; Bates, short stop; Gillis, third; P. Duggan, centre; Galvin, left and C. Duggan, right field. The day's benefit will close with a dance in the new Town hall which is large enough to accommodate all who see the game.

At Brockton on the holiday a parade will be held by the Eagles, in which John Adams Aerie will be entered.

AGAIN VICTORS IN CLOSE GAME

Athletics Take Third From the Giants, Six to Five

DEMAREE PROVES EASY VICTIM

Driven From Mound and Succeeded by Marquard, Who Holds Opponents Hitless After Warming Up—Desperate Rally by Giants In Seventh, but It Comes Too Late

Philadelphia, Oct. 11.—By winning the fourth game for the world's baseball championship here the Philadelphia Athletics secured a lead of three to one in the series over the New York Giants. The final score was 6 to 5.

McGraw was unable to duplicate Mack's stunt of Thursday by making good with a young twirler. Demaree, sent to the mound for the Giants, was an easy victim of the Athletic willow wielders, and was chased after the Mackmen had touched him up for seven hits, good for four runs.

Marquard, who succeeded, was a victim of the Athletics' stick work during the first inning he worked, and a base on balls, followed by a double and a single, added two runs to the Athletic string and gave them the one extra tally they needed to put the game on ice. During the next three rounds Marquard was at his best, and, having gotten warmed up, held his opponents hitless for the remainder of the session.

Entering the seventh inning with but two lone singles to their credit against the slab work of Bender, the Giants solved the Indian's delivery, and after Burns and Murray had landed on the sacks via the single route, Merkle slammed a long hit into deep left which bounded into the bleachers for a home run, the Giants' first round-trip slam of the series.

In the eighth, with confidence restored and the knowledge that Bender was weakening, the top of the Giant batting order went to the Indian. Herzog connected with a single for his first safe hit of the series. Bender steadied and Doyle forced Herzog, to be forced himself by Fletcher.

Burns, however, rapped out a double, which scored Fletcher. Shafer, with two strike-outs and a weak pop-up to his credit, laced a triple into deep right near the foul line, scoring Burns. With but a single needed to tie up the game, Murray was unable to deliver, and was thrown out at first by Collins.

Crandall was sent to bat for Wilson in the ninth, but Bender, who had asked to be allowed to finish, retired the three Giants in order. It was a splendid bit of nerve displayed by the Indian, who, despite the fact that he had weakened, was there with sufficient head work to prevent the rally which the Giants tried desperately to start.

It was a game rally put up by the visitors, but it came too late, and was not sufficiently aggressive to meet the efforts of Bender, fighting a last stand for the Athletics.

The Giants now have to win three games in a row to nose out the Athletics. Manager Mack's confidence in Bender was something that the Indian should be proud of. Bender was all in at the finish of this game. The score:

PROMPTED BY VENGEANCE

Vermont Farmer Murdered and Wife Probably Shared Same Fate

Brattleboro, Vt., Oct. 11.—Vengeance that took form in the wiping out of a family is suspected in the murder of Walter Nichols, a farmer of West Guilford, whose body was found in a roadway not far from his house. Sheriff Mann believes Nichols' wife was also lured into the woods and killed.

The same hand that struck down the husband, he declares, has probably ended the wife's existence as well. The woods near the Nichols home will be thoroughly examined in the belief that the woman's body will be found.

The authorities sent out a description of Irving Wrisley, the hired man on Nichols' farm, who has disappeared. A bay horse and wagon are also missing from the farm.

Nichols was 27 years old. His skull had been fractured by a blow, and a hammer, which it is believed was the weapon used, was found under his body.

The probably fatally injured are Max Glass, Holyoke, Mass., fractured skull and concussion of the brain; Otto St. Arnold, Meriden, a waiter, fractured jaw, fractured leg and internal injuries; Miss Frances Florian, Rock Falls, fractured skull.

POLICE CHIEF BRIBED BY REVOLUTIONISTS

Planned to Kill President of China at Inauguration

Pekin, Oct. 11.—Chen, the chief of the Pekin mounted police, was arrested while the ceremony of inaugurating Yuan Shi Kai as president of the Chinese republic was in progress. He confessed that southern rebels had bribed him to make an attempt to assassinate Yuan Shi Kai as the president was taking oath of office.

Suspicion was aroused by Chen's persistent efforts to secure a position during the ceremony near the president. A number of bombs were found in Chen's residence.

Aside from this incident the utmost success attended the first inauguration of a president of a republic in China.

MISAPPLICATION OF BANK FUNDS

Charge Against Former Head of Providence Institution

METCALF UNDER INDICTMENT

Pleads Not Guilty When Arraigned and Bail Is Fixed at $50,000 to Answer to Twenty-Four Counts—Total Amount Alleged to Have Been Misused Is Placed at $200,000

Providence, Oct. 11.—Edward P. Metcalf, former president of the Atlantic National bank, which closed its doors in April last, and four New York financial men are named in a sixty-five-page indictment secretly returned and made public through the arraignment of Metcalf on charges of misapplication of the funds of the bank.

The total amount alleged to have been misapplied is given at $200,000, of which the loss to the bank will be $150,000. Orrion R. Farror, James F. Allen, Henry E. Dekay and John W. Dekay of New York were also named in the indictment. They are charged with aiding and abetting Metcalf in taking the funds of the bank. They are not in custody, but New York marshals are looking for them. Twenty-four counts were named in the indictment.

Metcalf pleaded not guilty to the indictment and the question of bail came up. District Attorney Stiness immediately asked for enough bail so that there would be no object in the prisoner trying to escape.

Judge Brown said he would make a suggestion that $50,000 would seem to be about the right amount, but would leave it to the attorneys to decide.

Stiness said he thought that would satisfy the United States, and P. H. Quinn, counsel for Metcalf, said he would have to ask his client if he could raise the extra amount. He said he did not want that to be construed as asking for a decrease of bail.

The surety that Metcalf had already provided was then brought forward and examined. All told it amounted to $20,520. Later the full amount of bail was raised and Metcalf was released last night.

The minimum penalty for misapplication of funds of a national bank is five years on each count and not over ten years on each count. Metcalf was the former president of the Atlantic National bank and now vice president and a director. The secret indictment was returned by the federal grand jury sitting in special session.

This is the session of the grand jury which the department of justice ordered to investigate the Atlantic National bank failure. The utmost secrecy marked all of its sittings here and not a hint of what came before the members was divulged.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

"There," said I coolly, "you have it." Pimball picked it up.

"I can make but little out of it," he said, and I doubted if he could read.

"You can at least see the latitude and longitude on it in the upper corners, can't you?" I asked, hardly suppressing my contempt for the man.

"Aye, that's plain enough," he answered dubiously.

"And you see that little wavy line that runs up from the lagoon over the top of what looks like a wall to an opening in the side?" I continued, determining suddenly to inflame their minds with the treasure so that they would give less heed to other things more important to me.

"Yes, I can make that out too."

"You see that little cross there?"

Pimball turned around and faced the others crowding about him in great and growing excitement.

"Here—lights here!" he growled.

The men nearest him shoved forward with their lanterns illuminating the torn sheepskin.

"Aye. I can make that out too. What does it mean?" he asked, after a long stare.

"It means, if there is any truth about it, that the treasure is thereabouts."

"What treasure is it?"

"The plunder of a Spanish galleon by a pirate ship."

"And how came it to be there on that island?"

"It was buried in that cave there a hundred and fifty years ago by one Philip Wilberforce, an English buccaneer."

"And how came this girl by news of it?"

How much of the story they understood I could not tell. Probably but little, yet the idea of the treasure was real enough undoubtedly.

"And you think there is treasure there?" asked Pimball.

Now, of late I had changed my mind, why, I know not, but I had, yet it would not do to tell them that.

"I am sure of it," I cried, "gold, silver, jewels. God knows what. Everything to make us rich forever."

"And what do you reckon the value of it all to be?"

"Oh, several millions of pounds," I answered lightly as if the treasure was so great that a million more or less was of no moment.

"Hurrah!" cried out one old seaman, and the cabin on the instant was filled with wild cries, bestial, brutal shouts.

As the sound partially died away I heard the door back of me open. Now, I had purposely so placed myself as to be between the crowd and the door. The door was opened but a little way. I was conscious that she was awake and at least was listening.

"You are the only navigator among us, Mister Hampdon," began Pimball, after the men got measurably quiet again, "and if you are with us, you will take the ship there to that island. We'll git the treasure aboard, sail away and sink her on the South American coast and then every man for himself with all he can carry."

"Am I to be captain?" I asked.

"There'll be no captain. Every man for himself, I say, but me and the bo's'n's mate, Gibby, will take the watches in turn. You'll navigate the ship and whatever is necessary for our safety we'll do at your order. Is it understood?"

"Yes," said I, "under one condition."

"We make no conditions," said Pimball darkly, "we are masters of the ship, remember, and this is our last word."

"It is not mine," said I composedly, for I had yet the hardest part of the bargain to drive.

"Well, it's got to be," said Pimball menacingly, starting toward me with the marlinspike he carried.

"Now, my friend," said I, "we might just as well understand each other. You can kill me if you want to. It would be easy enough, but when you have killed me you have killed your last chance at the treasure. You don't know what latitude or longitude we are in now. There is not one of you that knows enough to take a sight or to sail the ship to the island. You are completely helpless. My life means the difference between treasure and no treasure to you. You are smart enough to see that."

"He speaks right," said an old seaman at the back of the crowd.

"There speaks a man of sense," said I. "Therefore you will hear my conditions and accede to them."

"Heave ahead," said Pimball roughly enough, evidently not liking the situation, but failing utterly to see how it could be amended since I completely held the whip hand of them all.

"What I stipulate is very simple. First of all, I am to have my full and equal share of the treasure with the rest. I am to be treated exactly like the others in the division, and my life and liberty, which are just as valuable to me as to any of you, are to be treated with respect, as I respect those of others."

"Why, we told you that in the first place," growled out the boatswain. "If that's all you've got to say"—

"The woman!"

"Ah, the woman!" said Pimball slowly.

"What had you proposed to do with her?" I asked.

"Why—er—I—er," the man faltered. He actually did not dare to say what had been in his mind, and I've no doubt that my pistol never looked bigger than it did when I quietly laid my hand on it.

It was probable that the others had not as yet decided what was to be done with her, whatever Pimball may have concluded. I took advantage, therefore, of their hesitation and pushed the matter to a speedy conclusion.

"Well," I said quickly, "I want her for myself." Did I hear a groan in the cabin back of me? If I did, I could not afford to hesitate. I could not let them hear. "You saw how she treated me," I cried, raising my voice and banging on the table. "She struck me. She had me imprisoned. I want her to be given over to me alone."

"But"— began Pimball, not relishing the abandonment of this prize which he had evidently marked for his own.

"I tell you what it is, mates," said I, disregarding him and addressing the rest directly, "I am a poor man and the treasure, or my share of it, means a great deal to me, but revenge means

"You take the woman, we take the treasure."

much more. You give the woman to me and I will divide my share of the treasure among the crew."

"Well," began Pimball uncertainly, but the sentiment of the crew was palpably against him.

"Don't be a fool, man," cried the man who had spoken before. "Give him the wench."

"Aye, let him have her," cried a second.

"He'll bring her to her knees," said a third.

"Stop it," I cried, doubling my fist—this was no assumed rage either, for my blood was boiling. "This is my own affair."

The men fell back. They forgot for the moment their advantage in numbers.

"Well, that is agreed at last," said Pimball, reluctantly enough. "You take the woman, we take the treasure."

"Agreed," said I.

"Is that right, mates?" he asked of the rest.

"Right-o," was the answer.

"It's all settled, then," said I, "but no"—

"Bring out the gal, then, and let us see her," suddenly began one of the men, stepping forward.

The door back of me was thrown open wide and she stepped out into the cabin. How I thrilled to see her, erect, fearless, more beautiful than ever. The men recoiled, and I stepped back myself.

"I have heard all," she cried. "You murderous villains, to have killed my captain and seized my ship, and you—you"—she turned to me, "to have bargained for me and to have bought me like an animal, a horse, a dog—oh, if I had a weapon!"

But One-Twentieth of Taxes Goes to Streets

Two citizens on a Houghs Neck street car this morning were talking of the muddy and uneven condition of Sea street, when one of them remarked that there was a lot of graft somewhere, for the city had made an appropriation of $75,000 for fixing the street. He could not see that anything had been done except to roll the street in places and fix that part near "the Willows," and if that cost $75,000 there must have been good money in it for some one.

When informed that the appropriation he had reference to was $45,000 and that was for the care of streets all over the city, and that the work on Sea street near the Willows was being done under a special appropriation of $10,000, he said that was not much, for the people in that section paid the city more than that amount in taxes.

It seems queer but many people seem to expect that every cent they pay in taxes must be expended in their particular section, largely on streets, and seemingly forget that it takes money to run the school, police, fire, water, sewer, health and other departments, the building of schoolhouses, state and county taxes, etc., etc. About one-twentieth of the tax levy is expended on streets, so that only $5 in every $100 paid in taxes goes to streets. All kickers should make a note of this.

QUINCY FIFTH IN LIST

Percentage of Debt to Valuation

Reduced in Few Cities

Statistics relative to city debts and valuations are continued today, not because the Daily Ledger is proud of Quincy's position, but so that the taxpayers and voters may be better informed. The interesting figures compiled by the city treasurer of Springfield show that Quincy is 20th in population, 19th in valuation, and 14th in net debt among the cities of Massachusetts.

Today's figures show that Quincy is 5th in percentage of indebtedness to assessed valuation. The average in the State is 3.07 but that of Quincy is 4.18, over one per cent above the average.

In 1895 the average in the State was 2.50 and Quincy's percentage was 1.74, nearly one per cent below the average.

Chelsea because of its conflagration has the largest debt per valuation, 6.35 per cent. Close rivals are New Bedford, Fall River and Cambridge.

Several cities make a much better showing this year than in 1895, having reduced their percentage, viz: Brockton from 5.31 to 3.49. Beverly from 4.92 to 3.15, Waltham from 3.41 to 1.24, Northampton from 3.23 to .94, and others. There are eleven cities out of 33 that have reduced their percentage.

Springfield does not make as good a showing in this analysis as in the preceding ones, as her percentage has increased from .47, the lowest, to 2.13.

Here are the figures for all the cities of Massachusetts showing percentage of indebtedness to valuation both in 1913 and in 1895, and the averages for the State:

—Chicago experts have collected figures to show that the cost of rearing a child has in 10 years increased from $101 to $140 or nearly 40 per cent. Now what we want to know is what is meant by rearing a child. Either bill of expense looks pretty small for bringing a child up to any number of years in an average prosperous family.—Brockton Enterprise

Fusion Is in the Wind

It is on the street and in the newspapers, and dozens of men of different political faiths are working at it.

Possibly it is not easy.

Applying it to storekeeping, it would be quite easy.

The votes of the people with all the stores of the city on the voting sheet would be marked with only one big cross (X) and it would be for the Foy stores.

X—because it is the cleanest market and grocery in the city;

X—because of the obligingness of its clerks;

X—because of its fullest stocks.

X—because of its freshest assortments;

X—because of its trustworthy prices

X—because of its returnability sale clauses;

X—because of its dependability.

Seven firm and strong reasons for voting us into public office of Storekeeper to the general public.

FEW DAYS MORE

In Which to File Nomination Papers

October 25 Is the Last Date

Politics have not been very brisk since Saturday for up to noon but one nomination paper had been taken out. That was by Councilman Stephen L. Devaney for councilman from Ward Two. It was understood that he took the paper out for another party. As far as the Republican Mayoralty goes there is nothing new. It is reported that ex-Councilman Richard R. Freeman whose name was mentioned in connection with the office has absolutely refused to be considered.

Another rumor says that Representative Leslie is still among the possibilities as a candidate, and that he may enter the caucuses for the nomination. Some time ago Representative Leslie's name was mentioned in connection with the nomination and at that time he replied that he was considering the matter. This morning it was said that he had practically decided to enter the caucuses.

It is a well known fact that certain Republicans in Ward One are trying to persuade a certain gentleman to become a candidate for the nomination but until they get a positive answer his name is being kept a secret.

One rumor says that this gentleman is no other than Col. Henry L. Kincaide whose name has been previously mentioned but who has up to the present time declined to become a candidate.

Dr. N. S. Hunting, whose name has been mentioned, is said to have declined to enter the caucuses for the Mayoralty nomination but may enter as a candidate for School Committee at large.

No contests for the nominations have thus far developed. Republican papers have been taken out by Charles H. Johnson, Democratic papers by John H. Ash and Progressive papers by William G. Shaw. John L. Miller will not enter the caucuses but will run as a Citizens candidate on Election day.

Saturday, Oct. 25, is the last day for filing nomination papers.

BOY SCOUT DROWNED

Was Taking Observations at Squaw Rock, Squantum

While taking observations from the top of Squaw rock, at Squantum Monday afternoon, Charles W. Fletcher, aged 13 years, of Bullard street, Dorchester, lost his balance and fell a distance of twenty-five feet to the water below where he was drowned.

Fletcher, who is a member of the Dorchester camp of Boy scouts, was busily engaged with another scout, in taking observations from Squaw rock. He evidently got nearer the edge of the rock than he thought and losing his balance he fell. In his fall he struck the side of the ledge several times and was probably unconscious when he struck the water, where he drowned before aid could reach him. There was but five feet of water at the foot of the rock at the time, and had he not been stunned he could probably have saved his life.

A few minutes after he struck the water he was taken out by R. H. Moore of 122 Millard street, Dorchester. It was then found that the boy had a scalp wound and was considerably bruised and that apparently life had departed. Dr. D. A. Bruce of Atlantic was summoned and word was sent to the police station, where the pulmotor was hurried to the scene, but the boy was past saving. Medical Examiner Jones viewed the body after which it was removed to the rooms of a Dorchester undertaker.

An old legend says that it was from the top of this rock that an Indian woman once threw herself and was dashed to death on the rocks below. Squaw rock is a ledge-like eminence at the end of Squantum Head which projects into the water directly across from Thompson's island, and is a mass of jagged rock from top to bottom.

Fletcher and his companion who are members of a Dorchester camp of Boy Scouts had gone to Squantum to make some observations from the rock, as a part of their instruction, and in the interest they were taking in their work they lost their caution and Fletcher got too near the edge.

GILES—THOMPSON.

Miss Ethel Cecelia Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Thompson of 12 Trescott street, and John Giles, of 60 Trafford street, left the Quincy freight office Saturday evening and shortly after called at the Presbyterian manse where they were married by Rev. J. A. Matheson. They were unattended. That evening they broke the news to their friends. Both resumed their duties at the freight office on Monday.

The bride is one of the best known young ladies in South Quincy and the groom a singer of note, always took the comedy parts in the theatricals of the Sans Souci Dramatic club, and has been a sucess in several theatrical engagements. Mr. and Mrs. Giles will make their home in East Braintreee.

TEMPEST IN WARD THREE

Over Delay at New Adams Schoolhouse

Several Rumors Afloat

One of the warmest controversies South Quincy ever had was born at a meeting of the executive committee of the Adams School Parent-Teachers Association Monday evening and as a result a petition is in circulation today stating the grievances of the people of that section.

The petition is addressed to Mayor Stone and asks for the completion of the new Adams school so that it will be ready for occupancy immediately.

During the discussion relative to the petition, statements were made that the delay is costing the city $500 per month, divided between the heating of the new building which is now being done, and the cost of janitor service, amounting it is estimated to $250 and another $250 for the heating, and janitor service required for the old Adams school which is occupied for school purposes.

It was brought out at the meeting that the industrial school is being conducted in the gallery of the High school hall at a great disadvantage, and that the night schools sessions in the old Adams are not coming up to the requirements because it is used days by children that use desks so small that adults cannot comfortably attend.

According to some of the speakers the new building was ready on August 20, and when questioned Mr. Townsend, the principal, said he could move into the new building in less than 24 hours, as the furniture has been installed for several weeks.

It is said that Commissioner Tupper told the committee last spring that it would be ready Sept. 1 and within a few weeks stated that the reason it is not ready is because the sewer extension is not complete. The committe are to make another inquiry within a few days.

Despite the efforts of Chairman Pinel it was almost impossible to divorce politics from the meeting, and three reasons were advanced in explanation of the delay. They were:

1. Mayor Stone does not want the building dedicated until Chairman Miller retires from the chairmanship of the School board because of possible political prestige gained through the dedication enthusiasm.

2. The grading is being delayed until fall when it will be given to voters as a reward for political service.

3. The money appropriated for sewer extension and grading has been spent for another purpose.

Another point made by the committee was the appropriation of $80,000 for the new Adams school covered the grading and several members now contend that it is not sufficient to complete the grading in the rear and that the children will suffer the want of a playground until the School Committee asks for an additional appropriation.

DISTRICT COURT.

Charles A. Tirrell and Edward F. Ford were fined $10 each, and Thomas F. McCarthy $15 for drunkenness at Weymouth, Gus Beck $15 for drunkenness at Milton, and James F. Savage $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

The cases of Jeremiah Dunn and Jeremiah McCarthy of Quincy, arrested for drunkenness and later bailed, were called and they were defaulted.

Thomas F. Favell was fined $10 for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

Antnio V. Rantumoni was arraigned for spitting on the floor of Music Hall and was fined $3.

MANY YEARS A FIREMAN

Charles H. Hayden, Jr. Passed Away Last Night

Charles H. Hayden, Jr., for many years connected with the fire department, died Monday night at his home 396 Sea street after an illness of several months duration. It was early in the spring that Mr. Hayden first began to complain, but he was able to be about until a few weeks ago, when he was obliged to take to his bed. Since that time he has been failing rapidly. During the past ten days his life has been at a low ebb and his death was daily expected. It was not until late Monday night however that he passed away.

Mr. Hayden was born in Quincy and has always made this city his home. When a young man he learned the granite trade which occupation he has always followed.

During the days of the old town form of government and hand engines he joined the fire department, and has been an active call member of the department up to last year, when the order reducing the number of call members of the department was passed. He was one of the eighteen men droped at that time as he then resided too far from any fire station. During the first years of his connection with the call force he was attached to one of the pieces of apparatus at the Central station, but later transferred to one of the Wollaston companies to which he was attached at the time he was relieved from duty.

He however had always been deeply interested in fire department matters, which interest did not lag after his connection with the department was severed. He was one of the early members of the Quincy Firemen's Relief association which membership he retained up to his death.

Some years ago he moved from Hancock court to Sea street, where he built himself a residence, the front part of which was given over to a general store. This store filled a long felt want, and he built up a substantial business. He leaves a widow and two sons, one of whom is married and resides in the west.

ON DANGEROUS LIST.

A man said to belong in Quincy giving his name as Charles Lynch, aged 26 years, collapsed in a pool room off Hanover street, Boston, Saturday night, and was removed to the Relief Hospital and his name placed on the dangerous list. It is said that Lynch formerly lived in Dorchester and came to Quincy from there. He is thought to have a sister Martha Lynch living in Revere.

FIRST SNOW TODAY

Perfect Weather on the Holiday

Today's Storm a Surprise

Everybody is thankful for the exceptionally fine weather handed out by the clerk of the weather for the holiday, and had hoped for a continuance of the same, but evidently the old prophets, who say no settled weather until the moon changes are right. But they are thankful that the change will come in the moon Wednesday night after which there is hope of better weather.

Sunday was a dull and stormy day until late in the afternoon, when the weather cleared. Monday dawned bright and clear and it was fine all day. As the afternoon wore on however the wind which was from the northwest quarter freshened somewhat and it blew almost a gale all night.

This morning the sun rose bright and clear but the high wind still prevailed, and the air had a decided chilly feeling. Shortly after 10 o'clock it began to rain slightly and at noon the first snow of the season fell. The wind still hangs to the northwest quarter and the storm continues.

At noon the temperature had taken a decided drop as the thermometer registered but 43 which is the coldest day at noon since April 20, when it was 39 at noon. It might also be added that the temperature this noon was nine degrees colder than the coldest day in October 1912.

ANNUAL BALL GAME.

The annual game between the base ball fans of Montclair and Norfolk Downs took place on the holiday at what is known as the Pines. There has always been much rivalry between these two sections as to which contained the best ball tossers. As a result of Monday's game however Montclair carried off the cake and for the next year will have possession of the championship banner. Langelier and Flynn were in the box for Norfolk Downs and Bemis and Kane for Montclair, while Frank Sherman, his face hidden behond a wire mask, did the umpiring. At the end of the eighth inning the score stood 11 to 2 in favor of Montclair whose players thinking they had an easy thing let up a little which enabled the Downs twirlers to score eight more runs before the game ended, Montclair contenting themselves with five more runs. Thus the game ended with a score of 19 to 10 in favor of Montclair.

OUTING AT SQUANTUM.

The employes at the Burkhardt brewery with their families were royally entertained on the holiday by Baron Von Scholley, president of the company, at his estate at Squantum. There were about 45 in the party who came from Boston in special cars. In the morning there was a series of field sports in which prizes were won by Ralph Bishchoff, Channing Willis, Frank Williamson, Thomas Richardson, Frank Haggerty, William J. McCarthy, Henry J. Miller, Osborne Andrews, Mrs. Channing Willis, Miss Katherine Cogan, Miss Madeline May and Miss Elsie Sutherland.

At noon a Rhode Island clambake was served in the cove near the shore which was followed by an entertainment furnished by members of the party. Baroness Von Scholley, Miss Ruth Von Scholley and Mrs. E. A. Burkhardt assisted the Baron in entertaining his guests. The return to Boston was made in the early afternoon.

BIRTHDAY REMEMBERED

Manager of Kincaide Theatre Surprised by Employees

When Capt. George Wardwell the genial manager of the Kincaide Theatre entered his home on Miller Stile road after Saturday night's performance he was surprised to find all the employees at the theatre sitting in his front room. Their presence was accounted for when his birthday anniversary was recalled by George Tanner, head usher, who presented him with a handsome travelling bag, which he said was the outward expression of the strong friendship of his employees. Mrs. Wardwell said that she could not let the occasion pass without recognition, and she presented him with a ring set with an opal.

Captain Wardwell thanked the donors for their gifts and gave a short review of the theatrical season which is closing its first successful year. He assured those present that the high standard of the past would be the watchward of the future, and in a complimentary way spoke of the real friendship that would always exist between himself and his employees.

Merriment reigned while refreshments were served and a short program was carried out. The gathering dispersed with the striking of midnight.

An entertainment including a Tom Thumb wedding to be followed by dancing for the benefit of Maple lodge, K. and L. of H., will be given tomorrow night in Protection hall.

HOLIDAY FOOTBALL VICTORY

Final Score 13 to 0

The only man-to-man contest in Quincy on the holiday was the annual football game on the Merrymount oval between the Quincy A. A., champs of the state, and the Fitton A. C. of Roxbury who was runner up for the title. The visitors were defeated 13 to 0, the same tally made on the lower Merrymount Park field last season.

The game was witnessed by surely 700 men and women who braved a stinging east wind which swept across the field and kept all moving. The only sad feature was the refusal of the vistor rooters to respect the side lines.

The field was heavy owing to the recent rain and beacuse of this it was hard at times for the backfield of both teams to get started. Revised football played but a small part in the game,

THE HUMAN PRICE OF COAL.

It often takes some single dramatic experience to awaken public interest in a good cause. The fact that for the first seven months of 1913, 1437 people were killed in coal mine accidents in the United States, an increase over the previous year, is called by the forbidding word "statistics." It doesn't interest people much.

Meanwhile the graphic story of Thomas Tohsesky, imprisoned eight days or more, by a fall of coal in a mine near Wilkes-Barre, Pa., get front page newspaper position. Perhaps it may arouse some people to a sense of the price in human suffering paid for winter comfort and for industrial fuel.

A year or two ago it was confidently announced that "safety first" had become a general slogan in the mine fields. The West Virginia inspector of mines declared, that through wetting mines and using the safe explosives, there hadn't been a fatal mine expolsion in that state for 17 months. But the figures quoted above show that the safety campaign has hardly got started yet.

For black horror no picture can exceed that of the crowd of sobbing women around a mine entrance after a disaster. People who are not easily moved by humanitarian considerations will at least reflect on the cost of explosions and other accidents.

When this dark hive of subterranean industry is turned into a chaotic labyrinth of fallen walls and roofs, dead men and mules, wrecked cars and machinery, the bill falls not on the mine owner. Eventualy it comes on the industry or the home that uses the fuel.

Oxygen helmets, selected explosives etc., greatly reduce the accident hazard. Curiously enough, a rescuing party is far safer if it carries along some caged canary birds, who show first the effects of deadly gas. Surely every consideration of human sympathy and of business economy urges the adoption of all possible safety devices in this great industry.

BARR'S CALL FOR NARRAGANSETT

The Chief Factor In Saving Lives Aboard the Volturno

TIMELY ARRIVAL OF OIL SHIP

Waves Are Calmed Just Before Upper Plates of Doomed Steamer Give Way—Splendid Organization of Captain of Carmania and Moderation of Gale Proved Providential—Captain Inch, Last to Leave Steamer, on Way to New York—Death List at Hundred and Thirty-Five

London, Oct. 14.—The stories told by the passengers of the steamship Carmania and other liners which went to the rescue of the burning Volturno describe the heroic efforts in the face of almost insuperable difficulties to save the passengers and crew of the doomed ship. The death list is 136.

As yet information is lacking as to how the fire originated, but is shown that the fact that not more lives were lost was due in the first place to the wireless and, in the second, to Captain Barr's happy idea of calling the Narragansett for oil.

There is some discrepancy in the stories with regard to the behavior of the crew, but it is significant that of the crew, numbering ninety-three, it is reported that seventy-eight perished, while most of the officers remained aboard and were eventually rescued.

The Carmania, first of the rescuing vessels on the scene of the disaster to the Volturno, has arrived at Fishguard. The newspaper correspondents were met by Captain Barr with a refusal to say a word about the Volturno until the Carmania had reported to the Cunard company. He, however, referred his would-be interviewers to the ship's bulletin for an accurate account of the tragedy.

The fire on the Volturno appears to have originated in her cargo hold, and when it became evident that the flames had gained the mastery, Captain Inch devoted all his energy to the salvation of his passengers.

The Carmania's Story

The story told by the Carmania's ship's bulletin maintains that six small boats were launched from the Volturno, that two of them, with thirty-five persons each on board, got away, and that the other four were smashed against the ship's side and all their occupants perished. After the failure of the lifeboats from the Carmania to reach the burning ship and when Barr maneuvered his vessel close to the Volturno, the passengers on board the Cunard liner did everything in their power to encourage the terrified crowd huddled together in the after part of the Volturno. They waved handkerchiefs and shouted cheering words through megaphones, to which they received answering signals.

Balked in his attempt to establish communication between the Carmania and the Volturno, Barr sent out broadcast wireless signals which brought to the vicinity an international fleet, the vessels of which had changed their courses to hurry to the succor of the doomed ship. The Seydlitz was the first vessel that hove in sight, at 3:30 in the afternoon. She was followed by the Grosser Kurfuerst, and then came others in quick succession.

Late on Thursday afternoon Barr made another attempt to reach the Volturno by means of life rafts, which he hoped might be secured by those on board, but this attempt also proved futile. In the meantime the despairing messages from Captain Inch of the Volturno calling for succor grew more insistent as the flames ate their way through and great clouds of smoke enveloped the larger part of the ship.

The boats took off in quick succession the survivors, who passed one by one down the lines. Daybreak saw the arrival of two other steamers, the Czar and the Narragansett. The latter, an oil tank steamer, which came at full speed, took up a position slightly to windward of the Volturno. In a few minutes she had two large streams of oil pouring on the water. This was invaluable in helping the rescue work of the small boats around the Volturno's stern.

By 9 o'clock the remaining 521 had been safely taken off. Each ship went on a short cruise in different directions to scout for the missing two boats, but nothing was seen of them.

That over 550 lives were not lost was due:

First—To the wireless.

Second—To the speedy arrival and organization of Captain Barr of the Carmania.

Third—To the splendid seamanship of the international rescue squadron.

Fourth—To the Volturno's stanch bulkheads.

Fifth, and above all—To the providential moderation of the gale Thursday night.

Stories of Passengers

What issues clearly from all the narratives is that practically all the lives lost were sacrificed in attempts to launch the boats before the arrival of the other steamers, and that had Captain Inch known so much help would be forthcoming, practically all might have been saved.

Mr. Mansfield of New York, a passenger on the Carmania, said the people on board the Volturno seemed to be paralyzed and helpless. They made no efforts to seize the lines of the rafts thrown to them. He saw one man kiss his wife and children, throw them overboard, and jump after them. They were seen only for a moment and then disappeared.

T. T. Waston of Philadelphia, another of the passengers of the Carmania, said that the chief credit for saving those on the Volturno was undoubtedly due to the oil ship Narragansett. "Only a few good swimmers," he declared, "would have survived from the ill-fated ship had not the Narragansett made free use of oil to calm the terrible waves.

"Late in the afternoon, after the fleet of rescuing ships had gathered about the doomed ship, the captain of the Volturno sent a message that the situation was becoming desperate. Attempts were being made to send rafts from the Carmania and these almost reached the burning vessel, but just missed it, and thereby was lost the chance to get a line aboard.

"Shortly afterwards Captain Inch reported that the upper plates would soon give away. An explosion which seemed to seal the doom of the ship followed. In desperation an attempt was made by the Volturno to send a boat with a line to the Grosser Kurfuerst, but the boat was hurled against the German liner and wrecked. The men were saved.

The night aboard the Carmania was one never to be forgotten. Some prayed for the souls in peril. All were wracked with heart-breaking anxiety. Our utter helplessness was appalling. The finest fleet of liners ever gathered in one spot in the Atlantic were practically impotent, even with their splendid equipment, to render aid on account of the great waves.

"On account of the size of the ship's turbine engines, which made fine maneuvering impossible, Barr stood off and directed operations, acting in effect as commander of the great fleet which gathered about the stricken Volturno. Shortly after we arrived the Carmania tried both fore and aft oil sprays, but without effect on the mountainous waves. Then the captain sent out wireless calls in all directions for an oil ship, and his efforts were rewarded by an answer from the Narragansett.

"When the Narragansett arrived the Grosser Kurfuerst with other liners got in as close as possible and lowered lifeboats. These took aboad several persons who had jumped from the Volturno, and the work was greatly facilitated by the steam pinnace of the Grosser Kurfuerst, which had stayed out all night. At once the Narragansett began to spray oil about the doomed ship and the waves subsided as if by magic. Soon the small boats were able to run alongside the liner and take the clinging people from the ladders. The rescue work was over in a very short time. Eleven liners formed the boundary around the film of oil and the survivors were hoisted aboard the various steamers without trouble."

A wireless dispatch received here from the operator on La Touraine says that when that vessel arrived five steamers were making unsuccessful attempts to take off the Volturno's passengers and crew. The sea was then moderating, and two of La Touraine's boats were launched and got alongside the burning steamer. Each boat came back full of passengers.

Inch on Way to New York

New York, Oct. 14.—Carrying seventy-four of the passengers and fourteen of the crew of the ill-starred Volturno, the steamship Kroonland of the Red Star line is battling her way toward this port against northwesterly gales and heavy seas.

Reports received here at the offices of the International Mercantile Marine company, owners of the line, timed the expected arrival of the Kroonland here as Wednesday night or Thursday morning.

Captain Kriehbohm of the Kroonland sent a wireless message by way of Cape Race to the offices of his line here, describing in skeleton form the part his ship played in the mid-ocean drama in which the Volturno met with disaster.

Thursday morning at 9 o'clock, reported Kriechbanm, the Kroonland's operator, picked up the wireless call sent by the Carmania and the Kroonland was steered immediately to the indicated spot. The message continued:

"Carmania, Grosser Kurfuerst and Seydlitz standing by. Immensely high seas, strong gale. Went as near Volturno as safety permitted. Saw two-thirds of the ship burning like a furnace. Survivors were crowded on after part of steamer. Any delay fatal.

"Called out for volunteers and sent boat commanded by Fifth Officer Kummel. Sea too high, gale too strong. Impossible to try the Lyle guns.

"Later sent two boats under Second Officer Mansfield and Fifth Officer Kummel. They returned later, respectively, with three and ten rescued men. As the fire on the Volturno kept away from the after deck, kept maneuvering near and sent three boats away, which made many trips.

"At 9 o'clock the last boat alongside carried captain. Nobody was left on board. We had succeeded in taking off eighty-eight persons and the captain's dog. Our boats were then replaced in davits and we proceeded full speed ahead.

"The captain Volturno tells me that one boat with cabin passengers left the ship Thursday morning, but they were spilled. Fate of crew uncertain. Another boat containing steerage passengers was smashed and all perished. The third boat possibly got away safely. Carmania and Campania searching for it."

SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE

Will Be Further Considered by Court of Impeachment

DOUBT AS TO ARTICLE FOUR

Must Be Strengthend to Include Charges of Ryan, Morgenthau and Peck, or They Must Be Set Aside as Additional Article—Sulzer Verdict Unexpectedly Delayed

Albany, Oct. 14.—The high court of impeachment which is to decide the fate of Governor Sulzer failed yesterday to reach a verdict.

After a session lasting an hour and a half, virtually all of which was held in secret, the court of impeachment unexpectedly adjourned until today to permit further argument by counsel relative to the testimony of Allan A. Ryan, Henry Morgenthau and Duncan W. Peck, superintendent of public works.

This testimony had to do with alleged efforts of Sulzer to suppress evidence against him and to obtain political influence to stop the trial. The offenses alleged in this connection were not specified in the eight articles of impeachment, and immediately upon the convening of the court Judge Miller of the court of appeals raised the question as to where they fitted in.

The executive session at once followed. When the public was again admitted it was announced by Presiding Judge Cullen that the court desired counsel to argue as to whether the acts and conversations of the governor testified to by Peck, Morgenthau and Ryan "can be considered as being acts of misconduct for which the respondent can be convicted under article 4, or only as corroborative evidence of the other allegations stated in the charges, and whether the court has the power to amend the articles, if they are insufficient to include these acts, so as to include them."

Article 4 is the one dealing with suppression of evidence, alleging that the governor tried to prevent Frederick L. Colwell, Louis A. Sarecky and Melville B. Fuller from testifying before the Frawley investigating committee. It mentions neither Ryan, Morgenthau nor Peck, but does include in its text the words, "all other persons." The fact that these words were contained in the article made it broad enough, Brackett maintained in his summing up address, to include the offenses testified to by the three later witnesses. These were as follows:

Peck swore that the governor had asked him to deny a $500 campaign contribution if called as a witness before the Frawley committee.

Morgenthau testified that Sulzer had asked him, if called before the court of impeachment, "to be easy" with him. Ryan testified that the governor had besought him to gain the political influence of Tammany Leader Murphy and Republican State Chairman Barnes to have the court vote that the impeachment was illegal.

In view of the fact that each of the eight articles is to be voted upon separately, it was found when the members of the court were ready to convene that there was much doubt as to which article the testimony should be considered under.

It was said, furthermore, that some of the members felt that in the event that the court should grant the as yet undecided motion to strike out articles 1, 2 and 6, the "money articles," on the constitutional ground that they dealt with offenses committed before the governor took office, practically little would be left of the case.

They thought it was desirable, therefore, it was said, either to strengthen article 4 by including the Ryan-Morgenthau-Peck charges or to set them apart as an additional article.

BURGLAR APPREHENDED

Makes a Dash However and Chase was Unsuccessful

The fruit store of James McConnell on Hancock street, adjoining the Daily Ledger office, was again visited by burglars Sunday afternoon, but the parties were frightened away before they had an opportunity to secure anything of value. Although the party was chased some distance he was successful in getting away from his pursuers in the dark. It was about six o'clock Sunday afternoon when Mr. McConnell's son Ernest visited the store, as is his usual custom. As he entered he heard a noise in the back part of the store and he immediately started to investigate and found a man standing near the rear window. As he approached, Mr. McConnell shouted stop thief, but the fellow, instead of stopping, jumped through the window and going through the Bethany church yard started to run down Chestnut street. Several who heard Mr. McConnell's cry joined in the chase of the man who ran down Chestnut street, through Bigelow street and Miller Stile road to Elm street where he lost himself in the trees. There was no way to tell which way the fellow had gone, and after searching about for a time the chase was abandoned.

An investigation at the store afterward found nothing missing as far as could be learned, as the fellow had evidently been frightened away before he had an opportunity to make a haul. This same store has been entered many times, the previous breaks always being laid to boys.

SUNDAY IN QUINCY CHURCHES

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

The audience at the Sunday morning service had a rare treat in hearing the three selections played by the organist, Miss Lena B. Knox—"Fifth Symphony" by Field, "Happiness" by Binda and "Maestoso in C" by Hatton. The subject of the sermon was "He could not be hid," Mark 7:24. The words of the text were applied first to Christ himself, and then to men. At the time spoken of, Christ was trying to avoid those in Jerusalem who were trying to make Him King; moreover, the scribes and Pharisees were seeking His life, and He had tried to hide Himself from them that He might complete the work set apart for Him to do. "But He could not be hid." People could not be restrained from making His whereabouts known. And just as truly today, Christ, the Light of the world cannot be hidden from the eyes of His faithful followers."

Sunday school was held in the chapel at 12.15. Subject of the lesson—"Jealousy and envy punished Numbers 11. In the absence of J. A. Sparrow, the Rand class was taught by Mr. J. P. Roberts.

Junior Endeavor meeting held at 3.30 in the chapel. Mrs. Walther in charge. Subject, ""The American Indians."

An "Honorary Members' Meeting" was held at the Y. P. S. C. E. at six. George E. Thomas, the leader. An unusually large number were present.

Friday evening Oct. 10, the Y. P. S. C. E. held its monthly business meeting and social in the chapel. The society reports a gain of 4 per cent in the efficiency campaign.

Sunday, Oct. 19, the new addition to the chapel will be formally set apart. At the morning service the pastor will preach an appropriate sermon. At twelve, the whole school, including the Walther and Rand classes and the children from the primary department, will meet in the chapel. Dr. Barbour will offer prayer nad the chorus choir will sing assisted by Miss Ruth L. Hard and Mr. E. E. Bullock.

A home gathering social will be held in the chapel, Oct. 22. All members of the church and all adult members of the congregation cordially invited.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

The pastor, Rev. Dr. Sneath, took for the ground of his remarks Sunday morning, the experiences of Columbus, and from some of those experiences drew the lesson that we should not surrender in times of reaction, but overcome despondency with an indomitable purpose to win out in the struggle of life. Christianity never spells failure, and frequently temporary defeats are the avenues to greater achievements and magnificent results. The Christian is not to grow weary in well-doing, for he is sure to reap if he faints not. We are ever to have the sure conviction that we are following the right course of action and then work out that conviction with a dogged persistence. We must keep up the stroke to the finish.

At the Y. P. S. C. E. meeting, Dr. E. R. Johnson led the service with some helpful remarks.

On Wendesday evening the Ladies' Benevolent Society will hold the first social of the season. Supper will be served at 6.30 and an entertainment will follow. At a meeting of the society last week Mrs. R. F. Trumper was chosen president, and plans were made for a splendid years' work.

The church is still without an organist. Miss Alice M. Shephard of Grove Hall presided at Sunday services. C. H. Everett rendered the bass solo entitled "O God, have mercy," from Mendelssohn's St. Paul in a very impressive manner.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

The Rally Day services on Sunday were largely interfered with by the inclement weather, but those who braved the storm were well repaid for the effort. The pastor, Rev. G. M. Bailey, preached an excellent sermon upon "The relation of the child to the church." Music was rendered by a male quartet consisting of Messrs. Sutermeister, Belcher, Dunham and Cassidy, assisted by Miss Marguerite Holbrook as soloist.

In the Sunday school the full program was carried out, almost every class having a part in the exercises.

The topic for study at the Epworth League service was Japan, and much information was gleaned in regard to that land and the missionary work that is being carried on.

There was a good attendance at the evening service to hear the helpful and inspiring address of the pastor upon the subject, "A substitute for silver and gold," showing that interest and service and the use of one's talents are more acceptable in the Lord's work than mere silver and gold.

A rally social was held in the church on the holiday with a large attendance. The president of the Men's Club, E. H. Ewertz, was in the chair, and after a few happy remarks introduced the numbers in the program. Miss Bessie Wilbur told of the Queen Esther Circle and the helpful work that has been rendered by the young ladies in the field of home missions. Miss Hilda Bailey sang "The songs my mother used to sing," and the young ladies in a distant room sang softly as a response, strains from old familiar songs.

The Superintendent of the Sunday School in his remarks said that an efficient school was possible only when the hearty cooperation was secured of pastor, superintendent, teachers, the parents in the home and the scholar. The Epworth League was represented by the president, Clarence Cassidy, who told of the work to be carried on by the young people.

A recitation ""Five little rabbits" was contributed by five little tots of the primary department, conducted by Mrs. Belcher.

George Taylor, chairman of the Finance committee told of the needs and aims of that department of the church.

The Ladies' Aid Society presented a novel feature which was received with applause. Twenty-six ladies held large letters of the alphabet and each in turn recited a verse beginning with her letter suggesting some part of the work of the society.

After a few remarks by the pastor in regard to the aims and plans for the winter, refreshments were served and all enjoyed a social hour.

Miss Helen Martin sang "He shall wipe away all tears."

Sunday had been set apart as the day on which the collection for superanuated ministers was to have ben taken and a special program had been prepared of interest to this cause, but owing to the bad weather it was decided to hold this over until a larger audience is present. At the close of the service those present had an opportunity to meet the Rev. Mr. Moyle and renew old friendship.

Sunday school was held at 12 M. J. M. Francis, president of the Epworth League led the Prayer service at 6.15 on the subject: "Forty years of Missions in Japan."

The lecture committee were given permission to have electric wires brought into the church in order to use an electric stereopticon lantern during the coming season. Robert Newcomb and F. Wesley Fuller were appointed to make a few minor repairs on the church property.

Plans have been made for a course of seven lectures to be given in the Hall Place church during the winter. The opening number will be by Rev. Dillon Bronson, D. D., in November.

FIRE IN COAL POCKET.

After six hours work, Saturday, the Milton fire department extinguished a fire in 400 tons of soft coal in the pocket of the Neponset Coal Co. at their wharf on Granite avenue. Men are on guard watching the coal in case it should break out again.

DRAWN INTO A CHUTE

Woman and Boy Caught by Endless Chain and Badly Crushed

Waterbury, Conn., Oct. 14.—Terribly crushed by being drawn into a coal chute by an endless chain of buckets here, Mrs. Adam Archer and Patrick Gilmartin, a youth who attempted to rescue her, are in the hospital suffering from injuries so serious that they may not recover.

The woman had been trying to pick some coal from the chute when she was caught and dragged in. Gilmartin went to her assistance. He seized her clothing but was himself drawn in after her.

The chute narrows down to the size of a bucket at its mouth and is not large enough for a body to pass. The cries of both were heard as they were being slowly crushed and the machinery was stopped. It took over an hour to extricate them.

TRIP PROVES PROFITABLE

Discoverers of New Land Bring Back Remarkable Collection

St. Michael, Alaska, Oct. 14.—Further report on the Russian polar expedition which has just reached St. Michael, bringing news of the discovery of a large island or a continent north of Siberia, was given out by Lieutenant Commander Wilitski.

The ships brought back a remarkable collection of polar marine animal life, marine plants found about the new land and which are microscopical, and a large geological collection. Nicholas II. Land, as the new tract was named, was discovered Aug. 21. The Rusisan colors now are flying in N. lat. 80, E. lon. 100.

The ships witnessed a splendid occurrence, rare in the Arctic—the phenomenon of a green sun, lasting ninety seconds each time at sunset, July 30 and Sept 14.

"GHOUL" IS ADDED TO OTHER CRIMES

Spencer Claimed Fire Victim as Sisier to Get Property

Chicago, Oct. 14.—Henry Spencer, the confessed multi-murderer, added the world "ghoul" to the criminal classification which applies to himself. He confessed that he had identified a woman victim in the Iroquois theatre fire, in which 600 lives were lost, as his sister in order to obtain property. He said he got $1100 in money and $1500 in jewelry.

"I was one of the first outsiders to get into the ruins of the Iroquois theatre," Spencer asserted. "I was looking for loot. The thought came to me, 'Why not take a chance and identify one of these victims as a relative; perhaps the person might turn out to be rich.'

"I picked out the half-charred face of a woman. I cried that here lay my long-lost sister. My supposed sister was given a fine burial, with me playing the part of chief mourner."

"Mary's Little Lamb" Once More Goes Into Congressional Record

Washington, Oct. 14.—Senator Tillman introduced another novelty into the Congressional Record when he had read and inserted a bit of doggerel verse on the effect of dyed wool, written by his predecessor, Senator Vance, in 1889.

At the same time Tillman discovered that the humor wasn't appreciated any more by the senate. The verse, which the faithful record said convulsed the senate in '89, didn't draw a peep from the 1913 senate.

The verse was a parody on "Mary's Little Lamb," and portrayed the fact that rich little girls could wear pure wool and poor little girls only 56 percent wool.

Can We Help You?
(As We Helped This Man)

Herbert O. Russell is a farmer in North Hadley, Mass., who turned a threatened loss, not only to himself but to his neighbors, into a highly profitable business transaction by making judicious use of the telephone toll lines. He is the Mr. Blank of the following story which appeared in TELEPHONE TOPICS. We use his name by permission:

A HADLEY PASTORAL.

The fertile fields of old Hadley are especially adapted for raising tobacco and onions and especially onions, which are usually a very profitable crop. This year the crop was larger than ever before—bumper to the nth. Prices at once shrunk alarmingly until it came to be a grave question whether it was worth while to market the crop. Some farmers became discouraged and left the crop to rot in the fields. One gave the subject careful thought. While he was pondering the question his glance fell upon the telephone in his kitchen. Could that be the answer?

The next day he called on Manager Proctor for information. He secured full particulars about our toll facilities, then went home and planned a sales campaign by telephone. Each evening the family carefully studied the directories and made up a list of wholesale commission dealers in the large cities.

Early each morning Mr. Blank called them by telephone. Results were immediate and surprising. He made satisfactory terms in short order for the sale of his entire crop and before long he was shipping onions by the carload. After he disposed of his own crop, the commission merchants continued their demands for more onions, and Mr. Blank commenced buying his neighbors' crops, which he sold at a good profit. As a result of his work he has sold twenty-one carloads of onions. It need not be added that he is extremely grateful for the resources of our telephone service.

Are you, Mr. Farmer or Business Man, confronted with a distribution problem of any kind? Let us help you, if we can. In Greater Boston telephone (free of charge) to Fort Hill 7600, the Contract Department.

WALNUTS THE CHAMPS

Defeat the Atlantics Three Times at Base Ball

Three victories for the Walnuts over the tlantAics gives the base ball supremacy of Atlantic to the Walnuts.

On Saturday the score was close 5 to 4 as follows:

Walnuts	0 0 2 2 0 1 0 0 0—5
Atlantic	3 0 2 0 1 0 1 0 0—4

Batteries—Pitts and Gregory; Duffy and McNally.

The Walnuts manifested their superior playing on the holiday by running the bases and hitting to their hearts content getting nine against Atlantics three.

In the morning the Walnuts won 12 to 8 and it could have been more overwhelming but for the chances taken on bases. Pitts, demonstrated his prowess as a pitcher by fanning C. Duggan, a star of that section who substituted for O'Connell, with the bases choked. O'Connell showed up well, not allowing a steal. The score by innings:

Walnut	0 0 0 2 0 7 0 3 0—12

Batteries—Pitts and Gregory; Duffy and O'Connell.

The Afternoon game was a duplication of the morning contest. The Walnuts stole 15 bases on Duffy. Only five hits were made by the Walnuts but they took advantage of their opponent's errors. Over-confidence made the score 7 to 6 in Atlantics favor in the first of the fifth. The score:

Walnuts	0 0 6 0 2 0 5 2 0—15
Atlantics	1 0 0 0 6 0 0 1 0— 8

Batteries—Gergory and Price; Curtis and Duffy.

HOLIDAY FOOTBALL VICTORY

both quarters preferring the old style mass and skin tackle plays. In some of these bucks every Quincy man figured, and the net gain was substantial.

The game during the first period was tight, neither side getting the advantage, but toward the latter part of the second period the local favorites pushed the ball slowly but surely toward the visitors' line. The series of assaults ended with Boyle plowing the right side of the line for a breakaway which landed him between the posts for the first score. Hunter kicked the goal.

While the ball was in scoring distance a plaintive howl was heard coming from the visitor's supporters. They cried they were being discriminated against, because they had no official. This was admitted and the opportunity given them the second time to name an official, but they seemed backward in sending their representative in. A resume of the game shows that Fitton was the gainer through the penalties, and that the ball was given them in more tight places than they really deserved. The management seemed so anxious to arrange a second game that a date will probably be filled and the Quincy A. A. boys will march onto the grounds with decks cleared for action.

Many of the Quincy men suffered slight injury, elbows and knees being used with effect by the visitors. Gerstel had his face stepped on and a nose which has just got back after a compound fracture looked badly bruised when the whistle blew. Quincy adopted clean tactics and did not depart from them, although the tendency at times was to go in and eat them up.

Huhter and Wood, two of the best men in the state played their first game of the year and both performed in their old time manner. Wood was very desirous of rushing the ball when allowed to work, and he carried it over for the second score. McCarthy who is playing here his first year is a wonder, and with Ed Bennett and Tocci are towers of strength. Savage Moberg, Drescoll and Carlson figured in every play, and Captain Cummings held his tackling and end work up to his standard. McDonald as a quarter shows real development and with Boyle displayed real class.

Punting by both teams was poor, and most of the forward passes were not allowed. Quincy appeared to be stronger than ever and altnough their team has not been brought to its highest point they will rub hard with any eleven in New England.

It might be well to say in passing that on Nov. 1 the Roslindale will be given a return game and that on Thanksgiving Day Quincy will play the St. Alphonsus on the National league grounds the premier exhibition game of the year.

The score:

PETERSON WON HOLIDAY RACE

Fred Kingsbury Winner of the Time Prize

Six runners started in the annual race of the Employed Boys of the Y. M. C. A. on Columbus Day morning. The course was Washington to South streets, to Quincy avenue, to Hancock street, to the start opposite the Y. M. C. A. building, nearly four miles. The day was crisp and all the runners negotiated the hills without difficulty. George Peterson with a handicap of 1m, 15s, won in 24m, 1s, but was pressed hard by Capt. Allen Connor who had 45 seconds handicap and finished in 23m, 27s. Arthur Skinner, with 2 minutes, finished third in 25m, 27s. Fred Kingsbury from scratch ran a pretty race and won the time prize finishing in 22m, 27s. He secured a medal. The first three were awarded cups.

Medals were also awarded to Jacob Peterson and William Powell. Grant McKenzie did not finish, giving out when he had less than 100 yards to go.

The race was to have been with the Weymouth Harriers but they cancelled the date early last week.

BENEFIT GAME AT BRAINTREE

Braintrees Shut Out the Quincys and Score Two Runs

The event of Columbus day in Braintree was the benefit ball game and dance tendered to Harry Burrill, who was so seriously injured in the ball game Labor day.

Two thousand people attended the ball game at French's common in the afternoon. It was one of the best games ever seen in town, and one of the most exciting contests since the game on the common Dedication day. The opposing teams were All Braintree versus All Quincy. The battery for the home team was Ross and Pittipit. Michael and two catchers C. Duggan and C. McDonald were on the firing line for the visitors. Ross pitched a flawless game and was given fine suport by his team mates. The feature was the work of Reilley, second base of Braintree, who cut off several runs by his fast throws to the plate.

The Quincy teams numbered among its players such stars as Courtney, short stop of the Jersey City club of the International league; Hoyt first base of Brockton of the New England league; P. Duggan, centre field star of the Fredericton, N. B. team; and C. Duggan who is the second string pitcher of the Jersey City team; Michael who was on the mound for Quincy was formerly pitcher for the St. Stephens team of the Maine-New Brunswick league. This is the strongest team that could be secured in Quincy and put up a game fight.

The score by innings was:

Much credit is due Umpire Glaughlin of Braintree and McAuliffe of Randolph for their impartial decisons.

In the evening, three hundred couples attended the dance at the Braintree Town hall. The hours were from 8 to 12 o'clock, and the music was rendered by Atkinson's ten piece orchestra. The floor was in charge of Herbert F. Stackhouse assisted by Ralph L. Newcomb. The aids were members of the B. A. A. and White Sox ball teams, officials of the Sunset league and delegates from the Pond street A. A. These same gentlemen made up of the committee of arrangements of which H. F. Stackhouse was chairman, Ralph L. Newcomb secretary. Urban T. Landry treasurer. The financial returns were flattering, and it is expected that a substantial sum will be turned over to Mr. Burrill. It is reported that in time Mr. Burrill will entirely recover from the effects of his very severe accident.

MEXICO GIVEN SHARP WARNING

United States Says Deputies Must Not Be Harmed

FAIR ELECTION IS IMPOSSIBLE

View Expressed by President Wilson and Senator Bacon—No One Likely to Dare Take Issue With Huerta, Who Has Proclaimed Himself Dictator of Disturbed Republic

Washington, Oct. 14.—After a conference between Secretary Bryan and President Wilson it was announced at the White House that telegrams had been dispatched to both John Lind at Vera Cruz and Charge O'Shaughnessy at Mexico City to make representations to the Huerta government that the United States would look with displeasure upon any injury to the Mexican deputies now under arrest.

It has been left entirely to Lind's discretion whether he should return to Mexico City to impress those views on the Mexican authorities, but O'Shaughnessy has been directed to address himself to the minister of foreign relations and make it plain that the United States attaches "the gravest importance" to the arrest of the deputies and is keenly interested in what will be their fate.

President Wilson told callers that, with the present state of affairs, he did not see how a constitutional election could be held in Mexico. So far as the immediate policy of the United States is concerned, it was made plain by the president there would be no departure from the original position that the Mexicans should settle their own affairs.

The government here has practically abandoned all hope of seeing an election or treating any further with Huerta as an individual.

"My opinion is there can be no constitutional election in Mexico under existing circumstances," said Senator Bacon, chairman of the foreign relations committee, after a conference with President Wilson. The senator said it was obvious that with the arrest of the deputies and the dissolution of congress no one would dare to take issue with Huerta and that there could not be any free expression of the will of the people.

Proclaims Himself Dictator

Mexico City, Oct. 14.—Victoriano Huerta, provisional president, has proclaimed himself dictator of Mexico. He issued a decree announcing that he has assumed all the former powers of congress, relating to war, finance and the domestic affairs of the nation. He says he will permit the department of justice to exercise its usual functions, "unless it interferes with his decrees."

The dictator proclaims that he alone is the supreme power in Mexico. He pledges himself to make a due report of his actions to the next congress to be elected Oct. 26.

All the papers carry dispatches from Vera Cruz, stating that British warships have been seen in the Gulf of Mexico and the belief is growing that quick and decisive action is to be taken by the powers in the present crisis.

Two of the candidates for the office of president of Mexico, Frederico Gamboa, representing the Catholics, and Manuel Calero, the nominee of the Liberals, met and discussed the recent developments in the situation. They agreed to proceed with their campaigns and to advise their followers to support after the elections whichever of them was successful at the polls.

JOHNSON'S BAIL FORFEITED

Had Put Up $30,000 to Appear to Stand Trial in Court at Chicago

Chicago, Oct. 14.—Federal Judge Carpenter declared forfeited the $30,000 personal bond signed by Jack Johnson when he failed to appear to stand trial on the seven remaining counts against him, charging violation of the white slave act.

Benjamin Bachrach, attorney for Johnson, pleaded for a continuance when the remaining cases were called for trial, stating he was confident Johnson would return to the United States after he had filled his vaudeville engagements in France. The court refused this plea after brief argument.

PRINCE DE CHIMAY DEAD

Was Deserted by Clara Ward, Who Married and Divorced Two Others

Brussels, Oct. 14.—Prince Joseph de Caraman Chimay, deserted husband of Clara Ward of Detroit, died here of pneumonia.

Clara Ward, who inherited considerable money on the death of her father, married Chimay in Paris in 1859. Hints of scandal began about four years later and the gossip culminated with the princess running away with Rigo, a Hungarian gypsy violinist.

There was a divorce finally, and Clara Ward married Rigo. They traveled about for a while and then quarrelled. She got a divorce. In 1904 she married Peppino Ricciardo, a canvasser for a Paris tourist agency. They separated in 1910, the former princess suing for divorce.

TO HAVE HEARING AT ELLIS ISLAND

Immigration Officials Forced to Detain Mrs. Pankhurst

Washington, Oct. 14.—When Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant English suffragette, arrives on the liner La Provence this week, probably Friday, she will be detained at the Ellis island immigration station, according to present plans, until a special board of inquiry can determine whether she comes within the class of aliens excluded from the United States.

While the immigration authorities have issued no orders for her detention, scores of protests against her admission lodged with immigration headquarters here and with the local authorities at New York leave no other course open to the authorities. An equal number of communications protesting against her exclusion have been received.

Officials here say no protests against Mrs. Pankhurst's admission have been received from the society opposed to woman suffrage or from any of its members on behalf of the organization.

BUSCH ESTATE $75,000,000

Will of St. Louis Brewer Will Be Made Public After His Funeral

St. Louis, Oct. 14.—The will of Adolphus Busch, who died in Germany Friday, probably will not be made public until after the funeral, which is expected to take place here Oct. 25.

A lawyer connected with the Busch interests said that five years ago Busch drew a will naming his son, August A. Busch, and his son-in-law, Edward A. Foust, as executors of the estate, and lodging control of his breweries in August Busch. Both August A. Busch and Mr. Faust are vice presidents of the brewing company. The estimated value of the estate is $75,000,000.

WHERE EVE WENT

A Woman's Flight In an Aeroplane

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Ah, please!" pleaded Eve Dunham, with her hand on one of the propeller blades of De Mennes' beautiful flying machine.

"But mademoiselle is not quite proficient," objected the young aviator. "Tomorrow, perhaps next week, after you have made a few more trips with me, you understand better the stop, the pause, the descent. Voila tout! You fly alone!"

"But I want to fly today, M. de Mennes," pouted Eve, "in my own little machine. It is like a feather and responds to a mere touch of the wheel. No! How stupid!"

The Frenchman bowed his regret at having cast a shadow over Miss Dunham's sunny countenance, and he watched her walk back to her own monoplane with some doubt in his keen eyes.

"She look like—she look like she take a chance when nobody is around," he muttered. But it was time for another one of his spectacular flights before his assembled pupils, and he promptly forgot Eve Dunham and her discontent.

Eve's friends were not surprised at her sudden passion for aeroplaning. One by one Eve had taken up other fads and dropped them, but when her engagement to Lewis Thayer was announced it was discovered that Eve had reduced her hobbies to three, tennis, music and domestic science, and was entirely faithful to them until there came a day when she quarreled with Lewis. He did not quarrel with her. It was Eve's whole affair, and the domestic science fad was abandoned, music was agonizingly reminiscent of happier days, and no one could play tennis like Lewis.

It was not surprising that the broken engagement was marked by Eve's purchase of a monoplane and learning to operate it. Happily or otherwise, she had plenty of money at her disposal to indulge this fancy.

Now she stood in the vast inclosure and watched the fantastic flights of her teacher, De Mennes. Her adventurous spirit yearned to pierce the blue sky.

Tonight it would be moonlight and the field would be deserted. She could bribe Patrick McGee, who had charge of her machine, and away she would go!

The moon was high in the heavens when Eve motored down to the aerodrome alone in her runabout. The sheds were all closed and the ground was deserted, but she knew that Patrick McGee would be waiting behind the gate.

The gate swung inward, and she rolled over to the shed where her machine was stored. Patrick came running up behind, begging her to desist from her mad attempt, but Eve was insistent.

Soon the monoplane was outside. Patrick declared it was in perfect order, and, having assisted Eve to her seat and strapped her in, he started the propeller, the engine caught, the machine quivered, and away it went, wavering over the rolling ground; then, responding to Eve's guidance, it rose up and up until she had reached the desired height; then along her chosen air lane she flew dizzily.

Beneath her the aerodrome diminished and faded from view. Overhead the moon grew larger and more brilliant. The stars stared at her with luminous eyes, and the wind rushed by.

Presently she flew over the city with its myriad lights, and the machine, flying like a homing bird, pointed northward, for Eve had lost all sense of location.

Below she caught the silver gleam of a river. It was gone, and the dark bulk of hills took its place.

Now it was time to return home, for she had promised herself just a spin in the air, out of defiance to M. de Mennes. But which way led home?

Eve Dunham confessed to herself that she did not know. She guided the machine around in a sweeping circle, trusting to chance to reach the city. Once over the city she was positive that she could find her way back to the aerodrome, for she had made the flight over the city many times with her instructor.

But where was the city?

Back and forth Eve flew, once deceived by an upward glare against the sky. It was only a barn on fire, and nowhere did she see the reflection of city lights.

Then when she paused uncertainly she was aware that something was wrong with the engine. It was missing—once, twice, again and yet again.

Suppose it fell!

Well, she had taken her chance. "I—I'm s-something of a fa-fatalist," Eve assured herself with chattering teeth, not knowing what a hand fate was taking in her affairs this moonlit night.

She attempted to volplane.

"It's that or die!" murmured plucky Eve, and she began the descent.

All went well for awhile. As she neared the earth Eve tried to select a favorable spot in which to land, but the grouping of woods and hills and moonlit patches was very confusing, and what had seemed to be a wide field suddenly changed to a park, dotted with trees and with a great house set in its midst.

Eve tried to keep away from that house, but by some strange fascination it drew her and the machine toward it. She was gliding swiftly down toward the roof of the mansion, and she knew that death and disaster lay at the end of the fall.

She leaned forward, and the movement shifted her weight. The machine changed its course and just missed the house. It crashed into the tops of a great oak tree and stuck fast, while the engine whirred a few times and then stopped with a cackling sound.

Eve, snug in the aluminium body of the machine, was jarred by the impact and whipped and bruised by the branches as she crashed through.

A momentary silence followed the landing. Then came the sound of opening doors and voices in question and answer.

"It's one of them airyplanes got stuck in the oak tree, sir!" came the wondering voice of a stable hand.

A man's voice spoke in quick, authoritative tones.

"Start the big car ont here, Benson, and turn on the searchlights! Train them on the tree—on the top, man! By Jove, you're right! Bring a ladder!"

Eve, sitting meekly in her imprisoned flying machine, heard some one scrambling up the tree. Up he came, and she could hear the panting of his breath and the bending of the smaller branches as he mounted near her perch.

Then, the faithful Benson having trained the searchlight so that it pierced the leafy branches and fell full upon Eve's face, the girl saw rising over the edge of her compartment a man's head. Inch by inch it was revealed to her in the white light.

A beautifully brushed mop of red brown hair, a very white forehead, two jetty black brows and beneath them two unbelieving blue eyes, a handsome nose, a cropped mustache and the astonished mouth of Lewis Thayer. He looked frightened.

"Eve! Eve! Where did you come from?" he gasped at last.

And Eve, bewildered by the unkind trick that fate had served in leading her straight to the home of Lewis Thayer when her proud spirit would have led her to the antipodes rather than face him, could only hang her head and say faintly:

"My machine ran away from me. Something happened to the engine, and I attempted to alight. I didn't know where I was."

"Yes?" was Mr. Thayer's polite inquiry. And neither one of them appeared to notice that there was a trace of humor in this conversation held in the top of a tree on a moonlight evening between two persons who were irrevocably estranged.

But Benson, sleepy and impatient, recalled them to the unpleasant situation.

"Do you need assistance in getting the man down, sir?" he asked.

"The—er—man is a friend of mine, Benson, and he is quite unhurt, so you may as well go to bed. I will help him down," said Thayer authoritatively. He was looking down at the expectant Benson and so missed the look of gratitude that Eve shot at him from under her lashes.

"Very well, sir," said Benson with alacrity. "Shall I leave the lights on?"

"If you please. I will put the car in. Good night, Benson."

"Good night, sir," said Benson.

The two in the tree watched Benson's lantern as it bobbed down the driveway toward the lodge at the gate where he lived. When he had disappeared from view Thayer looked into Eve's troubled eyes.

"There is only one way for you to get down," he said seriously.

"And that is?" asked Eve.

"I must carry you."

Eve did not hesitate. She must not show embarrassment. She would be very practical and matter of fact. Circumstances demanded it.

"Very well," she said calmly. She stood erect and steadied herself. "Whenever you are ready, Mr. Thayer."

Thayer stepped down to a lower branch, braced himself securely, held up his arms and said "Now!"

With Eve in his arms he went down slowly, laboriously, cautiously, for, slim as she was, it was no easy task to carry her down the precarious way to the ground.

At last he slipped to the turf beneath the tree, his left arm still encircling her. She could feel the heavy beating of his overstrained heart. The magnetism of his touch thrilled her as it had done before, and she dreaded the moment when his clasp should loosen and she would be "free" once more.

She didn't want to be free. A little sob caught her throat as she felt his arm relaxing its hold.

The grasp tightened.

"You are hurt, Eve?" he asked quickly.

"Yes," she whispered.

"I might have known it," he muttered. "Tell me."

"My heart," whispered Eve.

"Your heart?" he repeated stupidly.

"Yes, Lewis; it is hurt. It is breaking for you," confessed poor Eve, clinging close to him.

She felt his heart leap suddenly, and his right arm came around to fold her in a close embrace.

Shortly afterward the big motorcar leaped down the avenue and went hurtling toward Eve's home. It was a long ride, but the roads were perfect, and the moon blazed whitely down upon Thayer and his sweetheart.

"I'll never ride in an aeroplane again, Lewis," whispered Eve. "I know you hate the things."

"On the contrary, I love them," asserted Thayer heartily. "Didn't one of them bring me a wife?"

CHAPTER VIII.

Wherein I Make All Clear to My Little Mistress.

My pistol was still in my hand, and she made a clutch at it, but I was too quick for her. I caught her by the wrist. The spell she had cast upon us by her sudden entrance, her beautiful presence, her proud, brave demeanor, was broken by that touch. The men laughed. The remembrance of that laugh makes my blood boil even now.

"I wish you joy of her," said one.

"You will have a time taming her," cried a second.

"Ah, you think so!" I cried, determining to carry out the deception to the bitter end and to leave no chance for the least suspicion to arise. I seized her by the shoulders, secretly praying God to forgive me for what I was about to do, and shook her violently back and forth. It was easy enough. A baby in my hands would not have been more helpless. "Silence, you fools!" I cried as the men began to laugh again, and then to her: "You belong to me, woman. Do you hear? I've bought you. I am your master. Get back into your cabin. I will have speech with you later." Helpless, she could do nothing. I thrust her into the cabin, shut the door and faced the men. "Will you gentlemen leave me alone to tame this she devil for a little while, and I will be on deck presently," I panted out.

"Very well," said Pimball, "but before we go"—he pointed to a heavy bottle in the rack—"I propose that we drink the health of the new navigator and his lady."

"Right-o!" said I.

I reached for the glasses that were in the rack and poured out a stiff dram for each man and added mighty little water to it. The room was soon filled with mocking, jeering toasts to my health and happiness. I drank with the rest, although I would rather have swallowed poison. They went out one by one, Pimball last.

"I wish you joy of your woman," he sneered.

"You will see how tame she is tomorrow," I laughed as he climbed up the ladder and soon disappeared.

To throw open the door of the cabin was the work of a minute. There she stood. She had twisted some kind of a rope out of the sheets which she had hastily torn up. Her purpose was plain. She had intended to end her life by hanging herself from the hook in the deck beam above to which one end of her rope was secured, and she would have done it, too, if I had not come in in the nick of time.

I stared at her for a moment and then reached forward and tore the plaited strands out of her hand and from around her neck and threw them to the deck. It was evidence to me of the deepness of her despair that she had attempted such a thing. It showed me for one thing the excellence of my acting. I had convinced even her of my villainy, I realized with a sudden pang.

Hard as I stared at her, the glance that she shot back at me in intensity, if not expression, matched my own. I never want to see such loathing, such contempt, such scorn on a human countenance again. It cut me to the heart.

"A moment," she said wildly, "and I had done it, traitor!"

"Nay, nay," I protested, "I am a true man."

"You bargained for me; you bought me!"

"I was not in earnest," I cried, but she interrupted me in a perfect tempest of outraged feeling.

"My God!" she burst out. "Why didn't you stay away a little longer? You dog! You vile, low"—

But at that I found voice again, for I was getting angry myself, my temper naturally being none the sweetest, save ordinarily when she was concerned.

"Hear me," I interrupted in turn.

"Not a word!"

"But indeed you must," I persisted, stepping within her cabin and carefully closing the door after me. "It is your welfare alone that I seek. I think you should have known that."

"After the insult on the quarterdeck last evening?" she asked cuttingly.

"Madam," said I, controlling myself again, but with added difficulty, "our concern is not with kisses, but with"—

"What?"

"Life and"—

I hesitated.

"What else? Speak on!"

"Your honor," I said slowly, whereat she stared at my face, doubtless stern enough in all conscience.

What I had to say concerned us both so deeply that I cared not what she said, and perhaps that closed cabin into which I had penetrated was the likeliest place for privacy in the whole ship. I could by no means be overheard, so I determined to speak freely in a way not to be misunderstood.

"I mean you no harm. Can you not see it?" I burst out. "It was all a play."

"A play!" she panted. "The murder of the captain, the mutiny of the men, the seizure of the ship, the giving up the chart, your purchase"—she drew herself up—"God, she was a brave little thing—"of me," she continued, "with your share of the treasure—was that a play?"

"Part of it, madam," said I, stung by her scorn and stunned again by the thought that she could ever have believed me capable of such baseness, who had loved her, worshiped her and—but for that fleeting moment when I had kissed her—had ever treated her with such humble consideration. "I bought not you."

"What then?"

"The right to live and serve you; the right for you to live unharmed and"—

"And what?"

"And be served by me with no thought but for your safety and happiness."

She stared at me in deep consternation, her brow furrowed. I had wit enough to be silent and let the speech work.

"Have I wronged you?" she asked falteringly at last.

"What would your fate be if you were left to that murderous rabble on the deck yonder?"

She shuddered as I pressed the thought home to her.

"You should have known me better," I continued reproachfully, "than to have suspected"—

"But your insult to me this very night on the quarterdeck?"

"Is a man to be condemned beyond pardon who has served you truly because he snatches a kiss in a moment of madness and forgets it when your life and honor tremble in the balance?"

"I do not think even you could forget that ever," she said, and I could not fathom exactly her purpose in that remark.

Did she not want me to forget it? Or would she have me remember it? But this seemed like trifling. I turned away bitterly, but she caught me by the arm instantly.

"What are you about to do?" she began. "Don't abandon me now. I believe in you. I see now why you did it. It was to save me and help me. What would I do, what could I do without you? I am"—she hesitated; it was hard for her proud spirit—"I am sorry," she finished.

"Say no more," I answered, looking down at the little hand on my sleeve, my soul thrilling to her words and touch. "No harm shall come to you save over my dead body, and that is not enough for me to promise. I mean to extricate you from this peril."

"But is it possible?"

"I think so; I pray so."

"You are one against so many."

"I have one ally in the ship, you forget," said I, smiling at her, relieved and thankful to see her in her right mind again and awake to the truth and my real feeling toward her.

"And that is"—

"Yourself."

"A feeble helper," she rejoined, smiling in turn.

"We shall see."

"And will you forgive me for having misjudged you?" she asked pleadingly.

"Gladly."

"My hand on it, then," she said, holding out her little palm which I swallowed up in my large one on the instant, standing silent as usual, holding it the while.

"And are you not sorry that you—you—kissed me?" she faltered at last.

"No," I answered bluntly enough—being a plain man I have always felt compelled to tell the truth—except, perhaps, when her interests were at stake—"I am not sorry." But as she swiftly tried to draw her hand away I added, "I promise you I won't do it again, and you will forgive me, I know. Meanwhile we have much to plan. We may be interrupted any time and we had best get at it."

I released her hand and she faced me calmly enough.

"You don't know how much safer I feel when I have you to depend upon," she said.

How my heart leaped at that assurance and I saw that she had indeed forgiven me.

"I shall leave everything to you, Master Hampdon," she continued. "Do you tell me what to do, and I will do it."

"I know you will. I could not ask a braver, better second," I answered heartily.

At that moment I heard a step on the ladder. Somebody was coming. Quick as a flash I realized the part we had to play in public. I balled my fist and struck the bulkhead savagely. I suppose I must have changed my expression as well, for in her surprise she screamed faintly.

"That's it," I whispered, "scream again, louder, louder."

"What do you mean?" she asked incomprehensible amazement, in this crisis my wits working quicker than hers.

"There is somebody outside. We have a part to play. I am abusing you and you are fighting," I whispered swiftly. Then louder, fairly shouting at her indeed, I cried, "Down on your knees, wench. You will find that you have met your master now."

I made some sound of scuffle and she did indeed scream loudly. In the midst of the commotion the door was tried, but fortunately I had turned the key.

"Who's there?" I shouted, and to my lady whispered, "Beg for help!"

Entering into the spirit of the game and smiling at me, since there was none but I to see, albeit she infused strange terror in her voice, so that I was amazed myself, she cried at the top of her voice:

"Help! Help!"

I in turn called louder yet:

"Silence, woman!" and struck the bulkhead again.

Finally turning to the door I opened it a bit, and there stood one of the younger seamen.

"What want you?" I began sternly and stormily. "I don't care to be disturbed just now."

"You are wanted on deck. It is just dawn. Land has been sighted, and there's a heavy sea runnin'. Pimball an' Gibby want your counsel and advice what's to be done."

"Good!" said I. "I will be with you in a moment. Tell them I have yet a word or two to say to this woman here."

The man turned on his heel, passed through the cabin and climbed the ladder to the deck.

"Now," I said quickly, thrusting one of my pistols into my little mistress' hand, "we can talk no longer this time. I am going to do my best for you, and if I fail here is a weapon. You know what to do with it."

"Shall I use it on them?"

"No, lass," I answered grimly, "on yourself if it comes to the worst."

"I understand," she said, paling a little.

"Lock the door when I go out, and on no account open to any voice but mine."

"I shall remember."

"And keep up the acting," I said. "Whimper and cower away whenever we are seen together."

"I shall not forget," she said, standing very straight, looking at me bravely, her eyes shining.

"And now goodby!"

I turned away, but she caught me by the shoulder. She extended her hand rather high. I was not too dumb not to understand what she wanted, and so I bent and kissed it, and it was no light kiss of gallantry, but I pressed my lips passionately against the little hand.

"May God keep you," she said as I turned away, breathing the "Amen" I dare not speak.

I heard the key turn in the lock behind me, and with a heart full of misgivings in spite of my stern and resolute purpose, I came out on deck again.

The bride was given away by her brother, Peter Rozantes, and Anthony J. Thompson and Nicholas Emmanuel of Quincy were the attendants of the groom. After the ceremony a reception was held in Minot's hall, Boston which was largely attended.

Two weeks ago the formal bethrothal ceremony took place at the Greek Church and since then the couple have been wearing their wedding rings. Sunday the solemnization was witnessed by many Boston and Quincy Greeks.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Pappas came to Quincy to their home at 65 Spear street, and Monday they left on a honeymoon trip to New York and Washington. They will be away about two weeks. On their return they will be given another reception by their friends.

OLD MARINER DEAD.

William Hepburn, one of the oldest inmates at the Sailors' Snug Harbor, and an old time master mariner, died Sunday night at the Harbor in his 94th year. He was a native of Scotland and was admitted to the Harbor in 1885. He had followed the sea from boyhood and had sailed all over the world. He is thought to have a daughter living somewhere in Massachusetts, as about two years ago a woman appeared at the Harbor and claimed she was his daughter. Nothing has been heard from her since that time however.

SQUANTUM

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. George Albert Morse were deeply grieved to hear of Mr. Morse's sudden death at Reading, Pa., on Thursday. The remains were brought to Boston and services were held at the home of Mr. Morse's father in Roxbury. Burial was in Nashua, N. H. Mr. Morse was a brother of Hiram A. Morse of Bellevue road, Squantum and two years ago passed the summer at Mr. Morse's bungalow. He was born in Merrimac, 44 years ago. He was graduated at the Dudley school in Roxbury and for a number of years was employed on the Fall River line steamers. He then became a claims agent of the Boston Elevated Company and left two years ago to become a claims agent for the London Insurance Company in Philadelphia, a position he held at the time of his death. He survived by a widow, who was Florence E. Somerville of Springfield .

John R. Nelson of Squantum attended the Waterways convention in Boston this week as a representative of the city of Quincy. He was appointed by Mayor Stone to act in this capacity.

Miss Jennie Ryan of Frederick, N. B., is visiting Mrs. George Morrill, Middlesex street, Squantum.

C. E. SOCIAL.

The social held by the Christian Endeavor society of the Memorial church, was a grand success. Most of the evening was enjoyed in playing games at half past nine, refreshments consisting of hot chocolate, sandwiches, crackers and candy were served. The committee in charge included Miss Jean Arthur, Miss Doris Cummings, and Mr. Lawrence French. The young people have planned to have a social of this kind every month.

SQUANTUM NONAGENARIAN.

The people of Squantum are assisting Carl Carlson, their nonagenarian, observe the 91st anniversary of his birth today but because of a slight cold contracted a few weeks ago the affair is being conducted quietly. Today the venerable man received many friends at the home of his son Carl E. Carlson with whom he has made his home since coming to Quincy 15 years ago. Mr. Carlson despite his years has a wonderful vitality and his only ailment is a touch of rheumatism which bothers him occasionally. He has made many friends since taking up his residence at Squantum, and all are solicitous for his good health.

HIGH SCHOO LCAR.

Squantum High school pupils were greatly pleased today when they found that special arrangements had been made for them to get a through car from Squantum to the High school every morning. This special car will accomodate the 35 high school pupils of Squantum and Atlantic. Through the kindness of Superintendent Gammons a special car will meet the 7.30 car from Squantum every morning at the bridge at Atlantic and High school pupils will be rtansferred to this car and go directly to the school. This will be a great accomodation throughout the winter months. It was through the joint effort of the Atlantic Improvement association and the Squantum Improvement association that this addition to the car service was secured.

The Quincy members of Bishop Cheverus Assembly of fourth degree members of the Knights of Columbus participated in the parade at Boston on the holiday. The number of Quincyites that witnessed the celebration was the largest ever, and all the trains after 9 A. M. were crowded to the point of discomfort.

Electric Motion Signs.

The junior member of a big electrical sign construction company was walking along Broadway with a friend after the theater. He nodded his head toward one of the blazing advertiseing displays in which a horse appears on the gallop.

"Has it ever occurred to you how detailed must be the work of the sign builder to represent the movements of living beings in bulbs and make them artistically realistic? We have to go far afield sometimes to obtain the lifelike effect. That horse, for example, plants his hoofs just as in real life; otherwise that sign would be an animated cartoon. Now, to get the individual or disjointed movements of the legs in their order of sequence the builder minded that the eye of the camera is keener than man's, procured the motion picture film of a galloping horse and examining each snapshot, drew his plans in duplicate. Flashing his bulbs on and off with the same speed employed by a movie operator, the designer has produced the effect of smooth and continuous motion."—New York Sun.

Spoiled His Alibi.

A man can't be too careful in the selection of his alibis. Recently the head of a family returned home early in the morning. He had boasted to his wife that he would be home early and wanted her to know that he had kept his word, although he had not done so. Very quietly he turned the hands of his watch back, then turned the hands of the parlor clock and the clock in the dining room. Then he threw his shoes on the floor and awoke his wife. "Late again, I suppose," she remarked. "My watch says one minute to 12," he replied. She hopped out of bed and surveyed the dining room clock. Not believing her sleepy eyes, she turned to the timepiece in the parlor. "All right, but how did you do it?" she asked. He was about to give her an explanation, when the chimes of a nearby church sounded two, and his alibi was shattered. An altogether different explanation was given, but he was too surprised to make it convincing.—New York Tribune.

Portland Cement.

The making of a barrel of portland cement will consume about 450 pounds of limestone and 150 pounds of clay or shale. A plant making 1,000 barrels a day will therefore use in the course of an ordinary year about 66,000 tons of limestone and 22,000 tons of clay or shale. Assuming average density for these materials, a 1,000,000 barrel plant will use up almost 1,000,000 cubic feet of limestone a year, together with 250,000 cubic feet of shale, the United States geological survey points out.

"As the investment in the plant is heavy it would be folly to locate a cement plant under ordinary circumstances at a point where less than twenty years' supply of raw materials is in sight," the government scientists suggest. A 1,000 barrel plant, therefore, should have 20,000,000 cubic feet of limestone and 5,000,000 cubic feet of clay or shale on its properties.

The Paper Mark Twain Liked.

An interesting anecdote about Edwin Litchfield Turnbull, an alumnus of Johns Hopkins university, is told in the News-Letter, the weekly student publication of his alma mater. Mr. Turnbull, when thirteen years old, published for the benefit of a local charitable organization an amateur journal called the Acorn. He ran the paper entirely, doing the writing, typesetting and subscription soliciting. Among his subscribers were the late Mark Twain, the humorist, and Sidney Lanier, the "Hopkins poet."

One day he received the following letter from Mark Twain:

Dear Sir—Yours is the kind of paper for me—one that comes but six times a year and can be read in five minutes. Please send it to me for ten years. Check inclosed. Yours truly, S. L. CLEMENS.

One of Boyle Roche's Gems.

In "The Lighter Side of Irish Life" there is an extract from a speech of Sir Boyle Roche, that famous maker of "bulls," when he was denouncing the French revolution in the Irish house of commons. This is one gem:

"There, Mr. Speaker, if these Gallican villains should invade us, sir, 'tis on that very table maybe these honorable members might see their own destinies lying in heaps on top of one another. Here perhaps, sir, the murderous marshal law men, Marseillois, would break in, cut us to mincemeat and throw our bleeding heads upon that table, to stare us in the face!"

Cautious.

A departing husband charged his wife that she place upon his monument, "Prepare to follow me," but, remembering his dubious past and his uncertain future, added a line of her own:

To follow thee I am not content
Until I know which way thee went.
—St. Louis Republic.

Ways of Mankind.

"People are queer."
"How now?"
"The round shouldered man straightens up for five minutes when he is being measured for his suit. When he slumps again of course the suit doesn't fit."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The dimple in the chin of the boy baby looks cute now, but it will prove a curse to him when he grows up and has to shave himself.—Buffalo Express.

Vol. 28 No. 239 QUINCY MASS. WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

COTTAGE BADLY GUTTED

Palmer Street Saved from Conflagration

Good Work By the Firemen

The alarm from Box 12 at 9.05 Tuesday night sent the Central station auto combination, Hose 1, and Hook and Ladder 1 on a three mile run in the teeth of a howing storm to a burning cottage on Palmer street, Germantown, occupied by David Gallant aged about 70 years, who lived in the house alone. The fire was caused by the explosion of a kerosene lamp and it was but a few minutes after that the cottage was a roaring mass of flames.

As soon as the flames had worked outside, the high wind, which was prevailing at the time, sent the burning embers flying in all directions. There are several cottages situated within a few feet of the building and the burning embers alighting on their roofs threatened a spread of the fire. Only that the roofs had been thoroughly wet down by the recent hard storms prevented a conflagration starting.

The occupants of these cottages were panic stricken for a time and lawn hose was brought into play. This kept the roofs wet until the department arrived.

Good time was made by the fire apparatus, in spite of the gale, and streams were soon put on the burning cottage. The fire was soon under control although the cottage was badly gutted and but little more than the frame work was left standing.

In the meantime streams were also being directed onto the other cottages and none of them took fire. Had the weather been dry there is but little doubt but that several of the cottages would have been burned.

As soon as the flames were under contral, Mr. Gallant was taken in charge by neighbors and made comfortable for the night. The house is owned by his daughter-in-law.

Chief Litchfield estimates the loss on the building and contents at $1,500. Owing to the rapidity with which the flames spread atfer the lamp exploded it was impossible to save any of the furniture in the cottage.

MRS. EMMA LARK.

Mrs. Emma Lark, the pioneer merchant at Brewers corner, and widow of George Lark, died at her home on 2 Town Hill street Tuesday evening. Monday she was able to go out driving and although she has been a sufferer from heart disease for more than a year her death was unexpecetd.

It is nearly 30 years since Mrs. Lark came to Quincy from Plymouth, England, and she has conducted a variety store at Brewers Corner for more than 20 years. She held the news agency in that district and distributed the Daily Ledger and Patriot among other publications.

She was very popular among the people of South and West Quincy and was a member of the George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, I. O. O. F., and the Ivy Lodge of St. George. She is survived by her son Harry Lark, and one sister, Mrs. George Prout.

SEVERAL YACHTS ASHORE

Drifted from Moorings in Severe Gale

Some in Perilous Positions

The severe wind storm that prevailed Monday night and all day Tuesday and Tuesday night caused havoc among many of the small boats moored along the shores. Many of the yacht owners had not as yet hauled their craft up for the winter months and the result was that the storm tore many of them from their moorings and blew them ashore. Not only were boats washed ashore along the Fore river and Houghs Neck but along Wollaston beach and Neponset river.

As far as can be learned however none of the yachts are seriously damaged unless it be the cutter Oliver, owned by Capt. Oliver, which went ashore on Grape Island. This shore is trewn with rocks but it is thought that she may be hauled off without serious damage. The weather was so severe Tuesday night however that no attempt was made to get her off.

The yacht Wanderer of Frank Brown and several launches whose owners could not be learned were blown from their moorings and went ashore on Rose Cliff, North Weymouth, while a launch that was torn from its moorings at South Boston is ashore on Raccoon Island.

Along the Wollaston shore the 40-foot power boat Lethe of Ernest Brooks was one of the first to break away and as she was blown toward the shore she fouled the sloop Corneta of ex-Commodore Crosscup of the Wollaston Yacht club. The awning and signal mast of the Lethe were carried away by the bowsprit of the Corneta, and two boats started off together down the shore. This morning it was seen that there were two large yachts and several smaller boats on the shore of Ruff's Hummock and it is possible that these two yachts are there. Through a glass it was seen that these boats were high and dry on the sandy beach so that they will probably not be much damaged.

The yacht Belle Marion, a 29-foot sloop owned by E. M. Whittaker of the Wollaston club, was holding her mooring all right when the two drifting yachts fouled her anchor rope which gave way and she joined in the unnavigated cruise.

All along the Quincy shore boulevard there are a number of small boats high and dry. These include the Henrietta, Capt. H. L. Cassidy, Velina, Capt. George Haskins; the 18-foot knockabout La Chica, of Leo Coughlin; the 20-foot sloop Eleanor S. of Harry Hinckley and the 25 foot sloop Thelma of E. W. Wall.

At Squantum a number of small boats came ashore Tuesday during the gale and one sail boat that had been sunk was rooted out of the mud and thrown ashore above high water mark.

In fact all along the shore front, the beach is strewn with boats of all sizes and large amount of drift wood. As far as could be learned none of the yachts and smaller boats blown ashore had been seriously damaged.

Many of the members of the Quincy, Wollaston and Squantum yacht clubs were at their club houses all day Tuesday and whenever it was possible extra mooring ropes and anchors were put out in order to hold the craft. The wind however blew so strong, and such a gale was raging, that it was with the greatest difficulty that those nearest the shore were reached and even then there were but few that could be made fast.

It took a brave hearted yachtsmen to venture out Tuesday i nthe storm and those who did venture out a short distance soon turned back wet to the skin.

This morning the wind had abated somewhat yet there was a stiff breeze off shore and unless the wind dies down considerably it will not be much use today to venture out to recover the crafts that are ashore all along the beach.

HOUGHS NECK CLAIMS

Reasons for Separation Not Well Founded

Expensive Part of City

From a financial standpoint, Quincy would welcome a divorce from Houghs Neck, for it does not recognize the claim of the secessionists that Houghs Neck produces a great revenue.

Here are the three reasons why a few at Houghs Neck favor a separate town:

"Because tax money paid on Houghs Neck property, which should be used for Houghs Neck improvements is extended on other parts of Quincy.

"Because the police and fire protection and school accommodations now given to Houghs Neck by Quincy are inadequate and less efficient than "Sea Girt" could provide for herself.

"Because the interests of Houghs Neck are not those of the rest of Quincy and the city's officials are too little dependent on the support of the residents at Houghs Neck. With a population in summer of 15,000 and in winter of 1,500 Houghs Neck has been represented in Quincy government by only two men and for a period of four years since 1888."

The Houghs Neck committee claim the district pays to Quincy in taxes about $65,000. Whether it does or not is not known, but admitting that it does, what are the facts?

Over one half of this $65,000, or $33,000, goes for Houghs Necks share of the State and county taxes, debt and interest. This practically wipes all the so-called profit to Quincy. This year two large special appropriations have been made for Houghs Neck,—$10,000 for Sea street widening and rebuilding, and $20,000 for water standpipe on Great hill, and interest on these two loans will amount to $1200 per year for a long term of years.

There is still unpaid the loan of $18,000 for the new Houghs Neck schoolhouse, $2,000 for furnishing the schoolhouse, $6,500 for the school lot, $2,700 for Houghs Neck fire apparatus, etc., etc. And interest is a big item.

WEDDED AT ST. JOHNS

Elizabeth F. Connolly Bride of Arthur R. Tirrell

Miss Elizabeth Frances Connolly of Quincy and Ralph Tirrell, son of Arthur R. Tirrell of Brookline, were married at St. John's church this morning with a nuptial high mass. The celebrant was Rev. Fr. John J. Coan. The groom is a leather exporter at 55 South street, Boston, and a former resident of Weymouth. The bride is well known in Quincy.

Miss Viola M. Tirrell of Brookline, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid and the best man was John C. Connolly, brother of the bride. After the mass a wedding breakfast and reception was held at the home of the bride, 31 Upland road. Mr. and Mrs. Tirrell were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur R. Tirrell, parents of the groom; Mrs. Catherine Connolly, mother of the bride; Mrs. William A. Turner of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. William T. Donovan of Quincy, and Mrs. William A. McMillen of Malden, sisters of the bride. The ushers were Lester E. Tirrell of Brooklyn, William T. Donovan of Quincy and William A. McMillen of Malden. The house was profusely decorated with chrysanthemums, palms and ferns.

The bride was dressed in white Duchess satin trimmed with rose point lace and wore a veil of the same. Her veil was caught up with orange blossoms. She carried a handsomely bound white leather prayer book. The bridesmaid was dressed in blue brocade charmeuse with shadow lace trimmings, wore a feathered hat of blue and carried Killarney rose buds.

Guests were present from Providence, R. I., New York, Boston, Melrose, Weymouth, Braintree, Brookline and Milton. Mr. and Mrs. Tirrell left in the afternoon on an extended tour, and on their return will live in Brookline.

DUPUTY SMALL TO SPEAK.

The winter season of the Parent-Teachers Association of the Coddington school will open this evening in the Assembly hall. Robert O. Small deputy state commissioner of education will speak on "Some suggestions relative to vocational training for the grammar school student." The topic is an important one to parents and is in line with the grammar school system which has been introduced in Quincy. The soloist will be Mrs. Ada Scholes and Miss Bertha F. Estes will be accompanist. The committee hope to have the meeting largely attended and light refeshments will be served.

GRADING WAS NOT INCLUDED

In Appropriation for New Adams School

No Special for Sewers

If the report of the meeting of the executive committee of the Adams Parents-Teachers association as published is correct, it is very evident that if the parties who made some of the statements attributed to them had taken the trouble to look into the matter a little, they would not have made the statements which they did, as they were absolutely without foundation. For instance the report stated that the appropriation of $80,000 covered the grading of the school lot and that there was not sufficient balance to complete the grading of the rear of the lot.

As a matter of fact the order for $80,000 did not call for the grading of the lot, simply for the erection of a twelve-room school building, heating and ventilating supervision and architects' fees.

Still another statement was that money appropriated for the sewer extension had been spent for another purpose. As a matter of fact no special appropriation was made for connecting the building with the sewer, but this work is being done from the general appropriation of $50,000 for sewer extension made in the early spring.

The delay in opening the building is due to the fact that the sewer has not been extended so that the building can be connected. When work was commenced building this sewer, a large amount of ledge was encountered, and it has been necessary to cut through the ledge for the entire distance. Added to this, it is well known that there has been a great amount of stormy weather for several weeks and with such weather as Tuesday and last week it was practically useless to attempt work. Work however, is now progressing rapidly, and with any kind of favorable weather the sewer should be connected so that the building can be occupied by the first of the month.

To men who are now wearing clothes which came from this live store, we need simply say that the New Fall and Winter Styles from the House of Kuppenheimer are ready for inspection.

Their selection is inevitable for they know, from experience, just what they will receive in the way of exclusive styles and satisfaction-giving service.

To other men, no matter where they have purchased heretofore, we bring our claims of superiority, and urge them to make the old-time personal test that tells.

Today would be a good time to visit us, and see what

The ball game bulletins were read in Congress, but discussion of the subject was cut off through a tyrannical ruling by the speaker.

Women tourists can't wear aigrettes into this country, and the fact that the birds that bear them are alive and happy seems to give no consolation.

The city of Nome in Alaska has suffered from a terrible flood, but every one feels that some one else will contribute liberally to relieve the need.

Big prices are being paid for grains, but unfortunately for the farmer there can't be a short crop every year.

READ THE ADVERTISING.

Newspaper advertising is so generally scrutinized, that some people will say this suggestion is unnecessary. Still there are some people left who would not discover a notice that $10 gold pieces were being given away, even if prominently printed in every newspaper. There are some who pay needlessly high prices, because they do not pay careful attention to newspaper trade announcements.

The publisher does not consider that when his readers have seen every news item, they have by any means exhausted what the publication has to give them.

One of the greatest services the newspaper renders is providing an avenue by which merchants and tradesmen can give information about their offerings. Only by keeping track of these offerings can the public know where the best values are to be had. This newspaper hopes that none of its readers is paying needlessly high for living costs, by failure to learn about the buying opportunities which these columns report from issue to issue.

BANKERS IN CONVENTION.

One of the most important conventions of the year was that of the American Bankers' Association, in session last week in Boston. It is interesting not merely as an index of business sentiment, but since it assemble a group of men who control the fortunes of millions of people.

Often the banker has been the autocrat of his community. Before his penetrating eye, there pass daily in review the successes and the failures of the little local business world. One man gets his renewal easily, while another, apparently far more prosperous, is brought to time with a jerk. Long training makes the banker a keen judge of mental and business habits.

As the country has grown richer and the loanable capital has vastly increased, the banking business has been tremendously overdone. Recent statistics, for instance, give Nebraska one bank for every 1750 people.

Consequently competition for the good accounts grows sharper. Ambitious young men who seem to possess possibilities are urged to start little checking deposits, though the profit on their balances may not half pay the cost of book-keeping. There is always the chance that one of them may develop into a big fellow.

So the banker can not award financial life and death with the curt indifference of old. Instead of sitting passive in a prim, simple little office, he puts in tiled floors and silky rugs to give an impression of prosperity, and goes out therefrom to hustle for the new concern's accounts before the incorporation papers are filed.

The banker holds the balance between cold prudence on one hand, and chimerical enterprise on the other. Realizing the almost superhuman difficulty of the task, he is considerably given to convention going, that he may consult with others of his calling. Hence the American bankers' gathering is one of the best attended of the big professional meetings.

INCH TELLS OF SEA TRAGEDY

Gives Details of Fire on Steamer Volturno

STARTS EARLY IN THE MORNING

Flames Make Rapid Headway After Being Discovered and Soon Reach Great Height—Heavy Sea Smashes Boats as They Are Being Launched —Explosions Add to Danger

New York, Oct. 15.—Captain Inch, whose steamer, the Volturno, was burned at sea, with the loss of 136 lives, told his story of the disaster. It is a plain seaman's tale, but in it line by line the horrors of the disaster and the terrible ordeal through which passengers and crew passed are brought out all the more clearly, perhaps, because of the marked directness and simplicity with which the story is told.

From its beginning, where the outbreak of the fire which spelled the doom of the Volturno is recorded, the narrative runs without the apparent omission of any salient fact, except one, to the point where the blazing ship was abandoned—the last remaining passenger having been taken off and the captain and what was left of the crew having boarded the waiting Kroonland.

The omission is that Captain Inch does not say what caused the fire, reporting simply that the chief officer advised him at 6.50 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 9 of its existence below, and that five minutes later the flames had burst through the forward hatches and were rapidly spreading.

Captain Inch sent his story of the disaster by wireless from the Kroonland, on which he is being brought to this port, to the officers of the Uranium line here. Captain Inch's narrative reads:

"At 6.50 a. m., Oct. 9, 1913, lat. 49.12 north, long. 34.51 west, fire was reported in Hold No. 1 by chief officer. At 6.55 a. m., flames were burning through the No. 1 hatches, setting fire to the forecastle and all deck fittings. I slowed the ship down and kept her before the wind to enable us to put the steam extinguishers in operation, also three fire hose from deck connections. The flames were gaining rapidly, reaching the height of the foremast light and imprisoning the watch below, who were burned to death in the forecastle.

"A series of explosions now occurred, wrecking the saloon and hospital amidships, the compass and stearing gear being also damaged by the explosions. I gave orders to get help by wireless as soon as the flames burnt the hatches.

"It seemingly being impossible to save the ship, I had boats provisioned and swung out. The ship was rolling heavily. Boats Nos. 13 and 5 were smashed, but No. 2 was lowered in the water with cabin passengers and stewardess, in charge of Chief Officer Miller. After this boat left the ship she capsized, throwing her occupants into the water.

"She afterwards righted herself and several of the crew got back into the boat, the chief officer being one of them. The No. 6 boat was lowered and got away safely filled with steerage passengers in charge of Fourth Officer Langsell. The No. 7 boat on being lowered was caught under the stern of the ship, the boat being completely wrecked.

"Meanwhile the chief engineer, two seamen and myself fought the fire and apparently subdued the flames. I gave orders to send no more boats away as I had received word from the Carmania that she was hoping to be with us by 11 a. m. Life belts were served out and put on each passenger. The passengers now became calmer. Food was served out to them.

"At 9 a. m., the bunker was found to be ablaze. It being impossible to stop the fire in the bunker on account of gases, the water-tight doors were closed and water poured down the No. 2 hatch onto the fire, but the fire was gaining all the time.

"At 11 a. m., the Carmania arrived and lowered a boat but could not reach the ship on account of the high seas. Asked Carmania to look for the No. 2 boat. The steamship Seydlitz arrived and lowered boats which could not reach us. About 3 p. m., the Carmania returned and tried to reach the ship with life rafts, but all drifted past our bow, too far away.

"Several steamers had arrived by dusk. The Kroonland put away boats which made four attempts to come alongside but were swept away each time.

"At 9.30 p. m., the saloon and chart house were flaming. The deck, bridge and all before the funnel were blazing fiercely. Pumps and dynamo stopped for want of steam. Marconi operators working with the accumulators until 11 p. m., when the magazine on the bridge blew up, carrying the aerial away.

"The chief engineer, the Marconi men, and seamen and myself spent the night making small rafts in case the fire burned through the deck before daylight.

"At 5.15 a. m., the first boat arrived. Weather and sea having moderated, boats were enabled to come alongside ship which enabled passengers to embark quickly. All the steamers laying around the ship sent boats. Now we were enabled to load three boats with passengers at once. The passengers left in a very orderly way and there was no panic, women breaking down and crying when help was alongside, and all were off the ship by 8 a. m., about 400 passengers. I searched the ship myself and found no one else on board, so decided to abandon her, as the No. 3 hatch was well alight by now, so with remainder of crew embarked on the Kroonland.

"Nothing at all has been heard of the two missing boats. Passing vessels were asked to keep a lookout for them.

"I wish to express my heartiest thanks and gratitude to the captains of ships who stood by; also to the officers and crews who came to our assistance. For their bravery and endurance in their endeavor to come alongside the ship; also to the passengers of the Kroonland for their kindness to the rescued passengers, engineers and crew and myself, in fitting us out and doing everything for us. The ship was abandoned in lat. 48.30 north, long. 34.57 west."

La Touraine of the French line, second of the rescue ships which figured in the Volturno disaster to reach port, reached Havre with forty-two survivors of the disaster on board.

One of the rescued crew stated a cigarette caused the fire.

What followed after the arrival of La Touraine in the vicinity of the Volturno is related in a detailed report written by Captain Caussin to the French Transatlantic company. He says:

"As the sea was beginning to moderate, I thought of putting out boats, but the opinion of all my officers was against the lowering of lifeboats. I sent out a whaleboat, however.

"The Volturno at this time had her stern in the air, while forward and amidships she was nothing but a great torch.

"Lieutenant Izenic reported that upon his arrival at the side of the Volturno, that vessel presented a frightful spectacle. She was blazing from her bows to amidship and plunging and rolling. The crew and passengers had been driven by the flames and smoke to the extreme after part of the vessel, where they uttered incessantly cries of terror. The whaleboat stood off, its crew calling to the passengers to jump into the sea when they would be taken on board. None, however, would jump until the Touraine's whaleboat was thrown by a gigantic wave against the Volturno's side. Instantly a number jumped or slid down ropes into the boat. Two who had jumped for the boat disappeared under the side of the Volturno as she rolled. One man landed on a sailor in the whaleboat and injured him.

"Happily Lieutenant Izenic was able to get clear of the Volturno with five rescued passengers, or his boat would have been overloaded and sunk as it was able to take only a few.

"The other whale boat, commanded by Second Captain Rousselet of the Touraine, was near the stern of the Volturno, and its crew were calling to the passengers to jump, but none would do so. No other boat was seen at that time near the burning ship.

"Lieutenant Izenic wanted to put off again from the Touraine, but I sent the second mate with a fresh crew.

"Rousselet returned later with three rescued people. All who were brought in both boats were in a state of great exhaustion.

"Rousselet was allowed to make another trip in his whaleboat with a fresh crew, and I now lowered a life boat thinking it might bring back a larger load.

"The second mate returned with seven persons he had picked up and Rousselet brought back seven others.

"Rousselet reported that he had found ropes, pulley tackle and improvised ladders along the after part of the Volturno dangling from the sides. The vessel had a strong list to starboard, her nose was low in the waves, and the water was breaking over her. The flames lighted up the scene as Rousselet's whaleboat run in close and a hail of human beings fell upon it and its crew. Fourteen people were picked up, of whom seven were transferred to the other whaleboat, as Rousselet's craft was in danger of being swamped from overloading.

"By this time it was 6 o'clock on Friday morning and numerous boats from the other ships alongside had been lowered and were around the Volturno. Another one of our boats took two women and two children from the sea, which had become calmer. The women and children were let down into the water tied with ropes.

"When no more people were on board the Volturno our boats were taken in."

MINE EXPLOSION KILLS 400 MEN

Fire Adds Its Terrors to Deadly Afterdamp

PIT STRICKEN 13 YEARS AGO

Hoisting Machinery at Top of Shafts Blown to Atoms—Five Hundred Were Taken Out Alive, Most of Them Injured and Some of Them Fatally Burned

Cardiff, Wales, Oct. 15.—More than 400 miners have been killed, it is feared, by an explosion and afterdamp in the Universal colliery at Singhenydd, ten miles from here. Of 931 men who were in the pits fifty have been taken out alive by rescue parties most of them injured, however, and some of them fatally burned. Ten bodies have been recovered. The shaft gearing was blown away, cutting off escape of many miners and leaving them in the gravest position.

The day shift descended the shaft in the cages at 5 o'clock. An hour afterward a deafening report brought the inhabitants in the vicinity of the mine running to the pit head, where they found the ventilating and hoisting machinery at the top of the shafts had been blown to atoms, and a man who had been working twenty yards away decapitated by the force of the blast.

Rescue parties of miners belonging to the night shift were soon on the scene making preparations to enter the mine in an endeavor to save their comrades. The fiery reputation of the mine, however, gave little hope that any of those below could be rescued alive.

An entrance was found, however, by way of an adjacent shaft, and on descending in this manner some scores of men huddled together in portions of the mine where the ventilation was still good were rescued.

The rescuers continued their search in remote galleries for others who might still be alive, and picked up and brought to the surface altogether 500.

The same pit was stricken by an explosion thirteen years ago, when 120 miners lost their lives, and only one of those below at the time was rescued alive.

The men brought to the surface were found on the east side of the mine, where the ventilation remained fairly good, while on the west side, where the explosion occurred, fire soon added its terrors to the deadly afterdamp, and the rescue parties were unable to make any progress toward the affected area.

The officials of the mine found it necessary to call a detachment of police to keep back the women and children who had crowded around in the vain hope of obtaining some news of their relatives. The mine managers were only able to reply to all inquiries: "There is little hope."

Most of the rescued men presented a pitiable appearance.

All the men in the east side of the mine had reached the surface by 4 o'clock, but 418 were still in the workings on the west side which were on fire.

WOMAN IS FREED

Mrs. Rose Found Not Guilty of the Shooting of Bartlett

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 15.—Mrs. Marion Ross was found not guilty in the district court when tried on the charge of assault with a dangerous weapon upon George Bartlett of East Boston.

She testified that she shot at him through the door of her bedroom, after he had threatened her, and that she would have jumped from the window to the street, about fifteen feet, had she not feared for her little daughter's safety.

Bartlett pleaded guilty to threatened assault and was placed under bonds for six months.

SHOT FOR DEER

Girl Sees Father Killed by Member of Hunting Party

Watertown, N. Y., Oct. 15.—"You got him all right," cried the daughter of Warren Briggs of Coffin's Mills, a hamlet in the Adirondack foothills, north of here, as Grover Spencer fired at a deer on a drive in the woods.

The supposed deer pitched forward into a clump of alder bushes. The members of the hunting party ran forward, congratulating Spencer on his lucky shot. They were horrified to discover the body of Briggs, a bullet through his heart. The bullet struck some hard substance and rebounded, Briggs having been several feet to one side of the direct line of fire.

WARD SIX POLITICAL TALK.

The way candidates for the city council are beginning to loom up in Atlantic, Norfolk Downs, Squantum and Montclair, the campaign in the city primaries and election promises to be interesting. It is expected that both the present councilmen will stand and having years of experience and many friends have a fair show of election.

Some one of them may run for councilmen at large, and by doing so there will be two vacancies to fill.

For these positions there are at least four or five candidates, and some more who could be easily persuaded to enter the fight.

Ward Six has five improvement associations—The Atlantic, Squantum, Norfolk Downs, Montclair, and the Patriotic Association. The latter association stands square for the two present councilmen, as do most of the Atlantic association.

Squantum has hoped to be represented on the City Council, and the political club has made an effort to unite on one candidate from that section, but by some lack of strategy two candidates are still claiming to be the choice of the voters of Squantum.

A man who is in close touch with the politics of the ward, and has sat in the council with John R. Nelson, expressed the utmost confidence and appreciation in his ability and uprightness in working for the best good of the city as a whole, and not for any one section of it.

While on the other hand, C. E. Carlson, his political opponent for the honors of Squantum, is recognized as a business man of large ability who has had years of experience in developing real estate. Mr. Carlson has been strongly endorsed by citizens of Squantum and Atlantic.

Both of these candidates are equally well thought of in the ward, but it seems to those who are heard expressing their political views of the situation that if Squantum is to have representation, the citizens or political club will have to hold another caucus and do their work in a way that will leave no doubt in the minds of the candidates who is the nominee.

The different improvement associations at their recent meetings elected committees to act in conjunction with each association in the ward, and then possibly branch out for a united city movement. At one of the committee meetings it was suggested to have as an ideal the representation of every section of the ward in either the council or some city activity. But if each section comes up with two candidates, it will look as if the improvement associations will lead to political strife that will defeat the men they hope to elect.

Others who have been active in the ward politics have expressed the opinion that it is too early yet for any association to endorse any men until the full number of candidates are heard.

ORVILLE M. ROGERS.

The funeral of Orville M. Rogers was held at his late home 76 Franklin street, South Braintree, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the officiating clergyman being Rev. Tyler E. Gale, pastor of the South Congregational church. The interment was in the family lot in the Blue Hill cemetery. There was a profusino of flowers from relatives and friends among them being a standing wreath from the merchants of Braintree, a wreath from Mr. Roger's employees and a spray from the South Congregational Sunday school.

Orville Milton Rogers was the son of Zelotes and Louisa A. (Crosby) Rogers and was born in Eastham, March 31, 1857, at the age of three years, he removed with his parents to Orleans, where he was educated and lived until he was 18 years old, when he went to Jamaica Plain and learned the plumbing and tinsmith trade, serving a three years apprenticeship with Thomas Mayo & Co., of that place.

After learning his trade, he worked as a journeyman in South Boston and later in Jamaica Plain.

In the year 1881, Mr. Rogers came to South Braintree, bought out the firm of A. A. Linnell and started in the plumbing and heating business at the corner of Central and Summer streets. He moved from there to the building which formerly stood at the corner of Hancock and Pearl streets and where the Post Office block now stands.

In March of the year 1909, Mr. Rogers moved to the store in the Studley block on Washington street which he conducted up to the time of his death.

March 20, 1883 he was united in marriage to Miss Addie M. Rogers of Orleans. Their union was blessed by two children, a son who died at an early age and a daughter Miss E. Maud Rogers who with her mother is left to mourn his loss.

Mr. Rogers was a man of strong religious convictions and was an active church worker.

He was a deacon of the South Congregational church, a member of its financial committee and also a member of its men's club.

Mr. Rogers was a man of the most unquestioned integrity, a skilled workman and a citizen of the best type. His family mourns a devoted husband and father and Braintree has lost one of her worthy sons.

The Milton Woman's club held its first meeting of the season Oct. 6. The important business was in connection with the land for the clubhouse. It was voted to reconsider the vote passed in June to purchase the central portion of the land on White street and instead, to purchase a lot next adjoining land owned by Dr. A. W. Draper. After some discussion concerning the form of incorporation, it was unanimously voted that the Benevolent Form be adopted.

Mrs. Percey V. Pennypacker, president of the General Federation, who has been travelling extensively throughout the country in the interest of the clubs, said recently that what impresses her most deeply is the fact that the majority of clubwomen into whose homes she goes are good housekeepers and homemakers. She also says that the most hopeful feature of club life is that women have discovered one another, have learned to admire one another, and have become able to do good team work. "Clubwomen," she says, "possess a fine spirit one toward another."

The Manual of the state federation is filled with interesting matter. In it one learns that in the 262 clubs and the two smaller federations connected with it there are now 47,816 members a surprising gain of 13,131 in the membership over last year. In her greeting to this league number of women the president, Mrs. George W. Perkins, asks the members to forget the words "convention," "expediency" and "reward" and to consider only what may help the federation to become an ever-increasing good. "Success depends," she says, "in large part, upon individual realization of responsibility, and it is ours whether we will or not." She touches on the responsibility that comes from privilege and the responsibility of opportunity, for there were never so many avenues open for service as today.

At the close of a brief business session, Mrs. S. J. Ripley delighted all with choice vocal selections.

During the evening plans for study and philanthropic work were discussed The club will take up the study of German history, to be supplemented by selected readings and special papers on art, music, literature, customs and characteristics of the German people.

Refreshments were served by the hostess; Mrs. Eastman, the vice president poured.

WORK OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Bishop Quayle comments as follows on women's clubs:

"Women's clubs are places where the women with the most erroneous ideas on all subjects do the talking. The women who do know something are those who keep silent and those who know nothing do all the talking. After a while the silent member absorbs the nonsense promulgated by the talker and becomes like her."

Hardly any club woman has ventured other than the most conciliatory attitude regarding Bishop Quayle's view of the work of women"s clubs. No doubt the clergyman believes that the club has usurped the work of the church when it is really supplementary to that broadening influence. A writer who believes that the work of club women could only have been accomplished along lines that are nonsectarian thus replies to the Bishop's comment:

"We are surprised that a man of the bishop's recognized ability should have been betrayed into the above criticism, knowing as he should know that even such extraordinary women as Sarah Platt Decker and Eva Perry Moore and Mrs. Pennypacker could not have accomplished the wonderful work they have and are doing were it not for the asistance of thousands of other bright, capable women.

"The near completion of the Panama canal is due almost entirely to the work of the General Federation of women's clubs who at the request of the president of the United States, sent Miss Helen Varick Boswell to the Canal Zone to establish Women's clubs for the women of the zone.

"There was no lacking of churches there, but the sharply drawn lines of social distinction were creating a dissatisfaction among the women making it difficult to keep them contented and happy. Men of skill in all the various lines of work were needed and to keep and make the family life possible. Sanitation and civics were almost nil and it was through the club women that there were real accomplishments in civics and sanitation. The lines of social distinction were broken down through these mutual interests.

"We are willing to believe the churches would have been glad to do the work had it been possible, but it seemed a work that required a wider scope than individual churches working singly or collectively could do, and while the intelligence of these club women has been called in question by the reverend bishop the work was done that made it possible to keep up the home life for the men who have nearly finished one of the finest pieces of engineering the world has ever known.

"All over the broad land women's clubs are working in concert for better sanitation, higher education in art, literature, domestic science and the art of home-making, civics, libraries, better laws for health, protection of defective and bad children, widows' pensions, white slave traffic and many other important things, working not only for the present generation, but for the betterment of the unborn generations.

"The program of study clubs show a marked increase of the study of the Bible, some clubs devoting nearly all the time to this study with exhaustive outlines furnished by the literature department of the General Federation. Cities and towns are made more beautiful by these practical workers, also parks, cemeteries, and individual premises, while vacant property is no longer dumping ground for tin cans and refuse, breeding places for flies, and rank growth of weeds.

"Is it not true that this field of work has been ripe for the church worker, lo! these many years? There is no criticism that they have not done it, their leaders were not interested in these things and without concerted effort no great work was ever done.

"Women have only begun to realize the 'vastness of their own souls' and have gloriously risen to their responsibility."

QUINCY WOMEN'S CLUB.

Tuesday afternoon was not only the opening of the season of 1913-1914 for the Quincy Women's club but it also brought the first snow of the winter, the members attending the meeting being buffeted by the wind and snow. At the clubhouse members were hospitably received; the new members being presented with a white pink that they might be more especially welcomed. The president's table was adorned with a bunch of pink roses, a gift to her from Mrs. Sheppard the president for the past two years.

Mrs. Chandler W. Smith the new president has been busy all summer having presided at many business meetings but on Tuesday extended her first official greeting. She said: "Members of the Quincy Women's club your president extends her cordial greetings to you today. After the months of relaxation, it is a pleasure to come together again, even if nature does frown upon us in the way which seems to have become a habit of late. The club is now entering upon the ninth year of its existence and its record is one of which we may well be proud. A list of all its achievements would surprise even those who have been most intimately acquainted with it.

"If the club had accomplished nothing else, it should be commended for having served to bring together in close and active relationship, the women from all wards of the city. In no other way could this have been done and I for one am heartily grateful for this opportunity of meeting and knowing the women of Quincy. The question sometimes arises, are women justified in joining clubs and entering into the life which they furnish?

"Of course, there are clubs and clubs, but if the existence of our club needs any justification perhaps quotations from Dr. Crooker's little book, called The Church of Today, which I am fond of quoting, may serve to answer the purpose, the substance being co-operation or working together; team work, that is to say twelve men working together one hour can accomplish more than one man working twelve hours.

"May the members of this club continue to meet for years to come in 'a dear togetherness' where the strength of all helps the weakness of the individual."

Mrs. Smith then announced that the club had a Glee club all its own, made up entirely of club members who under the direction of Mrs. Walter P. Emery, chairman of the music committee would contribute much to the year's musical program and this afternoon would sing three selections with Mrs. Emery at the piano, the opening number being particularly appropriate to the day being, "Goodbye Summer" by Lynes. The applause was hearty and appreciative leaving no doubt as to the approval of club members. In the Glee club are: Mrs. Walter P. Emery, director, Mrs. Herbert S. Gay, Mrs. William Robbie, Mrs. Frank J. Moore, Mrs. Maurice P.

Can't Afford It?

Let's figure it out and see

How much would you charge to go to the grocer's or the provision dealer's ?

How much would you give, on a stormy day, to be able to visit a distant friend ?

How much would it be worth, in case your child were taken suddenly ill at night, to be able to summon the doctor at once, and, perhaps, by special instructions from him by wire, to be able to give temporary relief pending his arrival or even to save its life ?

The expense of a telephone is not figured by what it costs for a whole year, but by how much it saves each time it is used. Therefore, with all these things in mind, ask yourself

NEWSY BRIEFS

At the Quincy Mansion school next Monday the alumnae are to present the school a memorial tablet in honor of Dr. Horace Mann Willard, the founder of the school, and former principal.

Mrs. A. A. Harlow is ill with pneumonia at the home of A. F. Schenkelberger on Goffe street.

Mrs. James Melville is convalescing from pneumonia at the home of her daughter at Weymouth.

For many years Houghs Neck children have attended the Coddington school, and there is a large debt on that building which they cannot escape. There are Houghs Neck children at the High school upon which there is a large debt.

Houghs Necks claim, that it is not getting good police and fire protection and school accommodations, is unwarranted. For the Atherton Hough school alone in 1912 there was expended $3,078.43 for teachers, and more for janitor, fuel and repairs. The High school teachers received $29,424.38, and the maintenance of the school cost much more. The police and fire protection of Houghs Neck cost more than any other small section of the city. In years when Houghs Neck has no member of the City Council it seems to get more improvements.

CLAN McGREGOR BOWLING LEAGUE

The Clan McGregors rolled on the Coliseum alleys Tuesday night and Nicols was the only man to get over 100. His first was 101 and he fell into the seventies on his second and third. Smith went 100 and his 285 was the best total of the matches. All in all the strings were the lowest rolled on the alleys since early last winter and came no where near showing how good the men are. The McKenzies and Mavers won their matches while Michaels and O'Neils split the points.

The Thompsons took only one string in their match with the McKenzies.

CANCELLED GAMES.

Just a reminder to team managers who ask for advance notices and forget to advise the Daily Ledger of cancelled games:—It is just as important to the real fan to publish postponements the day before a game as it is to state that one will be played. Frequently cancellations take place at the last moment when it would be too late for publication, but co-operation when possible on the part of the management in advising this office of "no game" would greatly increase the value of the sporting paragraphs as well as satisfying the fan who finds the field barren of players and covered with disappointed fans. Success depends on the support of the public but it cannot be expected unless their conveniences are consulted once in a while, and after all it is a simple matter to phone the facts rather than have the truth brought home suddenly on the field.

ATLANTIC CHAMPIONSHIP.

The publication of the Walnuts claim of the championship of Atlantic, won through three defeats of that team, is disputed and several explanations have been received from rooters and players on both teams. Incidentally the Atlantics claim that the game on Saturday was theirs by a score of 19 to 15, while the Walnuts according to the score furnished the Daily Ledger took the game 5 to 4. As in all contests where there is a ward rivalry each aggregation sets up claims which vary.

DOWN WITH SQUAWKERS

Needless Automobile Noises Which Are a Nuisance

Editor of the Ledger:

It has been a wonder to me, for a long time, that there is no determined protest against the screamers and shriekers and squawkers with which automobiles are constantly outraging our ears; and it is an additional cause of wonder that people who are sensitive and refined in other matters should be willing to afflict their own ears and those of other people with such hideous noises. The only reason for the anomaly that I can imagine is that the offensive things are a profitable article of trade, and are urged upon innocent purchasers as a regular and necessary thing.

As a matter of fact the squawkers, besides being an unmitigated nuisance are absolutely unnecessary. The original bulb horn has a mellow, inofffensive tone, and is amply sufficient for every reasonable requirement.

The advocates of the squawker claim that the bulb horn cannot be heard in noisy, crowded streets, and that the former is especially needed to clear the road in country places. This I flatly deny. All cars do not use the offensive signal in the city, many of the better class being polite and considerate enough to use the bulb horn only, and there is no trouble whatever in hearing them.

As to country roads, the automobile has no right to shriek a warning to everybody a mile or two ahead that they must climb fences and jump into the bushes on pain of instant death. The soft and mellow note of the bulb horn can be heard several hundred yards in the quiet country, and is amply sufficient for the considerate driver.

And then there is the nuisance of the muffler cut-out. The law very properly requires that automobiles shall be provided with an adequate muffler to deaden the otherwse intolerable puffing of the open exhaust. But this law is to a considerable extent nullified by the indiscriminate and senseless "cutting" out" of the muffler. Some drivers do it ignorantly, and a good many other "fresh" ones do it to make a show of themselves.

The cut-out is supposed to add to the power of the engine; but it has been sufficiently demonstrated that if there is a properly designed muffler the advantage of the cut-out is practically nothing. It need hardly be said that to use the cut out for signal at crossings instead of the horn to startle people and make them jump is pretty low business.

Bowdoin street, on Beacon Hill, Boston, has been a favorite stamping ground for demonstrators to show off the hill-climbing powers of their cars, along with the cut-outs, and the racket of the open exhausts finally became so intolerable that the Highway Commission in the Ford building on this street shut down on the cut-out busines peremptorily.

It was noticed that the cars still came up the hill all right, though the glib-tongued demonstrator could no longer show off his cheap and useless noise-maker. My small, medium-powered car never had a cut-out, but, coming home through Milton Lower Mills a few days ago, and seeing a clear road up the hill, I slipped quietly up Milton Hill on high gear from bottom to top at twenty miles an hour.

It ought to be a matter of pride with drivers to do ordinary hills without the cut-out. If I had a car that would not do Rice's hill on Adams street without the cut-out I would get a better car, or at least a better muffler. And still there were policemen stationed at this hill last year to stop the cut-out nuisance.

And so, I say, down with the squawkers and the cut-outs! They are in violation of good taste, and a useless annoyance to the general public.

MURDER JURY IS SELECTED

Mrs. Eaton Shows Interest In Court Proceedings

PRISONER CALMLY WATCHES

She Challenges Several Talesmen and None Get In Box Without Her Nod of Approval—Seems Sure of Gaining Her Freedom Instead of Going to the Death Chair

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 15.—With smiling composure, Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton watched the selection of the twelve men who will decide whether she caused the death of her husband, the late Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, by administering poison, or whether she is innocent of the charge of murder.

At 4.35 yesterday afternoon the jury was complete, and Chief Justice Aiken, presiding at the trial, appointed James A. Thomas of Middleboro foreman. Of the 150 talesmen summoned, 127 were examined before the selection was made.

Several times Mrs. Eaton decided of her own accord to challenge a juror. She took a keen interest in the selection of the jurymen. As the court questioned them, she sat erect, quietly appraising them. At times she made known to her chief counsel, William A. Morse, her opinion that a certain talesman would not be satisfactory. The defense then exercised its right of peremptory challenge.

District Attorney Albert Barker of Brockton, who is directing the prosecution, summarily challenged seventeen jurors. Thus far he has succeeded in keeping the government's case almost absolutely a secret.

There was no sign that the prisoner was under restraint. She sat just outside the bar enclosure, within a railing, behind which sat Deputy Sheriff Collingwood. Beside her was an empty chair.

Confidence shone in her face. Her ruddy color, bright eyes and composed manner indicate that she has not the least apprehension as to the result of the trial.

The court procedure was simple. The names of the jurors were drawn from a ballot box by Clerk Hobart, who then read the names aloud. Each man advanced as his name was called and was sworn. The same questions were asked of each juror.

"Are you related to Jennie May Eaton or to Joseph G. Eaton, the deceased?" the court asked. "Have you any interest in the case? Have you expressed or formed an opinion of it? Are you sensible of a bias or prejudice to it? Have you any opinion which would preclude you from finding a verdict punishable by death?

The last question eliminated sixty-six of the 127 jurors examined. Ten were excused because of physical disabilities and five because of opinions they had formed.

In selecting the jury, the defense challenged fourteen men. Mrs. Eaton signalized on several occasions that jurors would not be satisfactory to her. Just four hours and forty minutes was required to select the jury. The court set from 10.30 to 12.45, with a five-minute recess, and resumed its session at 2 p. m., continuing to 4.35, with a five-minute recess.

At first Deputy Sheriff Collingwood prompted Mrs. Eaton as to the time to rise and sit. The court's procedure was marked with business-like directness, however, and formalities were, for the most part, discarded.

Several times Mrs. Eaton leaned over the bar of the inclosure for the lawyers to hold brief conversations with Attorney Morse. She studied each man calmly before she nodded her head to indicate that she was satisfied to have him serve on the jury, or indicated that she did not wish to have him share in deciding her fate.

STRIKERS ARE ENJOINED

Boston, Oct. 15.—Work on the new fish pier and wharf in South Boston will probably be resumed soon. Judge Loring issued a decree ordering the officers of the unions whose men have left their employment there to write these men that the strike has been enjoined.

The case came before the court on the bill filed by the Aberthaw Construction company, which has a contract for a portion of the work, for an injunction to restrain the workmen and their unions from maintaining a strike.

SUFFRAGETTES FIGHT

Rescue Sylvia Pankhurst After Fierce Struggle In the Street

London, Oct. 15.—After a fierce struggle the police arrested Miss Sylvia Pankhurst at Bow Neaths, in the East End of London, where she was making a speech.

When they got her outside with the intention of putting her in a taxicab and rushing her to Holloway jail, the militants attacked the police so savagely that they had to let her go, and she escaped.

Miss Pankhurst, who has an uncompleted term of imprisonment to serve, was not recognized until she threw aside the disguise which enabled her to elude the police and enter the building. She was warmly applauded as she stepped on the platform, but had been speaking only a few minutes when detectives and uniformed police with drawn truncheons entered the hall and made a rush for the platform.

The police succeeded in dragging Miss Pankhurst down to the floor of the the house, while reinforcements cleared the hall. Outside the struggle was renewed with greater fury. Men and women were thrown down and trampled upon. Concentrating the attack on the policemen who had the militant leader in their grasp, the women with the assistance of several men succeeded in tearing her from their grip and and she slipped away.

LONG DELAY POSSIBLE

Prosecution In Sulzer Case Wants New Impeachment Article

Albany, Oct. 15.—The possibility of an indefinitely long delay in reaching a verdict as to the guilt or innocence of Governor William Sulzer, has loomed up at his trial.

This was suggested when counsel for the impeachment managers asked that the court recommend to the assembly the bringing of a new article of impeachment, in the event that the testimony of Duncan W. Peck, superintendent of public works, and Henry L. Morgenthau, ambassador to Turkey, should be found not to be relevant to any charge contained in the present articles.

Whether this testimony was relevant to article 4, which charges the government with suppression of evidence before the Frawley investigating committee, was the subject of debate in executive session of the court, and remained undecided when adjournment was taken.

NEW RECORD SET FOR DAY'S FLIGHT

Stoeffler Goes 1060 Miles In Eighteen Hours

Johannisthal, Oct. 15.—Victor Stoeffler beat all records for a day's flight in an aeroplane by flying 1060 miles in eighteen hours. He still continued his flight with the intention of carrying off the prize offered by the administrators of the National Aviation fund for the longest twenty-four hour flight of the season.

He beat the record of 1030 miles, made on Aug. 2 by Eugene Gilbert, the French aviator, while flying for the Pommery cup, the conditions of which are that the flight shall occur between sunrise and sunset of the same day.

FIRE SCARE FATAL

Ralph D. Gillett Dies From Heart Disease When Home Is Ablaze

Westfield, Mass., Oct. 15.—Excitement due to a small fire is believed to have brought on an attack of heart trouble which caused the death of Ralph D. Gillett, president of the Hampden Railroad corporation, and a well known railroad constructor.

Gillett had just alighted from a train from Boston when he heard that his home was on fire. Jumping into an automobile, he hurried home, arriving there with the fire apparatus. As he started to run into the house Gillett sank to the ground and died within a few minutes. The fire was a small smudge under a stairway and was easily extinguished.

Gillett was 47 years old. He leaves a widow and six children.

SCHMIDT'S CASE POSTPONED

Alienists Have Not Yet Reported on Slayer's Mental Condition

New York, Oct. 15.—Fr. Hans Schmidt, confessed slayer of Anna Aumuller, was brought before Justice Malone to answer to the indictment charging him with murder, but on motion of his attorney, Alphonse Koslhe, formal arraignment of the priest slayer was postponed for one week.

Schmidt looked even worse than when he appeared in public during the coroner's inquest. His beard has grown long and tangled and his clothing is badly soiled. The alienists have yet to report on Schmidt's mental condition and the prosecution was willing for the arraignment to go over on this account.

In the Enemy's Uniform

A Story of Secret Service and Hairbreadth Escapes

By THOMAS R. DEAN

When I was serving with my regiment, the —th Pennsylvania cavalry, in the Army of the Potomac a portion of my company was detailed to serve as General Gregory's escort, and I was placed in command. We were separated from the regiment, making our camps with the headquarters camps, and were under the general's direct command. We furnished him with orderlies and messengers, performed any scouting or other service he required and while campaigning acted as his bodyguard.

One day I was directed to report in person to the general in his tent. He told me that a company of Confederates had ridden right into our lines, thinking we were their friends, and had been captured. He was in need of information as to where the enemy were, what force they had and what they were doing. The country people—his only source of information—were in sympathy with the Confederates and utterly unreliable. He had conceived the idea of sending out a scouting party right into the enemy's camps, if necessary dressed in the uniform of the captured Confederates, to bring him the information he desired and had sent for me to consult about the matter.

Generals don't usually consult with the lieutenants commanding their bodyguard, but a commander cannot order a subordinate on secret service. For that purpose volunteers are called for. General Gregory asked me if I would be willing to act on his plan, and, although I knew that a Yankee soldier caught within the enemy's lines in his uniform would be hanged for a spy, I consented to perform the service. He sent me back to the escort to call for a dozen volunteers, which I had no difficulty in obtaining. Then I returned to him for instructions.

After an hour's talk with the general over crude maps of the vicinity furnished by Union citizens, during which I was informed that the men whose uniforms we were to use belonged to the —th North Carolina cavalry, I went back to camp, and the uniforms and side arms were sent there by the general's order. I chose the uniform of a sergeant rather than an officer, since the former is not so prominent as the latter and less likely to be identified. My men all dressed as privates, using arms marked "C. S. A." and horses branded with the same letters.

A Union citizen guided us to a wooded hill, from which we could look down on the camp of a brigade of Confederates. It was after taps, and the tents of the enlisted men were in darkness within, though they were bathed in the light of a moon that was nearly full. Here and there a candle was burning in an officer's tent, and a cluster of tents standing by themselves, most of them containing lights, evidently constituted the headquarters of the commanding officer and his staff. I remained awake till all the lights had been put out, then lay down with my head on the root of a tree for a few hours' sleep.

Shortly before sunrise we descended from the hill and rode leisurely along the road to the camp. I waited till I had seen the guard relieved and the new sentinels were quietly walking their beats. Approaching the man whose beat lay across the road, he challenged us.

"Who comes there?"

"Dispatch bearers on our way southward," was my reply.

Seeing we wore the gray, he passed us, and we rode through the camp, attracting no especial attention.

I believed the brigade we had passed through to contain about 3,000 men, with a battery of artillery and a battalion of cavalry. They were evidently a detached force, stationed on the road between the hills to prevent the passage of an enemy. I charged every man of my command to remember this, for no one could tell which of us would get back with the information.

About a mile south of the brigade the road turned to the eastward and the country opened up. The level ground was covered with different camps of the enemy, but we were not obliged to ride through any of them and gave them all a wide berth. Whenever we saw a man or body of men coming, if we could turn out of their way without seeming to do so purposely to avoid them we deboucheed. But most of those we met did not know us and had no reason to inquire who we were.

I saw a cloud of dust ahead and when I couldn't get a glimpse of what was beneath it made up my mind that it was kicked up by a general and his staff. I looked about for a wood or some other place in which to avoid a meeting, but there was nothing at hand. I could not turn aside without letting down the rails of a fence which extended on either side, so I was obliged to go forward and run the risk of being questioned.

Sure enough, those we met were a general with his staff. He reined in and asked who we were. I told him that we were of the —th North Carolina cavalry. Then he asked what we were doing away from our regiment, and I told him the company to which we belonged had been captured, but we, having been detached on a reconnoitering expedition, had fortunately not been taken.

"Where are you going now?" he asked.

"We are going on a roundabout course to rejoin our regiment."

I watched the general, holding my breath in terror lest he pursue his inquiries to a point beyond my knowledge. He thought awhile, then asked me to what corps I belonged. I knew the names of several of the generals in the Union front and named one of them. Then my questioner asked me to name my division and brigade commander, and I "couldn't remember."

"You men are stragglers," he said in reply, "and likely bent on pillaging or some other reprehensible conduct. I consider it my duty to send you back to your command."

Our hearts sank within us. When returned to the regiment to which we claimed to belong we would be proved impostors and our real identity would come out. The officer had but a dozen men in his escort, but needed no large force to send with us, for any resistance would be mutiny, and mutiny is punishable with death. He detailed a corporal and four men to see that we returned to our command and rode on.

Had we not been in the enemy's lines with a halter hanging over us the situation would have been laughable. Five unsuspecting Confederates were intrusted with guarding a dozen daring men who would rather die by a bullet than a rope. I said nothing to my men nor they to me. We rode meekly between the corporal and two of his men in front of us and two bringing up the rear. But by a look I signed to my subordinates to remain submissive till I should assume the initiative.

It behooved me to make a break for life before being returned to our supposed command. I kept my eyes open and presently saw a large field of tents a short distance ahead. On leaving our guards we must go through a cornfield to a wood on the other side of the field. I did not long delay action, for I saw a troop of cavalry coming on the road before us.

"Corporal," I said, "we're bearing important dispatches from the commander in chief and don't propose to be interrupted. We're going to leave you, and you may as well let us go, for if you fire on us we shall return your fire."

With that I put spurs to my horse, calling on my men to follow me. The corporal and his men were so surprised that they stood paralyzed till we had got several hundred feet away, then gave chase, firing over our heads as they came. As bad luck would have it, the horse of Bob Robbins, one of my men, stumbled and fell, shooting his rider over his head. I turned and rode back to him, but too late. The troopers were on him, and my other men had got so far away that if I attempted to save Robbins I would be captured myself. So I fled.

As for the five Confederates, we saw nothing more of them. We had seen all of the enemy we cared to see and were eager to get back to camp. But every way we turned we encountered the enemy, and, since we were now outlawed, we dare not meet them. We hid in a thick wood during the afternoon, hoping to make our way to our own lines under cover of the night. We lighted a bivouac fire and lay down. So long as we could pass for Confederates we were in no danger, but our narrow escape from detection had got on our nerves. None of us slept since we expected to move at dawn.

About midnight we heard a movement in the underbrush, and suddenly out of the darkness came Robbins. He had been taken to the provost marshal and questioned till he was so wound up that he broke down and confessed himself to be a Yankee soldier. He was sent under guard after dark to general headquarters and on the way broke from those in charge of him. In the darkness he had gained the wood we were in and came upon us accidentally.

His coming brought a new danger, for he had confessed himself a spy and would incriminate us. However, as soon as it was dawn we mounted our horses, one of the men taking Robbins up behind him, and started to make our way back to our lines. We were not far from them, but were obliged to go a very roundabout way. During our travels we suddenly descried a body of Confederate cavalry about our own strength riding toward us.

Again the halter tightened about our necks, and we prepared to fight desperately for our lives. The commander, a young second lieutenant, rode up to us, and I saw at once that he had not met us before.

"A spy has escaped, and we are looking for him. Have you seen anything of him?"

I was about to reply in the negative when I noticed him looking steadily at Robbins. I changed my tactics.

"Seen him!" I exclaimed. "We've got him."

"Good."

"We're taking him to our general."

"I'll relieve you and take him to mine."

"No, you won't. We made the capture and propose to get the credit of it. Forward!"

We rode on, leaving the young officer gaping at us. Presently, turning, I saw him riding in another direction.

We got safely back to camp and gave the general the result of our reconnoissance.

"Your Confederate uniform," he said, "was an element of strength and at the same time an element of weakness."

CHAPTER IX.

In Which We Plan to Escape Together From the Ship.

I HAD no idea that it was morning already, the night had passed so quickly. The eastern sky was already gray, and although the day bade fair to be an unpleasant one there was already light enough to distinguish land off to starboard. We had run quite near it in the night. It was still too gray to make out much more than the existence of the land itself, but I thought I saw beyond the nearest island others rising. At any rate, there it was where it ought to be, and I didn't make any doubt but that it was the island which we had been seeking these weary months at sea.

The whole crew was on deck. I didn't see any signs of Captain Matthews' body, although I looked hastily about for it. I learned later that they had tumbled him overboard without a prayer or word after they had knocked him on the head. Pimball, Glibby and one or two others of the older seamen were on the quarterdeck, the rest being strung along the leerail in the waist staring at the island. Two hands were at the wheel. The ship was pitching and laboring heavily, and it required two hands to hold her up to it.

During the night they had taken a second reef in the tops'ls. A whole gale was now blowing. Everything above the tops'l yards had been furled of course. The Rose of Devon was a wet ship in a seaway, and she was making heavy weather out of it.

I noticed one thing with satisfaction. They had evidently not thought it worth while to break open the arms chest or to force the key from me, which they could easily have done, and none of them was armed.

"Well," I began, as I climbed over the hatch combing and turned aft.

"I sent for you, Hampdon," began Pimball insolently, and his failure to "mister" me or to give me any title indicated our present relations, "because of that," and he pointed to the leeward toward the island.

"It looks like land," I said.

"It is land. What land?"

"How can I tell?" I answered. "I have never been in these seas before."

"Well, you took an observation yesterday, didn't you?"

"Certainly."

"And where were we?"

I named a latitude and longitude, not exactly what I had worked out, but near enough. I didn't want these ruffians to know exactly where we were. He pulled out the chart as I spoke and compared its figures with what I had given them. He could read figures if not letters.

"At any rate," he said, after studying over the map for a little time, "that is not far from the point we are making for, is it?"

"No," I admitted, "not very."

"Do you think that can be it?"

"I can't tell for certain," I replied, "until I get another shot at the sun I should think the latitude about right, but as to the longitude"—

"And you can't get no shot at the sun until noon, can you?" unceremoniously put in Glibby, casting a long look to the eastward where the sky was thick and cloudy already.

"I can't even get an observation then unless we have clear weather," I answered.

"There'll be no clear weather today, I take it," said an old seaman standing with the other two.

"I don't much think it," I assented.

"Well, what do you advise then?" asked Pimball.

"That we stand on slowly during the day and heave to at night, and if we can't get a shot at the sun stay hereabouts until the sky is clear and the sun visible, then we will know just exactly what course to take and just what's best to be done."

The advice was so self evidently good, in fact the only practicable advice, that there was no hesitation in accepting it. The boatswain stepped up to the horseblock, grabbed the trumpet and shouted his orders. Presently the ship was hove to with the island well under her lee, distant perhaps a league and a half or maybe two leagues. Personally I should not have hove to a ship on a lee shore. I should not have advised it, and indeed would have protested against it had I not suddenly developed a plan—a plan as desperate as ever came into man's head. But then the situation required desperate remedies. And for the accomplishment of the plan the ship was now in the very best position I could have put her.

"That is not far from the point we are making for, is it?"

I was minded to desert the ship with my lady, get ashore and trust ourselves to the tender mercies of whatever natives there were rather than stay with the vessel. I took no stock in the sailors' promises and agreements. Once they got the treasure it would follow that they would kill me and take her.

When we got the Rose of Devon safely hove to the men all knocked off work at once, leaving the decks in a state of confusion. Indeed, save to clear up the gear, there was nothing to do but wait. Two or three men were stationed on watch, and the rest were given the freedom of the ship. I was in doubt as to what to say about the cabin; but, strangely enough, nobody made any effort to take advantage of the mastery of the crew to quarter himself there. Indeed, their quarters forward were almost as good as ours, and they evidently preferred to be together. The ship was generously provisioned, and the fare of the men had been unusually good. They did, however, break into the lazarette and help themselves to whatever they liked out of the cabin stores, including a case of bottled spirits.

I brought out other liquor and let them have as much as they wanted. A little liquor would make them ugly and intractable, I reasoned; a lot would make them drunk, and enough would render them completely helpless. I even joined them in their carousal. It was easy enough to spill my liquor and make a pretense at drinking, which soon deceived them. They took to the liquor like ducks to water.

The men on watch kept reasonably sober for a time, but even they were not too abstemious. I saw to that. Later on the cook, who was not yet too drunk, fixed them up a regular banquet out of the cabin stores, and there was no objection to my taking a portion to my lady in the stateroom below, where she kept close and remained out of the way by my urgent entreaty.

My communications that long day with my sweet charge were necessarily intermitted and short. I did not dare to be long away from the men on deck. I still wore my sword, and I searched through the captain's cabin and found two heavy pistols, which I carefully charged, concealing them in the deep pockets of my pea jacket. I passed among the men freely, handing out the spirits, opening fresh bottles and bandying rough jests, but took care never to be in any position where I could not command the companion hatch, which led to the cabin.

Our drift was slowly but surely in the direction of the island. Indeed, I think we had made half a league or more to leeward since we had been hove to. From time to time I searched the shore with a glass, seeing that the land was protected and completely inclosed by a reef, on that side at least, which agreed with the chart, but the sky continued overcast, and the mist grew thicker, so I couldn't make out much more than that. It was land, and that was enough. It was big enough to support life, and I thought that I detected green patches here and there that betokened vegetation and, if so, water and life.

Nobody took any care to strike the bells, but when darkness fell I declared noisily that I would go below and turn in. All but the most seasoned and hardy drinkers were by this time dead drunk. There was evidently some little remembrance of my rank, for no one yet conscious made any objection. Pimball, lying supine on the deck, and Glibby, who was in no better case, with drunken effusiveness assured me that they would take care of the ship, and I went below, having provided all of them with a fresh supply of drink just before.

I sometimes wonder if I would not have been justified in killing them all while they were rendered thus helpless. But I could not bring myself to such wholesale murder, richly as they deserved it and little as I was inclined to mercy. I also thought of clapping them in irons and stowing them below. But there were not irons enough aboard for that purpose, and Mistress Lucy and I could not work the ship unaided. We could not even feed and water our prisoners. Yet if I could have counted on three or four true men's assistance I would have risked it.

How Mistress Lucy had passed the dragging, anxious hours of that awful day you can better imagine than I can describe. And my occasional visits had scarcely reassured her greatly. Yet in an emergency I have never known a woman who had more spirit.

She had left her noon meal practically untouched, and she was sitting there in the cabin nervously clutching the pistol, frightened half to death. Poor girl! I don't blame her. Whatever may have been the cause of it, she was genuinely glad to see me when I came in and lighted the cabin lanterns.

"Oh," she cried, "I have been in agony the whole day. Every sound has caused me to seize this weapon, and when I have not been watching the door I have been on my knees praying for you and for myself. I do not think I can stand another day like this."

"Please God, dear lady, you shall not," I said, smiling reassuringly at her.

"What do you mean? Have you a plan?"

"I have. The men are all drunk. I am going to leave the ship and take you with me."

"But how—when?"

QUINCY WOMEN'S CLUBS

Reports were given by the clerk, corresponding secretary and treasurer. The treasurer also spoke of the money left in trust by the will of a former club member and president Mrs. George W. Morton, the interest to be used for Visiting Nursing, the Quincy Day Nursery and the Needle Work Guild. The club had accepted the trusteeship of the funds. The corresponding secretary announced a membership of 396 and 8 applications.

A pleasant break in the business routine was the violin solo, "Berceuse" by Jinsky by Mrs. E. Ray Blanchard accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Tourtellot which was finely played and she responded to the encore.

Chairmen of the various committees had much of interest to report. Mrs. Seavey for the Art and Arts and Crafts said a class had already been formed in basketry and others would be formed if there was a demand. In November there would be an arts and crafts sale and from time to time there would be loan exhibitions in the committee rooms. Also there would be parlor talks on home decoration and each month the handiwork of some deserving person would be on exhibition and sale and club members were asked to co-operate. In March it was hoped to have an evening entertainment by an Indian girl.

Mrs. Mellen gave a good report for the Education committee which had departed somewhat from its predecessors and had conducted through the summer a kindergarten for non English speaking children starting with 18 and ending with 40 enrolled. There is need for this kind of work.

Mrs. Arnold told of the plans of the Literature committee, a class having been formed in Current Events with Mrs. Penock as leader, season tickets $1.00, also that a literature class would be formed if members desired.

Mrs. Wilson Marsh of the Philanthropic committee told of visits by her committee to the Quincy Home and Tuberculosis Camp, the Wollaston Women's club co-operating in the work. She invited club members to attend a council at 4 P. M. Oct. 22 at City hall to hear city plans for tuberculosis ward or building. The State Board of Health, the local board, Dr. Hunting and others would speak. Mrs. Marsh also extended an invitation from Mrs. Clements, manager of the Bijou Dream, Boston to club members to attend a performance there on Friday Oct. 24 at 2 P. M., members to be admitted by their club ticket. There was a general acceptance of the invitation.

Miss Randall of the Program committee outlined the year's program and announced some especially enjoyable afternoons, also that if there was a desire for them she would give some travel talks similar to those she was giving for other clubs.

Following an announcement of Mrs. Russell that the Womans Exchange had resumed its sales of cake, etc., at the regular club meeting and asking for the suport of members the Glee club again sang, this time the favorite Barcarolle from The Tales of Hoffmann, receiving hearty applause.

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney a club member as well as former member and the fourth vice president of the State Federation brought greetings from that organization which she said appreciated the work of the Quincy club as shown by having six of its members on the Federation board. Mrs. Gurney urged unity of purpose, a getting together, believing much could be accomplished by team work.

Mrs. Victor E. Miller gave briefly but interestingly her impressions of the Federation meeting in Boston last spring when the New England Women's club was the hostess club.

"Sarabande" by Bohm was brilliantly and pleasingly rendered by Mrs. Blanchard, who again responded to an encore.

The president spoke of the year books on which the new club seal designed by Mrs. Kitson was used for the first time. The working committees of the club are made up of nearly 250 members. Mrs. Smith urged members to consult their year books frequently and keep in touch with club dates.

A motion was made to reduce the club membership from 500 to 400 and Mrs. Smith asked members to come to the next meeting prepared to vote on the question.

As a final the Glee club sang another appropriate selection "Rain Cloud" by Lynes. Club members have every reason to feel proud of their Glee club. It is hoped this group of white gowned singers will be prominent at many of the season's meetings.

The afternoon's program closed with the singing of the club hymn after which there was an informal reception and tea. In the tea room Mrs. Walter E. Burke of the Hospitality committee served chocolate and cake the hostesses being Mrs. George H. Wilson and Mrs. Herbert S. Barker and the pourers Mrs. Herbert Lawton and Mrs. W. H. Doble. Fall flowers, dahlias and cosmos brightened the tea table.

GRADING NOT INCLUDED

Today the telephone and electric light wires are being laid under ground to the building.

The building itself was practically completed several weeks ago and has been stated the furniture is all in place.

There was still another statement that was in error, which also on investigation would have been found to be such. That was, that it was costing the city about $500 a month for heating the new building and for janitor services.

As a matter of fact no janitor is being employed at the building. There is one man there who is engaged in giving the building a thorough cleaning from top to bottom, and all of the old rubbish collected is being burned up. This man is being paid $60 a month and as it is necessary to keep the building heated a fire is being maintained in the furnaces in which about ten tons of coal a month is being burned, which makes the actual expense of the man cleaning the building and the heating about $100 a month, and not $500 as stated.

One other statement that needs correcting, and that is in regard to the grading. Commissioner Tupper said this morning that all of the rough grading had been completed and that it would be a waste of money to go on now and complete the finished grading until the rough grading had an opportunity to settle. As for a playground there would be plenty of opportunity for a playground for the children of the school.

Mayor Stone said this morning that he had not as yet received any petition from the Adams Parents-Teachers association. When asked about holding the building back for political purposes so that Chairman Miller could not have an opportunity to preside at the dedication, he said that statement was too silly to need any comment.

It would appear therefore that the three reasons stated are all without foundation and were intended to make political capital for some one. An investigation of the official papers at the City Clerk's office will bear out the statement above that the grading was not included in the appropriation of $80,000, and that no special appropriation was made for sewer construction to the building, while an investigation of the City Auditors' books will show that the man now employed at the building is receiving $60 a month and not $250 as stated.

APPEAL IN WINE CASE

One of Defendants Fined Fifty Dollars

Did Big Wine Business

One of the most important cases that the police department has ever had was partially disposed of by Judge Avery in the district court this morning. The case was that of the Italian Wine club, five of whose members, Liugi DiBona, Angelo Fontana, Guiseppe Catto, Batistic Tamburrini and Francisco DiBona were charged by Inspector Goodhue with the unlawful soliciting of sales of liquor.

According to inspector Goodhue there are two of these clubs in the city who bring into the city on the average of 6,000 gallons of wine a month which estimated at 35 cents a gallon, makes a total of about $2,100 of liquor a month.

The case is an important one, and will be settled by the superior court to which it has been taken. The defendants claim was that as a club it was not unlawful for them to go among their members and solicit orders for wine. The police however claim it to be a violation of the law.

The case has been pending for some time, and when it came up this morning it was agreed that the court should rule on one of the defendants who would carry the case up to the superior court, and that the other cases should be continued until the superior court had passed on the question.

The man selected was Guiseppi Catto who was fined $50 and promptly appealed. The court then continued the cases of the other four men until Dec. 31 under $300 bonds, stating that if the superior court sustained the lower court that he would impose a similar fine upon the other four men.

It is understood that the case is one that has never been passed upon by the superior court, and the finding of that court will be an important one in view of the fact, as stated above, that the two wine clubs are bringing into the city about 6,000 gallons of wine each month.

RIDEOUT—PALMER.

The first wedding in the new First Congregational church was solemnized last Saturday evening when Miss Helen Van Cleve Palmer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Palmer of 114 Hollis avenue was united in marriage to Percy Adams Rideout, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Rideout of Concord.

It was a brilliant affair and noteworthy for the spirit of happiness which seemed to prevade the proceedings. The decorations of palms and chrysanthemums, installed under the direction of Miss Margery White of Hollis avenue carried out the color scheme of pink and green and made an effective background for the many beautiful gowns of the ladies.

The ceremony was performed at 7.45 o'clock by the pastor Rev. Harry Grimes. The best man was Berkeley Wheeler of Concord. The bridesmaids were the bride's twin sister Miss Gladys Freeman Palmer in pink charmeuse with pink chiffon and duchess lace and the twin sister of the groom, Miss Gertrude H. Rideout in a gown of green charmeuse with green chiffon and duchess lace. Both young ladies carried bouquets of pink Killarney roses.

The ushers were John Urquhart of Manchester, New Hampshire, Herbert H. Palmer of Sharon, Raymond P. Palmer of Braintree and William L. Davis, Philip Damon and Robert Wood all of Concord. For half an hour before the ceremony, Dr. W. Porter Pratt the organist rendered the beautiful music from Tannhauser, accompanied by the violinist, Mr. Johnson of Providence.

The bridal party entered the church to the majestic music of the wedding march from Lohengrin.

First came the proud little ribbon bearers, Allison Palmer and Hayward Pratt bearing wands which bore long flowing streamers at either side of the advancing procession. Next came two ushers, Messrs. John Urquhart and Robert Wood followed by the bridesmaids. Lastly came the bride on the arm of her father. She has been called the most beautiful bride of the season and was charming in her gown of white charmeuse with princess lace. She wore a tulle veil caught with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of brides roses and lilies of the valley.

Immediately following the ceremony the church bell was rung long and loudly after the English custom, the bridal party leaving the church to the joyful strains of the Mendelssohn's wedding march. The entire party were then taken by automobiles to Oaklawn, the home of the bride's parents on Hollis avenue where a reception was held from 8.30 to 10 o'clock The rooms were decorated with pink chrysanthemums and white roses, the happy couple receiving their guests beneath an arch of evergreens and pink chrysanthemums.

Refreshments were served by Bates & Humphrey.

The wedding cake was cut by the bride and much merriment was caused by the hunt for the treasures it contained, namely a ring, a piece of money and a thimble. The bride threw her bridal bouquet to the young people which they divided and retained as precious souvenirs. At a late hour Mr. and Mrs. Rideout made their departure accompanied by the usual merry making and the throwing of confetti. They spend a few days in Ashburnham and the last of this week will go to Washington, D. C. thence to their new home in Appomattox, Virginia. There were guests present from New York, New Jersey, Wellington, Vermont, Sharon, Boston, Wollaston, Brookline, Lowell, Cambridge, Concord and a bevy of college girls, classmates of the bride were present from Smith college, Northampton. Mrs. Rideout received numbers of congratulatory telegrams from friends in New York, New Jersey, Northampton and Washington, D. C. The groom's present to his bride was a pearl and diamond pendant. The ushers and best man received scarf-pins from the groom and the bride's gifts to her bridesmaids were amethyst drop pendants. UNITARIAN CLUB OPENING

Col. Kincaide Speaks on South American Trip

At the opening meeting of the season, Tuesday evening, the Wollaston Unitarian club listened to an address by Col. Henry L. Kincaide of Quincy on "The trip of the Boston Chamber of Commerce to South America. The usual dinner was served and President Louis F. R. Langelier presided.

Colonel Kincaide's talk was very instructive and showed the many trade possibilities that may be opened up in the future in the Latin American countries. Among some of the needs to encourage American business enterprise in those countries Colonel Kincaide declared to be a ship subsidy, the establishment of our own banks to discount as far as possible foreign competition, permanent legation buildings instead of small rented quarters, and a direct cable to bring the United States more before the South Americans than at present.

The Chamber trip started at the Panama Canal and continued through Chile, Bolivia, Argentine Republic, Uraguay, Brazil and some of the West Indies. Local conditions affecting the sale of American merchandise in those countries was taken up in detail. One of the principal difficulties to be encountered is the anti-American sentiment that has been engendered by foreign merchants to destroy the market for American goods and increase the demand for their own. This, the speaker declared to be the greatest obstacle to American business there.

The high bank rates prevalent, the high freight charges making coal cost $50 a ton, the long hours of labor in the mills by children, the carelessness of American freight packers, the sight of a Singer Sewing machine agency in every city of any size, were some of the matters touched upon by Colonel Kincaide.

He stated that large numbers of South Americans believed the United States to be imbued with imperialistic notives and that some day she would attempt to gobble up these South American republics.

The trip of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, declared the Colonel, did much to wipe out this feeling and lay the road to pleasant relations. The result of the trip, he declared, will be far reaching. It was filled with incidents of instructive interest and broadening influences.

QUINCY MAN DISTRICT DEPUTY

Edward D. Barrett, past grand knight of Quincy council and a well known undertaker of this city, is one of the three new district deputies of the Knights of Columbus added to the official family of Louis Watson, state deputy, according to the cicrular letter issued to the councils Tuesday. Mr. Barrett is the first Quincy man to be given this honor in 19 years, and his appointment is a high tribute to the man and the local councils.

The official family consists of 34 deputies and they have jurisdiction over 129 councils having a membership of 29,000 in Massachusetts. The growth of the organization has been very substantial since Mr. Watson took office.

Deputy Barrett, will have jurisdiction over district 14 which includes Ave Maria council of West Quincy, Braintree of Braintree, Weymouth of Weymouth and Cohasset of Cohasset, the latter being one of the youngest councils in the state. The popularity of Deputy Barrett among the members of these councils assures him of a highly successful term of office.

Profound satisfaction was expressed in Knights of Columbus circles Tuesday evening when it was learned that one of the three new appointments had come to Quincy. Deputy Barrett served as grand knight of Quincy council in 1911 and 1912 and at the expiration of his office was presented with a handsome diamond ring by the members. As is the custom his home council will not be under his jurisdiction but is included in district 34 the deputy of which is Daniel J. Gallagher of Boston.

The first meeting of the Jolly Sixteen whist club was held Tuesday evening with Mrs. Arthur C. Merritt on Elm place. The members of the club gathered in the early evening and after supper whist was enjoyed. The prize winners were Mrs. Annie Smith Mrs. Carrie Hammond and Walter Howes.

WOLLASTON ASSOCIATION

Reception to Teachers and Addresses

A reception was tendered the teachers of the Wollaston school by the Wollaston Parents and Teachers Association at its first meeting for the season held in the school hall Tuesday evening. In spite of weather conditions a large number turned out and the affair was a great success.

In the receiving line were Principal and Mrs. David H. Goodspeed and Misses Clara E. G. Thayer, R. Grace Warshaw, Evelyn Farrington, Maude S. Amsden, Etta Cummings, Margaret Tuttle, Ellen Shyne, Helen Howard, Katharine Brown, Annie Flieger, Charlotte Nash and Dora Start.

The ushers were: Mrs. Herbert Y. Follett, Mrs. Charles Seavey, Mrs. Herbert H. Albee, Mrs. Charles S. Adams, Mrs. William Chapman, Mrs. Eugene H. Sprague, Mrs. William Nickerson, Mrs. Frank Rawson, Mrs. G. Ernest Carr and Mrs. Walter Brady.

Albert N. Murray, the new president of the association, opened the program with a word of welcome. He was laboring under difficulties this year, he said, inasmuch as the first president had been a mother and the second president a grandfather, while he was neither.

Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham read the secretary's report, and Willard E. Keyes submitted that of the nominating committee. A special election was held at which the following were elected:

Vice President—David H. Goodspeed.

Directors—Mrs. Samuel H. Couch, Mrs. Albert Waite, Frank A. Page, George Taylor and Amos T. Leavitt.

Superintendent Barbour of the Quincy schools was present and made a short address. He spoke of the value of the co-operation of the Parents and Teachers associations in improving the schools throughout the city.

"It is not the teachers, nor yet the parents," he said, "who can do the most to improve the schools, but we—the Parents and Teachers association and School Committee working as a unit."

Principal David H. Goodspeed replied for the teachers to President Murray's address of welcome. A social hour followed, during which light refreshments were served by the corps of ushers.

General dancing, to the music of an orchestra composed of William Ellis Weston, Max O. Pinkham and Wyman Miller, rounded out a delightful evening.

campaigning strenuous business. Nevertheless a few men and one or two women assembled about the fountain in City Square. Aside from the Progressives there were present ex-Senator McDevitt; Charles H. Johnson the Republican candidate for mayor; and other Democrats and Republicans.

None of the local men spoke, the fifteen minutes being divided between Arthur D. Hill and Candidate Bird. The only enthusiasm was when Mr. Bird was introduced by Charles H. Davis as the next governor. Both the old parties were criticised because they did not truly represent the voters, and Progressiveness was advocated as the panacea.

A larger crowd greeted candidate Bird when he arrived in Wollaston after speaking in City Square. Wollaston is the hot Progressive ward of the city and the party candidate was given a royal welcome. It was planned to have a display of fireworks and burn some red fire, but the rain put a stop to some of the plans made. Candidate Bird was accompanied by several of the party candidates.

METHODIST MEN'S CLUB

Talk by H. B. L. Dimmick on Packing Business

The Men's club of the Wollaston Methodist church opened Wednesday evening what promises to be a most successful season with a stereopticon lecture on the packing business by H. B. L. Dimmick.

Mr. Dimmick is a member of the club and also connected with the Boston branch of Swift & Company of Chicago. His talk was of great interest and covered the field from the time the animal was driven into the stock yards until it was shown wrapped in paper packages ready for shipment.

The opening views showed scenes in the Union Stock yards at Chicago illustrating methods of sale and thorough inspection given.

The United States government operates four different inspections during the processes, beginning with an ante mortem inspection and ending with a final inspection after the meat is dressed.

The beef, mutton, pork and other departments of Swift and company were projected on the screen, accompanied with many interesting details.

The immense development of the by-products and the resultant decrease in meat prices on this account was related.

The making of wool, soap, lard and oleomargarine was explained, the speaker declaring the latter to be as good in every way as butter.

Methods of refrigeration and transportation of the dressed product were gone into and a short dissertation on the matter of advertising closed this interesting lecture.

A business meeting conducted by President Ewertz preceded the lecture and a humorous number of the Wollaston Herald was read by T. E. Perley.

A social hour during which refreshments were served closed the meeting.

Quincy council, Knights of Columbus will hold a first degree tonight, the last to be given by the present officers. Plans are completed for the installation of the new officers at the first November meeting. Deputy Daniel J. Gallagher wil do the installing.

Reduction In 9 Cities

Nine of the 33 cities of Massachusetts have reduced their debt per capita since 1895—Brockton, Newton, Beverly, Fitchburg, Holyoke, Marlboro, Waltham, Chicopee and Northampton.

Boston heads the list with $74, the largest debt per capita in the state, and Cambridge, Newton, New Bedford and Beverly have large debts per capita.

GOOD JOB ON SEA STREET.

Houghs Neck people are very much pleased with that part of Sea street between the Willows and Bird street which has been built this fall but are kicking because the rebuilding did not extend to the end of the street near the Yacht club house. Then they think while the city was about it the street should have been widened to sixty feet. However they are thankful to get what they did.

WHO KNOWS JOHN LEARY?

John Leary, who is thought to have relatives in Quincy, died at Edmonton, Alberta, on Friday, Oct. 10, leaving some property. He is thought to have aunts by the names of Mrs. Bagley and Mrs. Logan.

DEVELOPMENT OF CITIES

New Act of Legislature Provides for Planning Boards

Several cities and towns of the Commonwealth have already complied with the provisions of chapter 494 of 1913, an act to provide for the establishment of planning boards by cities and towns. Under this act every city and town in the Commonwealth, having a population of more than 10,000 is authorized and directed to create a board to be known as the planning board, whose duty it shall be to make careful studies of the resources, possibilities and needs of the city or town, particularly with respect to conditions which may be injurious to the public health or otherwise injurious in and about rented dwellings, and to make plans for the development of the municipality with special reference to the proper housing of its people.

The act also provides that in cities the members of said board shall be appointed by the Mayor subject to confirmation by the Council; while in towns they shall be elected at the annual meeting.

The law also provides that the board shall make an annual report to the governing board of the city, giving information regarding the condition of the icty and any plans for the development of the city with estimated cost thereof. A copy of said report shall also be filed with the Homestead Commission.

City Councils of cities are authorized to make such ordinances as may be deemed necessary for carrying out the purposes of the act, and may appropriate money therefor.

As stated above, several cities have already acted under this law, and it has been noticed that in the planning boards named the board has been made a continuous one. That is its members are appointed for one, two and three years, so that at all times there shall be old members on the board.

It is understood that in addition to the specific duties laid down in the act, the board will consider new streets, new school buildings, etc.

Quincy has not as yet acted on the law but it is probable that it will be brought to the attention of the City Council at an early date.

The Homestead Commission created by Chapter 607 of the acts of the year 1911 is authorized and directed to furnish information and suggestions from time to time to city governments and to planning boards when the same are created.

MORE NOMINATIONS.

Wednesday afternoon Albert L. Whitman took out nomination papers for councilmen from Ward Two and for Councilman at large. Papers were also taken out by Alexander Falconer for Councilman from Ward Three. Neither gentleman said who the papers were for.

It has been practically deterimned that the Progressives will place candidates in nomination for councilmen from all wards and probably Councilmen at large. Just who these candidates will be however will not be determined until the committee meeting next week.

SCHOOL EXPENSES COMPARED

Quincy Second in Lowest Per Capita Cost

School Notes of Interest

An article of some length appeared a few days ago in the columns of the Boston Transcript bearing on the subject of school expenses and showing by graphic charts, the relative standing of the various towns and cities in the Metropolitan district with reference to moneys expended on the public school system. As these facts were in line with those cited by the superintendent of schools before the Parent-Teachers Association of the city. they are worthy of repetition in an abridged form here.

Taking the elementary school pupils first, for the year 1912, the towns and cities ranked as follows. Chelsea showed the lowest per capita cost with Quincy second by a few cents, and followed in turn by Everett, Lynn, Somerville, Malden, Belmont, Medford Cambridge, Arlington, Watertown, Melrose, Beverly, Winchester, Waltham, Springfield, Boston, Newton, Wellesley. Milton, Brookline and Weston.

The extremes of per capita cost for the elementary schools were $28 and $68. Any one knowing the very large buildings in which the elementary schools of Chelsea are carried on can understand one reason for its position at the foot of the list. As no such condition exists in Quincy, the causes for its low standing in elementary school expenditure must be sought elsewhere.

In High school expenditures, for the same year, the order of standing was Melrose, Somerville, Quincy, Medford, Lynn, Waltham, Beverly, Arlington, Winchester, Malden, Everett, Watertown, Belmont, Chelsea, Cambridge, Newton, Boston, Wellesley, Springfield, Brookline, Milton, Weston. The range of cost was from about $48 in the case of Melrose to over $100 in the case of Milton and Weston.

These facts compiled for a responsible newspaper corroborate in a forcible way the contention of the School department of Quincy that its costs were passing beyond the border line of economy and were approaching the range of false economy or saving at the expense of efficiency.

Another table prepared by the same editor bore on the comparative standing of the cities and towns near Boston as to the percentage of the total tax devoted to school maintenance. Here Boston had the lowest percent-

While the tariff bill is out of the way, the Congressmen can find plenty of other things to talk about and delay business .

Customs officers will not be permitted to snatch aigrettes out of women's hats, but if the officers would have their hair cut close it might be safer.

So far none of the governors have been impeached for winning money in the stock market, but then there isn't much danger of that happening.

After reading those alluring mail order catalogs, the jubilant housewife sits down and proceeds to order a $200.00 dining room set for $6.49

Health day exercises have been held in many places in the public schools. Probably the first thing on the program was to close up the windows so the children should not feel the fresh air.

There are said to be a good many deer and moose in the woods this season, and if they fall short there are always plenty of guides.

When President Wilson asked Congress to remain in Washington and work on the currency bill ,he forgot that the base ball season is over early in October.

It is said that a Cleveland boy stole $1400 to go to Oxford university, but in this country they are more apt to get through college by stealing bases.

It can't be very expensive for the candidates to do electioneering in Mexico, as all that has to be done is to send the campaign literature to President Huerta.

Vice President Sherman advises the men to get married before they are thirty. Most of them would be willing to do so if they can be assured that the girls will provide them with a good home.

The New York Giants' ball team attended church the Sunday night before the world's series. It is certainly fine when such a good example is set by our national leaders.

HUNTING SEASON.

When the white people came to this country, they found it overflowing with wild life. Flocks of wild pigeons were so great they obscured the sun, they were hours passing a given point, and one could not see either edge of the flock. Buffaloes roamed nearly the entire country.

Today the wild pigeon and the buffalo are gone. A large share of the pigeons were killed in the name of sport, and many were fed to hogs. Buffalo were killed for their skins, and their meat left to rot on the prairie.

Today the wild turkey. the sand hill crane, the wild goose, the ruffled grouse, the woodcock, the wood duck, and the canvasback are on their way to extinction.

Organizations of sportsmen are doing fine work in educating public sentiment against this waste, and in canvassing legislatures. They are demanding shorter open seasons, prohibition of the sale of game at all times, laws against repeating shot guns, etc. Every man who goes into the woods this fall should kill sparingly, remembering how our great national heritage of wild life has been squandered, and how nearly our woods have become tenantless.

The taxpayer should find wild life too valuable an asset to be slaughtered indiscriminately. Destruction of useful birds costs the country hundreds of millions in the ravages of insect pests. Furthermore, should existing game birds become extinct, there will be a demand from sportsmen for the restocking of the covers with foreign varieties, a proceeding that will involve heavy charges. Better save the birds now living.

The forest from which wild life has been exterminated is as dreary as a house without human beings. Game is gradually being driven toward remoter refuges. Unless the remnant left is carefully preserved. hunting by another generation will be mostly a memory.

ANSWER FILED IN BLAKE SUIT

Mrs. Mackay Breaks Silence In Alienation Case

HAS "JEALOUS DISPOSITION"

Says Mrs. Blake Had No Love or Affection For Husband and Sought to Injure His Reputation Among Patients—Couple Had Separated Long Before She Came to Know Them

New York, Oct. 16.—Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, suffrage leader and wife of the head of the Postal Telegraph-Cable company, broke her silence regarding the $1,000,000 suit filed against her by Catherine K. Blake for alleged alienation of the affections of her husband, Dr. Joseph A. Blake. Through her personal counsel, Arthur C. Train, Mrs. Mackay denies all of Mrs. Blake's allegations in a formal answer, filed in the supreme court, and characterizes Mrs. Blake as one who has a "jealous disposition, an ungovernable temper" and "no affection or love for her husband," whom at one time, it is alleged, she threatened to kill.

"On the contrary," the answer continues, "she has sought to injure his good name by constantly spreading among his patients, friends and relatives false and unjust rumors and accusations against him regarding his intimacy with other women and his neglect of his martial obligations, and has constantly declared to said persons that she, the said plaintiff, despised and hated her said husband and desired to ruin him; and that during the year 1905 and repeatedly thereafter she, the said plaintiff, threatened to kill her said husband.

"By reason of the facts alleged in the preceding paragraph the plaintiff is, and at all times mentioned in the complaint has been, estranged from her said husband and has utterly destroyed whatever affection or love he may have had for her."

Mrs. Mackay alleges further that Dr. Blake has not lived with the plaintiff as his wife since the year 1904, "long prior to the time when he first knew or had any acquaintance with the defendant, but on the contrary he has avoided the plaintiff as much as possible, and by mutual consent, the said plaintiff and her husband have at all times since the year 1904 lived separately and apart, and since the autumn of the year 1910 have maintained separate and distinct establishments."

Mrs. Mackay says she did not meet Mr. Blake until 1909, long after the breach had come between him and his wife, and she prays, therefore, that the suit against her be dismissed.

The summons and complaint in Mrs. Blake's suit was made publicly only Tuesday. It set forth that she was living with and being supported by Dr. Blake until four years ago. Mrs. Mackay, she charges, "wilfully, wickedly and maliciously alienated his affections," and still alienates them. Mrs. Blake's suit for separation against the doctor is pending in the courts.

RULES AGAINST SULZER

Court Votes That Peck and Morgenthau Testimony Be Admitted

Albany, Oct. 16.—The high court of impeachment decided this afternoon that article 4 was broad enough to cover the Peck testimony in the trial of William Sulzer.

The court decided it was unnecessary to amend the article or to ask the assembly to draw a new one. No mention was made of the Morgenthau testimony in the opinion of the court, which was read by Judge Cullen.

INDICT OFFICER MURPHY

Man Who Shot Militiaman to Be Tried for Manslaughter

Barnstable, Mass., Oct. 16.—As a sequel to the fatal shooting of Private John Harrington of the Ninth regiment during the militia war game in southeastern Massachusetts last August, an indictment for manslaughter was returned against Police Officer Patrick J. Murphy of Bridgewater by the Barnstable county grand jury.

During a disturbance on the street Officer Murphy is alleged to have fired his revolver into the crowd, hitting Harrington. Harrington died later.

No Hope For Jewell

New York, Oct. 26.—No hope is held out that Albert J. Jewell, the young aviator who set out from Hempstead Plains early Monday morning in a monoplane, would be found alive. The theory that he was blown out to sea is generally accepted and it is possible that his body may never be recovered.

California Women Vote "Wet"

Redondo Beach, Cal., Oct. 16.—Women assisted in keeping Redondo Beach "wet." They polled one-half of the votes in the initiative election regarding the abolition of saloons. The "dry" element was defeated by a vote of 829 to 634.

Many Lowell Greeks Killed

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 16.—Almost the entire "holy regiment" of Lowell Greeks who returned to their native land to fight the Turk was wiped out in the Balkan war, according to George Sarris, the first member of the regiment to come back to this city.

WILD STEAM ROLLER

Two Hurt When Runaway Machine Hits House

Newport, R. I., Oct. 16.—The city's big steam roller, with Engineer Harry Easton in the cab, refused to answer the brakes at the top of Ayrault street hill. In a second the iron monster began a wild run down the steep grade with the engineer clinging frantically to the brake handle. It crashed into the cottage house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. David Leonard. The runaway swept the house from its foundations and stopped.

Mr. Leonard, who was just coming out of his back door, was hit on the head by a brick. Mrs. Leonard, in the kitchen, was knocked down. Mr. Leonard was treated by a doctor. His wife was not seriously hurt. The furniture in the lower rooms of the Leonard home was wrecked. Engineer Easton was shaken up.

SUFFRAGETTES AFTER K NG

Climb on Royal Carriage and Attempt to Drop Petition

London, Oct. 16.—Suffragettes attacked the carriage in which King George and Queen Mary were on their way to St. James's palace to attend the wedding of Prince Arthur of Connaught and the Duchess of Fife.

One woman, bolder than the rest, jumped on the step of the King's carriage and attempted to throw a petition into the vehicle.

"Give us votes for women," shouted the suffragette, as she clung to the moving carriage, with one foot on the step.

She thrust the petition within the carriage, but a policeman grabbed her before she could drop it.

RRES SYLVIA PANKHURST

London Militants Fail In Their Attempt at Rescue

London, Oct. 16.—Sylvia Pankhurst, who was the central figure of a fierce struggle Monday night between the police and the militant suffragettes in the East End of London, was arrested when about to enter the Poplar town hall with the object of addressing another meeting.

The militants attempted to rescue her, but the police, who were in large numbers, succeeded in placing her in a taxicab and driving to Holloway jail. The meeting was abandoned in order to hold a protest demonstration outside the jail.

LODGE IS BETTER

Drs. Frederick Winslow and Francis Harrington, the attending physicians, visited the patient last night for the first time since Sunday.

"High Cost" Still With Us.

MRS. EATON HEARS CHARGES

Trial For Murder of Her Husband Is Now On

DAUGHTER IS STAR WITNESS

Jury Visits Scene of Alleged Crime In Assinippi—Accused Woman Hears Formal Charges Against Her Read In Court—Dorothy Ainsworth Closely Guarded by Deputy Sheriff

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 16.—Miss Dorothy Ainsworth, the 17-year-old daughter of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, who is on trial for her life, charged with killing her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, was guarded in the Samoset hotel by Deputy Sheriff George Hersey of Whitman. He ate with her and would allow no one to speak to her.

The action of the state in protecting Miss Ainsworth was considered mysterious. The girl is to be the state's star witness.

While the jurors who will try Mrs. Eaton on a charge of murdering her husband were looking over the Eaton house in Assinippi, the accused woman's daughter, Mrs. June Keyes, of Quincy Point, visited her mother in the county jail to console and cheer her.

The jurors entered the Eaton homestead at 12:25 and remained inside 15 minutes. District Attorney Albert Barker of Brockton did all the talking. He told the jurors he wanted them to pay particular attention to four rooms on the second floor of the house, two on the north side, one of which was occupied by Admiral Eaton, the other by Mrs. Virginia Harrison, aged mother of Mrs. Eaton, and two on the south side, one occupied by the accused, and the other by Dorothy Ainsworth, a daughter by her first marriage. He also told them to note the two stairways, one in front and the other in the rear, leading to these sleeping rooms.

Chief Justice John A. Aiken, who is presiding at the trial, announced that sessions will be held Saturdays in order to expedite matters. This is not uncommon in capital cases.

The first step in the proceedings was the reading of the indictment. Clerk Hobart consumed fourteen minutes in doing so. While the dry, legal paragraphs were being recited Mrs. Eaton sat back calmly in her chair, her hands crossed in her lap.

District Attorney Barker spoke about ten minutes in his opening address. He stood directly in front of the jury, about three feet away from the rail, in front of the box. His voice was very low, hardly audible to the few outside the rail.

The opening by the government was solely for the purpose of instructing the jury regarding what will be pointed out to them in the Eaton home. Later the government will make a supplementary opening.

Four deputy sheriffs were then lined up before the bench and the clerk admonished them to guard the jury from outsiders while they were on the trip to Assinippi, about twenty miles north of here.

The secret police express hope of arresting the conspirators, and the government has issued orders that the utmost precautions be taken to insure the safety of General Diaz.

CHINA WILL BE GREAT FACTOR

Address on the New China at Men's Club

The first meeting for this season of the South Congregational Men's Club was held Wednesday evening in the chapel at South Braintree with an attendance of about fifty members. Supper was served at 6.45, the menu comprising roast beef, mashed potato, boiled onions, celery, rolls, coffee, and pies of various kinds. After the repast, there was a short business meeting, during which smoking was in order. Action on the deaths of Deacon O. M. Rogers and Mrs. Joseph Kyte was referred to the committee on resolutions.

An enjoyable feature was chorus singing of popular songs by the entire assembly, after which all adjourned to the the auditorium where president R. L. Wiggin introduced the speaker of the evening. Rev. Archibald McCord, D. D., of Randolph delivered an intensely interesting address on "The New China." Dr. McCord told of the great patriot, Sun Yat Sen, the George Washington of China, who worked against almost overwhelming odds for 20 years that the great empire of China with its 426,000,000 people might become a republic. This happy result has been accomplished by a bloodless revolution and the people are awakening to the possibilities of Western civilization. This awakening will mean a demand for modern machinery, books articles of comfort, tools, etc., etc., and in the words of the speaker will result in one of the greatest industrial booms that the world has ever known.

There is one single province in this republic which contains coal enough to supply the entire world for 1000 years, and there are mineral deposits of all kinds in abundance. The new China is bound to be a great factor in the world's progress.

The thanks of the members were tendered the speaker for his very able presentation of the subject and to the supper committee for the excellent repast provided. The committee of arrangements was as follows:—Ernest C. Woodsum, Ralph L. Wiggin, George W. Stevens, Harry A. Simonds Dudley P. Howland, Charles E. Gilman, Edwin S. Loring, Robert E. Whitman, Louis W. Thayer, Ralph B. Woodsum, Louis N. Hathaway and Frank A. Reed. These gentlemen were ably assisted by Mrs. G. W. Stevens, Mrs. H. A. Simonds and Mrs. J. P. Witherell.

Speakers were announced for the coming meetings among them being Thomas A. Watson, who will speak at the November meeting on "The birthof the telephone." Adjourned at 9.30

POSSIBLY FAIR TOMORROW.

The weather today is more of the same kind that has prevailed this month, and most people have had their fill of wet weather. It was expected by the weather prophets that the full moon would bring a change for the better. The change in the moon came all right early Wednesday morning but the looked for change in the weather did not materialize. It was what some weather prophets call an easterly moon, and they do not hold out much promise for good weather. Uncle Sam's weather man however says that Friday and Saturday promise to be fair, and everybody is hoping that this time Uncle will be right.

CODDINGTON ASSOCIATION.

Progress in solving the vocational training problem can be made only through mistakes, and unless we experiment we will go as the Chinese have gone, said Robert O. Small deputy state commissioner of education, who spoke to the Parent-Teachers Association of the Coddington school Wednesday evening. They considered it a crime to experiment with training, and the knowledge of where that attitude has left them needs no comment. The remarks were made while Mr. Small was discussing suggestions relative to vocational training for the grammar school student.

Mr. Small, in the course of his work in connection with the State Board of Education has traveled the width and breadth of Massachusetts, and is now firmly convinced that cities doing as Quincy is, shall in the end be glad of their experiments because of what follows vocational training.

To say it is not cultural, said Mr. Small, means that you do not know the meaning of culture, or else you misunderstand vocational training. Such courses are offered as another approach to the successful career and in placing them before the pupils we are acquiring an exact knowledge of his adaptability.

The commercial, agricultural and modern language courses can be taught with success in the public schools and while it is true that Latin and French were not highly successful in grammar schools since their introduction it cannot be expected that all will master them. The mind of the child during the grammar school course is plastic and it learns only what it likes and then in an enthusiastic way.

Leaders must be supported in training out sane projects even though mistakes are made, and in the end we will have established a system that will adequately meet the ideas of education.

The attendants, hardly more than a handful because of the severe weather, were attentive, and when he concluded he was given hearty applause. Mr. Small was introduced by Principal Perkins of the school, and before and after the talk Mrs. Ada Scholes rendered several solos, accompanied by Miss Bertha Estes. Refreshments were served by a committee of parents and teachers.

LOSS OF TEACHER.

Isaac Goddard, who has been an assistant for more than five years in the Quincy High school, has received an appointment in the East Boston High school and commenced his work there on Tuesday morning. Mr. Goddard in his work of manual training teacher has taught all the 8th grade boys during that time, and probably has a wider acquaintance among boys than any other teacher in the city.

PARENT-TEACHERS ASSOCIATION.

The new year for the Parent Teachers Associations has opened with the most unfavorable weather, but with great interest notwithstanding. Without doubt the audiences this winter will be greater than ever before, with corresponding benefit to the schools and community.

MANUAL TRAINING.

Owing to the increased enrollment of boys in the 8th grade, it has been necessary to have the Montclair school arrange for its manual training in its own building instead of at the High school as heretofore. The Quincy and the Wollaston schools are already following the same practice, and the Adams school will follow suit as soon as the new building is occupied. More equipment is required in such cases, but the results are far better.

SCHOOL CENSUS.

The annual school census has been completed and will be tabulated ready for publication in a few days. It is already known that there has been an increase of children of school age in every ward in the city.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

In order to appreciate the wonders of ancient times it would be almost necessary for one to see the grandeurs in carving wrought by the hands of men who represent that period of time and who up to this present day are noted for their exquisite works. But the art and beauty of so long ago, the decorative art of Rome from the end of the republic to the 4th century is well represented by a collection of pictures of these famous works in the atr gallery of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

The frieze from the Forum of Trajan, spoken of in ancient history as one of the masterpieces, is exhibited in this group, and pupils studying this subject will get a fine idea of the work that was done by the people in old Roman times. The circular altar carved in the time of Augustus is well worth studying. Other photographs are of ornamental vases, bronze and marble heads, columns, cornices and other details of temples, etc.

REPORTS AT SQUANTUM.

Owing to the storm Tuesday night there was but a small attendance at the regular meeting of the Squantum Improvement association in the Vacation house. Reports of committees took up most of the evening.

John R. Nelson reported that considerable progress had been made in the matter of the sewage nuisance in Quincy bay, and that W. N. Kenyon had been appointed a chairman of a sub-committee of the joint committee of the Quincy City Council, Quincy Board of Trade and various improvement associations, to bring the matter before the Quincy board of health.

C. E. Carlson made a lengthy report on the Spectacle Island nuisance. Communications were read from Mayor Fitzgerald and from the garbage disposal company, indicating that great progress was being made in installing a plant which it was believed would eliminate all objectionable odors from this plant, which has been the source of continuous complaint from residents of Boston, Winthrop and Quincy.

Mr. Carlson also made a report as chairman of the street railway committee and told of efforts being made to secure a 11.35 car to Squantum from Neponset nightly except Sunday and of efforts made to get better accommodation for school children in their trips to and from school.

The meeting adjourned at 9.30 without transacting any new business.

REBEKAH SUPPER.

Although the weather Tuesday evening was anything but pleasant, about one hundred attended the annual harvest supper given by Reliance Rebekah lodge in I. O. O. F. hall, Neponset, and all enjoyed the supper which was in every detail an old fashioned one. After which the following programme was rendered each and every one receiving great ovations and all kindly responded to the encores. Opening overture by Maple lodge, K. & L. of H. Orchestra of six pieces, M. Lizzie Furnald, leader; Mrs. Effie L. Rhines, accompanist. Reading by Mrs. Caroline Stretton; Banjo solo by A. S. Barrows. Reading by Miss Lillian Reed, accompanied by her brother, Bert Reed of Upland road. Vocal selection by Mrs. F. S. Waitte, after which dancing was enjoyed. Several were present from the surrounding towns and this city. The affair was in charge of Mrs. Sarah F. Davenport of 61 Vane street, Norfolk Downs, and great credit is due her for the success of the evening's pleasure.

LARCENY CHARGED.

U. S. Commissioner Hayes found probable cause Tuesday to hold John J. Connor of Dorchester, a frieght clerk at the South Boston freight yard on the charge of larceny of clothing valued at $5 which was in interstate shipment beteen Braintree and Jacksonville, Fla. He is under $500 bail for the Federal grand jury. Under a recent act of congress it is a punishable offense to steal anything in interstate shipment.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR THE PRACTICAL

Things Ornamental and Useful That May Be Made at Home.

FOR the sternly practical member of the family something to wear never comes amiss as a Christmas gift. There are so many things in this line that one may give that one need never be in doubt what to present to those who prefer the useful to the merely ornamental souvenir. There are collars and trinkets of all sorts, handkerchiefs, gloves, etc., all suitable for this purpose.

Illustrated here is a sailor collar for a young girl. It is of tan linen, embroidered in blue and red. The pattern is a simple one, but any other that pleases the taste might be substituted for it.

As to slippers, they are always in demand, from the daintiest of boudoir creations fashioned of ribbon to the cozy knitted or crocheted ones which are the delight of the invalid.

Very easy to make are the crocheted slippers shown here. They are in double crochet, the work being done to give the familiar ribbed pattern. As each slipper must be shaped to suit the size of the foot for which it is intended, no directions in regard to number of stitches to be used would be generally useful. The size can be gauged by measuring. Select a color of yarn that you know the receiver of the gift to be fond of and do not economize on the ribbon for bows.

A nice gift for a little one is crocheted bootees. Winter bed socks may be made for the older children. The crocheting or knitting of a pair of slippers may be accomplished in the course of a few evenings. For a pair of really dainty slippers use mercerized worsted, which looks like silk floss of a very heavy quality and which works up so coarsely that the slipper grows with extraordinary rapidity. Having worked with hook or needles the strip that is long enough to cover the lower portion of the foot, overstitch one side of it to a silk lined insole, crochet a fancy finish to the upper side, run through its meshes a ribbon and have this drawstring terminate in a huge rosette at the instep, while the toe is decorated with a large round buckle of the mercerized worsted. Then make the slipper.

Even more quickly made is the "mule" type of bedroom slipper. This consists of merely a satin lined insole to which is attached a V shaped piece of woven mercerized worsted forming a toe section. When a pair of ribbon ankle ties have been attached to the sides of the insole's heel a quilling of ribbon trims it daintily.

A pretty bedroom slipper is made of satin ribbon, shirred up thickly to give the slipper "body" across the toe. Two thicknesses of the ribbon are used for the sides, elastic being run through a casing at the top. The sole of the slipper is lined with quilted satin.

If the gift giver really lacks the time to work for her friend she can at least buy a pair of inexpensive ready made worsted slippers, trim them attractively with big bows of satin ribbon matching quillings forming fluffy edgings and give a touch of daintiness to the inner side of the soles by covering them with a shaped sachet of fine batting and delicately colored china silk. Or she may take a pair of inexpensive "mules" of wadded silk, edge them with swansdown, marabou or fur and decorate their toes with big rosettes of ribbon or malines—in fact, rather do anything to make them different from the cheap looking, impersonal sort of footgear which the fastidious recipient will not wear.

"It Is Me."

The growth of language is marked by many changes in the meanings and pronunciations of words and by the introduction of new words where needed. Its decay is influenced by the ever increasing tendency to slang and to colloquialisms, which form a "peculiar kind of vagabond language, always hanging on the outskirts of legitimate speech, but continually straying or forcing its way into respectable company." Whatever the changes, constructive or destructive, can any professor or armies of wise and learned men make "It is me" correct any more than they can justify four times eight equal thirty-six? Such teaching gives rise to the attitude of many schoolgirls who have the idea that it is affected to say "It is I." They expect to be laughed at when they use correct constructions. Even a lawyer of my acquaintance told us that if he were to speak correctly he would lose business with certain clients, men "in the rough," who would think he felt above them. Is it not sad that an intelligent use of language is so rare that it sets the accurate speaker apart?—Leila Sprague Learned in Atlantic Monthly.

What a Blockade Means.

The object of a blockade is to prevent the communication of a country with the outside world and to stop the entrance of supplies of provisions, materials of war or reinforcements.

A vessel is not liable to seizure if it is in ignorance of the blockade. A vessel is allowed to enter a blockaded port if it is in danger or distress. Mail steamers, if no contraband of war is carried, and neutral warships can enter and leave a blockaded port.

A blockade to be effective must be maintained by a sufficient force to prevent the entrance of neutral vessels into the blockaded port or ports and must be formally proclaimed.

The most extensive blockade ever conducted was carried out by the federals during the war between the states. It extended for 3,000 miles along the Atlantic coast and the gulf of Mexico and lasted four years.—London Mail.

Rare Violin Sense.

An amateur violinist in town here, says the Glasgow News, bought a fiddle secondhand for a mere song. Being of opinion that he had made a deal, he sent it to a well known violin expert who undertakes to give an opinion as to the value of instruments, monetary and otherwise purely for the love of it. The expert assured him that there was nothing unusual about the fiddle and that it was worth about a couple of pounds. That is about twelve years ago, and recently the violin was again sent to the expert for criticism. The reply was contained in one eloquent sentence. "This violin has been here before." Considering that this gentleman criticises a very great number of instruments every year, and that he guarantees that violins will not be marked in any way, this is surely an extraordinary example of violin "sense."

The Firefly's Light.

Probably as far back as 1733 it was known that the luminous parts of fireflies, glowworms, etc., could be dried and preserved out of contact with the air for considerable periods without losing their light giving power. In late years it has been possible to prove this permanence of the light giving power for at least eighteen months. Kastle and McDermitt were able upon opening tubes containing the luminous organs of the common firefly preserved in hydrogen or a vacuum to obtain quite a brilliant light by simply moistening with water. The light was increased when hydrogen peroxide replaced the water. However, scientists have yet to discover the firefly's secret of producing light without heat.

Fire and Water.

Water will extinguish a fire because the water forms a coating over the fuel, which keeps it from the air, and the conversion of water into steam draws off the heat from the burning fuel. A little water makes a fire fiercer, while a large quantity of water puts it out. The explanation is that water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen. When, therefore, the fire can decompose the water into its simple elements it serves as fuel to the flames.

All Altered.

"Gracious, Smith, old boy, how are you? I haven't seen you for ages. You are altered. I should scarcely know you again."

"Excuse me, sir, my name is not Smith."

"Great Scott! Your name altered as well?"—London Answers.

The Sweating System.

Swell—Yes, sir, I make all my money by the sweating system—by making the other fellows do the sweating while I rake in the coin. Friend—I should be ashamed to acknowledge it if I were you. Swell—Why, there's no harm in being the proprietor of a Turkish bath, is there?

Extravagance.

Mr. Snapperly (reading)—Man commits suicide by jumping off ferryboat. Mrs. Snapperly—Just like a man. Why didn't he jump off a dock and save 2 cents?—Puck.

Literal.

"Miss Many Seasons is furious at the editor of that society paper."

"Why?"

"He referred to her as a 'well known' beauty."—Judge.

"Success comes only to those who lead the life of endeavor."—Theodore Roosevelt.

MADE HIM SAVE.

The American Magazine has been offering prizes for the best letter entitled "How I Saved My First $100." In the October number three of the prize winning letters are published. Following is one of them—written by a man who was influenced to save money by the girl he was in love with:

"It was all due to the Girl. Before I knew her the idea that I could save anything out of my small salary seemed preposterous. I was not extravagant but I liked to gratify my desires. Self-denial I had not tried to practice, but I have discovered it is absolutely essential—the heart, in fact, of saving.

"After we had come to a tacit recognition of the fact that I was "her beau" the Girl one evening said:

" 'How much do you pay weekly for your room?'

" 'Four dollars,' I answered. 'It's a good-sized, comfortable one.'

" 'Don't you think you can get a nice hall room and be comfortable enough for three dollars? You go and do it and give me the other dollar.'

" 'Anything else you wish me to do?'

" 'Yes,' she answered. 'You call on me once a week. You live only a mile away, but I suppose ride. Walk, and give me the ten cents car fare. You'll find the walk short if you think of me. Then every night you come here you smoke two cigars. What price ones?'

"I answered, 'Ten cents.'

" 'I'm not going to ask you to smoke poor cigars,' she said, 'but instead of two, smoke one. By smoking slowly and not all at once one will last you just as long as two and you can give me the ten cents difference. Then you ride both ways to business, don't you? Well, I won't ask you to walk home when you are tired, but rise a little earlier and walk down. It will do you good and you can give me the thirty cents a week that you'll save. What do you spend for your luncheons?'

" 'Only twenty-five cents.'

" 'Well, cut out the piece of pie or something you really don't require, reduce the cost to twenty cents and give me the thirty cents weekly difference. It's a mistake to eat hearty midday meals—makes one sleepy and dull. Then you go to the 'movies' six times a week, you told me. Go three and give me the fifteen cents saved.'

"Well, I obeyed her and found it not at all difficult. I started the first week in January, 1911. The first week in January, 1912, she handed me $101.40.

" 'That's what you've saved,' she said. 'I didn't take the money for myself, but to show you you could save if you tried. Here's a statement:

Car fares saved visiting me	$5.20
Car fares saved walking to business	15.60
Saved on cigars	5.20
Saved on "movies"	7.80
Saved on luncheons	15.60
Saved on room rent	52.00

QUINCY MAN'S LUCKY FIND

Will Interest Readers of the Ledger.

Those having the misfortune to suffer from backache, urinary disorders, gravel, dropsical swellings, rheumatic pains, or other kidney and bladder disorders, will read with gratification this encouraging statement by a Quincy may.

James W. Murray, River Road, Quincy, Mass., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills for irregular kidney action. They promptly relieved me. I don't have any need of a kidney medicine now, but I keep a supply of Doan's Kidney Pills on hand. Another of my family has taken Doan's Kidney Pills as a kidney tonic and the benefit has been very pleasing."

If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Murray had—the remedy backed by home testimoney. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

HIGH SCORES.

Ten tables were in play Wednesday evening at the weekly whist tournament of the Granite City club. Play was unusually keen and the scores throughout the evening ran high. There were several who were well up in the sixties and seventies, but Ralph L. Lovell was the high man with 80 percent, while S. T. MacQuarrie was a good second with 72 percent. After the play, ice cream, cake and coffee was served by the entertainment committee.

BIG FELLOWS TO BOWL.

The second match between the big follows, Poehler's All Stars and Smith's Five, will be rolled tonight on the City Square alleys, and the high single of 142 made last week by Santa Cruz will be boosted according to promises made by Griffin and Taylor of the Stars, who have been doing good work on the Chauncey team of the Boston city league the past week. The five will have a new man, Arthur Beane, who despite his usual hard luck expects to carry off the high total.

Sexton, formerly coach at Mercesburg Academy and the Harvard Summer school, has been added to the coaching staff of the Huntington School football team of which Ralph and Sam Prout of this city are both members. —That times change, and men change with them, is apparent to the reader of history. In 1760, the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a law that "any persons able of body, who shall absent themselves from public worship of God on the Lord's day, shall pay ten shillings fine." If such a law could be enacted now and the fines collected, taxes and tariffs would be wholly unnecessary, for the State government would require no other source of revenue.—Taunton Herald.

—A record breaking potato crop of 25,0000,000 bushels sounds like an abundance of that food, but when we consider that it only means about 15 pounds extra to each inhabitant of this country it diminishes in importance.—Old Colony Memorial.

TWO DEATHS REPORTED

Full Toll of Storm May Not Be Known For Days

Boston, Oct. 16.—Not for several days will the full toll of the sea be known as a result of the gale which was still raging along the New England coast last night.

Two deaths were reported yesterday. They are members of the crew of the barge Oakland. The barge lay anchored all night almost within a stone's throw of shore, and is still there, riding out the gale. The crew, in attempting to land in their dory, capsized and were drowned. Help was on the way when they met their deaths.

At Vineyard Haven the harbor is full of shipping which has found refuge here from the storm. Some of the ships have been two weeks trying to round the Cape.

So great was the storm last night that neither the Portland nor Kennebec boats left their docks. The incoming Kennebec boat is tied up at Bath, not daring to make the trip. The Bangor boat which should have left for Bangor Tuesday night did not leave until 4:30 yesterday morning. She arrived at Rockland at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

COLLAPSES AT TRIAL

Secretary to Governor of Vermont Taken Suddenly Ill

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 16.—Major W. A. Graham, the young secretary to Governor Fletcher, and one of the counsel for the state in the telephone hearing now in progress here at the state house, collapsed and fell to the floor of the senate chamber, where the hearing is being held, late yesterday afternoon, while he was cross-examining Vice President E. K. Hall of the New England Telephone company.

He was quickly revived and will probably be able to continue. The sudden halt in the proceedings came just before adjournment of the most important session of the hearing thus far.

MORE MINERS ARE TAKEN FROM PIT

Rescuers Reach Twenty-Nine Shut In by Fall of Coal

Cardiff, Wales, Oct. 16.—Rescuing parties searching for the 400 miners still entombed in the Universal colliery, where a terrific explosion occurred while 931 men were in the pit, got into touch with a party of twenty-nine men shut in by a fall of coal in one of the galleries.

They signalled that another group of fifteen of their comrades was closed in further along the gallery, but that they feared they were dead.

Although about 500 of the 931 men were rescued and the discovery of further parties of living men gave rise to hopes that the fatalities would not be so numerous as was at first supposed. Nearly 400 men, however, have still to be accounted for.

HOLD RIDING TEST

Army Officers Must Make a Ninety-Mile Trip

Washington, Oct. 16.—Great activity marked the day in Fort Myer, and there was a hurried overhauling of saddles and other horse gear, for today nearly two score officers started on their annual ordeal—the ninety-mile compulsory ride inaugurated by President Roosevelt to demonstrate the physican fitness for the army of the men who wear the epaulettes.

A number of officers who have straddled nothing more than a swivel chair in the past year looked with apprehension. Brigadier General A. L. Mills of the general staff of the army will be in command of the cavalcade.

SAFELY LANDED BY KURFUERST

Rescued Passengers of Burned Volturno Are In New York

IMMIGRANTS ALLOWED TO LAND

Scene In Vicinity of Sea Tragedy Is Described by Passenger on Grosser Kurfuerst as Terrible and Grand—People Taken Off Burning Boat Just In Time to Save Lives

New York, Oct. 16.—Bringing 105 survivors of the burned Uranian liner Volturno, largely women and children, the North German Lloyd steamship Grosser Kurfuerst docked here.

By orders of Commissioner Caminetti at Washington, the Ellis island immigration inspectors allowed all the survivors to land without question, though they were paupers without baggage.

The supreme picture of the Volturno catastrophe, said one of the Kurfuerst's passengers, came Thursday night about 9:30 o'clock, when the fire, which until then had been confined below the steel decks, burst through the whole ship, forward of the bridge.

A mass of shriveling flame leaped fifty feet into the air. The red glare, outlined against the black sea, the black sky and the thick clouds made a brilliant picture, the half moon breaking through at intervals and casting her pale light on the glare and on the dozen liners grouped about.

The Carmania, in the foreground, was most brilliant; then came the Kroonland, a long line of faint lights. The lights of each ship were different.

As the ships moved, the picture gave one the effect of battleships manoeuvring with the tiny lamps of the lifeboats bobbing on the dark surface of the water and an occasional blue signal from some lifeboat was answered from the bridge of one of the liners.

The Carmania's searchlight swept the scene through the whole night, picking out the small boats which were looking for survivors in the water. Collisions among the big ships were averted only by their splendid handling.

At 9:40 o'clock a tremendous explosion doubled the height of the flames, leaping from the deck of the burning ship. They set off two rockets on the Volturno, which rose high and graceful through the air like an exhibition.

On the decks of the Grosser Kurfuerst were groups of hysterical women and praying men. The flames burned high all night, gradually getting as far as the funnel. Then daylight came, sombre with dark clouds, turning to scarlet, making another magnificent picture, with the fire sweeping back of the funnel to the stern, where some 500 women and children huddled.

Suddenly the sea was alive with small boats and the whole crowd was taken off more quickly than seemed possible.

Our last sight of the Volturno showed the smoke back to the poop. The passengers were rescued just in time.

Before she reached dock here came a new angle to the story of the heroism of her crew in the Volturno rescue. Chief Wireless Operator Gerick of the Kurfuerst gave in detail the story of the fire alarm at sea, the early attempts at rescue, the arrival on the Kurfuerst of one boat from the Volturno and of Captain Spangenburg's decision to lower no boats at that time on the advice of the rescued sailors of the burning ship.

"At 9 o'clock," Gerick continued, "flames shot high out of the Volturno's midship, setting her upper deck bridge and saloon on fire. That set the Volturno's passengers in an awful panic.

"Just then a terrible explosion occurred, and Captain Spengenburg, thinking all was over with the Volturno, gave orders to lower boats, notwithstanding the full gale and tremendous sea. He called for volunteers, and sailors, firemen and stewards stepped forward as one man."

Gerick then detailed the rescue as previously told, describing fully the toil of the sailors through the long night of fear.

Dr. Morton of Boston Also Freed and Leaves For New York

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 16.—After more than six months' imprisonment in the federal penitentiary here for violating the postal laws, Julian Hawthorne and Dr. J. W. Morton of Boston are free. They left for New York.

Hawthorne and Morton were sentenced March 21 last to terms of one year and one day, but it was ordered that their sentences date from the time of their arrest, four months previous. "Good behavior" brought about a further shortening of their sentences.

Since he entered the doors of the Atlanta prison, Hawthorne's record, according to officials, has been such as to prove particularly helpful to his fellow-prisoners. He has made noteworthy contributions to the prison paper, it was said, and was considered a valuable counsellor by his fellows.

Boston, Oct. 16.—The burned and abandoned steamer Templemore, which was picked up by the revenue cutter Androscoggin 100 miles southeast of Nantucket lightship last Monday, is in tow of the revenue cutter, which managed to get a line to the hulk in spite of the gale and high seas.

A message received from the Androscoggin's commander said that the derelict was still on fire forward, and that she was being towed stern foremost, making only two knots.

CROSSING A BRIDGE

It Was an Important Feat In More Respects Than One

By F. A. MITCHEL

The wind howled; the rain came down in torrents. All the streams were swollen. Night came on, and the darkness added to the bleakness.

In a farmhouse near which ran a railroad track a woman sat over a baby that was moaning and tossing with fever. Now and again she would take the child up in her arms and caress it, but its sufferings were not diminished, and she would put it down with an exclamation of despair.

A boy of twelve stood by looking pityingly on his baby sister. He was a sturdy little fellow and old enough to realize that he might lose her.

"Oh, for some one to send for a doctor!" wailed the mother.

"Can't I go?" asked the boy.

"You go! Do you think I would let you go out in such a night as this, running the risk of losing you as well as your little sister? If you could go by the road I would send you, but you would have to cross the railroad bridge. The wind would blow you down into the gulf below."

"I've crossed the bridge. I know how to do it in a wind. I can crawl."

"You should not have done so even by day. The danger would be far greater at night, and on such a night as this it would be frightful. Besides, if a train should come along what would you do?"

"Hang on to a tie."

The mother shuddered. Beneath the ties a hundred feet below a river was boiling over rocks.

"There's no train to cross the bridge till 11:05," continued the boy.

"How do you know, Jakey?"

"I know all about the trains."

This was true. Jakey Summers was much interested in the railroad, the running of trains, and was known to the employees of the company at the station a few miles from his home. Many a free ride had been given him both on trains and locomotives.

"I wish I dare let you go," said the mother, "but I don't."

A spasm passed over the baby that frightened her and Jakey too. The boy went out into the kitchen, and when his mother was not conscious of his presence he was standing before her with a lighted lantern.

"Oh, Jakey," she exclaimed, "you're not going to cross that frightful bridge this terrible night?"

"I can do it all right, mamma. Don't you worry about me. Just you stay here and take care of Betty. I'll bring Dr. Parker back with me. He's got a car and can come by the road, if it is ten miles around, as quick as I can get to him across the bridge."

The mother put her arms about him and hugged him, but he disengaged himself and with a "Now, don't you worry about me, mamma," went out into the night. A gust of wind blew in as he opened the door, and his mother started up to prevent his going, but he pulled the door to, and from a window beside it she saw his light disappearing down toward the track. With a prayer for him she went back to her baby.

Jakey soon gained the track and began to walk on a path beside it toward the bridge. He had glanced at a clock before going out and saw that the time was half past 10. It would be thirty-five minutes before an express train would reach the bridge, but the bridge was half a mile away, and he must necessarily be a long while getting over it. For this distance he breasted the wind, though ordinarily it would have been easy walking on the path. He had no means of noting the time and must take his chances as to being on the bridge when the train passed over it. He trudged on as fast as he could and was conscious of making pretty good time.

A gust of wind howled through the branches of the trees and caused a loud wail among the telegraph wires above his head. When it died down, before another gust came, he heard the boiling waters of the river. He paused awe stricken. In order to brace his resolution he thought of his baby sister and his anxious mother and, moving on a short distance, stood at the end of the bridge.

It was 300 feet long, with an abutment on each bank and one in the middle of the river. Taking his lantern in his left hand that he might cling with his stronger right, he began to crawl over the ties. After a squall he stood erect and made a distance of some forty feet before another blast came, when he was obliged to get down and cling for dear life.

Now he was over the boiling waters, well calculated to strike terror into an older person. But his mind was intent on getting across before the coming of the train. When the wind blew its strongest he crouched between the rails, bracing himself against a sleeper, but as soon as its force was spent he would crawl on, sometimes partly rising, sometimes standing, all the while forging onward.

And now he noticed that one rail was lower than the other. He knew this could not be on account of a curve in the bridge—bridges are never so constructed. He feared that something was giving way. The farther he proceeded the greater the inequality of the height of the rails. As he approached the center abutment this inequality was sufficient to throw a train off the bridge into the river.

Jakey quailed. The bridge was breaking down, and he knew not but that farther on a part of it might have been swept away. He hesitated, thinking to return. In vain he thought of his little sister and that her life might hang upon his getting a doctor. He dare not go on. A gust fiercer than any preceding swept over the structure, and he could hear a terrible cracking beyond. He was appalled. He turned to go back, but stopped. From a distance, borne on the wind, came the rattle of a train.

Jakey knew that this was the express; that it was passing on open space some five miles away, where he had often seen it pass before. But it was seven miles by the winding of the railroad. Within a quarter of an hour it would be on the bridge. He was near the center. So far as he could judge, he would barely have time to get on terra firma by going either forward or back. The bridge would go down with the train and he would go down with both. He was reasonably sure that behind him the bridge was standing, for he had just come over it. Ahead of him he could not see through the darkness.

A whirl of influences passed through the child's brain—his sick sister, his troubled mother and now the horror of a train freighted with people going down into that terrible chasm. Perhaps it was this that decided him. He never knew what decided him. He only knew that he could not go back. All his nature revolted against doing so. He must go forward.

And he did. At the center abutment he found that it had partly given way and one rail was at the lowest point below the other. As he crawled forward it began to rise again. This gave him courage. He saw that the damage was caused by the giving way of the abutment in the river, and the one on the farther bank was likely standing. A whistle so clear that it indicated a near proximity of the train spurred him on. Despite the danger of being blown off the bridge, he stood up and walked on the ties. He was not now over the boiling water, and that was a relief.

Suddenly a bright light flashed ahead of him. A locomotive had rounded a curve and was heading on a straight track for the bridge. Jakey began to swing his lantern. He heard the sound attending the checking of a train, but the headlight of the locomotive flared nearer. Jakey was now some fifty feet from the end of the bridge and feared to be run down. He could only stand his ground and swing his lantern.

The train came to a stop after passing a few feet on to the bridge. The engineer waited for the light to advance and, leaning out from his cab, heard Jakey's report of the condition of the bridge. A shudder passed over the big man on the mammoth engine at hearing that he and his trainload of people had been saved from a frightful fall to death by the boy with the little upturned face beneath him.

A light was coming forward, and the conductor approached. Here and there in the cars a window was thrown up and a head thrust out. The conductor heard the story that the bridge was wrecked, and he, too, shuddered.

"I got to go," said Jakey.

"Go where?" asked the conductor mechanically.

"I got to go a piece up the road for a doctor. My little sister's sick."

"Get aboard the train. We're going to back up."

The engineer extended a hand to the boy and lifted him into the cab. As soon as he got him there he folded him in his arms and kissed him. Then he kissed him again and again until he heard the conductor say:

"Come; back up."

Jakey was put off at a station which was very near the doctor's house, but by this time the news of the narrow escape had spread among the passengers, and they crowded around the boy on the platform, impeding his progress. When they heard that a sick baby's life depended upon his further efforts they suffered him to proceed. When some twenty minutes later he passed the station with the doctor in the latter's car he was met by the conductor, who poured a hatful of money into his lap. Then, followed by a cheer, the auto sped on to the baby.

When the doctor arrived he took charge of the little patient, but it was some time later, when the latter was sleeping, that Jakey told his mother how he had saved the train and showed her the pile of bills and gold and silver pieces that had been contributed for him by the passengers.

This was not all. The next day an official of the road came to see Jakey with a message from the president requesting him to come to the general offices in the city to be thanked.

The baby being out of danger, Jakey's Sunday suit was put on him, and he took a free ride on the train to see the president. The boy was received by a multitude of employees as he passed to the office of the presiding officer and found himself a hero. After being officially thanked he was informed that he would thereafter be considered the child of the company, would be sent to school by it, and when he desired to enter the service of the road he would be educated to take an important position. Before he went back he was handed a check for $5,000, made payable to his mother.

Jakey is now a division superintendent on the road. He frequently rides over the bridge, or, rather, a new one, he crossed on that tempestuous night, and every time he goes over it the greater his horror at the risk he ran.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

For answer I threw open the stern window of her cabin. On a level with it swung a small boat, a whaleboat. Now I had taken occasion during the day to lower that boat little by little, a few inches at a time and then a few inches at another time, as I had opportunity to get near the falls and to manipulate them unobserved, but I had brought it down to the level of the cabin windows. Its sea lashings were cast off, and I had no doubt, if conditions on deck were as I expected them, I could lower it all the way later with impunity.

"What do you mean?" she asked, staring out of the window and into the empty boat.

"I mean that you and I are going to embark in that boat tonight and leave this ship."

"But where are we going?"

"There is land not a league and a half under our lee. It seems to be the most easterly of a cluster of islands."

"Is it the island we seek, do you think?"

"We are in exactly the latitude and the longitude of the chart if my calculations are correct."

"The island was uninhabited when my ancestor was cast away upon it."

"Yes," said I, "but there may be natives there now, but no savages of the south seas could be more cruel and ruthless than the men on this ship."

"Let us go," she said, shuddering. "What is your plan?"

"I want you to dress yourself in your stoutest clothes, with your heaviest shoes, wrap yourself up in a boat cloak and take with you a change of clothes and some few necessaries for your comfort. I will go and rummage the lazarette for provisions, and I will see if I can turn up any more weapons in the captain's room. I dare not go to the arms chest"—it was below in the hold anyway, and I could not waste the time to hunt it out—"we must hurry."

"Why, you said they were insensible."

"They'll recover their senses before we know it. I want as long a start as possible."

"Wait a moment," she said. She opened a drawer under her berth and drew out a leather case, which she opened and placed before me. There were two ivory handled silver mounted pistols in it. "They belonged to my father," she said. "With one of them he—he"— Her voice broke. I nodded. I knew what he had done with one of them. She rummaged further and drew out an exquisite sword, quite unlike my heavy one, but, if I could judge anything about weapons, of fine temper and strength and with its hilt studded with diamonds. "This was my father's too," she said. And I recognized it also. It was that I had taken from Arcester.

The pistols were smaller than my huge barkers, better suited for her hand, and to load them from the flasks which accompanied them was the work of a few minutes. I thrust my own heavy weapon back into my belt. I then buckled her two pistols around her waist and bade her take the sword also. We might need all these weapons.

Then I left her and went out on deck. The men were in a profound drunken stupor. Pimball was sound asleep; Glibby was nodding. He leered at me as I drew abreast of him.

"Everyth-th-ing a-all r-right?" he hiccoughed.

"Everything," I answered. "The old bark doesn't need much watching tonight."

I yawned extravagantly. "I will go and turn in, I think. If you need me call me."

As I went below into the cabin I saw that in a few moments he would be like the rest.

CHAPTER X.

In Which We Pass the Barrier.

THE lazarette was well provided, and I stocked the boat handsomely, not forgetting an ax, a lantern and tinder box. There was not much water, but I emptied some bottles of wine and filled them, although I did not much worry on that account because there would be plenty of water undoubtedly on the island. The boat was provided with a compass and a mast and sail. I got into her as she swung at the davits and overhauled spar and gear. Then I shipped the tiller, and presently everything was ready. A final search brought to light a narrow locker in the captain's room, which I forced open and which I found to contain a fine fowling piece, a double barreled shotgun and a heavy musket with plenty of powder and ball. These I passed into the boat also.

"Have you got now what you wish to take?" I asked when all my preparations were completed.

"A change of linen, some toilet articles and necessaries, brush and comb, needles and thread," she answered, holding up her bundle.

"Good," said I. I judged it was about 10 o'clock at night. "Now, do you get into the boat, madam."

She had not been on the ship for six months without having learned something, and she instantly asked me:

"But how are you going to lower it away?"

"I will have to go up on deck for that," I said.

"But won't they see you?"

"I don't think so, but whether they do or not we must chance it, but if anything should happen to me I'll cut the boat adrift, and you will be in God's hands."

Silently I assisted her to take her place in the stern sheets. It was not a large boat. On the contrary, yet she made but a small figure sitting there. Then I went on deck. I had a can of oil with me to oil the blocks. It was as I fancied. By that time everybody on the ship was asleep in a drunken stupor. The ship was deserted so far as human supervision was concerned.

Still I didn't neglect any precaution. I oiled the shives of the block and lowered the boat away carefully, inch by inch, until it was water borne. I reassured my mistress by whispered words as I did so. She had had her instructions and right well she followed them. She had her boat hook out and fended off the minute the boat touched the water. For me to belay the falls and slide down the forward one to cast off and take my place in the boat was but the work of an instant. The oars had been carefully muffled. Although the noise of the waves rendered conversation quite safe, we neither of us spoke a word until I had rowed some distance from the ship.

It was nearly midnight before we got everything shipshape, my lady bravely helping me with her best efforts, and the little vessel threshed gallantly through the big seas.

I had carefully taken my bearings during the day and as I had a good compass on the boat I knew exactly how to steer. Fortunately the wind held steady. I laid her course so as to clear the northeast end of the island, around which I intended to swing so as to be hidden from the ship at daybreak.

I told her after awhile that she was safe. No sound had come from the ship and the lights in the cabin which at first we could see dimly presently disappeared. Our escape had not been discovered. I suggested at last that she should go to sleep. I arranged the boat cloak and blankets and although she had to be much persuaded I finally prevailed upon her to lie down in the boat, her head by my knees, and thus we sailed on through the night.

When day broke I hauled aft the sheet and headed the boat to the southward, for I had now crossed the head of the island and could run down the other side. By the time it was fairly dawn I had made enough southing to place the north end of the island between ourselves and the ship. I steered the boat toward the land.

My hopes were high and I felt a kind of exhilaration at our escape, although I was by no means inclined to minimize the possibilities of peril we might soon be compelled to meet. The island was our destination, however, and for it therefore I determinedly headed my small craft with its precious and still peacefully sleeping cargo.

The island was unlike any I had ever looked upon. In the first place, like most Pacific islands, it was inclosed by a barrier reef, over which the waves broke in whitecaps as far as I could see. I supposed that somewhere there would be an opening in the reef through which we could sail. That was invariably the case with all such islands that I had ever known or read about. But I could not see the opening from the boat yet. The lagoon enclosed by the barrier reef seemed to be a quarter or half a mile wide.

The strangest part of the whole scene was that the island itself looked like a whitish gray wall rising straight up from the lagoon for, I suppose, from 150 feet in the lowest part to 300 feet or more without a break. Its top was covered with greenery. It stood up like a solid rampart of stone. From where we were I couldn't see the end of the island, although from my inspection of it the day before I judged it might be six or eight miles long, and as I had sailed past it I estimated it was about the same breadth and nearly circular in shape.

A long distance away on the other side and hard to be seen at all from the level of the sea in the small boat lay other islands, faintly outlined on the far horizon.

I suppose I must have thrashed about somewhat when I brought the dinghy to the wind and changed her course, for presently my little mistress awoke. She sat up instantly, and after the briefest acknowledgment of my good morning and the briefest reply to my inquiry as to how she did she stared at the land toward which we were edging in so far as the wind would allow. It was a bleak, inhospitable looking place, that gray, rough wall, in spite of its infrequent crusting of verdure, I will admit, and she, too, found it so. After she had stared hard at the land she cast an anxious glance to leeward, but, of course, could make nothing of the distant islands there.

"We must get ashore," said I, "as soon as possible. By the time their debauch will have worn off they will either bring the ship here or send the boat after us. Afloat we can do nothing, ashore we may find some concealment and probably make some defense."

"It is a bleak looking spot."

Indeed, not a curl of smoke anywhere betrayed the presence of mankind. Had it not been for depressions in the walls of the cliff here and there which were filled with vegetation, one might have supposed the island to be nothing but a desolate and arid rock, but this reassured me. I thought it strange that there was no mountain or hill rising from beyond the top of the wall, but I was yet to see how strange the island was.

But as it was full morning now I decided that first of all the creature comforts had to be thought of. I offered to relinquish the tiller and prepare something to eat, but Mistress Lucy took that upon herself. What we had was cold, but there was plenty of it, and at my urging she ate heartily. For myself I needed no stimulus but my raging hunger. I wanted her to be in fettle for whatever might happen.

We had not much conversation the while, but I do remember that she did say she had rather be here alone with me than on the ship, whereat my heart pounded, but I had sense enough to say nothing. Her loneliness and helplessness appealed to me. I might have been bold under other circumstances, but not now.

MARRIAGE ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bestick of 287 Washington street, Braintree, observed the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage Saturday evening by entertaining about forty of their friends. There were guests from Randolph and Weymouth, as well as from Braintree and South Braintree. Games, instrumental and vocal music, and dancing kept the guests in a most happy frame of mind. Prizes for those successful in the games, which were of a fun making character were awarded to Mr. G. R. M. Bestick, Laban Barnes and Elmer Orcutt. The children were not forgotten, Hazel and Earl Bestick, Dora Carmichael, Rhoda Trainor of Weymouth and Louise Jacquith of Randolph receiving souvenirs. Mrs. Elmer Orcutt and Mrs. Ralph Dorr of Randolph presided at the piano. Refreshments of fruit punch and fancy crackers, ices and cakes were served.

Fred Carmichael, in a most appropriate manner, presented Mr. and Mrs. Bestick with a dinner set and some table linen. The host was also favored with a unique cake, which was adorned in a specially attractive fashion. The host and hostess were naturally delighted with the gifts presented by their friends and voiced their thanks. The party was a merry one and it was a late hour when it broke up. Mr. Bestick is Braintree's very efficient tree warden and many friends hope that he and his charming wife may enjoy long continued health and prosperity.

TIRES STOLEN.

While trying to account for blood trailing from a side window to the show case, in his bicycle store on Granite street, Thomas Nelson, the proprietor discovered this morning that his premises had been burglarized and that two sets of tires had been stolen during the night. The condition of goods in different parts of the store leads the police to believe that the burglar broke the window with his hand and received several bad gashes. The general appearance of the place this morning indicate that these cuts had bled profusely.

BIG CHANGE IN THE HOLLOW

Old Times Recalled by Razing of Old Buildings

The work of destruction of the old buildings on the east side of Hancock street to make room for the new block for Col. H. L. Kincaide goes merrily on, and in a few days but little will be left of the buildings which occupied the site of what was the first business centre of the city.

One of the most recent buildings torn down was the office building used by Mr. Emerson. This building was originally erected between 1820 and 1830 by Joshua Jones, who used it for a harness shop. At that time it was a one story building. Later the building was occupied by Ensign S. Fellows as a tin shop, by Willard Perry as a grocery, Sam Crane as a restaurant. Ralph Lowe as a harness shop and possibly by other parties.

Later the building was raised up and a lower story added. Then Mr. Emerson came in and has occupied the lower floor as an office and sales room and the upper floor as a harness shop so that the first and last use to which the original building was put was to a harness shop.

The tall shell building between this shop and the blacksmith shop is a more modern building and was always considered as a fire trap although fortunately a fire never started in the building as great care was used.

The old blacksmith shop the next building in line toward Cottage avenue to be torn down is the blacksmith shop which has been used as such for many years. Here the late "Quinn" Wild carried on the blacksmith business for years.

All of the Emerson business has now been moved to the Packard building on Cottage street with the exception of the wheelwright shop. This shop is located across the brook from the Kincaide property and is owned by Henry M. Faxon. This building was originally a barn and was located on Hancock street not far from the residence of Fred F. Green; from which location it was moved some years ago to its present location.

As this building is not on the Kincaide property it will not be torn down at present at least, and Mr. Emerson plans to occupy it for the coming winter months as a wheelwright shop, and possibly longer. Thus one by one are the old buildings disappearing giving way to the march of progress.

Points for Mothers

The Child Beautiful.

No matter what a fond mother declares she wishes the fairy godmother to bestow on her child at its birth, in her heart of hearts she wishes her child to be beautiful. No amount of wishing seems to have any power in the matter, and what the fates decree has to be submitted to. No matter whether the beauty be much or little, it is impossible to add to it, but with care it can be preserved, for, sad to relate, many people spoil their good looks in early childhood through being allowed to form undesirable habits of those funny little ways which are peculiar to the early stages of life.

Who is there who has not reveled in the delight of the pastime which grownups call "gargoyling?" It consists in making the face fascinatingly ugly by stretching the mouth to its fullest extent, pushing the nose up and pulling the ears forward. It is disastrous to the very young, who by this means obtain very premature wrinkles and find their ears permanently outstanding. It should be severely discouraged in young children, and on no account should such antics be rewarded by a smile, no matter how comical the child may look.

Similarly the frowns of bad temper should be avoided, and this can only be done by removing the cause. Temper, whether of the passionate or the sulky variety, is largely a matter of habit, and a very undesirable one, too, but a child must be taken in hand at a very early age if it is to be taught to control its temper. A child's feelings are all on the surface, and it is easily possible to divert the mind to some other subject than that which caused the outburst of temper. Sulkiness generally arises from resentment on the part of an elder. It is extremely infectious, and the parent who sulks with a child need not be astonished if the child shows symptoms of the same complaint.

Another trick of childhood which is also associated with bad temper is the dangerous habit of biting the nails. The ill result, which is apparent to all, is short and ugly finger nails, which can never be made beautiful again, even by the most skillful manicurists. The real danger of the habit, however, lies in the sharpness of the small particles swallowed, which are quite capable of giving rise to an attack of appendicitis.

Connected with the fingers also is the habit of thumb sucking, which commences when the gums are swollen and painful at the time of cutting the teeth. At the earliest signs of thumb sucking the thumb should be taken out and a rubber ring given as a substitute, or, better still, the child should be given a little drop of cold water to drink. It seems hard to check a habit which may soothe and comfort a young child, but there is the future to be considered, and a continuance of the habit leaves its mark in an ugly, pointed thumb and deformed mouth, in which the upper lip and the top teeth are unduly projecting, while the lower parts of the mouth are receding.

The evils arising from sucking a "dummy" resemble those of thumb sucking as far as deformity of the mouth is concerned, and with both there is the evil of overexcited salivary glands through the constant sucking. It would be a good thing if the sale of this injurious article were illegal, as in France.

Nursery Quilts.

Distinctive quilts for the little tots' room are a joy to the children and a delightful task for mothers. They are very expensive if bought and less individual, of course. Here are a few ideas for the homemade designs that will make nursery quilts things to be remembered in after years, besides being present joys.

The flower quilt always holds great attraction for youngsters. If the nursery be papered in daisy paper the carrying out of this idea is one of the easiest things imaginable. On a foundation of silk poplin, or, best of all, unbleached muslin, arrange the daisies in a straight border, the stems growing from a plain band on the edge of the quilt, continuing around the four sides.

To make the daisies, cut an oval four inches long and one inch at its greatest width. Make a pattern of a petal three inches by about three-quarters of an inch. Cut out sixteen of these from white muslin if your background is a color. Make the center yellow in this case. If you are going to have yellow petals the center should be a golden brown.

Arrange the petals around the center—under it—and place the stem under one edge. Sew around the edges without turning in, using the sewing machine or quick running stitches by hand.

This is a very attractive design, the idea being capable of many different treatments in the field of flowers. Poppies, tulips, roses, daffodils, clematis may be used, and one flower quilt has a huge basket, upset, from which are tumbling in confusion dear to the child's heart all kinds of blossoms that spread out to the corners of the quilt. In this pattern all colors of materials are used. The variegated effect is of continuous interest to the little owner.

SHOOK OFF DEATH.

Ordeal Through Which Archdeacon Stuck Once Passed.

Archdeacon Stuck, who climbed Mount McKinley, the great American peak, once had his life saved in a most extraordinary way.

Late one evening, while exploring in the arctic regions, he was unlucky enough to fall through the ice into the water on his way back to camp. He was accompanied by an Eskimo boy in charge of a sledge and a team of dogs, and the boy soon had him out again, but as the thermometer was then about 70 degrees below zero the possibility of saving his life seemed very remote. He was wet through, of course, and before a fire could have been got well alight the chances were that he would have frozen to death.

The resourceful boy thought of a better plan than that. The explorer was already scarcely able to move, but the boy took one of the dogs out of the traces and forced the archdeacon to take its place. Then he lashed the unfortunate man's legs until he was compelled to run, applying his whip mercilessly every time the archdeacon showed signs of flagging.

In this way the boy kept him moving rapidly toward their camp, and by the time they reached it the terrible languor of death that had threatened to overcome the archdeacon had been shaken off.—Pearson's Weekly.

SOOTHING STEINITZ.

Pathetic Scene After Lasker Had Beaten the Old Master.

For thirty years the late William Steinitz beat every player who ventured to oppose him and was at last beaten by a mere youth. I had prophesied that his hour had come, writes Robert J. Buckle in the Chess Amateur, and at Hastings the moment he saw me he rushed in with a redhot attack. "How dare you say Lasker would beat me?" he almost screamed in response to my outstretched hand and attempt at a smile of welcome.

Lasker had actually beaten him, as I had foretold. The crowd looked on for a row. We were in the dining room of the Queen's—a score of masters present. I took his arm and led him outside.

"You had no right to say it," he cried, "and I demand an explanation." He continued to protest until we had reached a quiet corner. "Why did you say it—why did you say it?" he repeated shrilly.

I waited till he had blown off steam, then "Because you were sixty." I said. That softened him. He examined me with his innocent blue eyes.

"A man of twenty-two," I continued, "after a hard day's play is fresh next morning. A man of sixty-two is still brain fagged. You were giving the odds of forty years. It was too much."

A Sunset In Scotland.

It was a sunset of strange tints that evening, a background of clouds of deep violet tipped with crimson. The sky, of the very palest blue, had been turned by the brightness of the sun into a lake of silver, in which floated small fleecy cloudlets of brilliant rose pink, like islets floating in a crystal sea. The rays of the sun behind the purple clouds threw long shafts of dazzling brightness, which tipped the dark background with silver as the sun kisses the petals of a daisy. Every peak in the long range of mountains on the west was rose tipped, but the highest of them all towered clear and cone shaped in the distance, glistening in a shimmering mantle of silver and pale blue, as if the sky had wrapped it round its own cerulean color.—"A Garden of Spices," by A. Keith Fraser.

Do We Dodge Death?

Can we mortals always be trusted to do the right thing? The fear of death is general. Life is sacrificed every hour because the rules of health are not obeyed. Death is the one great monster of dread and from whom all flee. Yet how many safeguard their living in such a way as to avert his coming? The rules of health are violated because of the immunity we feel, but finally the penalty must be paid. No argument is needed to enforce the lesson. Everybody knows it. The rules of right living are clear, explicit. Vice, intemperance, wrong living, overeating as well as overdrinking, continue to pay their tribute to the undertaker and the graveyard.—Leslie's.

Just Like a Man.

"John," she said, "I have an awful pain in my right side. I'm afraid it's appendicitis."

"Are you sure?" he replied, without looking up from his paper.

"John," she wailed a moment later, "it's getting worse."

"Is it?" he asked, still interested in the sporting page.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Fred H. Bishop of Quincy the Progressive nominee in second Councillor district has neglected to file an acceptance and the two men in the field are Guy A. Ham who is the Republican candidate for re-election, and Charles W. Guy of Quincy the Democratic nominee.

Quincy Point residents saw four Italians seining in Town river early this morning and they immediately got in touch with Chief Burrell who lives near by. He summoned the wagon but when the officers reached the launch the net had disappeared. It was raining heavily at the time and the men said they had sailed from Boston before daylight. Yachtsmen say they took desperate chances. The names were taken by the police.

ADAMS SCHOOL DELAY

Whole Trouble Is Sewer Connection

Much Depends On Weather

A visit to the new Adams school building in a driving rain storm to learn the cause of the delay in opening the building revealed the fact that it is actually as has been stated, the sewer connection which is the trouble.

The building itself is situated on high ground on a rock. Of the site but little need be said, other than the site is the one selected by the Adams Parents-Teachers association, who more than any others are interested in the building. Unfortunately however the only way to reach the building is largely over private ways. The nearest accepted streets leading to the building are Bradford and Eliot streets, although Bradford street is only accepted as far as its intersection with Eliot street. From this point it is necessary to continue over the unaccepted part of Bradford street to Madison avenue, unaccepted, thence to the street known as Abigail avenue, which street was accepted as a public way last July under that name.

Another way to reach the building is from Kendrick avenue, an accepted way, but not direct.

The next nearest accepted street to the building is Phipps street, but in order to reach that street from the school building it is necessary to cross private land. Eventually, Abigail avenue will be extended through to Phipps street. Another thing that will come will be a new street running direct from Kendrick avenue across land of the Adams Real Estate Trust, through which a right of way has been given to the school lot.

So much as to the location of the building and its accessibility.

Abigail avenue was accepted and laid out as a public way of the city in the general street construction order last spring, and the funds necessary to build it were provided for in the loan order of $27,000. In order to build this street it was necessary to make some deep cuts, in order to establish a sub-grade, the cuts running from 3 to 6 feet. The building of this street was let out by contract. Several bids were received and the contract awarded to the lowest bidder as it was believed that the city could save money by having the work done by contract, which is doubtless true.

Work on the sewer however had been commenced sometime before that. Connection was made with the main sewer near the corner of Bradford and Eliot streets, and the new sewer laid through Bradford street and Madison avenue to the corner of Abigail avenue. This piece of work was completed some weeks ago but the laying of the sewer could not be completed through Abigail avenue to the building until the sub-grading of that avenue was completed. The contractor building the street, or avenue, found it necessary to blast out solid ledge to get down to sub-grade and this of course took considerable time, work being more or less delayed by the stormy weather, when it was impossible to do much work.

It was useless to try and build the sewer until the sub-grading of the street was completed so that here came the delay. And this is the only delay. Simply that it ws impossible to build the sewer until the street was sub-graded and the blasting and stormy weather delayed this part of the work.

The sub-grading was completed last week and Tuesday morning work was commenced laying the sewer through Abigail avenue to the building, and at the same time the telephone and electric light wires were placed in underground conduits in the sewer trench. With any kind of decent weather the sewer on Abigail avenue would be completed in ten days, but with the weather the past few days it has been simply impossible to do any sewer work. The connection from the building to the street has been laid and everything is ready to connect with the sewer main as soon as it reaches a point opposite the building.

If the Parents-Teachers association can by any hook or crook, prevail on the weather man to hand out some seasonable weather, the delayed work will be completed in a few days and the building opened, and it will not be necessary to forward the petition now being circulated to the Mayor.

WAS DEMENTED.

Thursday afternoon people living on Hayward street and Quincy avenue near the Lincoln school, East Braintree, were terrified by the actions of a semi-nude man who acted strangely. He ran into the cellar of the house at 2 Hayward street and the people notified Chief Hunt and Officer Shay by telephone. The officers captured him after a struggle and placed him in a cell at the Braintree home. He give his name as Daniel Creedon of Quincy Point. Dr. F. H. Gile after an examination pronounced him demented and ordered his removal to the Taunton insane hospital for observation. He was carried there Thursday afternoon.

FIREMEN IN ATTENDANCE

Funeral of C. H. Hayden, Jr., at Bethany Church

The funeral of Charles H. Hayden Jr., one of the oldest members of the fire department, was held Thursday afternoon from the Bethany church and was largely attended. Aside from the many friends of the deceased present there was a delegation from the Quincy Firemens Relief association. There was a profusion of beautiful flowers including a large set piece from the Relief association, which completely covered the front of the pulpit, while on the black covered casket were two large wreaths in the centre of which was the firemans cap which Mr. Hayden had worn.

The services were conducted by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, pastor of the church, who said we were here to take the final farewell of one who for many years had been associated with this church. He knew no fear of death and there was no sadness or special sorrow in his growing weakness as far as he was concerned. The christian fortitude had certified itself and was sufficient for death. He also spoke of his christian fortitude during his illness and death. Death he said was no grim specter standing by his side for he never saw death. He saw life That is what human souls learn by trusting in God. His fortitude was found in the 41th chapter of Isaiah, "Fear not, I am with you." It was this as he grew weaker and weaker sustained his spirit, and he grew stronger and stronger, so that in the end he passed into the other life like one asleep.

During the services the quartette choir sang "Safe in the arms of Jesus" and "Abide with me."

The burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the bearers being Edmund Hayden, Arthur C. Merritt, Charles Martin, M. C. McDonald, Alex Robinson and James Malone.

Three Members Have Passed Away During Year

The annual roll call of the George L. Gill Rebekah lodge was held in Odd Fellows' hall, Thursday evening. Of the total membership, 89 responded. During the past year the following members have passed away: Miss Loretta Lowe, Joseph Warren Hayden and Mrs. Emma Lark.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions on the death of Mrs. Lark which occurred Tuesday. Reports showed the lodge to be in a flourishing condition and that it has had a healthy growth the past year.

The visitors of the evening were: Deputy Grand Master, Mrs. Stella Adams of Roxbury and suite, which included Mrs. J. Rand of Allston, grand marshal; Mrs. J. Gordon, grand secretary; Mrs. J. Dukeshore of Boston, grand treasurer. Past Grand Charles F. Harwood of Indianapolis, Ind., was present and made a short speech as did Sam Wood, Jr., representative from the Grand Encampment, who recently returned from the Sovereign Grand Lodge.

Preceding the business meeting a roast beef supper, piping hot, was served. The hall was decorated with flags of all nations, Japanese lanterns and parasols. The favors were miniature parasols of paper which were made by Mrs. Sadie Wood.

The committee in charge of the supper included Mrs. K. Prout, chairman; Mrs. Lottie Barron, Mrs. Addie Dewhurst, Mrs. Sadie Walker, Miss Grace Welch, Mrs. Alice Goodrich, Mrs. Sadie Wood, Mrs. Annie Pushee, Mrs. Mary Hall, Mrs. Maude Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sylvester and Miss Ethel Jones.

GARDNER CLUB INSTALLATION.

The officers of the Gardner Club of the Christ Episcopal Church were installed Thursday evening with appropriate ceremonies, following which the new initiation ritual was exemplified on James Smith, Stanley Ross, Samuel May, Harold Bishop and Fred Nightingale, new members. A most pleasing feature of the evening was the banjo selections and monologues by Erastus Osgood which were well received.

The annual party of the club, the premier social event of their season will be given in the parish house on the evening of Oct. 30 and all feel that the success of past years will be surpassed. The new officers:

President—Henry Boutelier.

CANDIDATES ARE HEARD

At Meeting of the Democratic City Committee

Candidates and others attended the open meeting of the Democratic City commitee in Electa hall Thursday evening.

John J. McDevitt, who is under suspension from the Senate, pledged his support to David W. Murray of Hyde Park who defeated him for renomination. He said city politics should be discussed by the committee and candidates in executive session and with reporters barred.

William Kelly, who was recently discharged from the Quincy City Hospital, presided and thanked the voters for his election as state committeeman.

Richard Olney, last years Democratic congressional candidate, spoke on the operation of the new tariff and the efforts of the administration to solve the currency problem.

J. Raphael McCoole spoke of his experience with the office of register of probate.

David W. Murray in a lengthy address particularly mentioned his intention of working for a slice of the $5,000,000 which will be appropriated for the development of Boston harbor, in addition to the $9,000,000 now in the hands of the Port Directors. The Quincy shores are properly speaking part of Boston Harbor.

Cornelius M. Duggan, in a short speech, touched on his representative fight in the Sixth Norfolk district, and in speaking of Michael T. Sullivan who is a candidate for reelection read an endorsement from a Boston paper. In closing Mr. Duggan read a poem.

Dr. John H. Ash said he was in accord with all the arguments presented for Democratic sucess, but when requested to make his position on the mayoralty question known he said he considered it inopportune.

Edward J. Fegan called particular attention to the organization of the Walsh Club in Union hall tonight.

Other speakers were Representative John J. Gallagher of Milton, Edward P. Histon, John F. Bruton Edward J. Parker, L. P. Noonan and Jeremiah O'Leary.

Under the head of unfinished business the following communication dated April 21, 1913, was read:

"William Kelly, Esq.,

"Dear sir:—I noticed in the Quincy Patriot a report of a meeting of the city committee in which I was mentioned as a possible candidate for mayor at the fall election. I accepted the nomination last fall for two reasons; first, that the Democratic party had no other candidate; and secondly, that I was curious as to whether the citizens of the city really wished a busines administration. The first condition no longer exists and my curiosity has been satisfied as to the second. Under no consideration would I accept a nomination for any office, and I am writing you this to corroborate what I told you last fall after the election."

Yours very truly,
(Signed) James H. Penniman.

COUNCILMAN PASSES AWAY

William Farquharson Was Serving His First Year

The flag on City Hall is at half mast today on account of the death of Councilman William Farquharson who passed away at his home 75 Independence avenue, a few minutes after midnight. Mr. Farquharson has been ill for many weeks his sickness being due to what is known as stone cutters' consumption. Early in the year when Dr. Friedman visited America with his tuberculosis cure Councilman Farquharson went to Providence, R. I. and took the cure. For a time he believed that he was being benefitted by the cure, but he soon began to fail again.

During the summer he went to New Hampshire, hoping that the mountain air would benefit him, and he for a time thought that it did. He however returned to Quincy early this month nd was in attendance at the last meeting of the City Council. A week ago he took to his bed and as noted above passed away a few minutes after midnight.

Councilman Farquharson was born in Scotland, June 29, 1859. He spent his youthful days on a farm, coming to America and Quincy, April 14, 1880. Soon after coming to Quincy he found employment at the polishing mill of McKenzie & Paterson, the first firm to introduce granite polishing in Quincy. Remaining with that firm for two years he went to Biddeford, Me., where he became the foreman of a large polishing plant. Later he returned to Quincy and again entered the employ of McKenzie & Paterson, later taking a position as foreman of the International Granite Co. whose plant was located where the Fore River shipyard now is. He remained there for nine years and in September, 1894, he formed a co-partnership with M. J. McInnis under the firm name of the Eagle Polishing Co. which company is still in operation.

He was one of the oldest members of Clan McGregor, O. S. C., becoming affiliated with that organization 32 years ago, joining the order before he became of age. He was also a member of the Royal Arcanum for 13 years and treasurer of the local lodge for 12 years. In addition to these orders he was a member of the Quincy Board of Trade, and the Scots Charitable society

In political affairs he has always been a Republican, and for many years served on the Republican Ward and City committee of Ward Three. He became a candidate for the City Council at the election of 1912 and was elected receiving a very large vote. During the present City Council he has served on the standing committees of Sewers and Fire Department.

Funeral services will be held from his late home, Sunday, at 2 'oclock, and will be attended by the organizations with which he was affiliated as well as by members of the City Council who have been notified by Mayor Stone to meet at City Hall at 1 o'clock.

One of the last requests made by Councilman Farquharson was that as many of the members of Clan McGregor as possible should attend his funeral services in the full regalia of the order, and in compliance with this request the clan will turn out with full ranks at the funeral services Sunday afternoon.

Some of the railroads are willing to dissolve their combinations voluntarily, but doubt is expressed if it will be safe for the government to allow them to obey the law.

A drunken motorist in New York the other day having killed a man, it is popularly believed that he should be fined at elast $10 and ocsts.

Walter Johnson is to get $12,500 for pitching for Washington next summer. but no one begrudges money spent for the necessaries of life.

Artist Knowles having got back from living the primitive life in the Maine woods, it is hoped the servant won't keep him waiting more than five or ten minutes mornings for his shaving water.

If the government takes over the telegraph, it is hoped they don't operate it in conjunction with the post offices. That would spoil the chances for every town to get another government building.

Ex-President Taft declined to go up in an aeroplane. It is fortunate for him that he isn't running for office.

Although the American Bankers were heartily entertained at Boston, they were so impolite as to ask to see the collateral whenever any one asked to borrow any money.

President Wilson visited in the hospital the boy whom his automobile ran over. The usual proceeding is to leave a fellow in the road, as perhaps some other car may come along and finish him up.

Side by side on the first page of the Daily Ledger of Thursday were two important news articles. One from the School department represented that the per capita cost of schools in Quincy was among the LOWEST in the Metropolitan district; the other quoted figures showing that Quincy's debt per capita was among the HIGHEST of the Massachusetts cities. It is not easy to reconcile these apparently contradicting statements. Possible per capita comparisons have no value; a poor city like a poor man cannot expend as much per capita on its children as a rich city or a rich man.

Usually when the cost of schools is presented by the School authorities, the cost of school buildings and repairs are not included. But it makes considerable difference what kind of buildings are used.

The city of Quincy has been generous for several years in expenditure for school buildings. With the exception of the "old Adams," to be replaced with a "new Adams" next month, ALL the 14 schoolhouses of Quincy have been erected since 1886, and eight of them since 1900. The valuation of the buildings together with land and furnishings are given below with date of occupancy:

	Year.	Value.
High	1907	$187,000
Old Adams	1855	26,000
Atherton Hough	1911	27,000
Coddington	1909	83,300
Cranch	1900	42,000
Gridley Bryant	1896	39,500
John Hancock	1886	42,000
Lincoln	1892	40,300
Mass. Fields	1896	41,075
Montclair	1912	45,300
Quincy	1907	73,000
Washington	1903	57,950
Willard	1891	116,200
Wollaston	1912	87,550
New Adams	1913	87,550
Old school lots		9,000
		$1,009,725

Here are public school buildings to the value of a million dollars which the city of Quincy is now using. It is largely because of new schoolhouses that Quincy's debt per capita is so large. Until the School Committee decrease the per capita debt, they cannot expect that there will be a large increase in the per capita appropriation for school teachers and school maintenance. When the cost of buildings is included, Quincy's expenditure per capita for schools is large.

Spending.

Spending is merely puffing out your personality. It is like the trailing feathers to a peacock—like the long train to a fashionable woman. Why does the barefoot negro boy acquire four yellow dogs? They add to his personality. Why do we all—shopgirls and plumbers, fashionable literary hacks and gentlemanly financial pirates—spend every cent we get, honestly and dishonestly, wisely and otherwisely? We stretch out as far as we can, and vanity, my friend, is the only balloon that never bursts. Why does the stag grow horns until it can hardly make its way through the forest? And why did Absalom wear his locks so long that they caught in an oak tree and held him until Joab and his men came up? Vanity! Vanity! In some tribes they worship the fat man, who has put much food under his glistening skin. Among other tribes they worship you for the servants you employ without using, for the food you purchase without eating. To spend to use is vulgar; to spend to waste is the only admirable and admired spending. Finis!—Walter E. Wegl in Saturday Evening Post.

Necessities of Life.

A merchant in the West Thirties takes pride in selling novelties, tricks and puzzles—things that wiggle or waggle or wuggle or woggle. He buys instanter those clever mechanical inventions, toys and devices. They are originated daily and die perhaps as quickly. You know the kind. When you see them on the sidewalks you stop and look, then dig your hand in your pocket and say, "That's pretty clever. I'll just take one of those home." Then you make it wiggle or waggle or wuggle or woggle for the family, and the next day the spring is broken.

How to display these things and make a department of novelties was a poser. Finally, however, he lumped them in one corner of his establishment and hung over them this description:

"These are things you don't know you are oblized to have until you see them." And standing room in that corner is at a premium.—New York Post.

A Safe Topic.

In his book "The Balkan War" Mr. Philip Gibbs, the war correspondent, says that the official regulations for war correspondents who were sent out to the Balkans were appallingly severe.

Mr. Gibbs found that he was forbidden to describe the disposition of troops, to give the names of generals, the names and numbers of the wounded, the success or failure of Bulgarian troops, the state of the soldiers' health, the conditions of the climate, and so on. When the censor had told him all this Mr. Gibbs asked him politely:

"Will you tell me, sir, if there is anything about which we shall be allowed to write?"

The censor thought deeply for a moment and then answered quite gravely:

"There is much interest in Bulgarian literature."

"Perhaps," Mr. Gibbs suggested sarcastically, "I may also be permitted to describe the song of the birds?"

"By all means," said the censor cordially.

Official Cats.

Nowadays there do not appear to be any human rat catchers on the establishment of the civil service, but some government offices maintain cats for this work. At the general postoffice, for example, there is a staff of cats charged with the duty of protecting his majesty's mails from rats. In return they are provided, out of the public purse, with free board and lodging. The staff of the Deptford victualing yard includes cats. In France cats are specially trained for government employment. To fit them for service among military stores they are at first sent for one or two voyages on a warship. If they prove equal to killing the rats always found in the holds of large ships they are promoted to a shore billet.—London Standard.

Drops and Minims.

Drops vary in size according to the conditions under which they are produced. Some are large and some are small, some long and some short. The drop of the druggist is called a "minim," of which 480 go to make a fluid ounce and 76,800 to make a gallon. An actual experiment in filling a one ounce measure will probably show that 400 drops makes a fluid ounce. The average drop is 20 per cent larger than the minim.

Pompey's Example.

Pompey, being commissioner for sending grain to Rome in time of dearth, when he came to the sea found it very tempestuous and dangerous, insomuch as those about him advised him by no means to embark, but Pompey said, "It is of necessity that I go, not that I live."—Lord Bacon's "Apothegms."

Balked.

"There are some things," said the man with the high brow, "that money won't buy."

"I s'pose there are," replied the one with the overlapping chin, "but there's no use tryin' to use 'em to get an extension of your credit."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Lincoln's Desire.

Die when I may, I want it said of me by those who know me best that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow.—Abraham Lincoln.

To travel hopefully is better than to arrive and the true success is to labor.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

MORE LIVES LOST

Storm Along New England Coast Has Caused Great Damage

Highland Light, Mass., Oct. 17.—Four more lives are believed to have been lost in the gale which has been sweeping the coast at an average speed of sixty miles an hour for several days.

The men were aboard the barge J. B. Thomas of New York, which the tug Thomas J. Scully left at anchor five miles off Pamet river Tuesday night, and which is now believed to have gone down.

The Thomas rode out the gale for twenty-four hours without trouble, but later it was seen that the donkey engine was at work, and it was apparent the craft was leaking.

The early morning patrol discovered the deck house of a barge on the beach and later a metalic life boat bearing the name "J. B. Thomas" was cast up on shore.

The gale, which began on Monday, had taken a toll up to today of seven lives and five vessels. Most of the accidents were off Cape Cod, the record being:

Barge J. B. Thomas, wrecked off Wellfleet. Four men probably lost.

Barge Oakland, wrecked off Truro. Two men lost.

Seine boat, wrecked off Sandwich. One man lost.

Barge Sumner R. Mead, wrecked off Wellfleet. All saved.

Schooner Henry D. May, wrecked off Chatham. All saved.

ASSAULT AND SUICIDE

New Bedford Man Shoots Wife Three Times and Kills Himself

New Bedford, Mass., Oct. 16.—Because she refused to live with him, Louis Vahoone, 52 years old, of 117 Bowditch street, shot his wife Ida three times and later turned the revolver upon himself. He died instantly.

His wife is at St. Luke's hospital with a bullet in her head and one in her breast. She is not expected to live. The shooting occurred at the wife's boarding place.

BURGLARS ARE BUSY IN SUMMER HOMES

Property Ammounting to Thousands of Dollars Stolen

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 17.—Property worth thousands of dollars probably has been stolen in a series of breaks in summer cottages here since they were closed for the season. Although the houses have been closed for a week or more, the furnishings were left, and in many places it is feared that valuables may have been packed and left awaiting removal to the winter residences of their owners. No estimate of the loss can be made.

Considerable damage was done to the houses. In most cases entrance was effected by jimmying a rear window, though in one or two cases the glass was broken in the front door and the lock turned.

FIGHT OVER MEAL TICKET

Woman and Girl Wounded When Bullets Fly In Street

Providence, Oct. 17.—A woman and a girl were shot in the arm and scores of other persons had narrow escapes from flying bullets when two men, who refused to pay for what they had eaten, opened fire on Frank Lappet, proprietor of a Dorrance street restaurant, and were brought to bay by a crowd of 1000 persons in front of city hall.

For fifteen minutes the strangers held the crowd at bay with their revolvers. Two shots were fired into the crowd, which formed an opening, through which one of the men escaped, only to be captured half an hour later. He refused to give his name, although claiming to live in Uxbridge, Mass. The other man was captured by the police reserves. He gave his name as Salvatore De Rosa.

CUTTERS ARE SAFE

Service of Relief Vessels Not Necessary In Arctic Region

Washington, Oct. 17. — Revenue cutter service officials received word from Alaska that the service of relief vessels on account of ice in the Arctic circle will be unnecessary and that the cutters up there are safe.

The despatch added that the schooner Transit, carrying four or five men, was crushed and driven ashore near Point Barrow, after landing stores and is probably a total loss. There was no loss of life.

Kill Man Who Attacked Wife

Chicago, Oct. 17.—William M. Keith shot and killed William Paul, a butcher, to avenge an attack on Mrs. Keith. After the shooting Keith surrendered to the police and tendered a statement signed by Mrs. Keith accusing the slain man of attacking her.

Canadian Pacific Manager Arrested

Vienna, Oct. 17.—Samuel Altman, local manager of the Canadian Pacific railroad, was arrested charged with promoting emigration of men liable for military service in the Austrian army.

Lockout Averted in England

Manchester, Eng., Oct. 17.—The Bolton spinners' council and the strikers of the Bee Hive mill signed the terms of a settlement, and a lockout in the cotton trade is thus averted.

FOREIGNERS FEAR THEIR SAFETY

Diplomatic Corps In Capital Ask For 5000 Troops

MORE WARSHIPS ALSO WANTED

Provisional President Huerta Tells Why He Imprisoned Members of Congress—Says They Were Furnishing Arms to Rebels—Explains Why He Did Not Answer Wilson's Note

Mexico City, Oct. 17.—Diplomatic representatives of foreign nations in the Mexican capital at their conference, it was learned, made formal demand upon Provisional President Huerta to keep 5000 federal troops in this city for the protection of foreigners. This was in addition to the action of the diplomatic representatives of five nations—Great Britain, Spain, France, Cuba, Norway and Guatemala—who requested their governments to send warships to Mexico in order that safety of the legations might be assured in the event of an uprising against the dictator. The United States already has a flotilla off Vera Cruz, and Germany has dispatched two cruisers.

General Huerta's explanation of why he has not replied to the unequivocal note of President Wilson, according to one of the dictator's close advisers, is that he did not receive the note officially.

Americans here believe that Huerta, though he has relieved himself of embarrassment by saying he did not get the Wilson note "officially," nevertheless will respect it and not force a crisis in Mexico's relations with the United States.

The situation is strained to a great degree, but there are those who refuse to admit it is critical. Huerta sympathizers say the dictator is justified in what he has done and that if he be let alone Mexico will soon have a fair election that will clarify the atmosphere and vindicate Huerta.

It appeared that the provisional president is likely soon to be the whole Mexican government. Already without a congress, he is apt to be without a judiciary. Four of the fifteen judges of the supreme court have resigned and it is said the others will follow.

Huerta's explanation of his high-handed action in jailing 110 members of congress was made by one of his close adherents. He said the deputies would not be harmed and would be liberated as soon as a new congress is elected. This election now is set for Oct. 26. Huerta dissolved congress and imprisoned the lawmakers, the statement said, because he had evidence that the deputies were actively aiding the rebels by passing arms to them.

Huerta has said that honest elections will be held at any cost and that he looks to the new congress to ratify all of his actions, including the dissolution of congress and what he had done since.

JUDGE VINDICATES TANGO

Says It Is Perfectly Moral, but May Be Vulgarized

Cleveland, O., Oct. 17.—The tango dance has been vindicated in Cleveland. Hereafter, by court recognition, it will be perfectly regular and permissible.

Following the completion of evidence in the case of Asa Anderson, dancing teacher, against City Dance Hall Inspector Myers, Judge Willis Vickery of the common pleas court ruled that the tango, as taught by Anderson, is perfectly moral and can be so danced.

In giving his opinion, Judge Vickery said:

"Every beautiful thing may be vulgarized. But because some dancing is vulgar we would not bar all dancing."

CONFESSES MURDER

Convict In Indiana Reformatory Says He Killed Girl In Texas

Indianapolis, Oct. 17.—A convict in the state reformatory at Jeffersonville has confessed that he murdered Florence Brown, the Dallas, Tex., stenographer, who on July 28 last was found in an office there with her throat cut, according to D. C. Peyton, superintendent of the reformatory.

The official refuses to make public the name of the prisoner, but declared that it had been definitely established that the man, who was a paroled prisoner, was in Dallas the day of the crime.

An investigation is now being made because it is believed that other persons were implicated.

Tied Horse to Tree to Die

Marlboro, Mass., Oct. 17.—Left tied to a tree to die of starvation and exposure by the man who stole the animal on Aug. 24, the body of a horse was found in a clump of bushes not far from Marlboro. State authorities are investigating the case. A reward of $100 has been offered for the arrest of the thief.

"Yes. He goes once a year, whether he thinks he needs it or not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS.

The first degree was exemplified on a class of candidates at the meeting of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, Thursday evening, by Grand Knight Michael T. Walsh, assisted by the other officers. Completed plans for the barn dance to be given Oct. 31 were accepted. It was announced that Special Supreme Agent Sherlock, who is making a tour of the councils, will be here on Nov. 23 when there will be a joint meeting of Quincy and Ave Maria councils. Past Grand Knight Edward D. Barrett, who was one of the three new district deputies added to the official family of Louis Watson, state deputy, was presented in his new capacity and received hearty applause.

RETLAHNIER CLUB DANCE.

The dancing party of the Retlahnier Club in Union hall Thursday evening was a social success. During the evening songs were rendered by Miss Lillian Donovan and William McDonnell. Music was furnished by Mazzola's orchestra. The committee consisted of Joseph Garrity, Michael Saville, William McDonnell and Nicholas Reinhalter. Refreshments were served.

—Candidly speaking, if we were working for a concern, whether a corporation, a firm or an individual, and were no better satisfied than some of these men are who are working for the Boston Elevated Railway, if we accept their own testimony, we should quit the service and look for a job somewhere else. We would consider that the more manly and honorable thing to do.—Waltham Free Press.

OFFICIALS FIGHT IN $5000 DEATH SUIT

Claimed They Were Responsible For Boy's Death

Fitchburg, Oct. 17.—Steps to fight the action against them by Alfred Gaudette of Fitchburg in the Worcester superior court for $5000 damages for the death of his 12-year-old son, Ronaldo, in the Lawrence bathhouse disaster on June 30, have been taken by Superintendent of Public Property, John O. Battershall and Airdeman Alfred Bradbury of Lawrence.

Gaudette's attorney, M. L. Lizotte of Fitchburg, maintains that the two defendants, and not the city, are responsible for the death. Sweeney & Cox, attorneys for Battershall and Bradbury, applied for a bill of particulars from Gaudette, as administrator, to give reasons for the claim that it was their duty to keep the bathhouses in repair.

WOULD REPEAL TREATY

Martine Says Hay-Pauncefote Pact Interferes With Too Many Rights

Washington, Oct. 17. — Senator Martine of New Jersey urged the senate to recommend repeal of the Hay-Pauncefote Panama treaty with Great Britain ... interferes with too many American rights.

He said he had received many protests that the tariff bill's 5 percent shipping rebate was a violation of the terms of the treaty. The senator added that he preferred a repeal of the treaty rather than a repeal of the 5 percent rebate in the tariff law, and predicted that the United States would have the best of the argument if foreign countries tried to make commercial reprisals because of the 5 percent rebate.

"If Germany should elect to try it on us," he said, "we would shut off her supplies of cotton, copper and phosphate. To Great Britain we would give the same medicine. Should South America throw down the gauntlet we could shut off their coffee and rubber for a little while and ruin would stare them in the face. Japan needs our cotton, and besides this we are her best market. No senator or citizen wants commercial war or any other kind of war, but other nations grant important favors to their industries."

TREMONT TEMPLE.

That the motion picture drama has cut a big figure in the theatrical world is evidenced by the astonishing success achieved by "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's wonderful story now on the eve of the 8th week of its engagement at the Tremont Temple. The production is absorbingly interesting and rings true to the narrative of this universally read novel. These pictures are not merely an enjoyable entertainment. They permit a wider familiarity with a world-famous story. They should be seen by everybody. To those who have read the book the production will prove doubly interesting for the season that most of the interest contained in the book is admirably sustained in the pictures.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, the most talked of woman in the world, surrounded by a company of seventy-five players, including Jack Clifford, Carmelo Ponzila, Bernard and Weston and Swartz Brothers, comes to the Shubert Theatre, Boston, October 20th for twelve performances. Mrs. Thaw is the central figure in "Mariette" a musical divertisement, the Alhambra (London) and Folies Marigny (Paris) success from the pen of Maurice Volny. In addition to her role in "Mariette," Evelyn assisted by Jack Clifford, presents the dances with which she made her debut at the London Hippodrome and Hammersteins, after six years in seclusion. Daily matinees will be the rule at the Shubert during Mrs. Thaw's engagement.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"Over Night" is one of the most successful of recent farces. For production at the Castle Square next week John Craig has secured it, and it promises a week of overwhelming laughter. "Over Night" tells the story of two newly-wedded couples who begin what they expect is to be their honeymoon by taking a daylight trip up the Hudson River by steamboat. The bridegrooms are old college chums, but the brides have never met. The big husband of the one and the little wife of the other are left ashore as the boat leaves the pier at Poughkeepsie, and then the complications begin. The fellow passengers of the two left aboard persist in looking upon them as husband and wife, and this makes the fun fly even faster. In short, "Over Night" is all laughs. The cast will be carefully selected for the purpose of bringing out the full amount of the play, and with Mr. Carleton, Mr. Meek, Miss Colcord and Miss Olsson as the newly wedded couples, it is certain to prove the humorous sensation of the season at the Castle Square.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"Bought and Paid For" has been a long time coming to Boston, but that it is a play well worth waiting for was demonstrated to the full satisfaction of two crowded audiences at the Majestic theatre last Monday. The play is decidedly the best that has yet come from the prolific pen of its author, George Broadhurst. It is also one of the best of its type that has been written by anybody. If its type is not that of the highest in modern drama, it is certainly that of the most prevalent, and apparently, that of the most popular. The type that has to do with social relations of the sexes and it delivers a telling "dramatic punch." It is popular because it is both human and humorous. The cast includes the favorites who were seen in this play for a year and a half in William A. Brady's Playhouse in New York, and among them is Frank Craven, who originated the role of Jimmie Gilley. It does not seem possible that anyone else could play the part so perfectly. The usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees are given.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

On next Monday George Arliss will begin the last week of his engagement at the Plymouth theatre, Boston. Mr. Arliss will positively make his farewell appearance, in this brilliant comedy, on Saturday night, October 25. His bookings will take him to the western part of the country where the play has not yet been seen. Therefore those who have not witnessed the magnetic charms of Parker's masterpiece will have eight more opportunities. On Monday, October 27, the Henry Jewett Players will open an engagement at this theatre. This company, which is newly organized and incorporated in accordance with the laws of Massachusetts, is in no sense a "stock" organization. On the contrary, it is a high class producing company and may be classed in a similar way as the famous Irish Players and Miss Horniman's company. Henry Jewett, its director and leading spirit, is a well known actor of more than 30 years' stage experience. The opening attraction will be a comedy drama, written by Florence J. Lewis, a Radcliffe college graduate, entitled "Let's Go A' Gardening." Miss Lewis has succeeded in writing an interestingly novel play with the "Forward to the Land Movement" as the theme.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Good shows are the rule at the Kincaide theatre but the one now being presented is extra good; in fact it's much too good to miss.

Little Nemo, the equilibrist, proved a very pleasing entertainer, and his series of balancing stunts well merited the great applause he received.

Froley, Hoff and Rex presented a character sketch that was highly humorous and greatly enjoyed.

Marks and Rutter with their songs and dances were well received. "A scream from start to finish" is certainly true of the comedy playlet, presented by the Four Howards. They are artists of exceptional ability, and their skit "The Wrong Mr. Howard" was fun fast and furious all the way through.

The pictures too are mighty good.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The Board of Registrars added 28 women and seven men to the voting list at Ellsworth hall Wednesday evening. It is expected that there will be a large registration of women before the town election because of the interest in the school committee question. Registration closes Oct. 25 when the board will meet at the Town Hall from noon until 10 P. M.

Politics in East Milton is quiet although there is considerable local pride connected with the campaign of Representative John J. Gallagher who is candidate for re-election.

Mrs. William F. Moers of Church place, who is at the Quincy City Hospital recovering from an operation for appendicitis is reported as doing well.

William Graham of State street is at the Convalescent home with typhoid fever and is considered out of danger.

Mrs. S. F. Mudgett of Adams street is at the Milton Hospital and is seriously ill.

Joseph Driscoll of Churchhills lane is slowly recovering from an attack of typhoid fever. He is at his home.

Chairman Henry S. Barnes of the board of selectmen is confined to his home with illness but his physicians expect that he will soon recover.

The School Committee may be asked to pass on the question of allowing the modern dances to be taught at the dancing classes that will be conducted by the senior class of Milton High school this winter. At the annual meeting preparations were made for a class, to be started in December, and although the kind of dancing to be taught was not discussed several members of the class intend to ask for a ruling by the school committee.

The officers of the senior class of the Milton High school were chosen this week and are Palfrey Mathers, president; Miss Helen Cross, vice president; Miss Leita Sawyer, treasurer.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hecker of Huntington road are the parents of a daughter, born this week. Both mother and child are doing well.

Four new alleys have been installed in the Cunningham gym, making a total of eight in all. Bowlers are commencing to complete their plans for the formation of an eight team gym league. It has been suggested that the gym be represented in one of the Quincy leagues.

Milton High school football, team, as well as other teams in Boston and vicinity, have been obliged to abandon practice the past week because of weather conditions. The squad has given what inside work was necessary but some of the players have softened up. The layoff may interfere with the success of the season which opened under most auspicious circumstances.

The Board of Health, while making an investigation of the typhoid fever cases in Milton, are not alarmed because only a normal number of cases have appeared. The situation this year is not as serious as last when after a long investigation they found victims had been drinking water coming from a polluted spring.

This Might Be American.

What are known in these parts as "the beautifiers" were to arrive in the morning, says a correspondent in the Manchester Guardian. The house had already been got into a state of intense discomfort. The head of the household, after arguing heatedly with the landlord to induce him to do the house through, now bewailed inwardly his too complete success. However, it had to be faced, and the next question was, Would the painters come to time? At daylight the next morning there was a thunderous knocking at the door. The head of the house rejoiced, for he knew that now in a week his home would be habitable again. He heard the servant go down and open the door. A minute later there came a tap at the bedroom door.

"If you please, sir, it's the foreman painter."

"Well, he knows what to do. Tell him to start on any of the downstairs rooms."

"He's called to say, sir, that you can rely on him starting Monday next certain."

The Pelican and Its Pouch.

Among the curiosities of nature must be reckoned the pouch of the pelican, which serves equally well as a net with which to scoop up fish and as a bag to convey food to its young. When not in use the bird can contract its pouch so that it is barely discernible, but when it is fully distended it will hold two gallons of water. When the pelican is hunting for food it flies slowly about twenty feet above the surface of the water, scanning its depths for any sign of its prey. As soon as a fish is seen there is a sudden folding of a pair of wings, a downward plunge with the speed of an arrow head first into the sea, the unerring marksman reappearing in a moment and floating on the waves long enough to reveal a glimpse of a fish gliding down its capacious gullet and to shake the water from its disheveled plumage.

Better Than Gold.

Gold is generally looked on as the last word in costliness, but, as a matter of fact, there are more metals dearer than gold than there are cheaper. The number of known metals is above seventy. Iridium, for instance, is three times as expensive as gold. Osmium is another metal much dearer than gold. It is by far the heaviest of all known substances, being more than twenty-two times as heavy as water. This metal has the peculiar property of being able to stand without melting the most intense heat known. Palladium, which is twice as costly as gold, is just the reverse. It is quite easy to make palladium vanish in steam. Being of a white, silvery color and untarnishable, it is used for the division marks on scales and delicate scientific instruments.—London Answers.

When the British Retreated.

One of the speakers before the banquet of the Massachusetts society of the Sons of the American Revolution told of an experiment which he made several years ago. He first consulted historical records and ascertained the exact time of day that the British left for Lexington. He then started to go over the same ground. From a fast walk he soon found it necessary to break into a run and then a sprint. Then he found himself getting so far behind time that he had to take a trolley car. He left Lexington at the time of day that the British left, and, although they are said to have reached Charlestown at 7 o'clock in the evening, he did not get there until after 7:30, thus proving that the British beat the time of the modern trolley cars.—Boston Traveler.

The Parrot's Threat.

Among the countless presents sent to Victoria by her subjects early in her reign was a parrot from a bird fancier at Bristol: "Poll was too shy on her arrival at court to speak, but when Victoria, struck with the beautiful plumage and fine symmetry of the newly arrived guest, entered, with great condescension, into conversation with her, Poll's shyness wore off, and she suddenly screamed, 'If you don't send £20 I'll go back.' The queen sent the £20—'an inducement to all teachers to impart profitable instruction to their pupils.' "—"Married Life of Queen Victoria."

Pretty Lazy.

The very laziest man recently encountered conducts a shoe store in a little town. A woman entered his shop one day and said she wanted to buy a pair of shoes. The lazy man, who was sitting on a box at one end of his establishment, looked at her, yawned wearily, and then said: "I caint wait on you today. Come in some time when I'm standin' up."—Argonaut.

A Tale For Philatelists.

A story of the late Mr. Stanley Gibsons, the famous stamp dealer, is told in the London Times. A West Indian postmaster once returned his money order, stating that the stamp he had ordered did not exist, but the letter containing this statement was prepaid with a copy of the stamp in question.

NAMED BY MISTAKE.

That Is What Happened to Three of Vermont's Towns.

It is not often that a town is named by mistake, but about 150 years ago this thing happened—not to one town, but to three towns in Vermont. At that time a grant of land was made by New Hampshire to some Connecticut settlers. This tract then, as now, was divided into three townships—Burlington, on the hillside of Lake Champlain; Colchester, just north, and Williston, east. The three towns were chartered on the same day, and it was at this time that the names were mixed.

The Burling family took up their land in the north section (Colchester), and it seems to be true that their name was to have been given the town, so that it should have been called Burlington. Other settlers took up the eastern portion (Williston), and the rest remained in the part by the lake (Burlington). Among these last was the Willis family, and there is evidence that they expected to call the city Williston. However, there was so much confusion in the entering of the records that the town where the Burlings settled was called Colchester, the town of the Willis family was named Burlington, while the town to the east was called Williston. And so they have remained to this day.—Ladies' Home Journal.

ORIGIN OF BLACKMAIL.

The Term Was Born of Outlawry on the Scottish Border.

The etymology of the expression "blackmail" is historically interesting. It appears to have its origin on the Scottish border and dating from times when frequent political feuds between the then two kingdoms of the British Islands tacitly justified a sort of perennial terrestrial buccaneering as between borderers of each realm.

Many of these were outlaws on both sides of the border. Their neighboring victims to save their cattle from being lifted sometimes compounded for safety by an annual payment as insurance to the bandits. This fee not only gave them immunity, but entailed them to protect them from rival freebooters. It was their "mail," or "protection." The "mail" coach was so named because it had its armed guard with loaded blunderbuss on the dickey.

But the mail paid by border farmers was not for honest royal protection, but for guardianship by thieves, and hence was "black" mail, the color of black being typical of what was nefarious, whether in art or in guardianship, while the guardian of this stamp was known as the "blackguard" of the district. The last named latter day term of reproach seems to have obtained its expression originally as here described.—London Field.

Marry and Part For a Year.

Among the many peculiar customs prevalent among the people of Central America is that of parting for one year after the marriage ceremony has been solemnized. This custom has prevailed among the Jarnos from time immemorial. There is no courtship allowed to be carried on between the parties prior to the wedding. When a man selects a woman he obtains the consent of the parents on both sides, and if this is given they are at once married. The reason, however, for their not living together as man and wife for one year after marriage is in order to permit of the parties visiting and staying with their respective friends in different parts of the country, which is a customary thing and occupies the time specified. Ninety-nine out of a hundred of these marriages turn out well.

Ways of Burmese Beauties.

Instead of a coming out party as we know it, the Burmese girl's entrance into society begins when she has her ears pierced. As soon after this as she feels inclined she selects a husband and goes to live in a home of her own. The home is provided by the man, but it becomes his wife's as soon as they are married. All women, young and old, are addicted to the use of tobacco. The women seem to prefer the very large size black cigar. Often one meets a woman on the streets of a village with one of these huge cigars in her mouth and two or three more stuck in the holes of each ear.

The Cosmic Law.

There is neither waste nor economy in nature. Energy is as indestructible as matter—no trace of waste anywhere, no economy. Nature does not use a fraction more than necessary nor less. The two words "waste" and "economy" cannot apply to the stupendous cosmic law, the conservation of energy.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

No Luxuries.

"Any insanity in your family?" asked the life insurance man.

"No," replied Farmer Corntossel. "I couldn't afford to hire any alienist. If our boy Josh gets into any trouble we'll jes' have to admit that he's plain foolish."—Washington Star.

LOOKING FOR HIS DOG.

Mrs. John Connolly of Adams Shore awakened from a sound sleep shortly before midnight Thursday and saw a man trying to force a piazza window. When questioned he said he was looking for his dog and asked "if she'd seen Rover." She called her husband and when he appeared the man ran. Mr. Connolly gave chase but lost him in the darkness. He boarded a Quincy bound car thinking that he could head the man off and told his story to Reserve Officer Walter Ferguson who immediately commenced a search but found no one. The window was partially forced.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Franklin Associates, composed of South Quincy young men, will hold their first annual dance in Alpha hall tonight.

Scandia Lodge, Order of Vassa, acted on three applications at the regular meeting in Protection hall Thursday evening and completed preparations for their annual bazaar.

Judge Crossby of the Superior court has ordered Albert W. Finlay, the well known Quincy yacht owner and publisher to pay his wife, Dora N. Finlay, $100 to defend her suit for divorce, which she seeks on the ground of cruel and abusive treatment. Mrs. Finlay asked for $250 but was awarded $100.

On account of sickness, Charles Keane & Co., billed to present their dramatic sketch "Sheriff Bob" at the Kincaide Theatre this week were unable to appear. All their scenery, costumes, etc., are at the theatre, and Manager Wardwell hopes to present the act for his patrons' pleasure next week. He very kindly was able to engage Froley, Hoff and Rex to fill in this week's program, and their clever character sketch is making a big hit.

—It is difficult to see what good is accomplished by the publication of the salaries paid to officers and employees of the Boston Elevated Railroad Co. Not only is it a matter that is not the public's business but the point is brought out that while there are a few salaries which seem exorbitant there are many where the pay is less than the service, under the circumstances, actually is worth. If the aim of Mr. Feeney is to show an unreasonable extravagance on the part of the company in its general salary list the shot decidedly missed the target. At the same time it has made public private affairs of the employees which they had a clear right to keep to themselves.—Waltham Free Press.

—Out of his salary during 45 years service as an engineman in the Baltimore fire department, John Calder, 66, who died recently, had a bank account of $30,000. His pay was gradually increased from $700 a year to $1150 a year. He never varied from his original expenses of $500 a year.—New Bedford Standard.

SATURDAY GAME AT HOME

Quincy High Will Line Up Against Dedham

The Quincy High school team plays its only Saturday home game tomorrow when it lines up against Dedham on Merrymount oval. The Dedham team, from all accounts, is a fast aggregation, and will probably put up a game that will be worth watching. McCarthy, one of the ends, has been a star performer all the season, and only last Saturday went fifty yards for a touchdown. In all probability he can give either Larkin or Schenkelberger the biggest job they have tackled this year.

If the local team is suffering from its usual attack of overconfidence, Dedham may spring even a greater surprise than has been anticipated. This serious fault of the Quincy boys has been apparent in several of the games so far this year. Weymouth was not scored on during the first period on account of it, and Arlington kept the score down to six points for the same reason. The handicap of poor weather moreover has so interfered with practice that the team has had difficulty in keeping in first class condition.

A lack of good substitutes has been in evidence all the year. Instead of having out enough candidates for three teams as Newton, Brockton or Cambridge Latin has, barely enough for two teams are practicing. Luckily the regulars have had no serious injuries yet and substitutes have not been called upon to any extent.

The line up in the backfield for Saturday is in doubt. Browne at fullback is aggressive but light. Mullin has the weight but is slow. Murphy is a good ground gainer at times, but is inclined to cut in too soon and bring up against the line. Jepson's defense is good, but he does not provide the interference necessary for successful runs around his end. Paul Larkin at end has been a consistent carrier of the ball, but a critical moments in both the Arlington and Cambridge games he has muddled signals badly.

On the whole, however, the team has gone into the two hard games of the year with a fighting spirit. Newton won on fumbles, and Cambridge's score was lucky. A good game may be expected Saturday and Quincy ought to win.

The report in the Boston papers that a game was to be played in Quincy with Hingham, brought a few followers to the Oval Wednesday afternoon. The report was, however, a newspaper error, and where it originated is a riddle to the Quincy managers.

Weymouth Finds It Easy to Administer Whitewash

Weymouth blanked the All Stars at the City Square alleys Thursday night. The match was sensational and furnished much excitement for a large gallery. As usual Santa Cruz, the Argentine inspector, performed consistently. Connell rolled 109 and Quincy made 104. The series will be decided in a rubber game Oct. 23. The score:

GOVERNOR IS FOUND GUILTY

Impeachment Court Against Him on Three Articles

TO BE REMOVED FROM OFFICE

Charges of Falsifying Statements, Perjury and Suppressing Evidence Are Sustained—Not Guilty of Bribery—Not Disqualified From Holding Office In Future

Albany, Oct. 17.—Governor William Sulzer was found guilty by the high court for impeachment on three of the articles preferred against him. They were: 1, charging falsification of his campaign statement; 2, charging perjury in so doing, and 4, charging suppression of evidence.

He was declared innocent on charges of bribing witnesses to withhold testimony from the Frawley investigating committee contained in article 3.

Today he will be removed from office, but not disqualified from holding office in this state in the future unless there is a substantial change in the informal vote reported to have been taken by the court on these questions in secret session. For the same reason it is expected he will be found not guilty on the other four articles still remaining to be voted upon when the court adjourned.

Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, who has been acting governor since the impeachment of Sulzer, will become chief executive of the state. He is an Albany newspaper owner. Mrs. Glynn was formerly Miss Mary C. E. Moquane of Lynn, Mass.

Robert F. Wagner, a New York attorney, will become lieutenant governor. He is the majority leader in the senate.

The vote on articles 1 and 2 was 39 to 18, a bare two-thirds majority.

The vote on article 3 was unanimous in favor of the governor.

The vote on article 4 was 43 to 14, six members changing their votes on articles 1 and 2 from "not guilty" to "guilty," and two from "guilty" to "not guilty."

Among these was Duncan W. Peck, state superintendent of public works, who testified at the trial that the governor had asked him to commit perjury. The secret informal vote to remove the governor was said to be 43 to 14, the same as on article 4, and the vote not to disqualify him was said to be unanimous.

Article 6, which charges that the governor committed larceny in speculating with his campaign contributions was said not to have been sustained in the secret session by a vote of fifty declaring the governor not guilty, to seven against him.

Article 7, which charges that he prevented a particular witness, Frederick L. Colwell, from attending the sessions of the Frawley committee; article 7, that he threatened to use his office and influence to affect the vote or political action of certain assemblymen, and article 8, that he corruptly used his influence to affect the prices of securities on the stock exchange were reported to have been also decided in favor of the governor in the secret session by a practically unanimous vote.

Presiding Judge Edgar M. Cullen, who will shortly retire from the bench, voted "not guilty" on every article and rendered a long opinion in explaining his votes.

The other eight judges of the court of appeals were divided.

RIOT TRIAL BEGUN

Trouble in Ipswich Mill Strike Being Aired In Court

Salem, Mass., Oct. 17.—The story of the riot at the Ipswich mills last June, which resulted in the death of one woman, Miss Nicoletes Pandelopoulou, and serious injuries to several men and women, was related in detail here at the opening of the trial of Nathaniel Hermann of Boston and Carroll L. Pingree of Lowell, charged with rioting.

Fifteen witnesses were called, most of them policemen, who testified for the prosecution. The defense is in a quandry as to bringing witnesses, for most of the strikers were evicted and are now far away.

Cincinnati, O., Oct. 17.—The following ticket was nominated and elected at the convention of the National Association of Fire Insurance Agents, there being no opposition: President, C. F. Hildreth, Freeport, Ill.; secretary, Henry H. Putman, Boston. L. C. Merrill of Concord, N. H., New England division, was elected a vice president.

More Time Given In Thaw Case

Concord, N. H., Oct. 16.—The request of William T. Jerome for an extension of the time of hearing further arguments on the matter of extraditing Harry K. Thaw to New York was granted by Governor Felker. The governor set the date ahead to Oct. 27.

MAY BUILD WARSHIPS

Boston Considered Better Place For Work Than New York

Washington, Oct. 17.—Because of the restricted area of the New York navy yard the navy department is considering a plan virtually to relegate it to a repair station and delegate the active work of building warships to the Boston yard.

It is considered that the New York yard possesses certain military as well as industrial weakness. The military weakness is its territory limitation which precludes the yard's development as a ship building station of the first order.

It is believed that with the Boston yard fitted up as a central boat building yard it would be possible in an emergency to ship a boat from Boston to New York in one day. Extensive boat building is believed unnecessary under the conditions existing at the New York yard, even though certain classes of boats can be built more cheaply there than elsewhere.

It is proposed to reduce the strength of the detachment of marines at the New York yard to one company of efficiency. This would enable the activities of the receiving ship to be carried out in the barracks.

To increase floor area for industrial purposes, it is proposed to transfer such activities as boat building to the Boston yard.

ROYALTY AS GODPARENTS

King and Queen Act as Such, but Neither Are Present

London, Oct. 17.—King George and Queen Mary were the godparents of the 5-weeks-old son of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe, who was christened in the chapel royal of St. James palace, although neither was present.

The little heir to the dukedom, whose mother, before her marriage, was Miss May Goelet of New York, was named George Victor Robert John. Lord Allandale represented the king and Lady Alastair Innes-Ker the queen. Their majesties presented the infant with a double-handed silver cup.

FARMER KILLS MAN AND SURRENDERS

Vermont Game Warden Says Neighbor Assaulted Him

Halifax, Vt., Oct. 17.—L. A. Foster, a farmer, shot and killed his neighbor, Ossie Prouty, and then gave himself up to Constable G. L. Worden of Marlboro. Foster claimed self-defense.

The scene of the shooting is only a mile from where Irving Wrisley killed Walter Nichols with a hammer, recently, murdered Mrs. Nichols by shooting, and then killed himself with a bullet through his head.

Officers found Prouty's body in the road in front of Foster's house with a bullet hole through the head. Foster was locked up for the night in the Newfane jail. He had one eye closed as the result of a blow which he said Prouty had struck.

Foster said he backed away from Prouty, fearing that his neighbor would carry out the threat, which he had made two or three times before.

Foster carried a revolver, as he was a game warden and had a permit to do so. When Prouty struck him over the eye, knocking him down, Foster said, he drew his revolver and fired three times. Prouty fell over backwards.

The prisoner was at one time a minister and later a book agent. Since he became a farmer he said he has had frequent trouble with his neighbor, Prouty.

Berlin, Oct. 17.—Crown Prince William for the first time stepped into a prominent role in the dispute of the House of Guelph and the reigning House of Hohenzollern over the rival claims to the throne of Hanover by going on record officially as objecting to Prince Ernst Augustus ascending the throne of Brunswick before he renounces the Hanoverian throne.

Brunswick was created a kingdom for Ernst when he married Princess Victoria Luiz, only daughter of the kaiser, on condition that Ernst renounce all claims to the Hanoverian throne.

OPENS EATON PROSECUTION

Charge of Murder, Inspired by Unreasonable Jealousy

DOROTHY EATON ON STAND

Assistant District Attorney Says State Will Accept Verdict of Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity If They Find She Was Under Irresistible Impulse—Testimony Is Begun

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 17.—The state's case against Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, on trial for the murder of her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, was outlined by Assistant District Attorney Fred G. Katzmann, who said that jealousy furnished the motive for the crime.

He admitted that the case against the prisoner was mostly circumstantial, but declared that the government had evidence strong enough to show that Admiral Eaton received at his wife's hand the poison that caused his death. He told the jury that if they should find that Mrs. Eaton killed her husband while laboring under hallucinations that constituted an irresistible impulse, the state would be satisfied with a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity.

Mr. Katzmann indicated that jealousy was the motive for the alleged crime. He recounted the incidents of the admiral's courtship and his marriage to Mrs. Eaton, and said that Admiral Eaton became a father to Mrs. Eaton's daughters, June and Dorothy. He told of unsettled life in the household, caused, he said, by June's love affairs. "This resulted," he said, "in Mrs. Eaton becoming irascible and developing the temperament which has brought her to her present pass. One form of this temperament was jealousy, unfounded jealousy."

Mr. Katzmann declared that Mrs. Eaton had repeatedly discharged servants and rebuked neighbors for alleged manifestations of affection by them for the admiral. For years, he said, Mrs. Eaton had tried continually to have her husband adjudged insane and committed to an asylum. The foundation of these attempts, he said, was Mrs. Eaton's accusation in the summer of 1908 that her husband had poisoned a child adopted by the couple the previous spring. According to Mr. Katzmann she wrote to Professor Whitney, the Harvard medical school chemist, to whom the child's stomach was sent for examination, "I rely upon your finding poison in the child's stomach to have my husband declared insane." The official report, however, showed death to be due to natural causes.

Throughout the two hours that Mr. Katzmann was outlining the government's case, Mrs. Eaton appeared to be unmoved. The principal witness of the forenoon was Dr. Gilman T. Osgood, who described his visit to the Eaton house soon after the admiral's death.

The court room was filled with spectators. Miss Dorothy Ainsworth, younger daughter of Mrs. Eaton by her first marriage, was placed on the stand. She was summoned by the prosecution and held a consultation with District Attorney Barker.

The presentation of the testimony was then begun. Edward B. Hayward, a civil engineer, identified and testified to the details of plans of the Eaton house made by him, and Undertaker Joseph L. Wadsworth told of preparing Admiral Eaton's body for burial.

Medical Examiner Osgood of Rockland testified that his attention was first called to Admiral Eaton's death by Dr. Frame, the attending physician. Dr. Osgood said that rigor mortis was complete when he received the body seven or eight hours after death. On that visit Mrs. Eaton told him that the admiral had been ill for some time. She told him also of lying beside the admiral in bed and of being awakened by the coldness of his body.

THE SUGAR SCOOP MODEL

Ribbon Hat Trimming Exceptionally Smart.

PIQUANT SHAPE OF THE SEASON.

The piquant face with small features is the only type that looks well in the hat illustrated, which is an adaptation of the miniche shape that Frenchwomen adore. In order to make it more becoming to American women the brim in front is often broken, but in this model the tilt over the face is perfectly flat, and the high flare at the back is filled in with a huge black moire bow.

Ribbon, preferably moire, is used to trim most of these saucy little hats. Loops of ribbon are an easy method of obtaining height, and arranged against the upturned brim in the back they are generally becoming.

Small clusters of bright colored, unnatural looking fruit give the desired touch of color to many of these shapes, and the confection in the cut has a few reddish purple plums for a garniture.

Women Healthier Than Men.

Professor Doctor Elster of Jena has sprung into fame, like Byron, in a single night, because he said "peekaboo" blouses, corsets, decollete dresses and split skirts did more good than harm. Their influence, he argued, was mainly mental. They brought variety and interest into a woman's life.

Professor Elster produces as trump card the fact that women, victims of fashion, have a higher longevity rate and a lower morbidity rate than men, who are free from fashion's bane. The exposure of parts of the body entailed by fashion makes women hardy. "If fashion exposure really caused disease, then women in particular would suffer more than men in particular from the diseases which begin with a cold; but, as a fact, women suffer far less than men from bronchitis, catarrh, inflammation of the lungs and consumption."

Dr. Elster further justifies against the hygienomaniacs the corset and the high heeled shoes. The corset distributes certain bodily pressures, and "it has never been shown in what way the high heeled shoe is bad for the health. It might be argued that such shoes render a service, inasmuch as they keep thin soles out of the wet."

A Furry Suggestion.

The long fur coat will not be seen in the land of the modish this winter, so say the furriers, and in its stead will

Hot Vinegar In Sauces.

If hot vinegar is used instead of cold when making meat sauce, it will greatly improve the flavor and give the sauce a better color.

A Surprise For Her.

One of the greatest singers of France was returning from New York on a German liner. One evening, glancing at the program of the concert that was to be played at dinner, she saw a triumphal march celebrating the German victory of 1871.

She immediately conceived that the selection of such a piece was an insult to her and announced to a friend that she would express her disapproval at the proper time.

The captain noticed the great artist's agitation and glanced at the program to see what caused it; then, with a faint smile, he spoke to one of the waiters in a low tone.

At the moment when the German triumphal march was due to begin the French singer, who could not control her agitation, prepared to leave the table.

The first chord was played, the artist arose and stood, pale, agitated and amazed, while the officers and other passengers also got up and smiled sympathetically at her.

And the band played "The Marseillaise!"

Prompt Lesson.

Some years ago there was in a certain town a judge whose ideas of the majesty of the law at the time of his accession to office were unbounded, and his sense of his own importance as the representative of justice was also great. At one time two persons quarreled in the judge's presence. One man struck the other, and the judge immediately ordered his arrest on a charge of assault and battery.

On the day of the trial the defendant pleaded not guilty.

Instantly the judge, who was a short, stout man, was on his feet, crimson faced and puffing with indignation.

"What do you mean?" he demanded of the prisoner without any preamble. "What do you mean by saying that, when I saw you and had you arrested? I fine you $100 for breach of peace and another $100 for contempt of court, sir. I reckon," said the judge, his nostrils dilating with rage and injured dignity —"I reckon that'll teach folks to be careful how they call this court a liar!"

Not a Thunder Expert.

The masterful manner in which some people evade an issue was mentioned at a recent dinner when this one was recalled by a naval official:

"In New Orleans one night," the officer said, "there was a man on the stage who offered to answer by mental arithmetic any question that might be asked by the audience. Just so long as the questioner remained in the expected channel the sailing was easy, but finally one man got beyond the bearings.

"'If you please, sir,' said the man, rising from his seat, 'How far off can you hear thunder?'

"'I can't tell you, sir,' was the prompt response of the wonder on the stage.

"'You can't tell me?' responded the fan. 'Why, I thought'—

"'Not about thunder,' replied the stage party, doing a quick piece of dodging. 'You see, I am a lightning calculator.'"—Washington Post.

Would Take a Long Chance.

John D. Rockefeller once called two little boys over to him. He said to one: "Johnnie, if I give you a dollar what will you do with it?" Johnnie said: "I'll put it in the bank and let it draw interest until it gets to be a hundred, then a thousand and so on until I get as much as you got." "Very good," said John D. "Here's the dollar. Now, Tommy, what would you do with a dollar?" Tommy said: "First I would change the dollar into two halves, the two halves into four quarters, the four quarters into ten dimes, the ten dimes into twenty nickels, the twenty nickels into a hundred pennies." "Why would you do all this?" asked John D. Tommy replied, "Well, somebody may make a mistake."—Kansas City Star.

Oyster Liquid.

Only one oyster opener in fifty seems to know that the best thing by far about an oyster is the liquid in its shell. Watch the other forty-nine and you will see them wantonly wasting this precious, fragrant liquid, and in many cases they will serve the oyster on the flat shell, so that you get no juice at all. Always ask for them on the shell, and don't be afraid after you have transferred the morsel to your mouth to drink the liquid from the shell. It may not look elegant, but elegance be hanged!—Henry T. Fink's "Food and Flavor."

Now and Then.

A young wife after a stormy scene cried:

"It was different before we married. Ah, yes, you loved me then—and now!"

"I love you now and then," said her husband calmly. "Revised version, don't you know."

A Mystery.

"There's one thing I can't understand."

"What's that?"

"Why any man ever makes up his mind to be a cook."—Detroit Free Press.

Always Something.

I find this life upsetting, quite. Things never seem to come my way. It's hard to get asleep at night and hard to keep awake by day—Washington Herald.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

Well, we coasted along that barrier reef a good part of the morning until we reached the other end of the island and discovered to our dismay that there was absolutely no opening, no break in it through which we could make our way. When we reached the lower end my lady was for sailing around on the other side, but this I did not dare. We had heard nothing from the ship or her boats, and I didn't propose to arouse any pursuit by coming within possible range of her glasses. I did not know where the Rose of Devon lay.

"Madam," said I at last, "there is naught for us but to try to go over the reef in some fashion. As I examined the island yesterday through the glasses I couldn't see any opening in the reef on that side, and, although I never saw or heard of a case like this before, I make no doubt but what the reef is continuous and there is no access to the island except over it. And come to think of it, Sir Philip's chart showed no opening either."

"I recall that the reef completely encircles the island in the map," assented my lady.

"Then we must even pass over it as we can. I have had some experience in taking a boat through the surf, and, although it is a prodigious risk, I believe I can take this one over. I think we shall win through if you will sit perfectly quiet and trust to me."

"I will do whatever you tell me," she said with a most becoming and unusual meekness. "I think—I know—I trust you entirely, Master Hampdon."

"Very well," said I quietly, "and may God help us!"

Fortunately the tide was making toward the shore of the island. I selected a spot where the huge, rolling waves seemed to break more smoothly than elsewhere, which argued a greater depth of water over the barrier, less roughness and fewer possibilities of being wrecked on the jagged points of the coral reef. Dousing the sail, unshipping the tiller and rudder and pulling the oars with all my strength after an unuttered prayer I shot the boat directly toward the spot I had chosen. Just before I reached it I threw the oars inboard, seized one of them, which I wished to use as a steering oar, and stepped aft past my lady, who sat a little forward and well down in the bottom of the boat. I braced myself in the stern sheets and waited. We were racing toward that reef with dizzy speed, rising with the uplift up the wave. I had just time for one word.

"If we die," I shouted, "remember that I have been your true servant always."

She nodded her head, her eyes glistening, and then I lost sight of her. A huge roller overtook us. The little boat rose and rose and rose with a giddy, furious motion. Suddenly it began to turn. If it went broadside to the reef and a wave caught it or one broke over it we should be lost, but I had foreseen the danger. I threw out my oar and with every pound of strength in arm, leg and body I thrust blindly, desperately, against the thrust of the sea. It was an unequal combat, a man against the Pacific ocean. I couldn't have maintained it for long. And yet it seemed hours. The strain was terrific.

The wave we were riding broke just as we reached the top. We sank down into what seemed a valley of water, the breakers roared in our ears, the spray fell over us like rain. We sank lower and lower, there was a sound of grinding along the keel. We had struck the coral evidently. I thought this was all, for another moment and the bottom would have been ripped out of her; but no, we were over in safety.

The last remainder of the wave broke fairly over us and struck me in the back as I stood aft with such force as to bring me to my knees. However, in that position I acted as a sort of breakwater and the dinghy was not completely filled. Although she had [illegible] she still floated. The force with which we had been thrown over the crest of the wave drove us landward with tremendous speed. It was terrific. I was stunned for a moment, but the sweetest voice in the world recalled me to my senses.

"It was glorious, magnificent!" cried my mistress exultantly. "Are you hurt? Are we safe?"

Her clothes had been drenched, of course, but she was otherwise unharmed and there was a strange light in her eyes.

"I am not hurt," I answered. "God has preserved me thus far."

"For me," she said softly.

"For your service," I answered gravely, quite understanding that was what she meant.

And now to make the landing. The boat, while it had come to a standstill, was filled with water, but I couldn't stop to bail it out then, so I stepped carefully forward, shipped the oars and rowed slowly forward across the lagoon.

CHAPTER XI.

How We Landed on the Wondrous Shore.

ALTHOUGH our progress in the water laden boat was slow, it didn't take us long to reach the shore, which was there nothing more than a strip of sand perhaps a hundred yards across at the widest part. It was as bare of anything as the palm of my hand. I hauled the boat up on it after we had disembarked and hastened to discharge its precious cargo. The invaluable powder and shot had been kept in cans and flasks in air tight lockers forward and aft and were undamaged. The rest of her lading had been in the water too short a time to be much hurt. It was all water soaked, of course, but an hour's exposure in the warm sun on the dry sand would make it as good as new. Spreading all out to dry I pulled the plug from the boat, drained the water from her and hauled her up well on to the sand.

A hasty glance assured me that the cliff was of coral formation, jagged and broken with many a crevice and cranny. After we had made everything shipshape I suggested to Mistress Lucy that we start at once exploring. I proposed that we follow the course of the sandy strip and see if there was not some break in the cliffs whereby we could get to the top and learn what was within the wall. And so refreshing ourselves and taking with us some provisions, for we might have to go clear around the island, we presently started out.

I felt very easy in my mind regarding any present peril from the ship, for I knew that no boat she possessed could run the reef as I had done, and even if she had had another like the dinghy I was confident that there was no man aboard her that had the strength and skill, to say nothing of the courage, to bring her through. If there were no natives or wild beasts to be feared we were at least safe for the time being.

"Think you, Master Hampdon," said my little mistress, "this is the island of which my ancestor wrote?"

"I am sure of it," I replied.

"He referred to it, if I remember right, as the 'Island of the Stairs,' did he not?"

"Yes," was my answer. "You remember he indicated a stairway about the middle of the island."

"Surely, if we are to get to the top of yonder wall it must be by stairs of some sort."

"It would not be difficult to climb it," I assented, "for a man, that is, save for one thing."

"And what is that?"

"These pinnacles of rock are as sharp as needles. It would be like climbing broken glass. The climber would be cut to pieces before he had gone half way."

"Then if we find no stairs we are in a bad fix," she said thoughtfully, examining the towering wall.

"There must be stairs," I answered. "There must be a way. The latitude and longitude agree with your ancestor's description and I make no doubt we shall chance upon them."

So we tramped along, searching the shore and sea and finding nothing. After perhaps an hour's monotonous going, when we had traversed about a third of the distance of the island, we rounded a projection of the cliff and there before us rose the stairs!

What we saw was a gigantic stairway, irregular, but made of huge blocks of rough hewn stone, not coral rock, but harder stone of firmer texture, like granite almost. I was not familiar with the stone either. There was no symmetry about it, some of the stones rose perhaps three feet and others not more than as many inches, but stairs they certainly were and they surely had been made by man, and the stones were most carefully fitted, being laid up without mortar, the surfaces so close that I could scarce thrust a knife blade between. The huge blocks were of monstrous size, too, much too great in bulk and weight to be handled by any primitive mechanical means I thought I never could conceive how natives or primitive men could have shaped them, moved them and finally laid them up in the form of stairs.

Nor did the stairs alone awaken our amazement and quicken our curiosity. They ended in a circling belt of sand, here a little wider than elsewhere. At the bottom on either side, two gigantic statues or busts of stone had been erected. Their bases were buried in the sand, and they rose to quite twice my height above and I am good six feet and more tall. These stones were carved into the rough yet not unreal likenesses of human faces.

Why we had not discovered these stairs from seaward was because they didn't come squarely down to the water's edge at right angles to the wall, but lay, as it were, parallel to a niche within the wall so that they were somewhat sheltered from observation from the sea.

We broke upon them suddenly, therefore. Mistress Lucy clutched my arm.

"The giant stairway!" she cried in amazement.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Mrs. Vogler of Botolph street who has been confined to her home with illness the past week is better.

The moon was visible about 5 o'clock this morning and the sun did shine for awhile, but since noon the sky has been overcast as usual. When may we expect fair days?

Many of Eleanor Holt's little friends remembered her fourth birthday Monday and called to leave a remembrance although they could not see her on account of illness. The Board of Health removed the quarantine card from the house Wednesday.

At the whist party held in Odd Fellows hall Thursday afternoon under the direction of George L. Gill Rebekah lodge amusement committee, those taking prizes were: Mrs. William Westland, Mrs. Beatrice Porterfield, Mrs. Emma Marnock and Mrs. H .H. Hall. The next party will be held Thursday afternoon, Oct. 23.

Em. Sir Albert W. Fay of Wollaston, grand lecturer of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templar of Massachusetts assisted by Em Sir Henry P. Furnald of this city as deputy grand warden, installed the officers of Winslow Lewis commandery No. 18 of Salem, Thursday evening. The officers were highly complimented on the manner in which the work was rendered. Both were presented with a beautiful bouquet.

Something of a Lottery.

"What I want," said the young man, "is to get married and have a peaceful, quiet home." "Well, sometimes it works that way and sometimes it's like joinin' a debatin' society."

POLITICAL NOTES.

Politics continue to remain quiet and there are no candidates for Mayor other than those that have been mentioned before. As stated in the Daily Ledger three days ago, an effort is being made to have Col. Henry L. Kincaide seek the Republican nomination at the primaries. Mr. Kincaide is considering the matter and is expected to give his final answer in a few days.

As for other city offices, there is but little excitement. Thursday Councilman Stephen B. Little took out sets of papers for Ward Councilmen and for Councilmen at large and William J. Sullivan took out fifteen sets of papers for councilmen.

WEDDING RECEPTION.

A wedding reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Fred T. Gullicksen, Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's father, G. E. Hedman of 183 Common street. Mr. Gullicksen is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank O. Gullicksen, 19 Granite street. The bride was prettily gowned in pink silk draped with lace. bride and groom were assisted in receiving by their parents. Following the reception a supper was served. The program consisted of piano and violin solos by Theo and Ruth Gullicksen, and solos by Miss R. Hansen. Mr. and Mrs. Gullicksen were the recipients of many pretty gifts of cut glass, silver and fancy china.

Draining a Metropolis.

London sewage has its main drainage outfalls at Barking and Crossness the average daily quantity dealt with is about 260,000,000 gallons, while the total quantity of sludge collected at Barking and Crossness is over 2,500,000 tons.

The attendance was the largest in the history of the organization. Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy was also present. Father McCoy and Deputy Barrett both made short addresses in which they touched on the Knights of Columbus organization.

The final arrangements for the costume party to be given by the Council in St. Mary's hall tonight were made and preparations were started for the installation of officers which will take place Nov. 10. The work will be by Deputy Barrett. Grand Knight Bernard M. O'Neil was re-elected. The officers chosen are:

COLD COMFORT.

It Came After the Little Faker Had Got His Punishment.

The east end small boy had sadly misbehaved and was locked in his room. Pretty soon his mother heard him calling.

"Muvver," said the shrill voice, "I'm goin' to bust the window and fall out!"

The mother made no reply. Again the shrill voice arose:

"Muvver, I've found some matches, an' I'm goin' to set fire to the curtains."

The mother remained indifferent. Once more the voice hailed her:

"Muvver, don't you smell sumfin' burnin'?" Even this drew no response.

"If you don't smell nothin'," the voice went on, "it's 'cause I pulled off all th' match heads an' swallowed 'em, an' I'm goin' to die. Do you hear that, muvver; I'm goin' to die."

By this time the mother was thoroughly incensed, and, hastily preparing a cup of mustard and hot water, she hurried upstairs.

"If you've swallowed match heads," she announced, "you'll have to swallow this to keep them company." And then she poured the nauseating stuff down his throat.

A little later the aggravating youngster, sadder, wiser and much humbled, concluded to take the balance of his punishment in silence.

"I didn't really swallow the matches, muvver," he contritely explained.

"I knew you didn't, sonny," replied the mother.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

THE RING OF WORDS.

Bright is the ring of words
When the right man rings them,
Fair the fall of songs
When the singer sings them.
Still they are caroled and said;
On wings they are carried
After the singer is dead
And the maker buried.

Low as the singer lies
In the field of heather,
Songs of his fashion bring
The swains together.
And when the west is red
With the sunset embers
The lover lingers and sings
And the maid remembers.
—Robert Louis Stevenson.

—Primarily, the construction of the Panama canal by the American people was not entered upon as a money-making enterprise, in the same sense that other ventures in this class have owed their origin to the income-earning factor. The Suez canal, for example, established a new earning record, last year, when the profits totalled nearly $18,000,000. While there is no expectancy that the Panama canal will promptly rival the famous European enterprise, there will yet be widespread interest to study credit and debit accounts when the American canal is finally opened to traffic.—Salem News.

—As proof that the parcel post rate has not yet been scientifically worked out in all particulars, it has been found that it is possible to send a package weighing 11 pounds from Boston to Albany for 15 cents. To send the same package from Boston to New York, which is in the third zone, the rate is 57 cents, but it is possible to send the package from Boston to Springfield for 15 cents and then for 15 cents more, making 30 cents in all, have it remailed to New York. With the zone system of rates, it will be found a very difficult matter to avoid such inequalities as the above, but everybody should be thankful that the parcel post is in existence and has been so successful since its inauguration.—Old Colony Memorial.

SURPRISE PARTY.

A very pleasant evening was enjoyed at the home of Walter F. Perry, 40 Massachusetts avenue, Thursday. It was in the form of a surprise to Mr. Perry by his friends, as he has been in New York for four months returning last Saturday.

A Dutch super was served by the ladies at 7 o'clock, consisting of frankforts, sauerkraut, jotato salad, hot rolls baked apples and cream, cake coffee. Coffee was served in the steins which were given as souvenirs, also pretty little place cards.

After the supper German whist was enjoyed by the party, which called forth much merriment, souvenirs being won by Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Hennessey.

Mr. Perry thanked his friends for remembering him, as he is not easily surprised, always in some way finding it out.

Those enjoying the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. James Hennessey, Mr. and Mrs. Otis MacDonald and son Otis, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Perry, Miss Aljuline Keene, Miss Hattie May Lermond, Miss Gladys Pinel, Cleveland Russell, Roland Phinney and Ray Oliver.

Sick-Room Light.

If there are electric lights in the sick room they will generally be found too brilliant, hurting the eyes of the patient, and not every sick room has the electric lights that can be turned up or down. Make a little green silk bag and fasten it over the incandescent bulb and it will give a good but subdued and harmless light.

COLONEL KINCAIDE DECLINES

Not a Candidate This Year for Mayoralty

Four Men Now In Field

Col. Henry L. Kincaide, urged by several business men to become one of the Republican candidates for Mayor, gave his final answer this morning, which was to the effect that he would not be a candidate. Some days ago a committee of citizens waited upon Col. Kincaide to urge him to enter the caucuses for the nomination. He at first refused, but as the committee were loth to take no for an answer he said that he would consider it and give his final answer later. The final answer came this morning and was to the effect that he must decline.

Col. Kincaide said that he understood the proposition thoroughly, and that sometime he would like the honor of being Mayor of Quincy. At the present time however his business interests were such as to demand much of his attention, especially at the present time when he has the erection of a business block under way. He therefore felt that he should not sacrifice his business interests, and declined with thanks.

It looks therefore as though Charles H. Johnson would have no opposition for the Republican nomination, and unless things take a change in the meantime the mayoralty candidates at the municipal election will be as follows:

Republican, Charles H. Johnson.
Democratic, Dr. John H. Ash.
Progressive, William G. Shaw.
Independent Citizens, John L. Miller.

As for councilmen it is hard at the present time to tell just who will be candidates for the reason that a number who have taken out nomination papers did not state who they were for, and it will not be definitely known until the papers are opened next Saturday night.

The only new papers taken out today were by Walter H. Buchan for councilmen from Ward One.

S. B. Little writes that he does not intend to be a candidate at large for the Council, but will be a candidate from Ward Four.

IN NEW HEADQUARTERS

Republicans Now Have Rooms in Greenleaf Block

The Republican City Committee have secured permanent headquarters for the state campaign in the Greenleaf block. The rooms will be open every evening and meetings of the committee will be held weekly until after the election.

The committee is making plans for a grand rally to be held in New Colonial hall on Saturday evening, Nov. 25. Several good speakers will be heard among whom are Congressman Gardner the Republican candidate for governor, Hon. Guy Ham, Hon. William S. Kenney, a western congressman, and the local candidates for senator and representatives.

The committee after discussion voted to support the caucus nominee for Register of Probate, Alonzo B. Cook of Sharon.

Committees were appointed to solicit funds to carry on the campaign for the state election.

The headquarters of the committee will be marked by a large illuminated transparency placed over the entrance.

Before the meeting adjourned brief remarks were made by Louis F. R. Langelier candidate for Senator and Walter E. Piper and Edward J. Sandberg, the two local candidates for Representatives.

Previous to the meeting of the City commitee, the Ward One committee met and accepted the resignation of Charles H. Johnson as chairman and elected Fred F. Green. The vacancy in the Ward One committee was filled by the election of John D. Mckay, who has been elected as a member of the 1914 Ward One committee.

RECEPTION TO NEW PASTOR

A reception was tendered at the Swedish Congregational church on Thursday evening to the new pastor, Rev. A. G. Sporrong. Several clergymen were present and spoke including Rev. O. G. Norsen and Rev. Mr. Fredenholm of Worcester, Rev. Mr. Johnson of Lynn, Rev. G. Anderson of Brockton, Rev. A. E. Hillman of the Swedish M. E. of this city and Rev. Paul Hallin of the Swedish Baptist of this city. Purses were presented to the new pastor and also to Deacon Carl Satterlund who has successfully conducted the services for several months. Refreshments were served.

The weekly whist party of the Marine Social Club of West Quincy in St. Jean's hall on Friday evening was well attended and souvenirs were awarded to William Murphy. George Reidy and James Sullivan. The club social program devotes every Thursday evening to whist.

WALSH CLUB ORGANIZED

Representative Tague One of the Speakers

The Walsh Club met in Union hall Friday evening and organized with Edward J. Fegan as chairman and Leo P. Noonan as secretary. The enrolled membership is 130. The attendance represented all parts of the Senatorial district. Several plans of campaign were presented and it is probable that a form of ballot as it will appear in the Senatorial district will be distributed to the voters.

The speakers were Representative Peter M. Tague of Charlestown, an organizer of the Walsh clubs and Democratic leader of the House, John J. McDevitt, Chairman Long of the Randolph town committee, Representative Michael T. Sullivan, candidate for reelection, William Brennan of Randolph, Representative Jeremiah O'Leary of Sharon, candidate for county commissioner.

The executive committee chosen to perfect the local organization consists of Michael Guess of Ward One, James M. Sullivan of Ward Two, George D. Cahill of Ward Three, John J. McDevitt of Ward Four, Arthur Murphy of Ward Five and Mark B. Gill of Ward Six.

The purpose of the organization shall be to promote by every legitimate means the candidacy of David I. Walsh for the office of Governor of this commonwealth and to work, for his election and the election of the Democratic State ticket.

Attention was called to the rally of Oct. 20 at which Candidate Walsh and others will speak.

CALENDAR OF CITY COUNCIL

A regular meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening. The council is clearing its calendar of business earlier this year than usual with the result that there are few important matters before the council that remain to be acted upon.

The Committee on Streets, one of the most important committees of the council has disposed of all matters referred to it with the exception of two. The Finance Committee still has a number of matters undisposed of, but nothing of great importance.

The Committee on Public Buildings also has several matters, the most important of which is in relation to an addition to the Washington school. Whether the City Council at this late time in the year will appropriate money for the school addition is problematical. Sometime ago the residents of that section petitioned for the building of an assembly hall, but when the matter came back from the School Committee it was accompanied by a request for an addition of four rooms. The School Committee at a recent meeting voted to ask the council for an addition to the Atherton Hough school, but that request has not yet been forwarded to the council.

Since the last meeting of the Council one of its members has passed away, leaving another vacancy in the membership, so that at the present time that body is composed of but 21 members. Owing to the lateness of the year it is doubtful if any action is taken on filling the vacancies. Action will probably be taken at the meeting Monday night on the death of Councilman Farquharson and a committee on resolutions will probably be appointed.

FLAG PROTEST.

Editor Daily Ledger.

At the regular meeting of Abner B. Packard camp, No. 95, S. of V. last evening, there was a unanimous sentiment expressed protesting against the manner in which the American flag has been displayed by the Progressive party in Quincy Square. For about two weeks the National flag has been suspended across the street in such a manner that it is either dragging on the electric wires or twisted around teh rope from which it is hung. It has been out night and day in the rain, and it seems as if a party as prominent in State and National politics as the Progressive party, is not showing the proper respect for the National colors that is due the flag under which their noted and respected leader, Col. Roosevelt served in 1898.

SLIGHT FIRE AT MILLER GARAGE

Cause of Alarm from Box 227 This Morning

The alarm from Box 227 at 10.47 A. M. was for a slight fire in the Abbott & Miller garage on Canal street. In the garage at the time were a large auto truck, a five passenger car and a small Stanley. The Stanley was standing near the auto truck and Charles W. Miller who was present when the fire started thinks it was caused by back fire of the Stanley. The flames communicated to the big curtains of the auto truck, which were destroyed, and thence to a pile of blankets in the auto truck. These were more or less burned and made a thick black smoke. The Stanley was also somewhat damaged by the flames but a chemical stream put out what fire there was in that car. The loss will not be large.

OUR HISTORY IN YIDDISH

Louis Levin to Give Series of Five Lectures

The Labor League Educational club have retained Louis Levin, the noted Jewish thinker, scholar, author, lecturer, and instructor, who is also a member of the Suffolk bar, to come to Quincy to deliver a series of five lectures on the United States history in Yiddish, beginning on Sunday, October 19, and every other Sunday following.

It is considered wonderful to have a man who is really an authority on the subject, with the renown and reputation that he enjoys to come out to a city the size of Quincy credit is due to the Educational committee.

The committee is of opinion that this will prove most effective to the Jewish inhabitants of Quincy; as it will afford him an opportunity to become better acquainted with the early periods and the circumstances thereof, of our country. It will tend to make him more closely attached, and wake an interest in him for this country, because the history from the earliest stage to the very modern period will be related to him in his mother tongue. Never before has such an opportunity arisen to retain a man with such superb qualifications as Mr. Levin possesses, to address the Jewish community.

In the first lecture, the discovery of our country is to be taken up. The periods during, and after the Revolution and including the modern will be covered in his other talks.

ENDORSED BY BAR.

The Quincy Bar Association met at the Court House Friday evening to take action relative to the contest for Registrar of Probate and Insolvency. President John W. McAnarney presided and Lawrence W. Lyons was clerk. The association voted unanimously to support the candidacy of J. Raphael McCoole for registrar. Similar action has been taken by the Norfolk Bar association, who have issued an appeal in behalf of Mr. McCoole.

SUNDAY OPENING.

The Sunday afternoon opening of the Milton Public library will be resumed Nov. 2. As in the past the hours during which the public can use the Library will be from 2 to 6 o'clock.

BILLBOARD ADVERTISING.

Widespread interest has recently been excited by a report handed to the mayor of New York City against the abuses of street advertising. It was stated by the commission that the returns to advertisers from this form of publicity are low compared with other methods of giving information.

The billboard nuisance would not exist had not the American people a tenacious sense of the rights of the landholder. If you beat a drum persistently, the neighbors could arrest you for disturbing the peace, even though you stand on your own land. If you go to the same spot and erect an ugly advertising sign that defaces the street, the neighbors can't touch you, even though you disturb their peace much more than with a base drum.

As the New York commission suggests, one excellent method of dealing with billboards is by taxation. You rarely see a billboard in a handsome residence district. They are an indication that a neighborhood is not prosperous, and that owners of land are indifferent to appearances, and have to make their property look worse in order to make it pay. A man who erects a billboard damages the location and the community, and he should pay for the privilege.

The most fundamental method of fighting billboard advertising is by persuading advertisers that it does not pay. Years ago all advertising was mostly a shout to gain attention. There was little logic about it, merely the effort to suggest to the observer that the advertiser was making a big noise.

Now logic is at the basis of all advertising. Persuasion is the means, and the advertiser seeks to reason and argue and give facts and figures. The fragmentary glance one gives to a billboard does not permit that kind of an appeal.

The big noise advertising of the billboards is ten years behind the times.

State Says Document Disappeared From Admiral's Home

EATON AND WIFE QUARRELED

Dorothy Ainsworth, on Stand, Tells of Trouble In Family Caused by Attentions Paid to Sister by Elderly Man—Defense Has Dropped Suicide Theory Out of the Case

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 18.—A hint at evidence not yet revealed was given by the state at the continuation of the trial for murder of Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton. This had to do with a typewritten document alleged to have disappeared from the Eaton home after the death of the defendant's husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, who died, it is charged, from poison administered by his wife.

Dorothy Ainsworth, the younger of Mrs. Eaton's two daughters by an earlier marriage, was on the stand when her testimony was interrupted for a conference of District Attorney Barker and William A. Morse, attorney for the defence, with Judge Aiken. The conference ended, the prosecutor asked Dorothy what she knew of such a paper. The defence objected, whereupon the district attorney called upon Mrs. Eaton's attorneys to produce the document in question. Mr. Morse replied that he had learned of its existence only this morning. The matter was not pressed, but Mr. Barker said he hoped to introduce the paper later.

Following the admiral's death a search was made for a will alleged to have been made by the admiral after the date borne by the will filed for probate, which left his property to the widow and his stepdaughter, but so far as known a second will was not found. The continued testimony of the 16-year-old girl was a story of a house divided against itself. Her mother and stepfather quarrelled frequently, she said, particularly over the attentions paid to the witness's sister, June, by a man seventy years of age.

When the subject of the typewritten document was introduced the defence protested vigorously, and though many questions were asked, few were allowed to stand. Dorothy was permitted to say that of those in the household only her mother and herself could use a typewriter. The questions of the state indicated, however, that there was no connection between the paper and the rumored second will of the admiral. The possibility of a second will having been discovered appeared to have been eliminated.

According to the witness, June sided with her mother in the family quarrels and had much influence over Mrs. Eaton. Mrs. Eaton, she said, at times taunted the admiral with being a lunatic, and he jokingly referred to their home as "the lunatic asylum." He sometimes used this address in letters and on postcards addressed to his wife. The state asked several questions intended to establish the improbability that the admiral committed suicide, and drew from Dorothy the statement that he had planned to go to a "smoker" at Rockland on the Tuesday which followed his death.

A score or more of letters were introduced, each side contributing several. These were for the purpose of identifying the signatures as those of Admiral Eaton or his wife. Dorothy had been on the stand for six hours when an adjournment was taken.

BRIGANDS BURN MISSION

Also Kill 300 People In the Province of Fokien

Pekin, Oct. 18.—A force of Chinese brigands commanded by General Hwang Liang has murdered 300 people in the province of Fokien and also burned two mission churches believed to be the property of American missionary societies.

The American missionaries from the disturbed district are still in Fu-Chow, where they took refuge during the recent troubles.

The Chinese government troops sent against the brigands have not shown much activity, but the Chinese war office promised the American charge d'Affaires, Edward T. Williams, that it would institute effective measures for the suppression of the brigands.

SUGGESTION ON CURRENCY

President of New York Bank Gives Ideas to Senate Committee

Washington, Oct. 18.—Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City bank of New York, sent to each member of the senate banking and currency committee a copy of the pending currency bill as he would amend it. Among the amendments suggested by Mr. Vanderlip are:

Elimination of the secretary of agriculture and comptroller of the currency from the federal reserve bank and the appointment of six citizen members by the president; appointment of an organization committee outside the cabinet; increase of dividends on federal reserve bank capital from 5 to 6 percent, with the proviso that all profits over that amount be paid to the government instead of only 60 percent as now provided; refunding of 2 percent bonds with 3 percent one-year notes renewable at maturity during a period of twenty years, and a restriction of commercial paper available for rediscount by the elimination of all paper employed in speculative transactions.

GRIEVED FOR WIFE

Aged Webster Man Tries to Commit Suicide Over Her Grave

Webster, Mass., Oct. 18.—Grieving for nearly 10 years over the death of his wife, to whose grave he paid daily visits, Levi Coleburn, 90 years of age, and the oldest resident of this town, shot himself twice below the heart over the grave of his wife. The shots were heard by men walking past the cemetery, who ran to the aid of the aged man.

He was taken to the Worcester city hospital, where he later died.

Since the death of his wife Mr. Coleman has made his home with his son, Elmer, on South Main street. For more than fifty years he has been caretaker of the estate of B. A. Corbin.

SUSPECT FIREBUG IN ROCKLAND, ME.

Serious Conflagration Prevented by Wet Roofs

Rockland, Me., Oct. 18.—The fact that the roofs of all buildings had been soaked by the rain of the past few days saved the Crockett's Point district of this city from a serious conflagration, when property valued at $50,000 was destroyed. The fire, believed by the police to have been set, started in the kiln shed of A. C. Gay & Co.

The shed and two lime kilns owned by the Gay concern were burned, together with seven kilns and a large shed owned by the Rockland and Rockport Lime company, and about 2000 feet of trestlework on the Limerock railway. A coal shed owned by Thorndike & Hicks was badly damaged.

The signal cords, by which fire alarms are given from the lime kiln district, had been cut, causing considerable delay in giving the alarm.

TEMPORARY SETTLEMENT

No Immediate Danger of Strike on New Haven by Engineers

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 18.—A temporary settlement of the difficulties between the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company and its engineers has been practically reached, it is learned, with the result that immediate danger of a strike is over, and the ultimate question of rules will be the subject of a series of conferences between General Manager C. L. Bardo and the men.

It is said that the basis on which the arrangement was based was the withdrawal by the engineers of their demand for the abrogation of the general manager's order, and that the order stands as a unit.

DEFENDS OKLAHOMA LAW

Rights of Negro Not Abridged by "Grandfather Clause"

Washington, Oct. 18.—Frank admission that the "grandfather clause" of the Oklahoma constitution was designed to restrict the right of negroes to vote as far as possible within the limits of the federal constitution, featured the argument in defence of the clause before the supreme court by former Senator Joseph W. Bailey.

Mr. Bailey, appearing for the Oklahoma election officials, contended that while the state law discriminated against negroes, it did not abridge any of their rights guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment.

EXPLOSION ON GERMAN CRAFT

Zeppelin Dirigible Blows Up 3000 Feet Above Earth

TWENTY-EIGHT ARE KILLED

Only One Man Escaped Instant Death and He Is Critically Injured—Seventh of Similar Airships to Meet With Disaster—Was on Her First Trip When Disaster Occurred

Berlin, Oct. 18.—Members of an admiralty commission headed by Commander Behnisch and the entire crew of the Zeppelin dirigible L-2, twenty-eight men in all of twenty-nine on board, were instantly killed when the balloon blew up, 3000 feet above Johannisthal aviation field, near Berlin.

The L-2 was the latest of the aerial war craft built by the Zeppelin company for the German navy and was on her trial trip. The admiralty commissioners killed in the accident were aboard to approve the dirigible and take her over for the new aerial navy.

Lieutenant Baron von Bleut of the Queen Augusta grenadier guards was making the trip as a guest, and is the only survivor. He is in a critical condition. Many of the bodies of members of the crew were so badly burned they were unrecognizable. The kaiser has ordered an immediate report on the accident.

The disaster occurred while the airship was over the outskirts of Johannisthal. The craft fell on the main highway leading into Johannisthal, its blackened and twisted framework blocking the road.

The exact cause of the accident is not known. The dirigible had just left its shed and traversed barely a quarter of a mile in the direction of Berlin when a great pillar of flame shot from the middle of the balloon. The next instant the craft was a mass of flame, plunging to earth, burying those aboard beneath its wreckage.

The accident, one of the most spectacular in the history of German aviation, was witnessed by hundreds of people. The huge craft, measuring 500 feet from end to end, was sailing gracefully 3000 feet up when suddenly those below were horrified to see a burst of flame and smoke.

Instantly fire enveloped the great gas bag. It was not until a perceptible lapse of time that the spellbound watchers heard the terrific detonation and knew that an explosion had caused the fire.

The monster balloon plunged earthward like a blazing meteor and the spectators scattered in all directions to save themselves from the deluge of fire that came with her.

This was the seventh of the aircraft built by the aged Count Zeppelin, pioneer of German aviation, that has come to grief, but only the last three accidents were attended with loss of life.

While thousands of Berliners were racing to Johannisthal to see the remains of the L-2, the Zeppelin passenger cruiser Hansa suddenly appeared over the capital.

It was said that the Hansa was ordered aloft to counteract the effect on the public of what is now admitted to be the greatest catastrophe in the history of German aviation.

POWERS TO RETIRE

Says Political Game Is Too Costly For Him To Play

Washington, Oct. 18.—Congressman Caleb Powers, who came to congress almost directly from the Kentucky prison, where for years he had conducted the sensational fight for his life growing out of the killing of Governor Goebel, will retire at the end of his term.

"I am not now financially able to longer stay in the game of politics and play it as the times demand," he said. "Any statement that I am retiring because of ostracism by members of congress is false. With the exception of the Democratic members from Kentucky, whose association and fellowship I never have sought nor desired, I have been treated respectfully and courteously by all members."

NEWSY BRIEFS

Mervyn J. Bailey of Brook street has been elected athletic representative of the Junior class of Boston University.

The Woman's Guild of St. Chrysostoms church is to give one of their famous suppers in the parish rooms Thursday evening. Mrs. Edward F. Parlee and Mrs. Herbert H. Albee are in charge of the affair.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Purcell, of Somerville are building an attractive eight room, year round house, just off of Park avenue, Squantum. They expect to occupy it the latter part of next month.

Thomas Currie is to break ground for his new house as soon as the weather permits. His land is located at the foot of Bellevue road. This will make the third house that Mr. Currie has built in Squantum.

Many friends will deeply sympathize with Mrs. Horace Mann Willard in the death of her sister Miss Sanders who is pleasantly remembered by many who have met her at the Quincy Mansion school.

Rev. William B. Ayers, pastor of the Park and Downs Congregational church resumes on Sunday evening the lectures of last winter, which drew large attendances and much praise. Mr. Ayers possesses strong oratorical power in the portrayal of his subjects. Tomorrow's subject will be The Shepherd of the Hills.

Ex-Councilman Harry G. Studley, who it at present stationed in New York city, is in town for a few days. Harry has the Daily Ledger sent to him every day, and says that he never realized how good a paper it was until he went away from home. Then he began to miss reading about things that were happening in Quincy. Now that he has the Ledger every day he keeps posted.

The Home Economic department of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's clubs has planned a course of six talks to home makers to be given in Perkins hall, 264 Boylston street Boston on the fourth Wednesday of each month at 3 p. m. The first on Oct. 22 will be given by Miss Laura Comstock of Massachusetts Agricultural college, whose topic will be "Friends and foes of the household." All interested are cordially invited.

ADMITS THAT HE SHOT HIS WIFE

Ellis, Cincinnati Leather Merchant, Confesses to Jury

SAYS MIND WAS AFFECTED

Claims There Never Was Any Trouble Between Them and That He Had No Idea of Committing Crime When He Came to Chicago—Permitted to Take Last Look at Body

Chicago, Oct. 18.—William C. Ellis, the Cincinnati leather merchant, who was found wounded in a hotel room here near the body of his wife, confessed to a coroner's jury that he had killed the woman. He was held for the grand jury charged with murder.

After a conference with members of his wife's family Ellis abandoned his assertion, made at first to the police, that the tragedy was the result of a suicide compact. He assumed the entire blame for the killing and devoted his statement to obliterating the impression, given first, that jealousy was the motive of the crime.

Ellis, suffering from a bullet wound in his chest and from cuts on his wrist and throat, self-inflicted after killing his wife, listened almost all day to the testimony in the coroner's court.

His confession was made in few words.

"I will state that I shot my wife," he said. "I suppose my mind must have been affected. I was worried over business troubles and the state of my health. I want to say that my wife was the grandest little woman in the world and the most virtuous. There was no trouble between us. She couldn't do anything wrong.

"She was in bed when I shot her. She did not know what I was going to do. I did not have any intention of doing this when I came to Chicago. I shot her first and gashed her afterwards with a knife."

Ellis, approaching collapse, begged to be allowed to take farewell of his wife's body. He was allowed to see it. From testimony it appeared that Ellis, who is 47 years old, killed his wife, who was twelve years younger than himself, some time in the late hours of Wednesday night. He remained for many hours with the body.

MANUFACTURERS CALLED

In Suit to Dissolve United States Steel Corporation

New York, Oct. 18.—The last of the ore experts left the stand and manufacturers were called in behalf of the United States Steel corporation in the government's suit to dissolve the "trust" under the Sherman law. Through several witnesses, the defense sought to show that no monopoly in the steel and iron trade exists.

Maximilian Lewinson, a consulting engineer, testified that in purchasing material no coercion had ever been exerted. F. W. Wurster, former mayor of Brooklyn, head of a rolling mill and manufacturing company, denied knowledge of the existence of any arrangement among manufacturers to regulate prices.

The hearings will be resumed Monday.

BLEW OUT THE GAS

Brockton Man Killed and Another In Serious Condition

Brockton, Mass., Oct. 18.—Stephen Haralampos, aged about 25, is dead, and his cousin, Kostas Minas, aged about 27, is at the Brockton hospital with a chance of recovery following the discovery of both men in their room on the third floor at 8 Lincoln street, overcome by gas. The two young men had been in America but nine days.

When they retired they blew out the gas, according to the theory held by the police. The gas jet was wide open when the room was entered.

A pulmotor was used on Haralampos for two hours in an unsuccessful attempt to resuscitate him.

WHITE SLAVER SENTENCED

Youngest Person Ever to Be Convicted For Such a Crime

New York, Oct. 18.—George Soalese, sentenced to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta for four years and six months by Federal Judge Veeder in Brooklyn, is believed to be the youngest white slaver ever convicted in the United States. He is just 17.

He was found guilty of locking 17-year-old Theodora Olsen in a room for days and then sending her on the street.

Deserted Man Asks Divorce

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 18.—Claiming that his wife, Ethelin Aldridge of Boston, had deserted him because he would not sell his farm in Westboro and move to the city to engage in business and reside, Addison Aldridge of Webster petitioned the superior court for an absolute divorce from her, and Judge John B. Ratigan, presiding in the case, granted the divorce.

Alfonso Undergoes Operation

Madrid, Oct. 18.—King Alfonso underwent a slight operation to relieve recurring catarrhal trouble. The king's condition is satisfactory.

PLUNGES INTO RIVER

Auto Truck With Load of Coal Drops Into Charles

Boston, Oct. 18.—William Howard was drowned and two men were rescued when Charles Crevitz, driver of a five-ton coal-laden auto truck, lost control of the machine on the Boston side of the Harvard bridge and the truck and men plunged into the river.

As the big truck smashed the bridge rail, it narrowly missed a score or more of pedestrians, who sprang aside just in time to save themselves from possible injury or death.

Crevitz, who resides at 118 Central avenue, Chelsea, and his helper, John Brunesque, of 12 Pond street, Chelsea, were rushed in ambulances to the city hospital as soon as they were pulled out of the water. They are suffering only from immersion, and will recover. Howards address is unknown.

The accident happened at an hour when the bridge was well filled with people on their way to work. The automobile appeared to be going, spectators declared, at a fair rate of speed. One of the men was on the seat beside the driver, the other on top of the coal.

VALUED AT $25,000

Property of Mrs. Thompson Held Up by Customs Officers

Boston, Oct. 18.—An estimate of the jewels and property in trunks seized from Mrs. May Van Allen Thompson and maid by customs officials in Charlestown was appraized at about $25,000 instead of $5000 as at first supposed.

The trunks contain valuable Parisian gowns, laces and coats. It was an empty bracelet case in one of the trunks that caused the disclosure, and the goods to be sent to the appraisers' stores.

Inspector Richardson discovered the empty case. When Mrs. Thompson was asked where the bracelet was she said it was in a safety vault in London. When asked to produce the key to the box she declined. After several questions she admitted the bracelet was in the stocking of the maid.

The property will be held until Mrs. Thompson can prove she is not a resident of the United States.

CAPTAIN INCH TO GET NEW VESSEL

Manager of Line Says They Need Men Like Him

New York, Oct. 18.—The unwritten but almost inexorable law of the seas which bars a captain who loses his ship from being given another command, will not be applied to Captain Francis Inch of the lost Volturno.

The officials of the Uranium line made it known that the heroism of the young skipper will preserve him from the fate of many a master whose ship the sea has claimed.

"The line needs men like Inch," said Manager E. O. Thomas. "He will be given another boat to command, and we'll be glad to keep him in our employ."

All the officers and crew of the Volturno brought to this port by the steamers Grosser Kurfuerst and Kroonland, excepting Captain Inch, will sail for England on the Oceanic of the White Star line. They are going back to attend the inquiry into the disaster conducted by the British board of trade. Captain Inch will sail Wednesday on the Mauretania.

CREW IS RESCUED

Captain and Three Men Taken From Barge J. V. Thomas

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 18.—The American steamer Melrose, Captain Frosproad, from Boston to Norfolk, arrived at Sewell's Point with Captain Malanda and three members of the crew of the barge J. V. Thomas, lost off the New England coast Wednesday. They were supposed to have perished.

The rescue was effected just after the Thomas crew had taken to their only lifeboat in the storm, four miles off Cape Cod. The Thomas went to the bottom half an hour later.

QUAKES IN NICARAGUA

Alarmed People of Cities Are Sleeping In Public Squares

San Juan del Sur, Nic., Oct. 18.—Violent, continuous earthquakes shook the cities of Managua, Masaya and Grenada, where the alarmed populations have deserted their houses and are sleeping in the public squares and open spaces.

One house collapsed in Jalteva, a suburb of Granada, and it is feared that more will fall. The earth's tremors coincide with the activity of the volcano of Santiago.

Mrs. Blake's Hearing Postponed

New York, Oct. 18.—The hearing on the application of Mrs. Katherine K. Blake for $1500 a month alimony and $5000 counsel fees pending settlement of her suit for separation from her husband, Dr. Joseph A. Blake, was postponed until Tuesday, Oct. 21.

Seven Drown In Mine

A Bit of Solder

A Story of Scotland Yard Efficiency Versus Yankee Cuteness

By MARION B. CURTISS

"Stivers, give me a room."

"I'm full, Clapham, but I've always made room for any of you fellows from Scotland Yard who has asked to be taken care of, for I know you're after game. Anything of importance?"

"Well, it's not exactly important, and yet it is important in one sense, seeing that there's a game to be played on us and we've got to make preparations to meet it. Have you any suspicious persons in the house?"

"Now you speak of it, a man came in yesterday. I don't think he's a regular crook, simply a measly chap that might be hired to do some dirty work."

"That fits exactly. I shall need your assistance, so I may as well show you my hand. You have this Mrs. Striker of Chicago here, whose coming to London has been made so much of in the society journals. These American millionairesses are, some of them, trying to beat the New York customs officers, and they do so quite often. The American detective is a very dull bird beside our English outlooker. This Mrs. Striker, I've learned, has bought the diamond that the Hardcastle family has been trying to find a purchaser for. They finally sold it to her for £20,000."

"Well?" said the landlord.

"Mrs. Striker is not going to pay American duty on a stone that can be carried in a shoe heel or a bouquet of flowers or a watch case with the works removed to make room for it or a dozen other places of concealment, but the trouble is that the news has gone over that she's bought the Hardcastle gem, and those muttonheads of New York will be on the lookout for her. She's to sail on the Romania on Wednesday, and they'll naturally expect that the diamond goes with her.

"Now, we of Scotland Yard are up to all these smuggling tricks and are on to this game. I don't need to give away how I got the story, but I got it all the same. Tomorrow morning Mrs. Striker will be found bound and gagged in her room and the diamond gone. The New York chaps will see an account of the loss cabled to the newspapers, and when the lady arrives she will not meet with the attention she deserves."

"But what's the need of a robbery if it's all a fake?"

"That's where our part over here comes in. Mrs. Striker will be hounding us Scotland Yard men to recover her diamond and giving talk to the newspaper reporters. There's doubtless some confederate of hers right here in your hotel who will take the blame of robbery."

"I see; he'll take it and return it to her secretly."

"No, he won't do any such thing. Do you suppose she'd trust it to a fellow like that? What she wants him for is to make it appear that he robbed her of it. And how can we Scotland Yard men get it back from him when he hasn't got it?"

"There's that measly chap I spoke to you about now—that red headed fellow just going into the smoking room. He booked himself from Brumagem, but I know by his accent that he's an American. Lunnon is full of American crooks. I shouldn't wonder if they kept you fellows busy looking after them."

"So they do. I'm glad you've pointed him out to me; it will save my hunting him up. What's the number of his room?"

"No. 76. Come to think of it, Mrs. Striker's room is 75, directly opposite."

"Phew! What a simple game it is, to be sure!"

"What are you going to do?"

"Make sure he doesn't leave his room tonight after he goes up. I shall sprinkle a fine powder on the sill and in front of the door. He's not going to have anything to do with the matter except to take the blame for stealing the diamond. I'll prove in the morning that he didn't go into Mrs. Striker's room, for I shall put some powder before her door too. All the police will have to do when the newspapers howl at us is to bring forward my proof."

"You are a sharp one, sure enough. Well, I'll give you 72, a bit farther along the corridor. Going up now?"

"No, not till I've done some watching of this red headed chap. I must satisfy myself that he's the confederate. I don't propose to leave some one else to do the job while I'm watching the wrong man."

The landlord went behind his counter, and the detective went into the smoking room where he found the red headed man, whom he did not lose sight of till the latter went to his room. Clapham, not satisfied with his powder device, sat up all night looking through a space made by leaving his door ajar. He saw nothing unusual. At 7 o'clock in the morning the door of No. 75 was opened, and a lady's maid hurried downstairs. She soon returned with the clerk, and the two made for Mrs. Striker's room. Clapham followed them into the room and saw Mrs. Striker bound in a chair and gagged. As soon as the gag was taken out she cried:

"It's gone!"

"What's gone?" asked the clerk.

"My diamond."

"Who took it?"

"I don't know. The lock of my door was picked. I heard some one working at it, but before I could decide what to do the door was thrown open and some one came in. There being no light in the room, I couldn't see who he was. I gave a cry, and he sprang upon me, put that thing in my mouth and tied me in the chair. Then he said that if I didn't tell him where the Hardcastle diamond was he would kill me. To save my life I told him that it was under my pillow on the bed. He took it and left me as you see."

The afternoon London newspapers published the fact of the loss of the diamond, but refrained from giving any clew to the robber. Scotland Yard officials looked wise and said nothing. They did not even watch the measly chap with the red head. But Mrs. Striker, to make sure that the news of the loss of her diamond reached New York, cabled the fact to her husband, and an account of the robbery appeared in all the afternoon journals.

People in London were surprised at the apathy of the police in the matter. But there was one man among them who was not apathetic, Chapham. There was a supplementary game on hand that he did not mention to Stivers. He wished to discover that the diamond was still in Mrs. Striker's possession and receive several thousand pounds hush money. When the lady left her room he entered it with a pass key and looked in every nook for the gem. There was not a hollow article or one that could be made hollow in the room that he did not take to pieces. The stone might be contained in one of a cluster of artificial grapes ornamenting one of a number of hats he found in the room, and he demolished every grape without finding what he looked for. Some bell shaped buttons he cracked, with the same negative result. At last he was obliged to give up the job.

Meanwhile the red headed man came and went in and out of the hotel. The landlord was anxious to get rid of him, but had no excuse to turn him out. Indeed, he was requested by Clapham not to do so. Clapham was not sure some cue might not yet be derived from him. But nothing turned up. At the sailing of the Romania, Clapham stood on the dock. After the gangplank had been removed and the vessel was well out, who should he see waving his hand to him with a sardonic smile on his face but the measly red headed man he had sat up all night to watch. The Londoner stood gaping at the fellow till he was out of sight, then turned away muttering imprecations on the whole "blarsted" Yankee nation.

Mrs. Striker kept her stateroom for a day or two, then appeared on deck. Everybody on board had heard of her loss, and those who had an acquaintance with her commiserated with her for it. She tossed her head and laughed as though the matter were of no great importance to her, as indeed it was not, for she was rich enough to buy more gems at the same price.

When the Romania was steaming up New York bay, among the crowd of passengers standing on the deck was Mrs. Striker. She wore a very large hat, trimmed elaborately, that she had bought in London not two hours before leaving her hotel for the steamer. She descried a motorboat flying a peculiar flag put out from Staten Island and heading directly for the steamer. When it had come within a few hundred yards of her a gust of wind took her beautiful hat and dropped it on the water. But the motorboat that arrived so timely received it and sped away merrily.

It did not get very far before it was stopped. Soon after the Romania passed Sandy Hook another motorboat was seen following her, and the red headed man from London from the stern was making signals to it, which were evidently understood. As soon as the first boat rescued the hat the second gave it chase, overhauled it and took it in charge.

When Mrs. Striker reached the dock in New York she was arrested for smuggling. The hat was produced, and in a large swelling ornament was the Hardcastle diamond. The face had been removed, the stone inserted and the face soldered in its place again.

"How did you get on to the business, Watkins?" asked the customs inspector.

"Well, you see, I was sent over to track the man who absconded from the —th National bank and was in London when the lady bought the stone. I reckoned she might try to get it in free of duty, and I took a room directly opposite hers at the hotel. She put up a job of robbery on the Londoners in order that it might be cabled over here and put you fellows off your guard. A Scotland Yard man got on to the business, but not on to its true inwardness. The way I located it was this: While shadowing the lady I saw her buy some solder, and the last thing she bought in London was the hat that blew off her head in the bay. Not long ago, you may remember, we had a case of hat blowing. I put the two together and cabled our agency to be on the lookout. The rest you know."

"Well, I'll report the case to the collector of the port. You go up to his office in a few days and you'll find out what the government will do for you. What do you expect?"

"I think, considering the goods are worth $100,000 and the duty will run up pretty well into the thousands, they ought to do something pretty nice for me."

"I think so, too, especially since they wouldn't have got a cent of duty themselves if it hadn't been for you."

Something pretty nice was done for Watkins, but since it was done from a private fund it was never known how much he got out of it.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

"It is indeed," I said, "just as it was set forth in the parchment."

"And the great stone faces," she added in a voice in which there was a touch of awe.

"Let us go nearer and ascend the stairs," I said, taking her hand and leading the way, and she was so preoccupied that she did not notice.

I observed as we approached the stairs that the rock had been worn smooth by the wind and weather, or maybe by the passing of many feet and were quite practicable for ascent. The angle at which they rose was steep too.

The ascent was easy enough for me, but hard for her, and several times I made bold to lift her up the higher steps, which she suffered without complaining. She told me long afterward that my manner toward her then and thereafter had been perfect.

When we at last reached the top before us lay a broad pathway rudely paved with the same hard stone. This road led straight into the interior of the island of which we could see as yet nothing, because the wall here abouts was covered with dense, luxurious vegetation. Progress was difficult even in the pathway. It would have been impossible in some places but for my heavy cutlass with which I cut a path where the place had become overgrown by trees and bushes which had forced their way through the cracks, overturning and breaking the heavy flagstones and blocking up the path, which it was evident had not been traversed for generations, perhaps not since the old buccaneer himself had walked along it beneath the spreading trees.

For perhaps a mile we pursued our journey across the top of the wall winding in and out among the trees through the jungle, the path evidently seeking the most level direction, for the top of the wall was very much broken and irregular.

At last we came to an open spot on the inner edge overlooking the whole island, and before us lay such a picture as few eyes, at least of our race, had ever looked upon. The wall ended abruptly and fell on the inner or landward side as precipitously as it rose outwardly and to seaward. Before us lay a most entrancing valley, perhaps three or four miles across and maybe half as long again in the other direction and which was walled about on every hand. It was sunk beneath this wall crest for perhaps 100 feet or more.

In the center of the valley the land rose a little higher than the island wall in a very considerable hill, tree crowned on the slopes, but largely bare on the crest. Through the valley ran a brook, which ended in a little lake, which I suspected had some subterranean connection with the ocean. As far as we could see—and the whole circuit of the island was now clearly visible to us—the inclosing wall was unbroken. The valley was filled with clusters of trees and alternating stretches of grassy meadow.

We should have been hard put to it to descend the wall to the valley were it not for the fact that the same people who built the stairs that gave access to the wall from the sea had built a similar flight which led to the valley. Before we essayed the descent of the stairs we drank our fill of the beauty and mysterious charm of it all. Indeed, there was no sound that came to us except the twittering of the birds of which there were many, brilliantly plumaged, flittering in the trees. All else was still, lonely, deserted, oppressively so in fact.

"What think you of this?" My lady broke the silence. "Is it not like the crater of a volcano?"

"Nay," said I; "these are coral rocks, and there is no sign of lava about them, yet it has somewhat of the appearance, especially that flattened hillock in the center."

I have since talked with many men and studied the writings of the most learned geologists. They have fancied that perhaps the rocky projection in the middle of the valley, where we saw the great altar of sacrifice with its attendant idols later on, was the original island, which was once surrounded by a coral reef, which was now become a wall, and that some great upheaval had lifted the whole up out of the water in ages gone by and that the barrier reef over which we had passed was the second attempt of the busy little insects to surround the island again.

"What is to be done now?" asked my little mistress.

"I hardly know," I answered. "What is exercising me most now is, first of all, what is going on in that same mutinous ship, and, next, how we shall finally get away from here."

"You are impatient," returned my lady, smiling.

"Impatient for you, madam," I interrupted, checking myself from further self revealing speech just in time.

"One thing at a time," she continued. "By the favor of God, we have escaped from the murderers and mutineers. We shall not starve upon this island, and I have no doubt that sooner or later you will devise some means of our escape."

It was past noon by this time. I made sure of it by looking at the sun and confirming it by my watch, which I most carefully kept running during all our sojourn on the island, which indicated close on two bells, 1 o'clock. Our talk of the ship recalled me to myself.

"I think," said I, "that we had better postpone the exploration of the island until another day and go back to our landing place. If I know the men on that ship they will guess that we have escaped to this island and they will bring her round to this side, where we may have them under view and they us."

"Think you that they can come at us?" she asked, in sudden alarm.

"I think not," I answered confidently, "but still to make sure I should like to have them under observation."

Well, to make a long story short, we retraced our steps over the broken path until we reached the stairs on the other side. The descent of them was much easier than the ascent, and by 2 of the clock we stepped on the sand again. There before us in the offing was the ship. We saw them quite plainly, and I doubt not they caught sight of us immediately also. They were scarcely a quarter of a mile away from the reef, perilously near, I thought, and we could mark them crowding the rail and staring landward. We could see them brandishing their weapons and we could imagine the yells which must have arisen from the decks when they caught sight of us.

The ruffians aboard the ship did not content themselves with simply staring at us, for presently they assembled on the port quarter—the ship was under all plain sail on the starboard tack at the time, the wind having fallen to a gentle breeze during the day—and clambered into the cutter, swinging at the davits. As she was lowered

"Let us fly! They are coming to take us!"

into the water, fully manned, Mistress Lucy drew closer to my side, seizing my arm with both hands.

"Let us fly! They are coming to take us!" she cried in great alarm.

"But they are on a vain errand," I reassured her.

"But why? How can you know that? Oh, Master Hampdon, let us hasten away."

"We have a protector," I answered confidently enough.

"God?" asked she.

"His handiwork," I replied as I indicated with a gesture the barrier reef over which the waves were breaking.

"But we passed it."

"Yes, in a light dinghy, and you remember the difficulty and danger. They will never surmount it in the heavy cutter. They will not attempt it trust me."

"But if there should be an opening?"

"I don't believe there is one," was my reassuring reply. "I have no fear that they can get at us."

"And we can't get to them," she answered more composedly.

"I have no wish so to do," I laughed.

"You don't understand me," she persisted. "What keeps them out keeps us in."

"Yes," I admitted, "that is true, but for the present I don't mind being kept in so long as they are kept out."

She looked at me quickly and confessed afterward that my words begot some quick suspicion which she admitted was unworthy of her and unwarranted by any act of mine, but I looked so placid that it soon passed from her mind. As a matter of fact, I had not appreciated the significance of my words. I should have been perfectly willing, I should be still, to pass the rest of my life alone on that island or anywhere else with my little mistress only. I was happy then. I had got her to myself; she must look to me for everything. The haughty little queen of the quarterdeck was now the humble dependent by my side.

CODDINGTONS WIN AT SOCCER

The interrupted soccer schedule of the grammar schools was resumed Friday evening at Merrymount Park. The grounds were rather heavy owing to the recent rains. The attendance was not as large as expected. Atherton Hough and Wallaston played a scoreless tie, and the Coddingtons beat the Massachusetts Fields 2 to 1. The divisions have not been named as yet but the masters will be called together next week to choose the designations. Had good weather prevailed thirteen games would have been played to date. Only five have been played leaving eight contest to be scattered throughout the regular schedule in order to finish before winter sets in. The results to date are:

Washington, 4; Wollaston 0.

WWillard 0; Massachusetts Field. 0.

Quincy, 2; Cranch, 0.

Athertons, 0; Wollaston, 0.

Coddington, 2; Massachusetts Fields, 1.

Mrs. E. B. Ford of Franklin street, who has been ill with typhoid fever is convalescing.

It should be recorded that there was a moonlight evening last night, but today was not all that could be desired.

Maurice Blackmur has been playing third base on the Dartmouth freshman nine. In the fall series with the sophomores, the freshmen won two out of the three games played.

Friends of Master George H. Norris, son of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Norris of Whitwell street, will be pleased to know that he is resting comfortably in the Quincy Hospital; where he underwent a serious operation last week.

Mrs. Nixon Wiley Elmer (Alice L. Claflin) who recently returned from Germany where she continued her musical studies has decided to accept a limited number of pupils in pianoforte and ear-training.

During the evening "Young John" led the cheering and all responded with a gusto. A play given by local talent is always popular in Quincy, and "Cranberry Corners," given under the auspices of the Unity Circle of King's Daughters, in Music hall the evening of November 18, has a two-fold interest, as one half the proceeds are to go towards the rest and recreation rooms for girls, which are to be established in Quincy in the near future, and for which two very excellent entertainments have already been given, the Russian tea at Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann's and the lawn fete at Mrs. Henry M. Faxon's.

Quincy High vs Dedham High this afternoon at the oval at Merrymount park.

The police have been doing quite a business in the dog line this year and as a result of their work there are 85 less dogs now running about the city than there was in July. Early in July the police began to get after unlicensed dogs and one dog officer alone David Gordon has disposed of 71 dogs. Other animals have been put away by Dr. Francis Abele, Jr., and a few by other officers.

William Quigley, who died at the police station, was buried in Mt. Wollaston cemetery on Friday. Although some Boston papers reported that bruises existed it is understood that there were none on the body. A portion of the brain and spine was sent to Harvard for a laboratory examination to aid in determining the cause of death. The physicians state however it was due to natural causes.

LARGE BARN DEMOLISHED.

The large barn on the John Quincy Adams estate on Sea street has been demolished. Some few years ago one of the smaller barns between the old barn and the main buildings was torn down. The large barn has been in constant danger of collapse during the recent heavy winds and this week the building was torn down, or rather pulled down, for instead of taking it in piecemeal as usual, so as to save the lumber, the building was pulled down, and it will not be possible to save much of the old lumber. Years ago the Adams farm was one of the largest on the South shore, but for a few years has not been worked.

AUTUMN PARTY.

The Autumn party of Ave Maria council, No. 1535, Knights of Columbus, in St. Mary's hall Friday evening was one of the social successes of the order and all parts of the city were represented. The officers of the council had the affair in charge.

Fifty unsecured creditors hold claims aggregating $32,477.62 The principal secured creditor is the Granite Trust Co. of Quincy with a claim of $4,500.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LECTURE

Clarence W. Chadwick the Speaker

Alpha Hall Was Crowded

Alpha hall was filled to overflowing Sunday afternoon at a lecture on "Christian Science" by Clarence W. Chadwick, C. S. B. who received close attention. He said in part:

"The presentation of a subject involving the vastness of infinity is destined to encounter a wide range of human belief, theory and opinion; and the question naturally suggests itself, Why is it that Christian people, actuated by the same lofty aims and ambitions; working side by side in their daily avocations, and having the same definite goal before them, should differ so radically in their thought of the infinite?

Centuries have passed since these assuring words of the prophet Jeremiah: "They shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord;" and the positive promise of the Master, "There shall be one fold, and one shepherd," and still there is a deplorable lack of unity among professing Christians throughout the civilized world,—and still we find an altar with this inscription, "To The Unknown God." Why is it? The answer is plain; humanity have been trying to know God, to see good, through the human mind or material senses. Almost unconsciously they have drifted farther and farther away from the Mind that was with Christ Jesus, and "the commandments of men" have taken the place of sound doctrine. If all in this audience could at once adopt the one essential view-point of Christian Science they would immediately be enabled to prove the verity of its teachings. It is not the purpose of this lecture, however, to force conclusions upon so important a subject, but to speak from that view-point of the Science which has enabled its adherents to find in it a satisfying explanation of the phenomenon of human existence.

Point of Agreement.

There is perhaps one basic thought upon which all rligionists agree at the very outset—namely, Consciousness is. We all assent to the fact that we are in a conscious state of being or existence, and that without such consciousness we would cease to exist. So far, so good. But when we attempt to call this consciousness good, we immediately plunge into an abyss of darkness from which the Christian world for centuries has been struggling to extricate itself, that of mingling good and evil, calling evil good and good evil. This dualistic concept of consciousness has been the seeming cause of untold suffering and torment to the human race. It is evident then that from it humanity must escape if they would ever reach what is called heaven. Hence their need of a Saviour.

Right Mental Activity.

If two men are in a frenzied state of thought, and almost upon the point of inflicting bodily injury upon each other, we all know that a certain degree of right mental activity on their part will soon restore harmony, in fact we cannot think of any other possible means of bringing about such a result. If a pupil in mathematics becomes confused in thought and cannot work out his problem, we know that the influence of right thought will soon adjust the difficulty and enable him to solve his problem. We all acknowledge that his state of consciousness must change before he can complete his work.

If a friend is prostrated with grief and thinking that life is drear and lonely, we know and acknowledge that the application of rightly directed thought will very soon act as oil upon the troubled waters, and mourning will be turned into joy. If fear overwhelms one we admit that a thought

The services were of a simple nature and were conducted by Rev. James Matheson of the Water Street Presbyterian church. After reading the scripture and offering prayer, Rev. Mr. Matheson said that he would speak from the words of James, "For what is your life." He spoke of the different aspects of life, saying that it was

WEDDING AT FIRST CHURCH

Blanche Morrison Bride of Ambler Welch

Rainbow Colors Used

At First church Saturday evening two well known Quincy young people plighted their troth surrounded by a large assemblage of friends. The bride was Blanche Morrison, elder daughter of Mrs. Wallace Thaxter Davis and the late Fred J. Morrison of Braintree and the groom Francis Ambler Welch, only son of Dr. and Mrs. John F. Welch of Hancock street.

The floral decorations were palms and white chrysanthemums, which banked the high mahogany pulpit, making a beautiful background for the bridal party. They were effectively arranged in keeping with the stately simplicity of the church. William Weston of Wollaston, organist at the church played while the guests were being seated, the ushers being Lyndon Hardwick, Richard Pattee, Parker Robinson and Robert Davis of Quincy; Laurence Winship of Somerville, Norman Southworth of Holbrook, Horatio Beal of Hanover and Henry Doye of Somerville.

At eight o'clock the bridal procession entered the church passing down the broad aisle, the ushers preceding the bridesmaids, the maid of honor, the flower girl and the bride and her mother, and were met at the altar by the groom and his best man Harold Bryant of Northfield, Vermont, and Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, pastor of First church who solemnized the marriage assisted by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, pastor of Bethany Congregational church. The bride was given in marriage by her mother, the double ring service being used and was impressive. The bridal party was a pretty one the delicate colors of the rainbow being used with good effect.

The bride's gown was of white satin trimmed with chantilly lace of rose point pattern, the long court train of chiffon making the petite bride look stately and charming. The long tuile veil was caught with lilies of the valley and the shower bouquet was of bride roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Beatrice Morrison, sister of the bride was maid of honor and wore a pink chiffon over pink satin with garniture of white ribbon roses and green foliage and carried pink roses. A Medici collar and long pointed train completed the picturesque and beautiful costume.

Miss Beatrice Johnson cousin of the bride was flower girl and was dressed entirely in white and carried a basket filled with colored rose petals which she scattered in the path of the bride.

There were four bridesmaids. Miss Marjorie Welch, sister of the groom wore white satin with pale lavender chiffon overdress; Miss Louise Abercrombie of Braintree, cousin of the bride wore white satin with overdress of pale green chiffon; Miss Catherine Saville of Quincy wore white satin with pale yellow chiffon ovedress and Miss Ethel Hersey white satin with pale blue chiffon overdress. All carried yellow roses. The gowns were cut entrain and had Medici collars, the group forming a beautiful picture of soft color effect. All the bride's attendants were recipients of gold pendants from her as a souvenir of the happy occasion and the groom remembered his best man and ushers with scarf pins.

Following the church ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride 42 Edgemere road from half past eight until half past ten, attended by relatives and intimate friends. Mrs. Davis and Dr. and Mrs. Welch assisted in receiving. Mrs. Davis was gowned in white brocade with garniture of jet and Mrs. Welch in pink chiffon satin trimmed with rose point lace.

The decorations at the house were autumn leaves, chrysanthemums, asters and dahlias. A wedding supper

DEDICATION OF NEW CHAPEL

Memorable Day for Wollaston Baptists

An Interesting Program

With special exercises in all departments on Sunday at the Wollaston Baptist church observed the opening of the addition to the chapel.

The dedication service was held at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon and was attended by a congregation that taxed the seating capacity of the pews and represented every church in Wollaston among those assembled to rejoice at the good fortune of the church.

An organ prelude "Pastorale in C" by Lefebure-Wely and the congregational hymn "Christ is the sure foundation" opened the exercises. The invocation was offered by the pastor, Rev. Joseph Walther followed by the Lord's prayer and gloria.

A large chorus choir augmented by a quartette and under the direction of Amos D. Albee rendered the anthem "Cantate Domino" by Buck. They were accompanied by Miss Eleanor Knox on the organ and Mrs. Joseph Walther, piano.

The quartette consisted of Miss Ruth L. Hardy, Mrs. A. O. Blaisdell, Avard L. Walker and Edward E. Bullock.

The scriptures were read by Rev. C. C. Tilley of the Calvary Baptist church of Quincy and prayer was offered by Rev. Thomas S. Barbour, D. D., of Wollaston. "Jerusalem the Golden" was sung by the congregation.

During the offertory a piano and organ duet, "Dedication" by Batiste, was played by Mrs. Walther and Miss Knox. The anthem "King All Glorious" by Barnaby was sung by the augmented choir.

The speaker of the afternoon, Rev. James A. Francis, D. D., of the Clarendon street Baptist church spoke in a very happy vein bringing attention to the great influence brought to bear by the Sunday school, or Bible school as he liked to call it, upon the pupils and making for character and a good life.

Although the lights suddenly went out during the course of his address Dr. Francis with great presence of mind held the attention of the audience with a timely jest and brought strongly to bear his closing plea.

The lack of light brought to an end

The college professors are arguing in New Jersey whether highway signs should read "Go slow" or "Go slowly." Probably the motorists pass the signs too rapidly to tell which form is used.

Why say that modern life is not developing great historic personalities, when there are Christy Mathewson and Home Run Baker?

Now that Ohio railroad trains can't serve any liquor after Nov. 4, the location of the Great American Desert seems to be definitely established.

These extremists who are trying to reform the tango go so far as to say that it should be possible to slip a sheet of paper between two dancers.

Many families are now foraging for mushrooms, which taste mighty good unless it is absolutely certain that they are safe varieties.

There doesn't seem to be any particular reason why Congress should economize, as the income tax can always be doubled.

No Gladys, tall steeples and high roofs may still be built, even though the Low church party did seem to control the Episcopal convention.

Although Christy Mathewson at the age of 33 is called an aged man, he is still able to hobble around without a cane.

The Episcopal convention favors stricter marriage laws, although some of our active bridegrooms are handing over fees to the clergy at fairly frequent intervals.

The tail feathers of the old speckled hen would make a very handsome hat trimming, but there is the fatal objection that they don't cost as much as aigrettes.

Col. Goethals would never succeed as a public works superintendant, as he has spent at Panama only $304,000,000 of the original estimate of $375,000,000.

If the Smithsonian building is not big enough to accomodate the new specimens Col. Roosevelt will get in South America, they could appropriately be placed with the other wild animals in Congress.

ALASKA'S CALL.

The disastrous tidal wave that partly overwhelmed the Alaskan city of Nome has aroused friendly sympathy in the rest of the United States. Substantial gifts of money and supplies have been made. The people of Alaska will be grateful for this help in time of need. But they would be glad to see this opportunity for friendly ministration wholly ignored, if they could have in its place some attention and needed legislation from Congress.

Alaska exported $45,000,000 worth of produce in 1912, six times more than Uncle Sam paid for the whole territory. It is sometimes asserted that Alaska has a larger proportion of college bred men than any state in the union. But the call for careful study of its needs, and decision upon some settled land and mining policy, remains unheard. As a result its population, practically stationary for a dozen years, is unsettled and partly nomadic. There is no secure basis of legislation on which to build industrial life and institutions.

A prominent Massachusetts manufacturer remarked the other day, "What country owns Alaska now, anyway?" And most of the people who could answer this elementary question have but the haziest idea of the wonderful possibilities of Alaska, with its territory twice the size of Texas, and of its pressing needs.

As a result of the quarrel over the question of the conservation of the coal lands, the United States owns a lot of idle coal property. It will neither sell it, give it away, lease it, or operate mines itself. If a private individual did that with his own property, he would be called senile, and a guardian would be appointed. Congress should agree on some decided line of policy, and set loose the wonderful stores of energy ready to labor at the bidding of man.

NEW THEORY IN THE EATON CASE

Admiral Disliked June Keyes Bringing Baby to Home

MAY BE MOTIVE FOR CRIME

Professor Whitney Will Exhibit Vital Organs of Deceased Man and Arsenic Taken From Body—Widow's Mother and Daughter Say She Was Unreasonably Jealous

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 20.—One of the sensations in this week's proceedings at the trial of Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton for the alleged murder of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, may have the 18-months-old child of Mrs. June A. Keyes, the admiral's stepdaughter, as the central figure.

Admiral Eaton, it has been learned, was averse to the child being brought to the Eaton residence after June and her husband had separated. The admiral is pictured as being strongly opposed to the infant being brought to his home.

And this attitude, it is declared, will be treated with great emphasis by the prosecution in their effort to show that Mrs. Eaton had a motive for wishing the admiral out of the way.

The government's contention will be that, with the admiral removed from the homestead, Mrs. Eaton would have been able to fulfill her wish of having June Keyes and her child in the household.

It was further learned that some time after the death of the admiral, June Keyes disappeared, and the government officials for three months were almost at their wits' end in an effort to locate her. But a few weeks ago she was traced by means of her trunk to Quincy Point, where she and her baby are now living.

The government's contention as outlined in the opening address of Assistant District Attorney Frederick Katzmann, is that Mrs. Eaton, on March 6, while laboring under hallucinations, administered arsenic to her husband, Admiral Eaton, and that from that time until shortly before his death on March 8, she continued to administer the poison.

Both Dorothy Eaton and Mrs. Virginia Harrison, the daughter and mother of the accused woman, have testified that Mrs. Eaton prepared the meal following which the admiral was fatally stricken, and that from the beginning of this illness until his death, Mrs. Eaton alone waited upon im, supplying him, according to her alleged statements, with medicines, tea and milk.

These witnesses also have testified to jealousy borne by Mrs. Eaton towards her husband, and both have said that this jealousy was unwarranted.

Professor Whitney's testimony concerning the poison, fifteen grains of which are said to have been found undissolved in the stomach of the dead man, will be offered in the support of the contention that during the admiral's last illness Mrs. Eaton continued the fatal drug.

It will be during Whitney's occupancy of the stand that the viscera, brain and other vital organs taken from the dead body of Admiral Eaton will be introduced as evidence, and in addition to these somewhat gruesome exhibits, the white arsenic taken from the stomach will be entered in the case.

AEROPLANE TEST POSTPONED

War Department Finds It Difficult to Get Proper Engines

Washington, Oct. 20.—The tests of the four new army aeroplanes, which were to have taken place at Dayton, O., this month, have been indefinitely postponed, owing to difficulty of securing the foreign engines required for propulsion.

Meanwhile the signal officers are sending an expert aviator abroad to gather data for the adoption of a uniform system of controlling mechanism to be applied to all the army aeroplanes, so that special training will be unnecessary for the handling of machines.

LANDS ON COFFIN

Motorcyclist Loses Control and Is Thrown Through Hearse Doors

Bloomingdale, N. J., Oct. 20.—Losing control of a high-powered motorcycle at Union square, John Roach of Butler was thrown from the machine, went head first through the glass doors of a hearse and landed on top of a coffin in which was the body of Oscar Vreeland.

The funeral procession had to halt and several of the mourners were called to assist the undertaker in removing Roach, who was badly cut, from the hearse.

KAISER AND SON AT ODDS

Two-Hour Secret Talk Over Brunswick Succession

Berlin, Oct. 20.—Crown Prince Frederick William arrived in Berlin from Munich and was summoned to appear immediately before the emperor at Potsdam. The subject of the two hours interview which followed was the recent demonstrative announcement of the crown prince's opposition to his father's policy regarding the Brunswick succession.

The crown prince, according to an inspired statement before the interview, was prepared to deny responsibility for the publication of his letter to the imperial chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, and to disapprove the use made of it. In this letter the prince had protested against permission being given to Prince Ernst August of Cumberland, the husband of the emperor's daughter, Princess Victoria Luise, to occupy the throne of the duchy of Brunswick without his express renunciation of his pretensions to the throne of Hanover.

LAW HURT AGAIN

Dives From Flying Boat and Lands on His Back

New York, Oct. 20.—Rodman Law, who has frequently been hurt while performing unique feats of aviation, was injured again when he dived from a flying boat into Staten Island waters. He was taken to a hospital with a sprained back after a headforemost plunge from the air machine while it was traveling seventy miles an hour.

Law was in the flying boat with William Thaw of Pittsburg and Stephen MacGordon. There were seats for two in the machine, but a place was rigged up for Law on one of the wings, and from this Law made his dive from a height of fifty feet. He miscalculated the speed of the flying boat and struck the water on his back. Men in rowboats rescued him.

SPENCER PROVES HIS CRIMES TRUE

Takes Officers to Scenes of Murder and Robbery

Chicago, Oct. 20.—The police department here is facing the most interesting situation of a kind in its career in the efforts of the prisoner, Henry Spencer, to prove that he is guilty of the score or more of murders to which he has confessed, while the police, made incredulous by the wide extent of his alleged crimes, have been in a somewhat defensive attitude. Despite the incredulity of the police Spencer now seems to be proving that he is fully as black as he has painted himself.

"We've simply got to take the most of what this man Spencer has said as the truth," said Coroner Hopf, of Dupage county, who is interested in Spencer's case because Mrs. Mildred A. Rexroat was shot to death in that county and Spencer says he shot her.

In many cases Spencer "has made good." He informed the police they would find in a hotel tower a hammer he used to commit one crime. The hammer was found. He told them of a pawn shop where, he said, he had pawned a wedding ring of one woman whose life he had taken. The police found a record of exactly such a transaction, and the pawnbroker identified Spencer as the man who pawned the ring for 75 cents.

St. Johns, Oct. 20.—Fishermen who happen to be away from their homes on Oct. 30, the day set for the general election in Newfoundland, will not be disfranchised if they are within reach of St. Johns.

The government, recognizing the fact that at the end of October every year hundreds of men from all parts of the island come here to dispose of their summer's catch of fish, has worked out a plan whereby they will be permitted to deposit their ballots in this city.

Washington, Oct. 20.—Mr. Daniels, the secretary of the navy, intends to deal with unusual severity with all officers of the navy who are reported for drunkenness.

He has issued an order directing that in future all cases of intoxication be reported to the department before disciplinary action. This order is for the purpose of keeping himself informed of the habits of officers who indulge too freely, so that he can handle their cases personally.

GENERAL HUERTA WILL NOT QUIT

President of Mexico Repudiates Agreement to Resign

SUSPICIOUS OF WAR MINISTER

Indications That England Is Trying to Control Tampico Oil Fields—Constitutionalist Leaders Say War Would Stop In Twenty-Four Hours If Huerta Would Step Out

Washington, Oct. 20.—New complications in the ever shifting entanglement of Mexican affairs are the repudiation by General Huerta of an agreement to resign, and the indications that Great Britain, through her minister to Mexico, Sir Lionel Carden, is fighting for control of the Tampico oil fields.

General Huerta's suspicion of General Blanquet, his minister of war, and one of the men who, with Felix Diaz, conspired with him in the downfall of President Madero, is the reason assigned for his refusal to abandon his virtual dictatorship. Private advices from Mexico City say the provisional president fears a plot to ruin him.

General Blanquet is understood to be on friendly terms with General Diez, whose arrival is awaited with much interest, since it may result in important developments in the whole Mexican situation.

That the American administration would regard Blanquet in power with as much disfavor as it does the regime of Huerta himself, is no secret here. It is known that the two men were in the plot against Madero's life. It is not so widely known, however, that General Blauquet was the prime mover in the conspiracy, and that General Huerta at first opposed the step as unnecessary and unwise.

Mexicans in Washington assert that General Blanquet is not a native of Mexico and is therefore ineligible for the presidency. It is not expected, however, that, with the army at his back, he would allow such a trifling matter as the constitution to stand in his way.

Assurances have been forwarded to President Wilson by leaders of the constitutionalists that General Huerta can end the warfare in twenty-four hours byn stepping out of office and turning the presidency over to a new neutral man in whom all factions can have confidence.

It is admitted that President Wilson is irritated by the action of Sir Lionel Carden, the British minister, in taking an open stand against the leadership of the United States in trying to settle the Mexican trouble. Underlying the antagonism to American interests, some observers profess to see a desire by the British government to obtain control of the Tampico oil fields, so that an adequate supply of fuel will be available for the oil-burning vessels of the British navy.

It is asserted that the discovery of a conspiracy to grant an oil monopoly to British capitalists among the seventy-four deputies, now imprisoned, was one reason prompting the drastic action of General Huerta.

President Wilson still refuses to believe that the British government is opposed to his efforts to settle the Mexican situation. American residents in Mexico, in private dispatches received here, profess no such certainty. Belief is indicated in these advices the chief consideration of the British government is the interests of British concessionaries, especially the group headed by Lord Cowdray, which, besides trying to sell its interest in the Tehuantapec railway to the Mexican government, is understood to be playing a much bigger game, in which the Tampico oil fields figure.

During the services the Granite City quartette sang "Nearer My God to Thee" and "Shall we meet beyond the river."

An opportunity for a last farewell was offered after the services, after which the body was taken in escort to Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the members of the City Council acting as honorary bearers and Miles J. McInnis, Robert Mavers, Forbes Craig, John Robbie, Daniel Scouler and William T. Cumming acting as active bearers.

A squad of police under Sergt. Bishop followed by members of the City Council and city officials headed the procession, being followed by the members of Clan McGregor, many of whom wore the picturesque plaids of the order, members of the Royal Arcanum and Scots Charitable society.

Arriving in front of City Hall the Council and officials drew up in line as the cortege passed through. As the funeral procession started down Coddigton street, the bell on the First church tolled the age of the deceased.

Arriving at Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the burial service of Clan McGregor, O. S. C., was read by officers of the clan. Nearly 300 clansmen were in attendance.

MORE RAIN.

Although it was late Sunday before it actually began to rain the day was anything but a pleasant one, for the sun was overcast nearly all day and it looked as though it might rain at any time. It began to rain soon after 8 o'clock and during the night the rain came down in torrents. This morning it was found that the wind had shifted from northeast quarter where it has been almost glued. For a time it looked as though it would clear up and be pleasant but at 8. 30 it was raining hard thus making the fifteenth day this month in which it has rained.

SWINDLED NEW ENGLANDERS

Alleged New York Sharper Has Been Hunted Two Years

New York, Oct. 20.—Charged with swindling two New England men out of $40,000, Samuel P. Giroux, alias Samuel P. Graves, declared by Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty to be one of the cleverest men in his line in this country, was brought here from Toronto and locked up.

He is alleged to have obtained $25,000 from George W. Fairchild of Meriden, Conn., in 1911 through the sale of mining stock which Fairchild declares proved to be valueless, and to have defrauded William E. Shinks of Springfield, Mass., of $15,000 in another deal in alleged worthless stock.

The local police have been looking for Giroux for two years and got their first trace of him when the Toronto authorities sent a picture of a man arrested there on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. The picture was that of Giroux.

BISHOP IS SHOT

Bullet Grazes Head of Prelate While Conducting Mass

Harbor Grace, N. F., Oct. 20.—While conducting mass Bishop March, a Roman Catholic prelate, was fired upon by James Hare, believed to be insane. One shot grazed the head of the bishop, wounding him slightly, while another bullet buried itself in the altar.

Hare had been sitting quietly in his seat during the service, when, without warning, he jumped up suddenly, drew a revolver, and began shooting at the bishop. He had fired twice before several powerful fishermen seated near him rushed forward and clutched his arm, taking away the weapon and overpowering him. Later Hare was placed under arrest.

In spite of his injury Bishop March continued the service as if nothing had happened, after a physician had bound up his head.

NORTH BENNINGTON LOSES INDUSTRY

Fire Destroys Large Waist Factory With $100,000 Loss

Bennington, Vt., Oct. 20.—The factory of the E. Z. Waist company at North Bennington was totally destroyed by fire, and the loss is nearly $100,000. The business was conducted by F. E. Haight and George Clark of New York city. Insurance of $60,000 was carried on the stock and the loss of the building is partially covered.

The fire gained headway because of poor facilities for controlling it. The villagers poured buckets of water from the nearby river on the flames while awaiting the arrival of the Bennington fire department. Rain finally extinguished the fire, which lighted up the whole village and for several hours threatened nearby tenement houses.

ST. JOHNS CHURCH.

Rev. Fr. Joseph Kolsters, D. D. Apostolic Missionary of the Society of the Divine Word, who is in Boston as the delegate from China to the Second Catholic missionary, congress, delivered the sermon in St. John's church Sunday evening at the vespers service. Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor, was the celebrant and Rev. Fr John J. Casey and Rev. Fr. Quinlan were deacon and sub deacon respectively. Father Madden was master of ceremonies.

The music for the service was rendered by the regular choir under the direction of John Mahon, organist The O Salutaris was sung by Arthur Holmes, and Miss Eva Rice sang the Salve Regina and Ave Maria.

Father Kolsters devoted his sermon to the progress of the Catholic church in Chinese fields which he declared to be the most fruitful in the world. He is a powerful man, with a pronounced German accent and talks 12 languages besides Chinese. A Catholic missionary sent to China never returns and his attending the congress makes him the sole exception.

In commencing his sermon Father Kolsters spoke of the parting from his father, mother, relatives and friends in Germany seven years ago. The parting is hard, he said, leaving all that is near and dear to you, and it is a great sacrifice. He spoke of his arrival in China and his mastering of the language so that he could deliver sermons to the natives in their own tongue in seven months. Since then he said his six years have been of pleasure and fruitful results.

The proclaiming of religious freedom means he said the awakening of a New China. The new republic has been established and President Yan Sen, the president, favorably looks on the efforts of the Catholic missionaries who are working among his subjects. Who knows, said Father Kolsters but what he may be a second Constantine.

"The celibacy of the Catholic priests and the doctrines of purity in men and women are strongly felt by the Chinese who are a moral people and have erected arches and monuments to virginity in all parts of the country. The work of the American Protestant missions is admirable, but because they do not practice celibacy and represent nearly 90 different denominations against the one of the Catholic Church they have not been as successful in mission work."

Father Kolster spoke of the great sacrifices during the recent Boxer uprising which was a persecution of Christians. Four bishops, 41 priests eight sisters and 20,000 Christians were martyred. Many priests were saved because the Emperor guarded them to the coast towns and soon, said Father Kolsters, Rome will canonize several of these martyrs.

The missionaries life is not all comfort, according to Father Kolsters and some day you may read that the man who tonight is preaching to you in St. John's church met a violent death in the battle for Christ.

"At present there are 740 Chinese priests, and the one desire of the Catholic youth is to work for the honor and glory of Christ."

FIRST UNIVERSALIST.

Rev. Merrill C. Ward, pastor of the Universalist church, paid a tribute Sunday afternoon to Rev. George G. Hamilton of Everett. He said in part:

The funeral services of Rev. George G. Hamilton our recently and suddenly deceased Universalist brother, are being held this afternoon, conducted by the Reverend Doctors I. J. Mead and C. A. Hayden, in the Everett Universalist church of which he has been for 20 years the efficient and well beloved pastor.

Brother Hamilton was well known and well loved by this congregation, as he was by all of our churches who knew him here and in Maine. Probably there was no man in the city of Everett more generally beloved than he by all denominations. He was every inch a true man, an able, faithful, and pure minded minister of Jesus Christ. He has lived his Universalist faith in every thought, word and deed. His life was a saintly one, a glory to his church, and a daily joy to his fellow men and to the angels of God.

His faith was great, too great to see anything less than the full victory of God's goodness in every life and in every event. His love was large, too large to be limited to anything less than every child of man. He could be happy with nothing less than the salvation of every soul. He was a true shepherd of the Good Shepherd who would search and work for every sinful and needy life until it is brought safe with rejoicing into the fold of God. He has been an example of the most abundant generosity conceivable, and countless lives who have been helped by him will pay their tributes of love and tears to his memory.

Like "Abou Ben Adam" he was one who "loved his fellow men," and also one "whom love of God had blest." Verily, may his tribe increase. Our hearts go out in sympathy to his wife and daughter. May the Comforter come to them, and his peace that passeth understanding, abide with them.

SWEDISH CONGREGATIONAL.

Large congregations and good spirit prevailed at the Sunday services at the Swedish Congregational church, conducted by the new pastor, Rev. A. G. Sporrong. Music will hereafter be a more prominent feature, as the new pastor is also a choir leader.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

Fulfilling expectations, there was a full house on Sunday evening. The center body of the church was filled with men, the ladies having been requested to occupy the seats on either side. Each man as he entered was given a beautiful pink rose for his buttonhole. There was a full chorus of men's voices and the entire audience joined heartily in the singing.

A. U. Morash, leader of the Municipal Band of Malden, rendered "The Flower Song," and "Traumerie," in the baritone horn, and Mervyn J. Bailey sang a solo entitled "Abide with me," all of which were much enjoyed.

The pastor, Rev. G. M. Bailey preached a stirring sermon to men, with his subject, "The Wollaston Protectorate," in which he urged the men to live up to the highest ideals and opportunities of clean manhood, and to be examples worthy of being followed by the youth and others of our city.

The Epworth League service was conducted by R. E. Childs, president of the Pilgrim Union.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

At the Sunday morning service of worship both Mrs. Royal L. Turner's solos and the singing of the Girl's choir was greatly enjoyed. Rev. Mr. Horst preached a helpful sermon, taking for his topic "Some good investments. He said: Whenever we speak of making an investment, we naturally think of bonds, bank stocks or real estate. But did you ever stop to think that there ore other investments without which our bonds and estates can give us but little real joy and pleasure! Let me recommend, therefore, three investments that pay a good dividend—1. Physical health and strength. 2. Intellectual culture. 3. Faith and trust in God.

In spite of the cloudy day there was a good attendance at the morning service and at the Sunday School. If the Sunday School keeps on increasing it will be necessary soon to build on that much needed addition to the church, so as to provide good accommodations for all the classes. Nine new scholars were added to the membership roll Sunday and there are more to come.

We congratulate our Baptist friends upon their fine addition to the chapel.

The flowers that in profusion added their grace to the chancel and pulpit were sent to the Quincy Hospital.

At the Young People's Religious meeting in the evening Leon D. Browne led the devotional service and the address of the evening was given by the pastor, Rev. Carl G. Horst. "The meaning of the sanctuary and our relation to it," was the theme of and interesting and helpful address, full of wholesome instruction to the young people. Mr. Horst reminded his young friends that religion is social and co-extensive with the human race, that the Church is the oldest institution, and that it stands primarily for worship. The Church building, being the visible embodiment of the spirit of worship, and because of the most tender and sacred and holy associations that gather around it becomes holy ground.

The first regular meeting of the Unitarian Sunday school Union of Greater Boston will be held at the Arlington Street church, corner of Boylston street, Boston this evening at 7. Supper at 6.

The fall meeting of the Norfolk Conference of Unitarian churches will be held in the Second Unitarian church, Brookline, Wednesday, Oct. 29, with morning and afternoon sessions.

Rev. and Mrs. Carl G. Horst are at home to receive callers Monday afternoons and evenings during October.

The annual collection for the Unitarian Sunday School Society will be taken Sunday morning, Nov. 2.

Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters meets with Mrs. Sayward, 253 Belmont street this evening at 7.45. Each member is asked to bring preserves for the Pondville Home, which is maintained by the King's Daughters of Norfolk County.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL

The pastor, Rev. Dr. Sneath preached Sunday morning upon the topic, "The poor wise man or the influence of a single individual. Miss Ruth L. Hardy sang "Jerusalem" from "The Gallia."

The Ladies Benevolent Society will hold an "All-Day Meeting" on Wednesday in the church vestry beginning at 10 o'clock. Lunch will be served at noon and Miss Louise K. Noyes, secretary of the Woman's Home Missionary Association will speak at the afternoon session.

A Missionary Cradle Roll party will be held on Friday at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. George H. Murray, 395 Newport avenue.

At the Midweek service on Thursday evening the topic will be ""God's Promises." The meeting will be led by the pastor.

PARK AND DOWNS.

The Park and Downs Congregational church, at its Sunday evening service, almost tested its seating capacity even though stormy, demonstrating there by the interest the public take in the lectures by the pastor, Rev. William B. Ayers.

The first section of the story of "The Shepard of the Hills" used to symbolize a sermon on choices. Showing how every young man stands related to the past and the future.

How as he stands at the junction of life's pathways the past crowds up to him in its accumulation of experience and wisdom and directs him into the path of the best possible development the path of Christ. Curiosity detains pleasure allures, but the deep voice of Conscience bids every boy and girl make a decision for Christ before the day is far gone, to follow the path that leads to the heights. The text was Jeremiah VI: 16 "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths where is the good way, and walk thereln, and ye shall find rest for your soul."

of God's power and presence, very soon banishes the fear. Then why should not the poor sick man, suffering from some ailment which has no possible eixstence outside of the realm of mortal consciousness, be healed through the operation of God's thoughts? The activity of right thought is no finite or limited capacity. Neither is it any respecter of persons, troubles or diseases. It is as natural for right thought to heal as it is for the sum to shine. All of the mental disorders which we know yield to the exercise of right thinking are capable of producing what are termed physical or bodily diseases. To say then that such diseases, which are only a different form of error, cannot be reached by mental means, is to dispute the application of spiritually enlightened thought.

When the right idea of God as being the one infinite all-good consciousness enters the area of our thinking and reasoning capacity, the activity of righteousness is allowed to assert itself, and just as darkness is displaced by the light, so are wrong thoughts displaced by scientific or God-like thoughts. The moment the true idea of Mind enters individual consciousness, work begins therein. This idea operating through law and as law, demands the perfect re-adjustment of finite human consciousness. The indisputable mission or purpose of a right or divine idea is primarily to proclaim the true nature of its source or Principle, and incidentally to disclose the unreal nature of any other source or origin. The divine idea is Mind's true and lawful representative and Mind has no other. It is the only agent that is clothed with power and authority to carry out the purposes of its Principle, God. Let us never forget that the only power in the universe is mental and is expressed or reflected through the divine idea, never through human beliefs. In all directions, far and near, we hear of the continuous unfolding of this universal idea of Mind, of the wonderful healing and transformation of human thought, of the peace and joy and happiness that have entered into the world through its loving ministrations, and we are led to exclaim: "Is not this the Christ?"

What is it that Heals?

After what has already been said about the spiritual idea one will naturally anticipate the answer to the question, What is it that heals? It must be that which expresses activity, law and intelligence, and nothing does this except God's perfect idea. The only power that operates through the idea of infinite good is God, infinite Mind as Jesus indicated when he said, "The Father that worketh in me, he doeth the works." This understanding of the power that heals separates Christian Science healing from all systems which employ the mesmeric or counterfeit forces of the human mind or will. The Christ method of healing is rapidly spreading throughout the civilized world.

Curing vs. Healing.

Christian Science makes a clear-cut distinction between physical curing and mental healing. It does not deny the many instances of seeming restoration to health effected through various human systems, but it does declare that until the true idea of God is allowed to enter individual consciousness and to purge out all fear and the belief in an evil power and causation, the Christ healing has not been effected. It declares that real healing can be accomplished only through that intelligent activity which decrees the destruction of wrong motives and of the desire to sin. Then is the individual "free indeed," for the Son, the Christ idea, is the only channel through which such healing could come. The limited operation of human consciousness does not lay the axe at the root of the trouble; it is palliative rather than corrective. It deals almost wholly with physical symptoms and so fails to grasp the one all-important subject of mental causation. Christian Science healing reasons from cause to effect, and thus first establishes in thought what it would have externalized on the body. It knows that because the body is embraced in consciousness the only way to reach the body is through Mind through consciousness, not through unconscious matter. It says to the sick and suffering: Resist the thought of disease, know that it is not a manifestation of intelligence and that God forbids all belief in it; awake mentally and lay claim to better "things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." The power of right thought is your unfailing remedy.

He alone understands the modus of treatment in Christian Science who grasps the spirit of the Lord's prayer "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Scientific treatment is the utilization of the power of right thought. It is the unerring and unceasing operation of God's law of perfection, which is necessarily curative, because it is corrective. It is the activity of the Christ idea silencing all evil arguments and declaring the omnipotence and omnipresence of good. It is not the influence of one human mind over another. Human will or so-called mental suggestion does not enter into Christian Science treatment any more than it does into true prayer. Right treatment is right mental activity, and this is always spiritual, never human or material, Treatment is prayer in its highest and truest sense. It is knowing what really is.

A Practical Suggestion.

Christian Science does not quarrel with any one over the subject of matter, but it makes this practical suggestion, that we keep thought away from matter long enough to discover first the modus and action of the spiritual idea. If we will but accept trustingly the idea of the supremacy of divine Mind, and apply it to the correction of some distressing physical or mental condition, according to rules laid down for scientific practise, the healing that takes place will throw a new light upon matter, a light which must forever silence all opposition to whatever Christian Science has to say about the nothingness of matter. Fortunately for the human race matter cannot interpret Spirit, else all would be matter. But Spirit can and does interpret matter, and behold, all is Mind, and so-called material substance appears and disappears as only a mental human concept. Upon this sure foundation any honest Truth seeker may prove by degrees his God-given dominion over matter, and the hypothetical "atom" and the more modern but equally hypothetical "ion" will be relegated to their primal nothingness. The atomic theory, and that is all that it ever was—a mere theory—has not advanced the health or morals of mankind. It has never enabled any one to become spiritually minded. It has never revealed the Christ idea to humanity. Instead it has upheld death and denied eternal Life to man. Should Christian Science be condemned for explaining away a theory which has never even claimed to purify and to elevate human consciousness? It does this not by argument but by demonstration.

Demonstration.

Demonstration is the one thing that is always right and never requires any argument to sustain it. No one should want to talk Christian Science unless he is living the life. If he is overcoming evil with good he has divine authority to "Speak the word," and it will be with power. Demonstration never ensues from working with or through matter. There is just one premise that permits of scientific demonstration and that is the allness of Mind. Real Mind never mixes with anything. It is the infinite "light of life" in whom is no darkness at all. Because it has no affinity with darkness it is a law of exclusion to all that is unlike itself. For this and no other reason does it heal the sick and reform the sinner. Whatever works from two bases necessarily denies the omnipotence of good and fails to demonstrate the Truth of being. Demonstration is not willing things to come our way. It is the loving and willing surrender of selfish interests for the good of humanity. It is always the conquest of self. It is the practice of the Golden Rule.

Belief vs. Understanding.

There may be some people who believe that Christian Science is capable of doing evil as well as good. The same opinion was lodged against the Master by those who accused him of casting out devils through Beelzebub. But no one can ever know that Jesus did evil, nor will any one ever know that Christian Science is capable of accomplishing evil. Belief and knowing are two different things. The human mind can believe anything, but to know involves a knowledge of facts. One might believe that the earth is flat, but he could not know it to be so; or that two and two are five, but he could not know it. There are two points we should not overlook while considering this subject. The first is, that whatever we may believe concerning any fact does not change or altar the fact itself—it still remains a fact. The second is this, that the moment the fact becomes known in any given case, the belief, however, plausible or real it may have seemed to be, vanishes as a dream. All who know what Christian Science is have surrendered blind belief for spiritual understanding. Belief is like counterfeit money, the instant it is detected for what it really is it is proven worthless, and by every honest person is withdrawn from circulation.

The Way Out.

The surest and safest way of ridding one's self of any and all belief relative to Christian Science is to procure a copy of its text-book, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, and to study it along with the Bible. Simply reading these books with a view to criticising them from an intellectual standpoint will avail little. It is the honest student who scales the summit of right conclusions concerning spiritual things. He will naturally look deeply into Science and reach the point of demonstration before passing judgment.

There is no more profound subject than the science of being, and those who would know what Christian Science teaches and be able to demonstrate it should confine their study to the published works of our Leader and to the authorized literature of the Christian Science Publishing Society in Boston. There is no other safe course to pursue, for the reason that there are so many human adulterations broadcast today purporting to elucidate Christian Science that one is very liable to encounter and to be misled by them, until he learns more of the subtle attempts of error to obscure the healing Christ idea. Many well-meaning people have made their experience with this class of literature, and it has usually been one of mental confusion and disappointment.

Perfect Thought Models.

When it is learned that perfect thought models are absolutely indispensable to the correction and right education of human consciousness, the importance of discriminating carefully between authorized and unauthorized literature will be patent to all honest people. The idea of perfect God and perfect man, which is the basis of Christian Science practice, is the distinguishing feature of all genuine Christian Science literature. Wherever this idea becomes obscured through any deflecting thought of the writer, the human mind may easily be misled. If we insist upon clinging to the Bible and Science and Health as our only text-books, we are in no danger of being led astray.

Conclusion.

In our efforts to understand and to prove the glorious truths of Christian Science, let us not be "weary in well doing," for "in due season" we shall reap if we faint not. May we all learn to "Stand still" and see the salvation of good with us, learn to silence the material senses and realize that the eternal God of Life, Truth and Love is our refuge, "and underneath are the everlasting arms." Then we can say from the heart: "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift," Christian Science.

WASTE WOOD UTILIZED.

Waste wood in the manufacture of school desks is now being used for the backs of cheap brushes, according to the statement of the forest service.

A large manufacturer of school desks in Michigan had a considerable amount of waste material in sizes which were too short to enter into the manufacture of the smallest desks, and could not be utilized further with his machinery or in his line of work. This material was all hard maple in pieces an inch thick, a foot or so long, and about three inches wide; for a long time it had been consigned to the waste pile and sold as fire-wood. This waste amounted to from one thousand to fifteen hundred board feet each day. A nearby manufacturer was using practically this quanitity of maple, which he was sawing up into small pieces for making the backs of cheap brushes.

Members of the forest service, investigating methods of eliminating factory waste, conceived the idea that the blocks used by the brush factory could be readily secured from the waste of the school desk manufacturer, and on this basis got the two together. Arrangements were made so that the brush manufacturer now places orders with the other firm for its raw material and what was formerly waste is now a source of profit.

QUINCY HIGH VICTORY

Shut Out Dedham High at Merrymount Park

The Score Was 32 to 0

Quincy defeated Dedham on Merrymount oval Saturday afternoon, 32 to 0. It was the only Saturday game of the season and was not a success as far as attendance goes. The school representation was small and at no time did those on the side lines offer encouragement. They assumed a critical attitude throughout the contest. Weather conditions were unfavorable.

The spectators were treated to varied playing, some of which was decidedly amateurish. These contributions came mostly from Dedham, but Quincy had a few credited too. Starting with four substitutes Dedham commenced a line of play that couldn't go against Quincy. They were much too light in total for real work.

Three men retired from the Dedham side with injuries. Clapp, right half started an end run and was downed by Schenkelberger and Larkin who hit him top and bottom at the same time. Draper and Keegan both received sprained ankles.

The most sensational distance gaining was by Schenkelberger who carried the ball for 35 yards and Paul Larkin who circled end for a gain and also took a forward within a yard of the goal line. The others featured in individual ground gains. The end to end play worked fine and through this criscross and its slight delay Quincy netted several yards. Both teams were penalized for good distances.

In the first period Dedham kicked to Leon White who ran the ball back 20 yds. Browne gained 3 yds. and then 6 through guard. Larkin gained distance on end run. Hamlin gained 4 yds., White 2 yds. and Murphy, on a delayed pass, 8 yds. Time out for both. Browne gained 1 yd. Quincy penalized 5 yds. for offside. Larkin and Page both gained 6 yrds. around end. Murphy gained 5 on delayed pass and Hamlin gained 6. Page went through right guard for touchdown. Hamlin kicked goal.

Hamlin kicked to DeSalvo who ran the ball back 10 yds. Young got ball on fumble. Quincy penalized 5 yds. starting before ball. By line plunges by Page, White, Brown and Jepson Quincy carried ball to 13 yd. line. Score 7-0.

In the second period Reardon in place of Jenkins; Smith for Jepson. Page gained 12 yds. Browne failed to gain and Page went over for his 2nd touch down. Hamlin failed to kick goal.

Hamlin kicked to DeSalvo who was downed immediately. After failing to gain on rushes, Dedham kicked offside on Quincy's 18 yd. line. On the 4th down Larkin punted to Moffett. Clapp knocked out. Quincy penalized 5 yds. for offside. Dedham punted, Browne recovering punt gained 10 yds. Crocker replaced Page. Murphy gained 3 yds. White 7 yds. Schenkelberger lost 3 yds. Smith gained 8 yds. and Hamlin 15. Half closed with ball in Quincy"s possession in Dedham's territory. Score 13—0.

The third period opened with Mullin in place of Browne; Gelotte for Foy and Crosscup for Murphy . Larkin rushed the kick-off back 10 yds. Quincy gained first down three times by continued line plunges by White, Page, Larkin, Crosscup and Schenkelberger. The latter placed the ball on Dedhams 15 yd. line by a beautiful run, on a criss cross play of 35 yds. Smith gained 4 and Hamlin of putting the ball on the 2 yd. line. Mullin went over for touchdown. Hamlin failed to kick goal.

Hamlin kicked to Dedham. They gained 20 yds. by a forward pass on their 4th down. After being penalized 15 yds. for starting before ball Dedham punted, Page recovering it. Schenkelberger replaced by Crocker. Quincy penalized 25 yds. Period ended Quincy's ball middle of field. Score 19—0.

The fourth period with Quincy's first team in and Crocker at end. Murphy gained 12, Hamlin 8, Page 1 1-2, Murphy 10, Jepson 3, Murphy 8 and Larkin 15 on a forward pass. Browne went three yds. for touchdown Hamlin failed to kick goal.

Page ran the kick-off back 25 yds. White, gained 7, Jepson 3 making 1st down. Reardon replaced Jenkins, Crosscup for Jepson. Draper knocked out. Larkin punted. Young got man at catch. Dedham penalized 10 yds. Smith replaced Crocker; Crocker for Page. Dedham punted, Murphy rushing ball back 10 yds Crocker gained 15, Brown 2 and Murphy 3. Hamlin gained two going over for 5th touchdown of game. Hamlin kicked goal. Page replaced Crocker. Murphy received kick-off and gained 15. Dedham recovered forward by Page. Game called. Score, Quincy, 32; Dedham 0.

NOVELTY IN RACES

Wollaston Ramblers Were Entered at Stoughton

On Saturday five Rambler cars from Wollaston and a new Rambler truck participated in the Automible parade held in Stoughton in connection with the County Fair which has been held at the Town House for the past week by the Stoughton Board of Trade.

These cars were decorated with flags and Rambler banners bordered with autumn leaves which made them very attractive.

On their arrival in the Square the party was joined by Frank Shay and friends of the Stoughton Board of Trade and entered the parade which was headed by the Stoughton Fire Department truck.

After a parade over the residential part of the town, the autos were invited to enter the races, which proved to be the greatest amount of sport ever enjoyed by the party. They were certainly novelties, for they included a slow race, potato race, obstacle race, and fast race, with unusual requirements but the Wollaston cars won prizes.

TWENTY SOLDIERS KILLED IN WRECK

Troop Train Goes Through Trestle In Mississippi

Meridian, Miss., Oct. 20.—Twenty soldiers were killed and about a hundred injured when a special troop train on the Mobile and Ohio railroad plunged through a trestle near State Line, Miss.

Reports from the scene of the wreck are meager, because of interrupted wire communication. Most of the dead and injured, it is reported, were started to Mobile on a special train and another relief train was headed toward this city.

An official report sent to the war department at Washington by one of the army officers on the train said no officer was killed or seriously hurt.

It is believed the wreck was caused by the engine plunging through a trestle, but some meager accounts are that the tender jumped the tracks and that several cars piled on top of it. So far as known the wreckage did not catch fire.

HUB ENTERTAINS PRELATES

Greatest Gathering of High Officers of Catholic Church In America

Boston, Oct. 20.—The largest gathering of Catholic church prelates ever in the United States convened in Boston yesterday, two solemn ritualistic services in the Cathedral of the Holy Cross marking the opening of the second American Catholic Missionary congress.

At the pontificial high mass at 10 o'clock a. m., Cardinal O'Connell preached a sermon on the meaning of the missionary movement.

At the vespers Rt. Rev. M. F. Fallon, D. D., bishop of London, Ont., preached a cigorous sermon, in the course of which he declared the congress intends to make North America Catholic, and spoke for the establishment of a Catholic Salvation Army.

The gathering of prelates at the pontificial mass in the morning was considered the most imposing church ceremony ever witnessed in America, being notable for the splendor of the robes worn by the officers of the mass, the solemn dignity of the ritualistic service, the procession of prelates into the cathedral, and the great crowd that assembled to witness the ceremonies.

Government to War on Rats

Washington, Oct. 20.—Uncle Sam doesn't intend that persons who visit the Panama exposition in San Francisco, in 1915, shall be pestered with rats and squirrels. So $40,000 has been sent to the public health officials there for a war on the pests.

Died From Gas Poisoning

BODY IN WOODS.

The body of an unknown man was found in the woods off Green street, North Weymouth Saturday afternoon by a hunter named Curley. Medical Examiner Fraser of East Weymouth viewed the body and said death had occured about two weeks ago. The clothing of the man indicated that he may have been a tramp. Nothing was found which would aid in his identity. The body was turned over to the overseers of the poor of Weymouth for burial. The clothes were of a striped black and gray mixed material. He wore a black and gray cap, brown shirt, black blucher shoes and cotton underwear. He was about six feet in height and had brown hair.

QUINCY AVENUE SCARE.

Quincy avenue and Water street people were aroused late Sunday night by two shots, fired in quick succession People living in the vicinity, awakened by the reports, became very excited until the police investigated and found that a revolver had probably been discharged as the finale to a celebration in the Italian quarter. Two men going down Quincy ovenue were alone on the street when the reports rang out and both jumped to cover. They reported the matter to the police, and Sergt. Larkin detailed Officer Malone to make an investigation. They told the police they were very close to where the shots were fired but that they saw no flash and heard no other noise.

Adelia York's Pride

One Good Deed Deserves Another

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Adelia York looked very despairingly around her immaculately clean and quite bare pantry. Cooking utensils were arranged in orderly neatness, and the everyday china was shining on its particular shelf, but of provisions there were none to mention.

The bread box was empty as well as the cake box and the cooky can. The tea canister held only a dust of tea on the bottom, and the coffee jar had been empty for two weeks.

This was the day that Adelia had held out against for weeks. Little by little her store of ready money had dwindled until at last there remained only 15 cents in her little beaded purse.

Adelia was proud, and she was now poor, since she had received a letter from New York saying that the railroad stock whose dividends provided her modest income was quite worthless now. Without the semiannual dividend, which was due now, Adelia was penniless. She owned the little house where she lived, for she had inherited it from Aunt Rebecca York, whom she had nursed through an irritable and eccentric old age and whose death did not bring to light half of the securities which her will had named as Adelia's portion.

"I must go to Mr. Brown and see if I cannot get a loan on the house," sighed Adelia as she closed the pantry door and sank weakly into a rocking chair.

To her dismay, the office door was locked and a card on the door said that Mr. Brown had gone to Albany on business and would return two days later.

Adelia smiled bitterly as she turned away. Mr. Brown had been her last hope. He was the principal business man of the little village, and to none other would she have confided the desperate condition of her affairs. Foolish she might have been, absurdly proud she undoubtedly was, but the Yorks were all that way, and Adelia was a York to the very marrow of her delicate bones.

She stepped slowly up the brick paved street toward her little home, now and then pausing to give greeting to some friend or neighbor.

Miss Cherry Downs popped her head out of the door and urged her to come in and stay for supper.

"I'm all alone, Adelia," she insisted. "I'm going to have some warmed over succotash and a peach shortcake. I feel too mean for anything eating it alone."

Adelia flushed warmly, but she shook her head. "I'm sorry, Cherry, but I put some biscuits to raise, and I must get home at once. Thank you just the same," she ended, hurrying away.

Adelia hastened home, conscience stricken at the untruth she had spoken about the biscuit. Her pride was at the bottom of it all, she told herself remorsefully as she entered the house. Her mouth had watered at Cherry's invitation to supper, but pride had risen like a wall before her.

"I wasn't too proud to tell a lie." She lashed her conscience with this thought.

She felt faint and cold and almost ill from lack of food. The hens had suddenly ceased to lay, and she was glad of it. She had revolted against eggs, but they had kept up her strength.

Adelia went out to the back porch to bring in her bread and tea which the groceryman must have delivered by this time. There were some cans of fruit in the cellar left over from last winter. She decided that she would have a cup of tea and some bread and beach plum jam for her supper.

On the wooden bench on the back porch was a big basket, and it was generously heaped with packages and parcels of groceries.

Adelia gasped. The new man had made a mistake. He had left somebody else's order, and her miserable pittance of bread and tea had gone elsewhere.

She lugged the basket into the kitchen and locked the door. Then Adelia York did a strange thing. She put all the packages away in her pantry and hid the basket in the cellar. When she panted up the stairs once more she looked into the pantry and made inventory of the provisions. There were flour and sugar and butter and baking powder, tea and coffee and crackers and rice and cereal, jars and cans of dried beef and codfish, and wrapped in a separate paper was a fine porterhouse steak.

Adelia stood with locked fingers and compressed lips. These things belonged to her neighbor, Mrs. Mason. The Masons were generous livers. What would Mrs. Mason think of her? What would any one think of her?

Adelia's pride forbade her giving in to her pleading conscience. She stepped briskly around, her red lips closed in a tight line of resistance, preparing the evening meal. When she sat down to it she ate heartily, eating the juicy meat and drinking the fragrant coffee until her hunger was appeased.

It was not until she had washed the dishes and put them away and sat down with folded hands that Adelia actually realized the enormity of her offense.

The next morning she arose very early, and without eating a morsel she went to the china cupboard in the dining room and took down Aunt Rebecca's britannia teapot. This teapot was Adelia's most cherished heirloom and had belonged to her grandmother before Aunt Rebecca possessed it.

Mrs. Mason had admired the teapot more than once and had hinted that if Adelia ever desired to sell it she would like to have an opportunity to become its owner.

"It will hurt me more than anything else to give this up," said Adelia to herself as she wiped off the shining treasure, "but I guess that pride of mine will have to pay for it. I shall give it to Annie Mason right now in exchange for those things, and I shan't accept anything more than the value of that food. I've often seen grandmother pour tea from it, but Aunt Rebecca never used it that I remember. It's odd how she asked for it the day before she died and went to sleep with it in her hands. Poor Aunt Rebecca! She was so eccentric. But she mean't well, I'm sure."

Wrapping the britannia teapot in her little red shawl, Adelia went through the orchard to the little gate in the fence that opened into Mrs. Mason's vegetable garden.

Annie Mason was on her knees pulling beets. Her rosy face grew rosier when she saw Adelia standing there, pale and ill looking.

"What is it, Adelia?" she asked quickly. "Is anything the matter?" She sat back on her heels and shook the earth from a monster beet root.

Adelia's voice trembled with emotion.

"I've got to see you alone, Annie," she said hurriedly. "It's very important."

Mrs. Mason arose with difficulty, for she was very stout, and with a troubled expression on her comely face she led the way to the house and into the sitting room.

"There ain't a soul to home this morning. They've all gone off, Adelia. What on earth's the matter?" She dropped into a chair and waved Adelia into another.

Adelia unwrapped the shawl and set the britannia teapot on the table before she spoke.

"Annie Mason, I've got a confession to make," she said in a low, shamed tone. "I've been short of money ever since the railroad went to smash and they stopped dividends. I was too proud to borrow money on the house or to get in debt, and I've been hungry—just plain hungry. So yesterday when I got home I found a big basket of groceries on the back porch and—and—I was so hungry I kept them!"

She paused tragically.

"Well?" gasped Mrs. Mason.

"Well, they're yours, Annie Mason. I'm sure they are. All I had ordered was a loaf of bread and 10 cents' worth of tea, and I've kept your provisions, and to pay you back for them and to punish myself for being so wickedly proud I've brought over the britannia teapot. It's for you!" Adelia sank back in her chair, and her lips were very white.

Mrs. Mason said not a word then, but she flew around and brought a pillow for Adelia's head and a little glass of blackberry wine. When the color came into Adelia's cheeks Annie Mason leaned over her frail neighbor and spoke impressively.

"Now, don't you dare say a word, Adelia, till I'm through. I want you to know that I haven't forgotten how you helped me when the children had the measles last winter and all the kind and neighborly things you've done since we've been here. And somehow I knew that you was having some temporary trouble, and yesterday morning when I was giving my grocery order I said to the new man, 'My neighbor, Miss York, forgot to tell you all she wanted this morning, and you can just add these things to her order.' And then I made up a list, and those you found on the porch were your own, Adelia York. I won't hear a word against it! What's the use of having neighbors if they can't help each other out? 'Neighbor' means to be 'near to,' and the time to be near to is when we're in trouble. Don't you dare cry, Adelia York!"

Mrs. Mason was crying herself as she spoke, and after she and Adelia had mingled their tears and had grown a little calmer the older woman suggested that they drink a cup of tea made in the britannia teapot.

Adelia dried her eyes and smiled, and Annie Mason went to the kitchen sink to wash out the teapot.

"The spout's all stopped up, Adelia," she called. "Just bring me that knitting needle off the table, will you?"

"I declare, it's stuffed with paper!" she exclaimed as she pried with the needle. "What the land!" She drew forth the needle and with it a wet and crumpled roll of paper.

Adelia opened it carefully. "Aunt Rebecca must have put something in it," she said in a dazed tone as she flattened out the engraved certificates of stock.

"I'll bet it's those missing securities!" cried Annie Mason excitedly. "Well, your Aunt Rebecca would be likely to do that. Didn't you tell me she had the teapot in her room the day before she died?"

Adelia nodded. Her eyes were heavy with tears. "It's all so wonderful, Annie. I mean my awful pride and then my yielding to temptation to take your provisions, not knowing you had given them to me, and then my punishing myself by giving you the teapot and finding the securities. But there's one thing I value more than all the money, Annie Mason," she ended wistfully.

"What's that?" asked Mrs. Mason cheerily.

"The understanding what 'neighbor' means—being 'near to' each other," replied Adelia.

CHAPTER XII.

Inside the Barrier.

We trudged along the sand parallel to the boat, which was following the course of the barrier reef, seeking what I knew they would not find—an entrance to the lagoon and thence to the island. The lagoon narrowed in places, until had it not been for the roar of the waves in the reef a hail could easily have carried. I am ashamed to say that I used insulting gestures on occasion, whereat some of them stood up in the boat and shook their fists in our direction. Although I was sure they could not reach us, their presence was a menace and a barrier to us. After they had rowed the length of the island they gave it up and went back to the ship, which had followed their course.

By this time the day was far spent. We retraced our steps and came to the place where I had hauled up the dingy. We were hungry. The provisions we had taken with us we had eaten during the journey. The first business was supper. I had noticed some cocoanut trees and other strange tropical fruits, so I had no fear of starvation. We could live on the island indefinitely; therefore I was not sparing with the provisions. We kindled a fire and made shift to boil some coffee. We had neither milk nor sugar, but the taste of civilization did us good.

For the night I capsized the boat and drew it close against the coral wall, spread the sail and boat cloak upon the clean, dry sand, gave her one blanket and bade her take her rest. It was snug, dry and comfortable.

"But you?" she asked.

"I shall do very well here with my boat cloak and one of the blankets, and I shall lie across the stern of the boat between it and the cliff, out of sight, but within touch or call if you need me."

"I am afraid," she said softly.

"Nothing can come to you except over my body, and I am a light sleeper. Anything will rouse me," I said reassuringly.

"I would not have you harmed, either," she persisted.

"I shall not be."

"There may be wild beasts."

"I do not think there is an animal on this island," I laughed, "and we have seen no signs of man. The ship certainly would have attracted the attention of some one had not the island been deserted."

"But those men out there?"

"You forget the rampart that God has flung about us. Now, madam, you can go to sleep in safety, I assure you."

"Before that," she said, dropping down on her knees in the sand and motioning me to follow her example, which I did awkwardly enough—I hope I am not a mocker or disbeliever, but I confess that I didn't often bend the knee—"we will have a prayer together."

She had slipped a little prayer book within her dress, and she now drew it forth from her bosom and by the light of the fire read the Psalm of David, which begins: "Out of the deep have I called unto thee, O Lord. Lord, hear my voice." And then she prayed, using some of the old collects of the church and adding one of her own making in which she besought God to care for us further, while she thanked him for having raised up a defense for her in my poor person, only she did not so describe it. I listened very humbly, saying a heartfelt "Amen" at the end.

There was a silence for a little space when she had finished, and in that silence I devoted myself before God to her service again, and then she rose and gave me her hand.

"You have been a true knight and gentleman," she said softly, her eyes shining, "and I thank you."

I could only take it dumbly and stare at her like the great fool I was, whereat she smiled brightly, although her eyes suddenly filled with tears.

"And now," she added: "God keep you. Good night."

I then kissed her extended hand, which she suffered without resistance.

I sat for a long time before the fire, thinking and making plans for our escape. The ship didn't give me much concern, because I was sure she couldn't come at us and in the end she must go away and leave us.

A long time I sat there until I finally fell asleep. I must have slept some time and soundly for I was wearied. It was she who awakened me. When I opened my eyes and saw her sweet face bending over me and heard her dear voice calling me I declare I almost felt as if I had died and gone to heaven and was being welcomed by an angel.

Our first waking thought was for the ship. She was still there in the offing. She had been hove to during the night. I could imagine what fierce debate and wrangling there were aboard her.

The day that passed was much like the afternoon before. Although we were by this time persuaded that the reef was an absolute protection, a vague possibility that they could devise means to pass it in some way kept us uneasy on the sand. We must have them under observation. We were eager to explore the beautiful vale inclosed by the huge rampart, but we did not dare to be where we could not watch the ship. We did walk along the shore and ascend the giant stairs in the afternoon, then, while she watched the sea within calling distance of me, I managed to penetrate the jungle with ax in hand, so that finally I made shift to cut down a cocoa palm tree, and we gathered as many delicious nuts as we could carry and returned to the shore.

That night the sun set amid lowering clouds. With a sailor's weather sense, I was sure that we should have a storm. Pimbull and Gibby sensed it too. We could see them making things snug alow and aloft. They were good enough seamen, as far as that goes. The wind, if it came, would be off shore, and there would be no danger of the ship being driven upon our reef, but there were islands to leeward, which they seemed to have forgotten, which I remembered.

I explained all this to my little mistress as I made things snug for the night. She would be perfectly protected by the overhang of the cliff and the overturned boat, and I told her, although I left her alone in the boat, that the same overhang of the cliff would protect me from the wind and the rain if the storm broke. And so after prayers again and a long look seaward we went to sleep.

About midnight, so far as I could judge, I was awakened. The storm broke with all the suddenness and intensity of the tropics. Such peals of thunder and such flashes of lightning I have never witnessed, although I had been in many storms throughout the world. To sleep was impossible. Mistress Lucy came out from her boat and stood beside me as we leaned against the cliff while the storm drove harmlessly over our heads.

We could see the ship at intervals by the vivid flashes of lightning. She was making fearful weather of it. She was always a wet ship, and the huge waves fairly rolled over her. Once she went over nearly on her beam ends, and I thought she was gone. I didn't view her position with a great deal of regret either. Presently she drove off before the wind with a rag of her foretops'l still showing, and that was the last we saw of her or her men, we thought.

Storm bound under the lee of the cliffs, we passed long and anxious hours the next day, although our only misfortune was the inclemency of the weather, for we were completely sheltered, and we had plenty of the refreshing milk of the cocoanut to vary our other food. The second day after it began the tempest finally blew itself out, although the great surging seas still broke tremendously over the barrier reef and the spray shot a score of feet or more above the crests of the highest waves. It was only the reflex of the storm, however, for during the night the wind had subsided into a gentle breeze.

When we scanned the sea next morning there was, of course, no sign of the ship. Our first inclination, and there was none to say us nay now, was to mount the stairs, cross the wall and look for that cave. We had neither chart nor record left, we had but our memories to trust to, but we were both agreed that the cave lay in the inner wall and that the parchment said it was the central one of three adjacent openings which gave entrance to the treasure chamber. And we could get a bearing on it from the central hill.

Now I had noticed that the coral wall both on the outer and inner sides was honeycombed with openings, rifts, fissures and caves which, by the way, were more frequent and deeper on the inside face, why I know not. We should have been compelled painfully and laboriously to search the whole face of the cliff in its extent of fifteen miles or so, but for the further direction of the parchment. I was thankful that, sailor like, old Sir Philip had given us the bearing. How did his words run? Something like this, my memory told me.

"Toe fynde ye mouthe of ye tresur cave take ye bearings alonge ye southe of ye three Goddes on ye Altar of Skulls on ye middel hille. Wh. ye line strykes ye bigge knicke in ye walle with ye talle palmme, his tree, bee three hoales. Climbe ye stones. Enter ye centre. Yt is there."

Plainly our first duty was to descend into the inclosed valley and explore the hillock in the center. I made no doubt but that we should find some sort of an altar and more of those curious stone images there. If they still remained the rest of our task would be comparatively easy.

With this determination, therefore, we set out. As I did not know how long our exploration would require and as I rather thought we should have to make a day of it, we started betimes. Indeed, as we invariably retired shortly after sunset we naturally rose at break of day. I took along food enough for the day, knowing that we could get water from the brooks and certain fruits which I judged would be good for us from the trees.

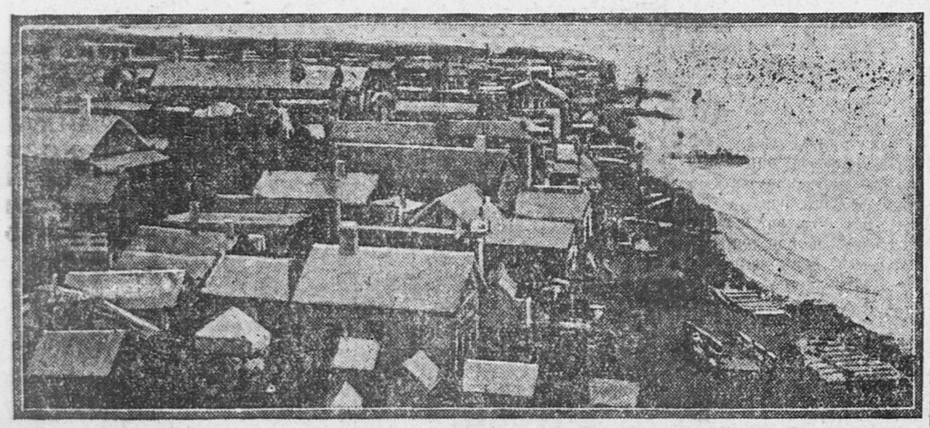
NOME, WRECKED BY TIDAL WAVE, ASKS HELP



This is a view of Nome, Alaska, which was devastated the other day by a tidal wave. Though few lives were lost, 500 persons are homeless, damage amounting to $1,000,000 was done and Mayor Jones has issued an official appeal for help.

DEDICATION OF NEW CHAPEL

a musical program which promised to be of unusual merit and the service concluded with a benediction by the pastor.

Dr. Francis spoke of his pleasure at being present at this great day of the church and mentioned the good taste displayed in the church property. He complimented the choir on its singing, declaring that "they actually sing as if they meant it."

"Is it worth while spending $12,000 on that addition?" he said. Think of how many Easter hats and other things we could buy with that amount!"

Is it worth while? I tell you friends, "You will never make an investment that is more worth while while than that."

"In the first place the Bible school is by all odds the greatest and most important work of the church we can, do in the world today, barring none."

"If we left out Bible school every one of our other church and philanthropic activities would die at the heart. The work of religious education at that point in a person's career counts the most and reaches the farthest.

"The Bible school takes the young person at the formative period when characters are easily bent and impressions are easily made and very lasting. An older man has his habits fixed.

"The Bible school has a chance to bring persuasion in the right direction repeatedly over and over again. If you keep the plaster on the patient it will draw after a while.

"Much can be transmitted through the medium of personality by the teacher in the Bible school. The children judge the teacher not by what he says but by what he is.

"It is up to the teacher to be the incarnation of his or her message. Never mind if it be imperfect, if it be an honest incarnation it will be effective.

"Our day is seeing the Bible school becoming not simply a boys' and girls' school. Even the men, the hopeless class are coming in.

"Do you all attend? Why not? Is the reason because you haven't time? Then in the name of your soul make time.

"The Christian church needs to be taken in sober seriousness. Men, are prone to work at business and play at religion—to give the church the fag end of their lives in a less than half-hearted sort of a way.

"Take the work seriously. It is one of the biggest things in life and we should make of it all we can.

The ushers were Kendall F. Harriman, Louis S. Cleaves, Herbert L. Wilson and Lester Porter.

At noon special exercises were held by the Sunday school in connection with the dedication of the new addition.

Mrs. Emma F. Perry gave a brief history of the Sunday school which was formed in January 1873. There are 4 present members of the church who are original members of the Sunday school. They are Mrs. George F. Pinkham, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Pinkham, the latter then Lucy Faunce and Mrs. Perry.

The average membership the first year was about 100 while the school now numbers 500. At the school on Sunday there were 365 present, one of the largest attendances in its history.

The new addition is of two stories of two rooms each, opening into one another. It provides accommodations for from 250 to 300 and is a needed welcome addition to the facilities of the crowded school.

After the dedication exercises Sunday afternoon large numbers inspected the new part.

PROTESTS FAIL FOR FREEDOM

Mrs. Pankhurst Still Held to Await Deportation

INFORMAL HEARING IS HELD

Militant Leader of English Suffragettes Exepcts to Be Allowed to Land and Fill Her Speaking Engagements—Her Detention at Ellis Island Termed an Outrage

Washington, Oct. 20. — Herbert Reeves and Frank S. O'Neil, attorneys here in behalf of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, were given an informal hearing by Anthony Caminetti, commissioner general of immigration.

Caminetti made it plain that the only reason he received the lawyers Sunday was because he understood Mrs. Pankhurst was not in good health, and might be adversely affected if her liberty were restricted. The commissioner general was willing to grant further hearings on three objections made by Mrs. Pankhurst to the proceedings at Ellis island, but Reeves said that no further hearings were desired, as he was anxious for a final decision as soon as possible.

"I am still optimistic," said Mrs. Pankhurst. "I cannot believe that American liberty will be made a joke and by-word by my exclusion from this country for fighting the very battle of liberty which made the United States an independent and honored nation. Certainly when my case is heard by the highest authorities here I will be released at once."

Mrs. Pankhurst received many telegrams and other messages from suffrage leaders in various parts of the country. All characterized her detention as an outrage and urged her to fight on for the cause here as she has done in her own country.

The mass meeting in Madison square garden, which was to have been addressed last night by Mrs. Pankhurst, has been postponed until tonight by its managers, in the hope that Mrs. Pankhurst may be released in time to speak. Those who are to manage her public appearances here insist that she will be freed at once in order to keep her engagements, as was done in the case of Marie Lloyd, an English actress, recently, who was first ordered deported, but on appeal to Washington was allowed to enter the country under bond in order not to break her theatrical contracts.

Set forth in the copy of the transcript, which Reeves and O'Neil took with them to Washington, is the following:

Allen called and sworn. Pankhurst, Emmeline, 51 years old, English, native of Manchester; widow, with three children in Europe.

"I read and write. Arrived aboard La Provence. Paid my own passage. No occupation. Have come to the United States twice. Going to friends, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Madison avenue, New York city. Have $2000."

At the end of the transcript, which is signed by C. L. Lynch, secretary, following the quotation from the immigration law, is:

"Under the laws you are entitled to appeal from our decision denying you the right to land to the secretary of labor at Washington for a review of your case. If deported you will return at the expense of the steamship company. Do you understand your rights?"

"Yes."

The annual three days fair of the Swedish Lutheran church, which was held at Faxon hall, closed Saturday evening. HORSE SAT ON HIM.

Three young men were thrown from a delivery wagon which overturned on Quincy avenue Saturday afternoon. The driver, David Melville fell between the shafts and the horse sat on him. Cornelius Desmond of Lowell, his district manager, and Leo Cutler, a paper boy, escaped without injuries. The upset occurred opposite the City Shoeing forge just after the team had been turned around. Why it happened is unknown. When assistance arrived Melville was prostrate on the ground with the horse sitting on his stomach. They delayed recue thinking the animal would commence to kick but when it appeared that he intended to remain planted they lifted him and dragged Melville from under. This morning Melville is suffering from a lame back but is in good condition otherwise.

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION IN THE CITY

Vol. 28 No. 244 QUINCY MASS. TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 21, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

HANCOCK STREET LAND VALUES

Some of the City Square Lots Assessed at $3.00 per Square Foot

None of the Buildings Included in Valuation Given

There is land on Hancock street, the main thoroughfare of Quincy, which is assessed at $3.00 per square foot, and other land assessed at less than five cents per foot. The former is in City Square and the latter a mile toward Boston. At the Atlantic end there is some assessed even lower. One should not pass hasty judgment however unless he is acquainted with the lots—their frontage and depth; whether high land or low land; whether in the business section, residental or vacant.

Today the Daily Ledger presents the area and assessed valuation of every lot of land on the west side of Hancock street between School street at South Quincy and Beale street at Wollaston, as shown by the Valuation Book of 1912. The lots follow along in regular order.

It will be noticed at the outset that most of the lots are large, only twelve being less than 10,00 square feet, while one is 210,327 feet and another 476,900 feet.

Twenty-two of the lots are valued at upwards of $10,000, and one as high as $89,500. This is the Hancock House block including all the land bounded by Hancock, Saville and Depot streets; the area is 29,779 square feet, which makes the assessed valuation $3.00 per square foot. This was probably the highest valuation in Quincy in 1912.

The only lots on the west side of Hancock street that approach this valuation are those at the corner of Granite street owned by Dr. and Mrs. John F. Welch, which are assesser at $2.77. Henry M. Faxon has another lot abutting the Hancock cemetery which is assessed at $2.75. The only other lot valued above $2 is the Greenleaf block at $2.13, which is assessed to the Quincy Real Estate Trust. The same trust

MRS. JAMES COLLINS.

Mrs. Mary Collins, widow of James Collins and mother of Timothy J. Collins, the newspaper man, died suddenly Monday afternoon at her home, 199 South street. Mrs. Collins has been an invalid for about 25 years and her health during the early part of the day was apparently as usual. She was stricken during the afternoon and asked for a drink of hot tea, but she became unconscious before it was given to her. Dr. N. S. Hunting was called but she died before his arrival.

Mrs. Collins was in her 69th year and has long been a resident of Quincy. She had many friends who sympathized with her in her affliction which she bore with patience and fortitude. She made her home with her son Timothy J. Collins.

During the past summer Mrs. Collins has had many moments when her recovery was despaired of but rallied from each one. A few weeks ago she was unconscious for many hours but survived.

The funeral will be held Wednesday morning at 8.15 and a high mass of requiem will be celebrated at St. John's church at nine o'clock.

SQUANTUM CANDIDATES.

The political hot bed in Ward Six apears at present to be centered at Squantum where John R. Nelson and Carl E. Mr. Carlson claims the endorsement of the Squantum Political club but the following Squantum men have signed a paper endorsing John R. Nelson;—Andrew Peterson, John Jepson, Perley Bostwick, Hiram A. Morse, Charles S. Bostwick, Joseph D. Uppling, John Holmes, George H. Jones, Roger J. Mason, John Hogg, George H. Hersey, Herbert Richardson, Ernest Richardson, Henry H. Richardson, Ernest C. BETHANY BROTHERHOOD

Col. Kincaide Speaks on South American Trip

Bethany Brotherhood had a record breaking attendance on Monday evening, all intent on hearing Col. Kincaide's talk on his South American trip. Bethany chapel was prettily decorated with flags, both the United States and the Argentine republic banners.

Vice President E. L. Collins was in the chair at the opening, but the vacancy in the office of president was filled by the election of Frank W. Crane. Reports were read and plans announced for the season.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide was introduced as a man who could talk on an up-to-date subject, and was received with applause. He spoke of the customs of the nine South American countries which the Chamber of Commerce party visited.

Relative to the Panama canal, he thought good judgment was shown in building a lock canal. He told how it was safe guarded and protected, especially against foreign countries.

The sail down the west coast of South America was comfortable, but the coast is barren—no trees or foliage. No rain has fallen for 20 years, but there is a dampness at night. There are no ports with docks, but landings are made in smaller boats and lighters.

Col. Kincaide spoke at length on his visit to Callao and Lima, in Peru. The country is suffering from recent wars, but is progressive and needs capital to develop great mines and railroads. Seventy-five percent of the people are Indians; uneducated but not savage.

Most of the countries visited have no confidence in North American gold, and it is not easy to compete against the long term of credit given by other countries. Although our prices are higher, some prefer our goods. But shipping is under control of foreign flags, also the banks.

In Bolivia there was compulsory military training. Concessions are sold by the government, and the cost of living is high in all South American countries.

Chili is controlled by 400 families. These are delightful people, well educated and sensitive. Previous to our visit they thought the United States imperialistic, but we left the impression we are not as bad as pictured. Valparaiso is a modern city. Everybody attends the races on Sundays.

He told of the beauties of the trip over the Andes mountains to Argentina and the fertility of that country. He said Buenos Aires was the most beautiful city of South America and in

CANDIDATES LINING UP

Democrats May Have Contest for Mayoralty

Politics began to look up a little this morning when several nomination papers were filed. Monday night quite a few more papers were taken out and several were in circulation before and after the Council meeting.

Among those in circulation were Councilman Charles A. Hadlock for Councilman-at-large and ex-Councilman Ernest E. Sodergren for Councilman-at-large.

Other papers that were taken out at the City Clerk's office were Charles E. Barker, Councilman from Ward Five; James F. Edwards, Thomas Shortle, Daniel F. Corcoran and James O'Dowd Councilmen from Ward Four and Thomas Griffin for Councilman from Ward Two.

Ex-Representative Peter T. Fallon took out papers for a citizens' candidate for Councilman from Ward Four.

Among the nomination papers that have been filed are the following:

Alfred O. Diack, School Committee, from Ward Three.

William P. Thompson, Councilman from Ward One.

Robert B. Craig, Councilman from Ward Three.

Stephen B. Little, Councilman from Ward Four.

Matthew P. Sheahan, Councilman from Ward Four.

John R. Nelson, Councilman from Ward Six.

As for the Mayoralty there is to be a contest for the Democratic nomination for Mayor. When Dr. John H. Ash took out nomination papers last week many were led to believe that he would have no contest for the nomination. Monday this belief was somewhat shaken when it was announced that Edward J. Fegan had taken out Mayoralty papers and would seek the Democratic nomination. It was also rumored that George H. Wilson might also enter the caucuses for the nomination.

The time for filing nomination papers expires Saturday at 5 o'clock and it is expected that there will be a rush of papers on the last day.

The Progressives have not filed any papers as yet, but it is expected that they will not only file papers for Mayor but for Councilmen.

It is expected that when the papers are filed that some interesting contests will be developed in several of the wards. It is well known that there are many papers out, but who they are for, is not generally known, as the parties taking out the papers did not state, and it will not be known just what contests there are until all papers are filed.

THE OCTOBER WEDDINGS.

June and October are the high tide of hymen. From purely utilitarian considerations. the present month cannot be regarded favorably for matrimonial purposes. The young couple starting out for housekeeping have fuel to buy. Eggs and other foods are about reaching the zenith of high prices. Fruits and vegetables will soon be growing scarce.

These, however, are considerations that appeal to the seasoned housewife. To the bride-elect, looking through the roseate glasses of love, they are coarse and unimportant. The foremost consideration is to find a time when decorative material for the ceremony is abundant and beautiful.

The presence of autumn's flaming foliage assures a beautiful setting for this fateful function. at least for all within reach of deciduous trees. Who will think of the expense of maintaining a house through the cold winter. when the wedding march rings out amid nature's most lavish finery?

DEMAND FOR CLEAN PLAYS.

The governors of the Shakespeare Memorial theatre of Stratford-on-Avon England, have decided that their company, now touring this country, will not be allowed to appear in New York City. This owing to the low tone of plays popular in the metropolis.

This is not the first finely trained company to skip New York, as the Manchester players cut it out last year. All which causes New York little regret. A run of Shakespeare would mean one less show of high kicking cabaret girls.

Out side of some of the great centers of population, there is a demand for clean plays to which the managers have not always responded. Twenty or even ten years ago, if a church member was seen inside of a theater, the deacons shook their heads ominously. Revivalists pointed him out from the pulpit, as far down the broad road that leads to destruction, and consigned him summarily to the flaming pit.

Today even the deacons occupy orchestra seats. There are millions of people in the theater audience that want and expect the same standards of morals, speech, dress, and conduct that prevail in their own churches societies and lodges.

They would like the atmosphere behind the professional footlights to be so clean and wholesome that any fellow's sister could take any part, without the necessity of making any apologies. A show in which the chorus have the manners of a bunch of street walkers may draw noisy applause. But the bulk of the audience remains silent, and some of them stay at home next time.

Shrewd theater managers recognize that the kind of sickly and erotic spice needed to whet jaded metropolitan palates, is not called for on the outside. circuits. In New York the throng of loungers from the lobster palaces makes a market for risque plays.

Elsewhere theaters can not be permanently successful unless they draw the constant patronage of the intelligence and the character of the community.

ADMITTED TO UNITED STATES

Mrs. Pankhurst Will Complete Her Lecture Tour

WILL NOT PREACH MILITANCY

President Wilson Reverses Ellis Island Board's Order of Deportation —Woman Pledged to Conduct Herself In Lawful Manner and No Bond Is Required of Her

Washington, Oct. 20.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant British suffragist, is free to enter the United States. The Ellis island board's order of deportation was reversed after President Wilson had conferred on the celebrated case with Secretary Wilson and a hearing had been concluded before Immigration Commissioner Caminetti.

Secretary Wilson announced at the conclusion of his conference with the president that Mrs. Pankhurst would be admitted upon her own recognizance, with the understanding that she would depart at the end of her lecture engagements. No bond was exacted.

The decision of the president and Secretary Wilson was communicated to Commissioner General Caminetti, who issued the formal order of release. President Wilson felt that the law had a flexible interpretation, so that it was largely a question of policy. Commissioner Caminetti's decision was in strict accordance with the views of President Wilson and the secretary of labor. Caminetti filed a brief memorandum, recommending Mrs. Pankhurst's admission on her own recognizance and announced he would later file his reasons in writing.

President Wilson's interest in the case was viewed with the greatest satisfaction at headquarters of the National Woman Suffrage association and by the suffrage supporters in congress. A White House conference with Secretary Wilson of the department of labor and Commissioner Caminetti was on the program as part of the day's proceedings. While the president has no specific authority to decide immigration cases by law, it was pointed out that in such a case as Mrs. Pankhurst's, involving to an extent a question of national policy, immigration officials would not take the responsibility of making a final decision without consulting the president.

Mr. O'Neil referred to Mrs. Pankhurst's pledge that she would conduct herself in a lawful manner while in this country.

"She has made that pledge to the American people and she will keep it," declared the lawyer. "In every shop and factory in this land today women's heads are bowed in mute appeal to this department for the liberty of this distinguished woman."

Commissioner Caminetti asked if Mrs. Pankhurst intended to preach militancy here.

"Emphatically, no," responded O'Neill. "We have her assurances on that point, and we state them to you as strongly as possible."

Mr. Caminetti announced that he would not take into consideration the suffragist's lecture contracts, nor would he consider argument pertaining to the recent case of Marie Lloyd, the English music hall singer. Copies of clippings from London newspapers on the activities and arrests of Mrs. Pankhurst were excluded from the record.

Mayor of Lowell Proves Girl Was Born In That City

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 21.—Through the efforts of Mayor O'Donnell, Jennie Esses, a 13-year-old Syrian girl, suffering with trachoma, was admitted to this country Saturday. The girl was born in Lowell and left this city for Syria about seven years ago.

Her father returned to America a year and a half ago, intending that Jennie should follow him. She was held up by the immigration authorities at Marseilles for about a month.

Insistent appeals to the mayor here were made, and he finally secured a duplicate copy of the girl's birth record. This he despatched to Marseilles. When Jennie arrived in New York she bore a tag indicating that she was to be delivered to Mayor James E. O'Donnell. She was at once taken to New Bedford, where her father is engaged in business.

PLEADS NOT GUILTY

President of Providence Bank on Trial In Federal Court

Providence, Oct. 21.—Ward P. Metcalf, indicted for misapplication of more than $200,000 and conspiracy in connection with the failure of the Atlantic National bank, of which he was president, did not change his original plea of not guilty to the first indictment when he appeared before Judge Brown in the United States court.

He was not asked to plead to the three additional indictments returned last Thursday, charging conspiracy.

At the request of United States Attorney Stiness, the court nol prossed the seventeenth count in the first indictment, which was covered more accurately in one of the later indictments.

FAINTS IN COURT AT MURDER CHARGE

Maine Albanian Accused of Killing Countryman

Bath, Me., Oct. 21.—Just as the last juror was to have been drawn to try him on the charge of murder, Resoul K. Laclioli, a Lewiston Albanian, collapsed and fell to the floor of the supreme court room.

Laclioli is charged with having murdered Kassem Colleymen at Topsham on Sept. 3. The latter's body, mutilated with nearly a score of knife wounds, was found floating in the Androscoggin river. The dead man had been robbed.

Laclioli, through an interpreter, in reply to the indictment, said: "Let the court do what it may." A technical plea of not guilty was ordered to be recorded.

Still white and trembling, Laclioli was brought into court in the afternoon and the jury was completed. Dr. Harry F. Morin, the medical examiner, reported the prisoner was badly frightened. The opening was made for the state.

CHESTNUTS CAUSE EPIDEMIC

Doctors Say Trees Are Infected by New Plague This Year

Framingham, Mass., Oct. 21.—Doctors are reporting the existence of an epidemic in Framington, Westboro and surrounding towns, which they blame upon the promiscuous eating of chestnuts.

For some years there has been a blight affecting chestnut trees over the entire country, and the plague is just beginning to reach Massachusetts. This year the chestnuts have been plenty and as a result an unusual number of people have been eating them.

The new disease affects the tongue and mouth and causes intestinal disturbances. Dr. R. M. Raymond and F. W. Hoyt of the Framingham bacteriological laboratory are conducting an exhaustive investigation. Meanwhile, they are advising everyone to abstain from eating chestnuts.

ADMIRAL'S DEATH WAS WISHED FOR

Witness Testifies That Was Mrs. Eaton's Expressed Desire

CAUSE OF DEATH WAS POISON

Professor Whitney Says He Found 16.67 Grains of White Arsenic In Organs of Dead Man—Defendant Was Constant Attendant of Sick Man Up to Time of His Death

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 21.—"Mrs. Eaton told me several times that she wished the admiral was dead."

This sensational statement from the lips of Henry Cates came near the close of yesterday afternoon's session of the Eaton murder trial. It was the first evidence offered by the government to show that the woman, accused of the murder of the late admiral, Joseph G. Eaton, desired his death.

The audience which crowded the Plymouth county courtroom was noticeably impressed. Mrs. Eaton was markedly affected, and for the first time since the opening of the trial a look of dejection came over her face.

Cates further said that Mrs. Eaton's statements to him concerning the admiral so aroused his fear for the late naval officer that on his visit to the Eaton home he carried a pistol for the purpose of protecting himself against an attack or attempt to poison him.

Those bound by the closest blood ties of love to the accused woman, her crippled daughter, Dorothy, and her aged, invalid mother, Mrs. Virginia Harrison, as witnesses for the government, have declared that Mrs. Eaton cooked the supper that Thursday night and alone attended the admiral from the time of his illness, shortly after the meal, until his death.

It is during that period, between the supper Thursday night and the hour of death early Saturday morning, that the prosecution contends the arsenic was administered by Mrs. Eaton.

Professor Whitney testified that in all 16.67 grains of the poison were found in the admiral's body, and that as much, if not more than that amount, probably was thrown off by his vomiting.

Dr. Balch corroborated the testimony of his colleague, and both toxicologists were especially emphatic in telling the jury that more than one dose, in their opinion, was given—perhaps, more than two—and that the last one was shortly before death.

Mrs. Eaton seemed scarcely able to retain her seat as this testimony was elicited. She was more nervous than at any time since her life fight began, and several times she wiped the tears from her eyes.

W. S. Shurtleff, a fish and oyster dealer of Weymouth, told of calling on the admiral Thursday afternoon about 2 o'clock and remaining with him half an hour. He said the admiral was in the best of spirits. Another neighbor of the Eatons, Charles Hild, an elderly farmer, testified he had seen the admiral that afternoon and that the naval officer had offered to "help me to do the chores."

COAL BARGE SINKS

Crew of Two Saved When Coalport Goes Down In Storm

Newport, R. I., Oct. 21.—The coal-laden barge Coalport sank in the height of a heavy southeast gale off Point Judith. The two members of her crew barely managed to clear the barge in a dory, and after a hard fight in the heavy seas were picked up by the tug Concord.

The Coalport was one of three barges being towed by the Concord from New York for Boston. She broke loose from the rest of the string and began to take water rapidly, her 800 tons of cargo carrying her down quickly. For twenty minutes the two men in the dory fought the gale before the Concord could reach them. The Concord brought her remaining two barges into this harbor for shelter.

FAIR WEATHER FOR A CHANGE

Bright Sun This Morning Indicated Pleasant Day

It seemed as though the wind never blew much harder than it did yesterday afternoon and during the night. The wind was from the southwest quarter and in the afternoon was accompanied by rain which was blown in sheets through the streets. While it seemed to be blowing a gale in City Square it was not a circumstance to what it was off the shore front near the Quincy Yacht clubhouse. There the full fury of the gale was felt, and it seemed as though the top of the building would be blown off. Ample warning of the gale had been given the yachtsmen and those whose yachts were still in the water made them doubly secure so that they rode out the gale.

During the evening the moon tried hard to shake the clouds and it was a peculiar spectacle to see the moon shining brightly and the rain falling in sheets.

Eventually, however, the moon conquered and the rain disappeared, but the wind continued to blow hard all night. The sky was clear by 10 P. M. and it remained so for the balance of the night, although the wind howled.

This morning the sun came out bright and clear for the first time for many days. It has been a long time since there was such a clear morning as today. Now that the storm has evidently been blown out to sea by the southwester everybody hopes that pleasant weather is on the calendar for a time and that the delayed Indian summer is at hand.

WALSH SPEAKS HERE

his opponent; and Cornelius M. Duggan, a candidate for representative in the Sixth Norfolk district spoke briefly after coming from a rally in his interest in Ward Four.

John J. McDevitt was present and poo hooed the talk that he was not backing the candidates. He said the talk was all for political capital, and that he was with the Democratic ticket from top to bottom. Continuing, he said, "I shake hands with Sulzer. The press put him down, and the cursed press put me down, and if I ever get the opportunity I will introduce a bill for the reporters at the state house to be changed every two years."

Edward J. Parker presided, and the first speaker Frank J. Donahue said that with the entrance into the field of the third millionaire candidate the election of Walsh is assured, and in order to carry out his intentions a Democratic house and Senate will be necessary. Therefore elect Representative Sullivan, David W. Murray of Hyde Park as your Senator and Cornelius M. Duggan from Atlantic to the house. The "New Republicanism" is being preached because a new doctrine is necessary to success. We Democrats need no new principles to rehabilitate the Democracy. We point with pride to the strong legislation placed on the statute books by the Democrats, aided by a handful of Progressives.

Lieut Gov. Walsh said that the sight of so many was an encouragement to keep up the battle in the interest of popular legislation. He said it would be his last appearance in Quincy and that in order to attain success the voters must enlist in his cause. He said in part:

"I have made no more important recommendations than those relating to the administration of our State institutions. We have too many boards. Responsibility is too much divided. Our institutions lack coordination and co-operation. Our method of employing unpaid boards, instead of resulting in economy as might naturally be expected, is a cause of extravagance.

"The present situation is the result of an almost undirected growth of institutions in a time of rapidly changing conditions. As new needs have arisen new boards have been created, and there has been no strong continuous, harmonizing influence to coordinate them.

"The solution lies in paid boards and concentration of authority; the administrative offices of the various institutions acting under a central authority, a unified policy and in harmonious relation.

"In place of the many paid and unpaid boards now conducting our State institutions, I would recommend that there should be two only, a Board of Administration and a Board of Health.

"The Board of Administration should have charge of all the penal and correctional institutions of the State— prisons, reformatories, schools and workhouses—with supervisory authority over the county and municipal jails and correctional institutions.

"All these institutions would be inter-related; their industrial activities could serve each other; a specialization of their industries incidental to their penal and correctional functions could be introduced with economy and efficiency, and the whole be managed and directed upon a general State basis and policy. The present unpaid boards could be utilized for advisory and visitational purposes and serve as useful adjuncts to the central paid and authoritative Board of Administration.

"Under a State Board of Health would be grouped the administration of all functions inseparable from health, charity and insanity—all of which are too closely related to health to need any elaborate argument. The care of the deficient, physical and mental, is essentially a health problem.

"These two boards should have power to co-operate in selecting one purchasing agent for all State institutions under their control.

"The State of Illinois saved $700,000 in the first year after it had made a consolidation of its various boards similar to what I recommend for Massachusetts."

In closing he advocated laws forbidding the hiring of vehicles by private means on election day, the prohibition of all advertising except that issued by the state, and in speaking of the stay-at-home vote, said he believed anyone not voting two years in succession through their own fault should be dropped from the list and compelled to register again. (Long applause.)

Representative Sullivan said he was recorded on every roll call and felt he voted right. The new child labor law is being criticised but it is one of the best pieces of legislation in years and it had my support. I am not against pensions, but I do oppose large pensions to large salaried men. The western trolley bill legalized the violations of the railroad and protected their future violations. In 1912 Mr. Piper, my opponent, voted for it. If it is a bad bill for a Democrat to vote for, it is a bad bill for a Republican. I voted against it.

He said he did not believe in compulsory arbitration. In speaking of the immigration bill, he said there may be some things wrong, but the educational test, in his view, is not the solution. The matter should be treated in the way we would like to have had our ancestors treated.

He said he could not see how Mr. Piper could have the Republican and Progressive nominations and be loyal to both. I have taken out Citizen's papers said Mr. Sullivan to offset his two nominations. He said he favored the development of the Port of Boston but did not want a public dock here with the tax rate $23.50.

His opposition to the revision of the charter was because the demand came from Ward Five alone and was not a popular one. The representative is directly responsible to the people and I am calling to your mind my record so you can express your opinions on election day.

Other speakers were Leo P. Noonan, William Kelly of the city committee, Thomas J. Boynton of Everett, Edward J. Barry and William Newton of South Boston and Germantown.

WILL WED TOMORROW.

RETURNS FROM CANAL ZONE

But Spends His First Night at Police Station

Lewis Wright of Edwards street, after a long absence in the Panama canal zone, returned to Quincy Monday, but his arrival in his home town was not such as he might expect, for instead on passing his first night home under his own roof he was the guest of the Quincy police at their hotel on School street. Wright left home under a cloud sometime ago, and since that time has been employed in structural iron work in the canal zone. He struck New England bright and early Monday, landing in the Hub in a happy frame of mind. It had been a long time since he had tasted Boston liquid refreshments, and he could not resist the temptation to tarry a while and dally with Bostons well known hospitality.

He arrived in Quincy later in the afternoon feeling in excellent spirits both inside and out. With him was a parrot he brought from South America, and a suit case containing his effects valued at $250. It was raining when Quincy was reached and he decided to make an imposing entrance to his home. With that in view he asked two young men to hold his suit case while he looked for a carriage. They accommodated him but when he later appeared on the scene the suit case was gone as was also the young men.

As they disappeared down the street Wright sought out Officer Olsen to whom he whispered his tale of woe. Officer Olsen was also accommodating and suggested a ride to the police station where he could tell his story to the sargeant in charge. On his arrival he was immediately recognized, and a brief search in the pigeon hole of the desk revealed an old warrant against Wright for non support of his family.

Wright protested at the unbrotherly like welcome which the police gave him, but all to no avail, and Lewis was given one of the most comfortable beds in the cell room for the night. Wright soon ceased to be talkative but not so the parrot who made the night lively with his cries of stop theif, poor papa, poor polly, etc.

The specific charge entered upon the records against Wright was drunkenness, but when he arrived in court the complain for neglecting to give the support to his family that he had voted to do was pressed against him, so that taken all together Wrights welcome home was as unpleasant as the weather has been for some days.

On being searched at the police station, five bright $20 gold pieces were found in his pocket, which were taken until his case is disposed of by the court. The suit case and contents however are still missing and it is doubtful if the articles ever turn up again.

Wright said that things had changed some since he left Quincy and that a bad element must have taken possession of the city, or he would not have lost his suit case. The police however tried to convince him that if he had headed direct for home when he arrived in Boston, instead of the brightly lighted bar rooms of the city, his welcome would probably have been more congenial.

Wright was very meek when he appeared in court and those that anticipated seeing and hearing his South American parrot were disappointed as the parrot was not present. He was arraigned for neglecting to provide support for his family and the case went over until the family trouble session Thursday afternoon.

After court Wright, who is out on bail, was very anxious to find some trace of his suit case and bundle that disappeared at the Quincy depot on his arrival. He could, however, give no accurate description of the two men. He said that if it had not been for the parrot he would have taken a street car home but did not want to take the talking bird in a street car and therefore had gone in search of a carriage.

owns the Department store lot assessed at $1.83. The Wilson land adjoining is assesed at $1.53, and others over $1.00 are the Central building lot owned by H. L. Kincaide, and the Music Hall lot and H. M. Faxon's lot on the north side of Saville street.

From $1.00 the value drops down to 5 cents as above noted. The large lot between Beale and Webster streets, before the sub division into lots, was assessed in 1912 at a trifle less than 5 cents. Some of this land is too low for building purposes. The other lot at 5 cents is the estate of James H. Penniman. If it was all as good as the front, Mr. Penniman would be willing to pay 10 cents, but there is considerable back land, and some of it near the railroad is under water.

Readers will be interested in making other comparisons in the summary which follows and others which will be printed. No buildings are included in the valuations given.

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION

Rev. Fr. Lambert Celebrates Solemn High Mass

The forty hours devotion closed in St. Mary's church this morning amid impressive ceremonies, and the attendance was large at all the masses, most of those present being communicants. A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated after a processional of altar boys and clergy, the guard of honor to the Blessed Sacrament.

Rev. Fr. Walter Lambert of the Gate of Heaven church of South Boston was the celebrant, and Rev. Fr. Joseph Murphy, scriptural professor at St. John's seminary at Brighton, was deacon. Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy who succeeded Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady as pastor several weeks ago acted as sub deacon and his curate, Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy was master of ceremonies. The musical portion of the mass was the Gregorian chant sung by the regular choir. Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament followed the mass.

The devotions opened Sunday and that evening a powerful sermon was delivered by Father McCoy. All day Monday priests heard confessions and this morning the largest number that ever received communion, outside of a mission week, were at the masses.

WILL PROTEST ONCE MORE

Hope to Have Rev. Lillback Remain in Quincy

The members of the Finnish Congregational Church are doing all in their power to influence their pastor, Rev. John E. Lillback to withdraw his acceptance of the pastorate of the Finnish Congregational church at Brooklyn, N. Y. and Friday night they will hold another meeting to "protest" against his leaving Quincy.

In order to reassure Rev. Mr. Lillback as they have several times, that the parish needs him, and to impress it more forcibly, they have invited the executive board of the Massachusetts Congregational Society to be present and they have accepted.

The meeting will be held in the Finnish Congregational church and the interest promises to exceed that of past meetings. Among those that will be present will be Dr. F. E. Emrick of Boston, secretary of the Home Missionary Society of the Congregational church.

—Mrs. Russell Sage celebrated her birthday Oct. 8 by distributing $74,000 among institutions in Syracuse, N. Y., her girlhood home. Mrs. Sage's gifts to Syracuse university aggregate $270,000. Later another gift of $10,000 to the First Presbyterian church was announced.—New Bedford Standard.

MANY REFUGEES ARRIVE

Most of Them Are Americans From Interior of Mexico

Galveston, Tex., Oct. 21.—Three hundred and sixty-one refugees from Mexico, most of them destitute and a number of them victims of the long, disastrous siege and subsequent capture of Torreon by the constitutionalists, reached Galveston by steamer from Tampico.

They told stories of guerrilla warfare between the Mexican factions, of robbery and cruelty. Thirty-three Catholic nuns who were among the refugees, told of being driven at midnight under fire from their convent, of hospitals put to the torch and men killed for the gold in their teeth.

The refugees came in three boats, the steamers Texas and Waneta and the oil barge Hainaut. The Texas carried 228 men, women and children, in charge of Dr. Edward Ryan, a special agent for the American Red Cross.

Of the entire number arriving about 300 were destitute and received aid from the United States government. They were given tickets to points where they have friends and relatives and furnished money for immediate use. The greater number of the refugees were Americans.

SULZER NOMINATED

Progressives Name Him Candidate For State Assembly

New York, Oct. 21.—William Sulzer, impeached as governor of the state, was nominated for the assembly by the Progressives of the Sixth assembly district. Sulzer in 1889 began his public career as a member of this branch of the state legislature.

Max Steindler, Progressive leader in the Sixth assembly district, who placed the former governor's name in nomination, said Sulzer reached him by telephone from Albany, inquiring if he had been designated. Steindler replied in the affirmative.

He said he asked Sulzer if he would accept, and Sulzer replied he would gladly do so.

Confesses He Killed Retired Sea Captain a Year Ago

Ellsworth, Me., Oct. 21.—Edwin Goodwin, 18 years old, pleaded guilty in the supreme court to an indictment that he murdered Captain Harry C. Young on Oct. 29 last. He was sentenced to prison.

Goodwin confessed immediately after the killing and robbing of Captain Young, a retired sea captain, who kept a small store at Surry. When arraigned in April on the indictment reported then, he pleaded guilty and a motion by counsel that he be committed to the state hospital at Augusta for observation of his mental condition was granted. The observation having failed to show he was insane, the boy decided to plead guilty to the charge. There is no death penalty in Maine.

PRESIDENT IS IN A HURRY

Hopes to Rush Currency Bill Through House and Senate

BELIEVES PASSAGE ASSURED

Morawetz, New York Financier, Is Witness Before Committee—Believes Bill Should Be Amended—If Not, He Says, It Will Fail In Its Purpose—No Adjournment of Extra Session

Washington, Oct. 21.—While the senate banking and currency committee was in session, a copy of President Wilson's letter to Chairman Underwood, expressing a belief that the committee would report out a banking bill "not later than the first week in November" and that the bill would pass the senate "at most not more than three weeks after the report is made" was passed about the table. It was read with grim interest by the senators.

"You may say," said Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, smilingly, "that I think the president is more optimistic than the facts warrent."

The president does not believe an adjournment is possible, but thinks some agreement might be reached with the minority in the house for a brief recess. The president is fully confident of considerable non-partisan support for the bill, and told callers he did not expect any change affecting any fundamental part of the bill, but rather had found an unexpected agreement of the fundamentals. The president's letter was freely circulated in congress and renewed active discussion of recess prospects.

Senators Bristow and Hitchcock were not optimistic for passage at the present session. Senator O'Gorman thought it might be possible, but that it could not be determined "to a certainty." Senator Pomerene agreed with the president. One development which lent encouragement to those who hoped for speedy action came when the president let it be known that he was not finally committed to any particular number of reserve banks, so long as there were enough to meet business requirements and that the federal reserve board did not necessarily have to include the secretary of agriculture and the comptroller of the currency, so long as it was government controlled. Active opposition has been directed at those features.

Victor Morawetz of New York, the well known financial writer and railroad corporation lawyer, was the star witness of the senate committee on banking and currency. The committee had looked forward eagerly to the appearance of Morawetz, who for four years has been a leading critic of the Aldrich central bank plans and an advocate of an uncapitalized reserve association to accomplish the same ends. Mr. Morawetz frankly admitted that his prejudices would incline him to favor the Glass bill, but with equal candor he told the committee that if the bill were enacted without amendment it would fail utterly of its purpose.

Mr. Morawetz first objected to the scheme of government note issue, which, he said, were bank notes, although purporting to be government notes. The honest fact is that the government would be nominally the maker of the notes, but really their guarantor.

To Senator O'Gorman's questioning he would not agree that the danger would be wholly eliminated with only one bank.

"Was any declaration made by the democratic party that makes it necessary to insist upon a government rather than a bank issue of notes?" pursued Senator O'Gorman.

"I don't think so," returned Mr. Morawetz.

Senator O'Gorman then read to the witness the plank in the Baltimore platform covering the currency and asked if anything in it would affect the opinions he had uttered. "No," replied Mr. Morawetz. The witness denounced as "absolutely fatal to the plan" the provision for the redemption of notes in "gold or lawful money," the danger is, he said, that if the notes can be paid in silver or greenbacks, the inevitable result will be to drain off the gold without increasing the amount of the currency.

WOBURN BOY IS SHOT BY HIS CHUM

Bullet From Gun Thought Empty Makes Fatal Wound

Woburn, Mass., Oct. 21.—Daniel Doherty, 11 years old, was shot through the head and almost instantly killed by William McLaughlin, a chum, who did not think the gun was loaded. The McLaughlin boy is under arrest.

Doherty left home early in the afternoon in company with William and Benjamin McLaughlin, the 14-year-old twin sons of Patrick McLaughlin. The three boys went to a vacant lot behind the factory owned by Daniel O'Brien in Green street and began shooting at a target.

After a time William McLaughlin and the Doherty boy became tired of shooting and left the gun lying on a rock for a few moments. Benjamin McLaughlin loaded the gun, unnoticed by the others.

Suddenly the other McLaughlin boy spied the gun, picked it up and leveled it at the Doherty boy. Believing that it was not loaded, he pulled the trigger and the bullet went crashing through the boy's head.

LIONS ROAM CITY

Five Are Freed When Car Smashes Circus Cage

Leipsic, Ger., Oct. 21.—Five lions belonging to an American circus obtained their freedom in the streets of Leipsic owing to a collision between a street car and their cage, while it was on the way to the railroad station after a performance.

The cage was torn open by the shock and the appearance of the wild animals in the center of the city created a panic among the tens of thousands of people here to attend the celebration of the centennial of the "Battle of the Nations."

One of the lions entered a hotel, rushed upstairs and proceeded along the corridors, driving the visitors before it into their rooms. It was some time before policemen arrived and shot the animal. The four others also were shot and killed in various parts of the city. Nobody was attacked by the lions.

The Colonel's Pride

How the Army Regulations Were Adhered to and a Genius Secured For the Band

By ARTHUR TOWNSEND

"Do you play on any musical instrument?"

"No."

"Have no musical taste?"

"I don't know. I was born and have lived all my life in the heart of a forest, where no musical sound except the singing of the birds has ever reached my ears. But that I have always dearly loved. Why do you ask these questions?"

"Because if you could play upon the cornet or the flageolet or the trombone you might be permitted to live. As it is, your sentence will be carried out. What a pity that you have not some foundation for a musical training; I could in a few days coach you so that you might save yourself from being shot."

When the Spanish war broke out the news of it reached the wilderness in which I lived. Here was a chance to get out of the woods and into the world. I would enlist for a soldier. I would need no money. The government would clothe, feed and transport me, and all that would be required of me would be to be shot. And if those who shot at me missed me and continued to miss me till the war was over I would be taken care of till the next war, and if I lived through all the wars till I became an old man I would be laid on the shelf, but would be still taken care of.

This was the explanation given me by the recruiting officer, whom I found after a walk of sixty miles. Not caring to walk back again and remain out of the world I accepted the conditions to remain in the world till some enemy fired a shot that would give the government the best of the bargain. I was put into an infantry regiment and an effort was made to knock some of the "green" out of me and turn me into a soldier. But the effort failed. I could not be disciplined and within a week after having been landed in Cuba I struck my captain, was tried for mutiny and sentenced to be shot.

There are two extremes in war. When an army is not in action there is enough red tape used to girdle the world, but when the real work begins there isn't any red tape at all. In the mixup that occurred after our landing, while many a good soldier lay dying on the battlefield, I, a mutineer, ill with malarial fever, was turned into the house of a Cuban farmer and was attended by his daughter, one of those dark haired, olive complexioned, long eyelashed daughters of equatorial regions who can't look at a man without falling in love with him.

It has required three times the talk to tell all these commonplace facts as the beginning of my story. It was Inez Gonzales, the farmer's daughter and my nurse, who regretted my want of musical training with which I might have saved my life by blowing a horn.

"A regiment encamped yesterday," she went on, "in a field across the road, and two of the men supped here this evening. One of them said that his cornet and his flageolet had been killed and his trombone was groaning under a bad wound. The colonel was very proud of the regimental band, and just as soon as the routine of army life recommenced he would notice that the music was not up to the mark and there would be the mischief to pay. The other suggested that musicians be obtained from the prisoners who had been captured from the enemy. The first man answered that he hadn't thought of it; he would try. If you were a musician he might put you into the band."

Here was a chance for life—a ghost of a chance, but still a chance. The only indication that I had enough music in me to avail myself of the opportunity was that I had loved the songs of birds. I asked Inez to go to the camp, find the bandmaster and tell him there was a man in her home who could play on any instrument; that he was ill, but convalescent, and with a couple of weeks' practice would be able to take his place in a band.

Inez told the story, and the bandmaster came over to see me. When I told him I was under sentence to be shot he was a bit discouraged, but said that if I was a first class cornet player he thought the colonel would have enough influence to get a commutation or something that would save my breath for the band. He went away and came back to say that he had seen the colonel and secured an order delaying my execution till it could be discovered whether I was a valuable musician. If so some way of defeating justice would be found by which I could be utilized. The colonel's pride in the band was such that he would shoot a dummy in my stead if necessary, only the army regulations must be faithfully adhered to. But my abilities must be tested before any change in the army situation should take place.

So there I was, not knowing a note of music, sick in bed and required to make a musician of myself immediately, for army situations are not lasting, and the present one was liable to be changed at any moment. I got busy at once, with my life the spur to drive me on. Inez, having taken a few lessons on the piano, had the wherewithal for a beginning. But there was no time to put on an instrument so unlike the one I was required to play, and Inez borrowed a flute. On this I made a beginning. It was better for the purpose than a cornet since it made less noise, and the bandmaster across the road couldn't hear me practicing.

Written music bothered me, but I made wonderful progress, playing whatever came into my head. I could not read music—at least could not learn to do so quickly enough for the purpose—but I could improvise, and what astonished Inez was that I could not only "make up" airs, but could play them with remarkable fervor.

All this developed within a few days, at the end of which time the bandmaster sent to learn if I was well enough to play for him. I replied that I would be very soon, but since I had not touched a musical instrument since the war began I would like to have him send me one on which I might get a little practice before submitting to a test. He sent me a cornet.

Fearing that he would hear my first efforts and learn of my ignorance of the art to which I pretended, I asked Inez to stuff the cracks in the windows of the room in which I lay, and I began my efforts under the bed. I made what headway I could in this disadvantageous way and in two days began to play on the bed instead of under it. Whether I was heard by the bandmaster or not I don't know, but if I was no word about it came to me. But so fearful was I of betraying my want of knowledge of the cornet that I dare not blow a full blast.

Every day I feared some change that would cut short my preparation, and it was carried on under the fear that at any moment the army law might be permitted to take its course. I was haunted by the expectation of being marched out at any moment, stood up before a file of soldiers and shot. So lugubrious were my feelings that my playing would have been much better fitted for a funeral march than the popular airs of the day.

One morning the bandmaster came to see me and told me that a candidate for cornet player in the band had appeared in the personage of a soldier in the ranks and, since he must have a man to fill the post as soon as possible, unless I was ready to stand a test he would have the other man transferred to the band. I begged him to wait a few days that I might get more strength, but he said the colonel was liable at any time to notice the deteriorated condition of the band and if he did it would be impossible to tell what he would do. This frightened me, and I consented to stand trial.

The next afternoon he brought a man to the house where I was lying. Inez saw them coming with a cornet and, pale as death, ran in to tell me. I was desperate. If I submitted to a trial of skill between myself and one who was familiar with the instrument I would doubtless show my inability as a cornet player; if I refused to submit the man would be appointed in my place and I would be shot.

"Let them come," I exclaimed. "I will blow a blast that will awaken the dead."

I knew that my room was no place for a test on a cornet and asked Inez to hand me my clothes. When the bandmaster arrived I was dressing and sent word to him that I would be out in a few minutes. Having finished my toilet, I muttered a prayer and staggered out on to a porch, where I dropped into a chair. The bandmaster told me and my rival that he would take into the band the better player of the two, and since I was weak and the other fellow was strong he would give me the advantage of playing after him.

My rival took the cornet carelessly. It did not appear that he was anxious to get into the band, and he did not make a special effort. He did not need to do so to beat me, though he did not know it. He played a selection from the overture to "Zampa," a favorite piece for cornet players to show their skill. He rendered it very well, and I could not have played it at all.

One of the few simple airs I had learned was "Home, Sweet Home." Taking the cornet from the bandmaster, I told him that I was not strong enough to give him anything displaying technique; I could only produce melody. I fixed my mind on the cabin where I knew my dear mother was daily thinking of me and on the scene of my expected execution. There were but few notes, but each note was expressive of my depth of feeling. Persons who were passing stopped to listen. I played the air through once, and all were absorbed. I played it a second time, and their eyes were wet. The third time every one within hearing was weeping.

"That's enough," said the bandmaster; "you're my man."

"Hold," I said; "the secret must come out in time! I can't play a note. I have simply learned this in the vain hope of saving my life."

"I don't care if you can't play the scale; there's more music in you than in my whole band. I'll make a musician of you, and when I do you'll be a wonder."

Inez's tears gushed afresh, and she clasped me in her arms.

My execution was got round in this way. A requisition was made on the quartermaster for a coffin. It was indorsed, "No coffin in my possession." The requisition having been referred to the colonel, he issued a special order that I was to be released from arrest till a coffin could be procured in which to bury me. The coffin was never procured, and I have never been buried. The army regulations were adhered to, and I have become a great musician. Inez is my wife.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

We went directly to the stairs and mounted them. Delaying but little on the crest, we crossed it rapidly and finally entered the valley. It was with a feeling of awe that we stood for the first time within the vast cup at the foot of the inner stairs, completely shut out from the world by the great towering rampart of rock which entirely inclosed us. I had never felt so far removed from the world as then. Outside, of course, the limitless ocean ran beyond the barrier reef, but one could follow it unto the dim, faroff distance with his vision. Within the cup the glance fell upon the rocky wall on every hand. It was almost like being in a prison for all its tropic loveliness.

Beneath the trees and quite invisible from above, a paved road or path, barely wide enough for four to walk abreast upon, extended straight across the island to the hillock in the middle, while smaller paths semed to follow the course of the walls on either side. The ground was gently rolling, and the road, though overgrown in places and badly broken, was in much better condition than the broader path on the top of the wall. I suppose the fact that it was sheltered protected it. We passed along it for a mile and a half without much difficulty.

Finally we landed at the foot of the hillock. As I had observed from the wall it was grass grown and tree clad. Indeed, we should have been hard put to it to have ascended it, so dense was the vegetation, had it not been for the fact that the path was continued around the hill constantly mounting. Where it ran the somewhat shallow earth had been cut away on the hillside and the rock surface laid bare. Of course this path was frightfully overgrown.

We ascended with the utmost care. I finally drew my little mistress, her face bedewed as well as my own, up the last step ascent and stood upon the crest.

We could now see why the top of the hill had seemed level when we first looked at it from the wall. Indeed, the coral rock rose in a sharp escarpment eight or ten feet above the highest treetops, making a sort of table land or platform. This level, probably artificial, had been paved with the huge, dark gray rock of the stairs and statues and pathways. I may say in passing that in all our exploration of the island, which however, was not very thorough or complete owing to the shortness of our stay upon it, we saw no quarry whence this rock could have been taken, and the only way of accounting for its presence was that it had been brought there across the seas by the makers of the monuments and stairs, whoever they might have been. They must have had large seaworthy vessels and adequate means of land transportation, to say nothing of a most considerable engineering ability to accomplish these mighty works.

Well, the level top of the hillock was in shape a parallelogram, in extent perhaps an acre and a half. It was the most curious place I have ever seen. In the middle of it, with its four sides parallel to the sides of the plateau was a huge stone platform or altar perhaps 100 feet long by 70 feet wide. Completely surrounding this altar, but some distance away from it so as to make an aisle perhaps ten feet in width, rose a line of huge statues carved, like those at the foot of the stairs, into the semblance of monstrous human faces. Not one of them was like another. There was variation in each as there is variation in human faces. All were ugly, but all were lifelike and were singularly enough European.

CHAPTER XIII.

In Which We Enter the Place of Horror

THE statues or images rose from a kind of terrace a foot or so above the level of the platform, paved as before. They formed a sort of cloister, or colonnade, around the central platform, which rose twenty or twenty-five feet above. On the center of the raised platform or altar stood three or more of the same monster heads, placed one after another, the largest one being in the middle. They were in line, all looking in the same direction which my compass told me was due west. They were staring, therefore, toward the setting sun.

At the front end or west end the great platform was approached by a flight of steps. The stones of the pavement were so cunningly fitted together that only here and there had a seed lodged and grass grown. The stones of the platform or altar were also laid up without mortar and fitted in the same way. The altar was in perfect repair.

Standing so high, the fierce winds that swept over the plateau and platform had probably assisted in keeping it clear of vegetation, of anything in fact, for save for a few scattered lines of grass it was as bare as the palm of my hand.

Well, we stood upon the platform and surveyed the scene in silent awe. Nothing in the parchment had led us to suspect all this, although I recollect the stone "Goddes" looking toward the niche with the big palm tree, the spot in the wall by which we were to locate the treasure cave.

"Come!" said I at last, breaking the silence. "We will have a nearer look at these gentry."

"It seems like the temple of a vanished race," breathed my lady softly, staring about her in growing wonder.

"Aye, and of a vanished God!" I said, extending my hand.

There was something weird and eerie about the plateau, and we felt better for the touch of each other's hand, at least I did. I always felt happier when I touched her little hand, but in this instance the feeling was somewhat different. In a certain sense it seemed like profanation for us to be there, yet we went on steadily, if slowly. We passed by the colonnade of statues around the inner platform and deliberately mounted the stairs.

Something, I know not what, made me bid my mistress pause before we reached the top, and I looked to my pistol and loosened my sword in its sheath as I did so, although why I did so and what I anticipated I cannot say. At any rate, I mounted to the top alone. There before me lay a platform which was sunk beneath me for a depth of two feet and which was surrounded by a low wall, on the top of which I stood. The three images rose from a smaller platform on a level with the top of this wall in the midst, and the whole place was filled with a horrible and frightful mass of human bones. Skulls, legs, thighs and smaller bones, heaped in terrible confusion, lay bleaching before me, and the space between them was filled with a fine dust, doubtless the dust of earlier bones which had mouldered away through centuries. Those that still preserved their shape were the top layer and were bleached perfectly white. They lay in all directions, as if they had been cast aside carelessly and at random, yet there were indications that there had been a path from there I stood to the platform of the three images, which I perceived was just about long enough to lay a human body on.

I stared apprehensively, I must confess, at this frightful charnel house of the centuries. The only evidences of humanity we had discovered were these frightful skeletons. I would have prevented it, but my mistress suddenly came and stood by my side. Then I thought she would have fainted as the full horror of the scene burst upon her.

"Men have been here," she faltered. "Horrible, cruel men."

"Yes," said I, "but centuries ago. Look, the bones are bleached white. You have naught to fear."

"Let us leave this frightful place," she said.

"Presently," I answered, "but you will remember the directions of the chart. I must stand upon that altar and get my bearings. The treasure cave should be in line with the statues and a nick or depression in the wall on the farther side."

"Yes," she replied, "I remember."

"Well, then," I said, "will you go down to the platform out of sight of this horrible place and wait for me?"

"No," she answered nervously. "Master Hampdon, wherever you go I must go. I can never be left alone."

I tried gently to dissuade her, but, as usual, she would have her way, so that at last I gave in.

"Well, then," said I, "at least let me go before."

I stepped down into the great receptacle intending to clear the way with my feet by kicking away the layer of bones, and then, extending my arm behind me with both her hands caught in mine, she followed me down into the inclosure. Of course we had to walk upon the broken remnants of humanity, but I thrust aside as well as I could the larger pieces and skulls, and she, I afterward learned, followed with her eyes tightly closed, trusting entirely to my guidance. Indeed, she clung to my hand with all the nervous strength and power she possessed.

So we finally reached the platform. I lifted her up on it and followed myself. I led my lady carefully around the platform until we could stand at the rear end by the side of the line of statues and look across the island. Sure enough, there was the nick or depression in the wall which Sir Philip had mentioned, although the "bigge palmme tree" was gone or else lost amid hundreds of trees like it. Beneath it careful scrutiny showed a rough pyramid of stone leading up to what seemed to be openings in the cliff wall.

So far every detail in the old buccaneer's parchment was absolutely correct. I was certain now that the treasure was there and that we could find it. And a certain exultation filled me. At least we had not come upon a fool's errand, though what good the treasure would do us I did not stop to consider.

"We have nothing more to do here," I answered as I led the way to the edge of the low altar.

NEW YORK DRESS NEWS.

What Paul Poiret Told His New York Audiences—Prevailing Skirt and Suit Lines.

Everyone who could has listened to the talks given by Paul Poiret, the famous French designer, who has probably originated more successful modes than any of his Parisian confreres for the past few seasons. The Zouave skirt that was hooted when it first appeared and has now in greatly modified form achieved universal popularity was one of his notable creations, while he is responsible for the the prevailing peg top silhouette to which we have all grown so accustomed that former outlines look queer.

SUITABILITY.

In a witty evasive fashion, the message this famous dressmaker conveyed was, that no woman looked well in conventional fashions, unless they suited her individual lines and needs One has only to observe the crowd on Fifth Avenue any of these glorious October days to realize how trying incongruous styles are to their wearers. Grandmothers gowned in styles suited to "Buds," fat women in toilettes designed for the slender, girls with all their youth obscured in clothes suited only to a dowager. How the clever Frenchman must have longed to shuffle the cards into harmonious suits. It is simply stupid to dress badly when a little intelligent study will enable anyone to know the "don'ts" that apply to her case. Good dressing is a process of elimination. After one cuts out all the unsuitable things there are always enough left for choice, in which one can look well, with that correctly turned out air which is a joy to its possessor. Don't attempt too much. Don't wear any one thing that throws the whole toilette out of harmony. Try to select garments that increase the possibilities of the stock of clothes on hand, and of a sort adapted for use or pleasure as occasion demands, if your dress allowance is limited and you don't want this fact too evident.

TWO SMART DRESSES.

A navy blue satin gown of this sort seen the other day had the little bolero jacket faced with purple satin, and the same color introduced in the slashed skirt in a panel that met the tuck half way down the skirt which gave a double effect. Wide black and white cross ribbed ribbon made a wide girdle that finished at the centre front in one of the flat tab panels now so much worn. The same ribbon appeared in the facing of the cuffs that finished the long mousquetaire sleeve.

FASHION LETTER GAL. 2

A fussy frock suited for many occasions was of black satin. white lace and black net. The bodice of white net, with a black net overlay topped with white shaped lace pieces. The the drapery in front extending over the double valance fo white lace topped by black net which reached the knee. The caught up black satin ending under a wide draped girdle of old red brocade.

PRACTICAL FROCKS.

Mroe practical still for general wear one of the blue serge frocks beloved by almost everyone. which was smatrly cut on easy tailored lines had the skirt slightly draped. and caught with buttons covered with plaid velvet. the same material making a little make-believe vest in front, and a tiny military collar open to show a net guimpe. Later topped by a fur stole, or under a coat of fur or cloth this gown will do duty for almost any day time wear, because its lines are so pretty and smart, and almost anyone can have a dress of this sort in their outfit. Corduroy is another good all round material that makes up into a smart practical frock and corduroys and velevts of all sorts are leading favorites this season. Wool velvets, and velvet brocaded upon silk, satin or chiffons. "Devetyn" a woolen with a deep soft velvety pile is smartly endorsed for suits, wraps and hats. It come sin various weights in plain color tones, and in printed stripes for vestings. In brocaded figures it makes handsome coats, and in lighter weight ribbed like corduroy for dresses. In fact Duvetyn figures somewhere in almost any fashionable costume. Among the rough surfaced goods for coats mohair plush which comes in many colors and combines excellently with fur is a very desirable choice.

THE BUTTON STORY.

Buttons play an important part in autumn trimmings, though they are not used so lavishly as last season. Often the buttons lend the only touch of color in a sombre toilette. Little apple buttons and diminutive tomatoes with green stems are used after the French fashion on vests. Cubist buttons in vivid odd colors separated by black lines are patterned after the silks introduced last Spring, and now considerably used for lining purposes.

Buttons are square. oblong or round, ball shaped or flattened. Glass buttons made to resemble ivory are among the novelties, and black centres and rims that contrast strongly with the rest of the decoration are among the most effective styles seen. Jet buttons are much used and correspond with the fad for jet trimmings. Buttons covered with matching or contrasting materials are modish while the fur covered button is the top notch of smartness and offers an excellent chance to use up odd pieces of fur to advantage.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Several past masters of Wollaston and Rural Masonic lodges will accompany Rt. Wor. Walter S. Pinkham on his official visitation to Norfolk Union lodge at Randolph, Wednesday evening.

Invitations for the annual ladies night of the Granite City club to be held at Alpha hall, Nov. 13, have been issued. The affair is for members and their ladies.

Although the streets have been thoroughly soaked by the recent rains and especially the heavy rain of Monday the high wind and sun have dried up the streets so that today it is rather dusty about City Square.

SUNDAY SALES.

Sundays, to fishermen who carry no luncheon, will be a foodless day, for Chief Burrill has served formal notice on proprietors that further violation of the license provisons will not be tolerated. The place hardest hit is Houghs Neck, and last Sunday scores of hungry men tramped the beach in vain trying to purchase canned goods, etc. The situation developed after a resident wrote Gov. Foss., who referred the matter to the State police, and they turned it over to Quincy for action. In the past a liberal interpreter has been given licenses along the beach but the sale of groceries must stop.

MEMORIAL TO DR. WILLARD

Alumnae Gift Unveiled at School He Founded

A bronze tablet, the work of Cyrus E. Dallin, in memory of Horace Mann Willard, the founder of the Quincy Mansion school, and the gift of the alumnae association, was unveiled Monday. Miss Helen Atwood presided at the memorial service which was held in the school chapel. Bishop William E. Huntington and Rev. Thomas L. Barbour, both of whom were intimate friends of Mr. Willard made short addresses. There was also a brief address by Miss Clara Linforth West, formerly dean of the woman's school at the Carnegie Technical school.

Music during the exercises was furnished by William Howard, Mrs. Kelly and Miss Hayes, violins; S. Newton Cutler, piano and Miss Julia Kelley, soprano. Mrs. Warren Denham Foster presented the tablet which was accepted by Mrs. Willard, principal of the school.

The son of Mrs. William Abbott Lamson of Lowell, a daughter of Mrs. Pliny Jewell of Concord and a daughter of Mrs. Harry Flanders of Melrose three children of the alumnae, officiated at the unveiling of the tablet.

The memorial committee was Mrs. Warren Dunham Foster, Newton Center, chairman; Mrs. Richard Merrill, Alhambra, Calif, Miss Helen Atwood, Wauregon, Conn, Miss Helen Loud, Weymouth, Miss Julia Kelly, North Raynham and Miss Elizabeth Dearborn, Suncook, N. H.

The composition of the tablet carries well the portrait of Dr. Willard. It is full face, set in sunken medallion and is high relief. On either side burns a lamp suggesting the classic scholarship of Dr. Willard, while their ascending flames symbolize the truth for which he unfalteringly stood. The tablet is of distinctive value not only as a portrait, but as an excellent example of the distinguished sculptor's skill.

Beneath the portrait is this inscription: "Inspiring Educator and Christian Gentleman. No phrasing could be more apt, for in the hearts of Dr. Willard's former pupils and his many friends, that memory of him still lives.

TENNIS LEAGUE.

The Wollaston Tennis Club whose bowling season last winter was the best indoor event ever held under club auspices plans to increase its popularity this season and in preparations the league has been reorganized and is ready for its opening on the Coliseum alleys Wednesday evening. The committee have kept the makeup of the teams and their captains a secret and until they formally proclaim the news the bolwers will be in the dark. The league is confined strictly to club membership and one man whose enthusiasm over the small ball game fretted him because he was not a member promptly made application and has ben admitted. Socially the season will be a success since it will be a continuation of the good outdoor sport at which the members are proficient. One night weekly has been reserved for the Wollastonites and they promise to keep no skill in reserve during the rolloffs.

Vol. 28 No. 245 QUINCY MASS. WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

FIRST PARISH CLUB OPENS THE SEASON

Instructive and Interesting Address on China by Notive of That Country

Yun Siang Tsao Is Secretary of Chinese Students

The First Parish Club held its opening meeting for the season Tuesday evening with an unusually large attendance.

From 6 to 6.30 the members assembled in the social rooms down stairs; and at 6.30 took their places around the tables, where Rev. Thomas C. Martin of the Hall Place M. E. church said grace.

At the head table, which had been tastefully decorated with autumn leaves by Mrs. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, there were beside the president, the speaker of the evening, Henry K. Holden, Col. Edward Anderson and his guest a former commander Gen. John C. Black, J. F. Paige and R. C. Drinker; Rev. Thomas C. Martin and Theophilus King.

The dinner which was quite up to the high standard of excellence established by last year's committee was served by the following young men: Willard Crocker, Robert Davis, Fred Schenkelberger, Albert Miller, Fred Rassmussen, Earle Bates, Horton Page, Leon White, Fred Atwood, Richard Blackmur, Karl Pfaffmann, W. Weston, Osborne Rogers, Chester Bennett and Herbert Barker.

The committee for the present season consists of the following members: Samuel T. MacQuarrie, William B. Nichols, Nathan Ames, M. L. Reed, Jr., and George T. Magee.

At the conclusion of the dinner, when the president, Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, arose to call the meeting to order, he was greeted with prolonged cheers the members at the same time rising to their feet in further token of their appreciation and esteem. Mr. Hudson acknowledged the greeting with a brief and happy speech of welcome in the course of which he referred to the remarkable development of the club during the first year of its existence, the fine spirit of democracy and good fellowship among its members, and its growing importance to the city in bringing into closer relations a large body of representative men, of diverse ages and occupations, to consider subjects that are closely related to the needs of modern life and the duties of a loyal citizen.

He spoke of our growing and cordial relations with China, that ancient Empire which had seen thirty centuries of continuous development before the dawning of the Christian era, and was now seeking to adapt itself to the changing environment of the new time. He then introduced to the club a representative of the new China, Mr. Yun-Siang Tsao, general secretary of the Chinese Students Christian Association, who spoke upon "China and it Problems."

Yun-Siang Tsao, the speaker of the evening, spoke a remarkably pure English. Being of Chinese birth many doubtless were prepared to hear a gentleman speak what is commonly known as pigeon English. In this however they were happily disappointed, for as Col. Anderson said his vocabulary was astonishing and he could not understand how it should be so.

Mr. Tsao is a graduate from an American college and is the general secretary of the Chinese Students' Christian Association of North America. His subject was "China and its problems" and in view of the fact of the recently established republic in this far away country his address was of unusual interest.

In opening his address the speaker said that it afforded him great pleasure to attend this meeting and outline the growth of a great people. He realized that he was addressing a galaxy of intellectual men and in a church where two presidents worshipped. He also realized that he was addressing men of mature age, and a club that had a noble principle. He realized what a noble spirit this gathering represents—to promote a cosmopolitan spirit and better fellowship, to understand each other.

If we knew each other we like each other, and then we learn to love each other. He remembered when the English first went to China they were told to bring along a bed and pistol. But he would advise not going at all if they had to carry these things. He liked to size up his people in the eyes of other people. He wanted to represent the picture as a whole. If as they say about some western people, they have blue eyes, red hair and carry a gun, and shoot when they get mad, how can they come to know each other.

Here we have a body of active business men, who are interested to lift up their fellow men and to improve existing conditions, so I will tell you some of the problems we have to meet in China.

The speaker then took his hearers back ten years to show how they had prepared for the constitutional government. They could not wait for the old government to move so they said we will carry out our policy. He then outlined how the people were prepared by speakers who went from place to place talking to the people and preparing them for the Revolution. The Revolution started Oct. 19, 1911, and in one month half of the nation had joined the movement, showing how thoroughly had been the organization. The old government desired a peaceful settlement, but it was not accepted. Feb. 12 came the establishment of the republic so as you celebrate and remember Feb. 12, as the birthday of the savior of your great nation so we celebrate and remember Feb. 12, as the birth of the republic of an old nation, so the peo-

DORCAS SOCIETY GIVE SUPPER

Entertainment Follows in the Universalist Vestry

The Dorcas society of the Universalist church gave their first supper and entertainment of the season in the church vestry Tuesday night. At 6.30. Those who gathered sat down to an appetizing supper of baked beans, cold corned beef, pickled beets, potato salad, apple pie, squash pie, doughnuts, cheese, coffee and grapes. Two long tables had been attractively set and another was needed. The supper was in general charge of Mrs. George E. Sprague assisted by Mrs. J. R. Lermond, Mrs. Thomas G. Smith, Miss Hanson and Miss Martha Hanson.

A social hour was enjoyed after the supper which was followed by a most pleasing entertainment in charge of Mrs. George F. Spooner.

The program included piano duets by Mrs. Florence Cutter and Miss Edith Hyland, songs in character dress by Miss Ruth Packard, reading by Miss Ella Packard, Scotch songs by Thomas Melrose, and the one-act farce entitled "The Burglar Alarm," Miss Ella Packard, Miss Mabel Lovejoy, Miss Maud Briggs and Miss Mabel Pratt, taking the parts with accuracy and action.

The pastor, Rev. Merrill C. Ward, spoke a few words of welcome and expressed his great pleasure at the opportunity of meeting the people in this social and friendly way.

NEW ADAMS SCHOOLHOUSE

Should Be Ready For Occupancy on Monday

It is probable that the sewer connection with the new Adams schoolhouse will be made this week, possibly today. On Tuesday the trench was dug the whole distance and pipe was laid on a part of Abigail avenue. It should be possible to open the new schoolhouse next Monday.

Few of the children in the present Adams district will find the new building as accessible as the old one. All are expected to enter from Kendrick avenue, which runs from Franklin street at the top of Penns hill to Faxon Park road. They can go to Kendrick via Verchild street, Ritchie road, Madison avenue, Phipps street or Faxon Park road, but parents will object to their children using some of these routes.

Before the new school house is really accessible large expenditures must be made by the city to build Madison avenue along the west side of the school lot from Kendrick avenue to Payne street; to lay out a new street along the front of the schoolhouse from Madison avenue to Phipps street; to extend Trescott street to Abigail avenue; to extend Abigail avenue to Phipps street; and accept other streets.

SOCCER LEAGUE.

After all sorts of delays and interruptions the indications are that the grammar school soccer schedule will be run off in regular order, weather conditions permitting. The unplayed games due to rain and wet grounds will be sandwiched in the next few weeks. On the Merrymount Park upper field, Tuesday, the Coddington beat the Willards 1 to 0 and the Washingtons defeated the Atherton Houghs 2 to 0. The latter showing is considered pip top, inasmuch as the winners are the champs and the losers have only a few to pick from.

WILLIAMS NOTES IN COURT.

Suits have been filed in the courts against Harry R. Stanley, to test the genuineness of the notes signed by the late George E. Williams of Braintree. Mr. Stanley claims that he purchased these notes, and that Mr. Tower is liable for their face value and although Mr. Stanley has not sued for the amount of the notes, Mr. Tower in order to forestall any such action has brought suit in the Supreme court in the form of a bill inequity.

ROCK ISLAND COTTAGE BURNED

Obtained Such Headway That Contents Were Lost

The alarm from Box 112 at 6.40 this morning, followed in a few minutes by a second alarm from the same box, was a fire in the summer cottage of Martin Keith situated at 210 Rhoda road, Rock Island. The fire started from an over heated kitchen stove and small building was practically ruined entailing a loss on the building and contents estimated at $1,500.

It seems that Mr. Keith is employed in Roxbury and as usual got up about 5 o'clock and built a fire in the stove. After leaving for his employment Mrs. Keith returned to bed with the children. The children kept smelling smoke, but Mrs. Keith though it simply their imagination until she eventually realized that there was a fire. By that time the fire had made such a headway that saving any of the contents was out of the question, and it was all the family could do to get out themselves.

It appeared on investigation that the walls of the cottage were lined with paper. That the kitchen stove sat within a few inches of the partition, and but a very narrow space separated the funnel from the woodwork.

When returning to bed Mrs. Keith had neglected to close the stove dampers, with the result that both the front and back dampers were left open causing a red hot fire.

On the way to the fire, one of the chains on the wheels of the Central station auto combination came off and the crew thought that something had broken so that car was stopped near Mt. Wollaston cemetery and the crew went on to the fire on Combination 1 wagon.

On the way back Chief Litchfield towed the apparatus back to the station where it was found that no part of the machinery had broken and that the chain coming off was the only damage.

ELECTION EXPENSES.

Secretary Donahue will refer to Atty-Gen. Swift for prosecution under the corrupt practices act, all cases of neglect of candidates to file by 5 o'clock, Thursday, their returns of expenses in the recent primaries. Among Quincy men who will not have their cases referred is Charles W. Guy who has filed an expense account of $30. He is the Democratic candidate for councillor, opposed to Guy Ham the present Republican incumbent.

Mr. Guy, whose home is in Quincy, is presenting his reasons why he should be elected through unique poster advertising. The card is a salmon pink and bears a remarkable likeness to Quincy's retired merchant in the upper left hand corner. His birthplace and present home are illustrated and also a fine cut of a yoke of oxen which Mr. Guy drove when he was starting his career.

Since then, the card states he has been a shoe maker, farmer, merchant, author and is now a farmer. He claims to be a strong Democrat, "yet the Independents, Progressives and Republicans can all vote for him for he is one of the people." No reference is made to his opponent.

A short sketch of his ancestors balances the list of towns and cities and the card is signed by David J. Roche, who is Mr. Guy's secretary.

NELSON—GRANT.

Richard Nelson of 153 Whitwell street and Miss Mabel Grant of Somerville were married Tuesday night at the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Grant, 74 Rogers street, West Somerville. The ceremony was attended only by the immediate relatives. The bride was for several years a space auditor employed by a Boston paper, and the groom is with the John Evans Co. of Boston. Rev. J. Franklin Knotts, pastor of the Park avenue church officiated. There were no attendants. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson left after the ceremony on a trip to Niagara Falls, Albany and New York City. They will be at home to their friends at 153 Whitwell street, Quincy, after Dec. 1.

Forestry experts say that glass bottles thrown away in the woods attract the sun's rays and start disastrous fires. But nothing can be done that will interfere with the prerogatives of fishing parties.

AVIATION THRILLERS.

Lincoln Beachey, the aviator, says the morbid expectation of sensational accidents is the chief factor of public interest in aviation. Strangely enough, having expressed this opinion, he decided to fly again, and at the first assesion swept two girls off a hangar roof with fatal results.

Whether or not Beachey is right, the public surely wants the spice of danger. A legion of public entertainers are circulating about the country doing the "Dive of Death," performing in the "Cage of Death," taking the "Leap of Death," and other like stunts. Managements find that there are dollars in advertising the word "Death."

This puts the aviator in an ugly position. His trained eye and feeling detect perils in atmospheric conditions that the average man cannot sense. Dependent on the perfect tuning up of a delicately adjusted machine, he does not care to risk his neck until every last nut has been tested and tightened.

The average spectator sees no reason why an aviation exhibit should not be run off like the rise of a theater curtain. He has paid down his good money, now let the performer deliver the goods and fulfill his contract. If it is a little windy, all the better chance to display skill.

Most aviators are not circus tent graduates. They are scientific and mechanical enthusiasts profoundly stirred by a new era of technical achievement, but who value their own necks.

To them aviation grows more interesting the fewer chances of disaster are assumed. The demand of the public for flights at any and all times, contrary to scientific judgement, defeats the entire purpose of such an exhibition. It tends to discourage them from experiments performed under such illogical conditions.

WHAT PANAMA WORK MEANS.

The Egyptian Pyramids have commonly been called the greatest marvel of human construction. Yet when the Gamboa dike was blown up, practically completing the Panama Canal, earth had been removed that would make 63 pyramids.

Some people call the Chinese wall the greatest human marvel. It is 1500 miles long. The material taken out of Panama would make a similar wall 2500 miles long.

The Americans have won where the very scientific French people failed. The capacity of the French for technical achievement is shown by the foremost place they have taken in developing air flight. They went down to Panama and built 12 miles of canal, well designed and well constructed. Their machinery was so good that most of it, after the rust was scoured off, was perfectly fit to use after the lapse of years. Yet they slipped up somewhere on the human side. They left the job a monument of graft.

The Americans turned a swamp into a health resort. The spirit of the thing was expressed by Richard Harding Davis. He said that when he ran across a single man or little group of men somewhere out of sight, unwatched, and unbossed, one would naturally expect, considering common human habits that some of them would be "soldiering." Instead of that, all seemed to be digging for all they were worth.

The graft so common in municipal work, the inefficient red tape of government departments, has always made the American people heartsick. Panama has shown that it is a possible thing to organize government enterprises efficiently. Great power was given to one man, and he was held responsible. This will have its influence on our civic problems. Too often graft and sloth have been sheltered by a division of responsibility so fine that no one knew whom to blame.

AUDIENCE IS DISAPPOINTING

Mrs. Pankhurst Draws Small Crowd In New York

ABOUT THREE THOUSAND THERE

Managers of Big Suffrage Meeting In Madison Square Garden Had Planned on Attendance of More Than Twelve Thousand—Only Low Priced Seats Filled

New York, Oct. 22.—There was disappointment for Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant leader from London, who was released from Ellis island on Monday, and sighs of regreat from the Madison Square Garden management when Mrs. Pankhurst stepped upon the stage of the garden last night to make her first public appearance here. The audience, in point of numbers, fell far below expectations.

Far up in the highest of the galleries, where the seats sold for 50 cents, there were few vacant spots to be seen. In the $1 seats on the tier below only a fraction of the chairs were taken. The $1.50 seats back of the boxes held only a straggling contingent, and only four of the boxes were occupied before Mrs. Pankhurst was introduced.

The main floor of the garden had been solidly paved with chairs in close rows offered at $2.50 and $2 each. The $2 seats directly in front of the platform were fairly well filled, but elsewhere on the floor there were perhaps three times as many empty chairs as there were occupied seats.

Instead of a crowd of "about 12,000," which members of the garden forces had said during the afternoon could be seated, there were not more than 3000 persons in the great building. Many who have had experience in judging the size of audiences put the number at lower than 3000.

When Charles E. Russell, the Socialist candidate for mayor, was in the middle of his speech introducing Mrs. Pankhurst he was interrupted by an uproar as the people far up near the roof began to shuffle down the steps to the $2.50 seats so that they would be sure of being near enough the platform to hear the suffragist's voice.

MEXICANS APPREHENSIVE

Desert Streets as Time For Election, Sunday, Draws Near

Mexico City, Oct. 22.—As Sunday's election draws near apprehension grows in Mexico. Today few natives were congregated about the streets. Last night the capital looked like a deserted city.

General Felix Diaz was expected to arrive during the day at Vera Cruz, and his friends predicted he would come at once to Mexico City. Huerta adherents were openly disappointed that Diaz refused the services of the gunboat sent to Havana to bring him home. It is said Huerta and General Blanquet will announce their candidacy for president and vice president as soon as Diaz sets foot on his native soil.

The holding of forty-three Germans at Torreon by General Francisco Villa as hostages against an attack by federal forces has aroused the German government to make strong demands upon the Mexican foreign office to insure their safety. He let it be known, according to advices received here, that they would be sacrificed unless the effort to retake Torreon was abandoned.

What action the foreign office proposes to take has not yet been determined.

KILLED BY FEED WIRE

Young Employe of Worcester Transformer Station Gets 13,000 Volts

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 22.—William E. Parker of Harrington, Me., a graduate of the University of Maine in 1912, was instantly killed in the transformer station of the Worcester Consolidated Street Railway company when 13,000 volts of electricity passed through his body as it came in contact with a feed wire carrying the current.

It was said the wire was poorly insulated. Parker was in the employ of the Consolidated only a week. He was a son of James E. Parker of Harrington, Me.

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 22.—Two deputy United States marshals, J. P. The marshals were not fatally hurt, but one of the blacks may die.

FACES TWO WIVES

Puranla Gets Ten Months For Statutory Charge and Neglect

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 22.—Two wives, one of whom he thought was in Finland, faced Alva K. Puranla in police court, where he was charged with a statutory offence and neglect. Even when faced by his wife from the old country, the mother of his six children, the man denied any knowledge of her until she slipped off her wedding ring and showed Puranla's name, linked with her own, engraved on the inner surface of the circlet.

Puranla came to this country six years ago, it was brought out in court, leaving behind in Finland his wife and children. For four years the woman received letters and money from him, then both stopped. She wrote to him, but her letters were returned unopened. Then she borrowed money and came to America to search for her husband, leaving the children with friends.

Both women were in court, the American woman carrying in her arms a month-old-baby. She asked that she be given Puranla's last week's wages so that she might have the infant christened. This was arranged.

Puranla was sentenced to ten months in the house of correction and the county will pay the Finnish woman $4 a week to help her care for her children.

London, Ont., Oct. 22.—After battling for hours in a terrific gale in Lake Erie, when his steamer, the Elphicks, owned by the Buckeye Steamship company of Duluth, sprang aleak. Captain Collins was forced to run her ashore off Long Point.

He had barely done so when the steamer broke in two. The entire crew of eighteen men were saved. The steamer had on board 160,000 bushels of wheat.

HOUSE WILL HAVE NO MONTH'S RECESS

Democratic Members Will Probably Go Home For Thirty Days

Washington, Oct. 22.—An attempt to adjourn the house for a thirty-day recess, as suggested by President Wilson, has been abandoned. Representative Underwood, Democratic majority leader, announced after a conference with Minority Leader Mann that no agreement could be reached because Mann believed Republican senators would not sanction the plan.

Although there is no business to be transacted the house will be forced to formally convene and adjourn daily during the remainder of the session or as long as the currency bill is pending before the senate.

Underwood read the president's letter in the house and advised Democratic members they might go home for a month at least.

WANT "ABLE SEAMEN"

LaFollette Says They Are Necessary For Safety of Passengers on Ships

Washington, Oct. 23.—Rigid laws requiring "able seamen" in sufficient numbers to man all lifeboats were declared by Senator LaFollette to be necessary for the safety of passengers and crews of vessels on the ocean and the Great Lakes.

The senator also insisted safety at sea might often be determined in a crisis by the ability of the crew to understand its officers. His bill provides that 75 percent of the crew shall understand the language of the officers.

The senate will vote on the seamen's bill Thursday under an agreement that ends all debates at 4 o'clock that day.

Expert Says That Wearer Is Less Liable to Catch Cold

Washington, Oct. 22.—Without attempting to pass upon questions of taste or modesty, the United States public health service has put its stamp of approval upon slit skirts and diaphanous gowns from the health standpoint.

Assistant Surgeon General Rucker announced that "women wear too many clothes, anyway," and that the woman who dresses in up-to-date style is less liable to catch cold these chilly days than one who loads down her body with heavy clothing.

British Ships For Canal Fete

London, Oct. 22.—Great Britain accepted the invitation of the United States government to send representative vessels of her navy to the gathering of the international fleet in Hampton Roads early in 1915 to celebrate the completion of the Panama canal by making a voyage to the Pacific through the new waterway. The acceptance by the British foreign office has been forwarded to the secretary of the United States navy at Washington.

Manchester Man Killed In Salem

Salem, Mass., Oct. 22.—John Williston, 35, a Manchester painter, was fatally injured here when a freight engine ran over him. He was so badly crushed that after he had been removed to the Salem hospital both legs and one hand were amputated.

Knots and Hours.

Nine persons out of ten will say that such and such a steamship is capable of steaming at "twenty-five knots per hour." A nautical man would simply say "twenty-five knots." Now, which is correct? The latter, of course. The mistake arises from the fact that the landsman thinks that a "knot" is just the nautical term for a "sea mile," which is, roughly, 6,080 feet, or about one and one-eighth land or statute miles. Now, a knot is not a distance at all; it is a speed. The word "speed" combines distance and time. For instance, if we wish to speak of the speed of a train we refer to it as so many miles per hour. There is no single word in the language to express speed limits, so we must use two words—miles and hour.

The sailor has a language peculiar to himself, and he has invented a single word for a unit of speed. Thus a speed of one nautical mile per hour is called one "knot." Hence it is redundant to tack on another "per hour" after the word knot when the word already includes one "per hour."—London Tit-Bits.

Some Shots at "Haste."

Hurry usually leads to error. The motto of Baron Plunket was "Hasten slowly." Churchill said, "The more haste ever the worst speed;" Bolleau, "Hasten slowly and without losing heart put your work twenty times upon the anvil." "Haste maketh waste," said Heywood. "I am always in haste, but never in a hurry," is from John Wesley. Richard III. mumbled, "Sweet flowers are slow and weeds make haste." He would have made a successful farmer. This is Seneca: "Haste trips up its own heels, fetters and stops itself;" Tennyson, "Raw haste, half sister to delay."

Life for delays and doubts no time does give.
None ever yet made haste enough to live.

That bright couplet was written by Cowley. Listen to Bulwer-Lytton:

Business dispatched is business well done,
But business hurried is business ill done.

Women Soldiers.

In several cases Prussian women were most capable as soldiers, able to command and ready to obey, as well as being able to withstand the hardships of campaigning. To cite some instances, Maria Warder, a woman of Silesia, was allowed to serve as a hussar in the same regiment as her husband, who was a wealthy landowner. She was wounded in several engagements and saw her husband shot dead by her side at Leipzig.

Eleonora Prochaska is one of the better known of these heroines. She engaged under the name of Carl Renz in the Light horse when only eighteen, and several poets have written of her courage and of her death just before the battle of Leipzig. A monument stands to her memory in the cemetery at Potsdam.—London Standard.

Seal Stair Builders.

How seals cut steps in the perpendicular sides of ice cakes in order to rise from the water for the purpose of breathing has been recorded by members of Captain Scott's antarctic expedition. It was discovered that the seals, which formerly were supposed to leave the water by leaping, actually cut steps in the slippery surface with the great canine or eye teeth. As soon as the teeth are placed in position the head is moved rapidly from side to side until the ice has been cut away sufficiently to afford a footing for the front flippers of the animal. Each step has to be laboriously cut after this fashion until the body is far enough out of the water to be thrust up the rest of the way by a kick of the hind flippers.—New York Press.

First Brides to Cross the Rockies.

Marcus Whitman, M. D., who saved Oregon to the United States, was born Sept. 2, 1802, at Rushville, N. Y. He married Miss Narcissa Prentis of Angelica, N. Y., in February, 1836, and their wedding trip was to cross the continent that year in company with the Rev. H. H. Spaulding and his young wife. The brides were the first women to cross the Rocky mountains. They made the journey of 3,500 miles in seven months.

Time He Quit.

"See here, young man," said the angry father, "how many times have I told you that I don't want you to call on my daughter?"

"Oh," replied the suitor coolly, "about twenty."

"Well," said the exasperated parent, "don't you think that's about enough?"

"Yes, I do," was the reply. "When are you going to quit?"—Magazine of Fun.

Remedies That Don't Remedy.

"What's the matter, old top?"

"Lumbago."

"I have a remedy I wish you'd try."

"I'll put your remedy on my waiting list. At my present rate of progress I'll get to it in about two years."—Kansas City Journal.

Monday the physical characteristics of the Mediterranean and products and industries were considered under the leadership of Miss Clara L. Baxter.

WOLLASTON WOMEN'S CLUB.

The Wollaston Women's club held its regular meeting Monday afternoon in the Park and Downs church where a large audience gathered to listen to the readings given by Mrs. Waldo Richards.

The principal business was the consideration of accepting the lot of land offered by Mrs. Thomas Fenno as a site for a club house. Mrs. Charles M. Bryant introduced the following resolution which was passed by the club:

"Whereas, through the kindness and liberality of Mrs Thomas Fenno, a large tract of land at the corner of Hancock and Linden streets has been offered to the club as a site for a club house and

"Whereas, in our opinion the land is not in as central a position as it should be to serve the best interest of the club

"Therefore, be it resolved that the hearty thanks of the club be extended to Mrs. Fenno for her most generous offer and be it further resolved that in our opinion it is inadvisable to accept the land for a clubhouse."

The meeting was opened by the president Mrs. Arthur D. Ropes with the reading of club notices by the secretary Mrs. William Dean Sanford.

For the choral class Miss Florence G. Olney reported that 50 voices had already been gathered together and she urged that all the talent in the club attend the class. Its next meeting will be held on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Miss Ruth L. Hardy, 28 Wollaston avenue.

Mrs. Herbert H. Albee reported for the Woman's Exchange and Mrs. Charles R. Safford for the program committee was in charge of the afternoon's entertainment.

Miss Hazel Clark opened the program with three finely executed violin solos. She was accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Philip Kelley and the numbers proved most pleasing. They were: "Guitarrero" by Franz Dedla, "Minuet" by Bethoven and "The Bee" by Francois Shubert.

Mrs. Richards whose coming to the club had been much heralded gave for her first part the following selections: "The Woman's club," "Ananias," "The Kindown mother," "Expected," "Sh!" "Unity," "Roadways" and "When Madame Albain sang," Her readings were well received and rightly so as Mrs. Richards ably sustained her enviable reputation.

As an intermission between the readings Miss Clarke contributed "The legend" by Bohme.

Mrs. Richard's second part consisted of a group of miscellaneous readings among which were included: "The Irish play," "Each in his own tongue," "Banjo of the past," "Easy times," "Woman at the bottom and "Johnny's history lesson." At the close of the afternoon an informal reception was tendered Mrs. Richards.

With the increase of 19 applicants at the last board meeting the club now has a waiting list of 89. Guests were present on Tuesday from Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Portland, Maine, Hillsboro, New Hampshire, Providence, Rhode Island and Nantucket.

The Current Events class will hold its first meeting Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Wollaston Methodist Vestry, with Mrs. Leila C. Pennock in charge.

The Parliamentary Law Class will meet on the second and fourth Friday mornings of each month at 10 o'clock in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church under the direction of Mrs. Sherman.

Interest is being taken in the millinery class of Mrs. Arthur P. Homer and she hopes to have a full class before the next meeting.

Plans have been completed for the club dance to be held in Alpha hall on October 31.

N. E. WHEATON CLUB.

Lincoln of Wollaston, Mrs. Charles Birtwell, Mrs. H. W. Stebbins, Mrs. W. R. Dalrymple, Miss A. Ellen Stanton for many years principal of Wheaton seminary, Mrs. C. W. Mitchell, vice-president of the club and Dr. Samuel V. Cole, president of Wheaton college.

Nearly 100 of Wheaton's daughters, including 20 who attended the organization of the club at the Tremont house in '88, greeted one another.

Dr. Cole in his "Foreword" gave most encouraging reports of the new year at Wheaton, 30 freshmen entering the college course, the equipment in French and German being excellent. The club holds its meetings regularly at the Vendome the second Saturday of the month, and all former students of Wheaton are cordially received.

NEEDLE WORK GUILD.

The Needle Work Guild is one of the organized charities of Quincy, which, though of little prominence, yet does a great deal of good. The membership fee is only two new strong garments once a year. Now the fee is due and all members are asked to have their garments ready when their notice arrives. Last year 290 garments were collected. These were given to people who, on investigation, were found to be deserving Also they are given very gladly to any of the charities of Quincy when asked for.

The annual meeting and exhibition of garments will be held Wednesday, November 12th, from 3 to 5 P. M. at the home of Miss Abigail B. Wood, 68 School street. Miss Wood, the president, has always been interested enough to open her house, each year, and invite members and all interested to come and see the collection and meet each other. Men, as well as women are invited to join this charity.

WOMEN AND THE STATE.

One of the interesting educational and recreational opportunities offered to the women of greater Boston this winter is the second series of Saturday morning lectures on "Woman and the State," which the School Voters' league is to give on eight consecutive Saturdays beginning Oct. 25. Nearly every phase of woman's activity and of modern thought concerning it will be discussed in these conferences, the speaker in every instance being an expert of national—and often international—reputation.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

Josef Hofmann, the most admired of the younger pianists, will give his only recital in Boston in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, October 26th. Mr. Hofmann is in America for a comparatively brief stay; that is to say, while he will be here until the late winter he expects to spend most of his time on his estate in North Carolina and is not going to give very many concerts. His last recital here was one of the most successful of the season and it was sufficient to establish him firmly in the favor of the public.

MR. JOSEF HOFMANN.
Symphony Hall, Sunday Oct. 26, 1913

He has arranged a programme of very great interest the last group of which will be devoted to Russian composers. Hofmann is the favorite pianist of Russia. Last season he spent the greater part of the winter in that country and gave ten recitals in St. Petersburg. Such unfamiliar names as Dvorsky, and Scriabine appear in this group. The programme in its entirety is as follows:

Variations	Handel
Bagatellen, E-flat major	Beethoven
C major	"
Sonate, Op. 106	"
Two Nocturnes	Chopin
Two Mazurkas	"
Two Waltzes	"

ANOTHER AT HOME GAME

South Boston High Will Play Quincy High

Quincy High came out of its contest with Dedham last Saturday to the satisfaction of all who were interested. In comparison with the crude work of the visitors, the work of the local boys stood out brightly. More team work than ever, cleaner and harder tackling, and more fight in those carrying the ball, was evident at every angle. Even with the second backfield in and with subs in the line there was no noticeable let up anywhere, and the amount of ground gained was practically the same.

The next home game is with South Boston on Friday afternoon at Merrymount oval. This team has always given Quincy a good clean game that has required hard football to win. South Boston defeated Dedham 12-0 a week ago, and if comparative scores are anything to go by Quincy should win fairly easily on Friday.

The local boys have rounded into better shape than any of their supporters dared hope for before the season began. Page at quarterback has improved steadily with experience, and last Saturday's game was his best yet. Now that Schenkelberger has recovered from the injury to his knee his work at end has been of first class quality, and even fewer gains have been made by opponents around his end than around Larkin's.

STORM AMOUNTS TO THOUSANDS

Sweeps Atlantic Coast From Maine to Florida

SNOW IS WEST AND SOUTH

Loss Is Heavy Among Shipping, Heavy Wind Driving Vessels Ashore and Sinking Barges and Yachts—Great Damage to Oyster Beds and Fisheries In Chesapeake Bay

Washington, Oct. 22.—The season's first touch of winter weather is general east of the Mississippi. Shifting gales which whipped the Middle Atlantic coast and the lake region had hooted their way to sea, leaving crisp, cool areas behind and promises of light snow in some sections.

General frosts touched the south Atlantic region as far down as Florida, and there was freezing weather through the Mississippi and Ohio valleys. Fair, cold weather east of the Mississippi with probable local snows in the lake region is the official forecast. In the North Atlantic states a decided drop of the mercury is expected. Storm warnings have been ordered up from Sandy Hook to Eastport, Me.

During the heavy southeast blow the two-masted schooner Oliver Ames of New York, Captain Nutt, missed stays and ran on the rocks on the easterly side of Indian island, N. B., in Passamaquoddy bay. The vessel was in an upright position and leaking badly when a tug arrived to attempt to float her. The crew landed during the night, but later returned to the vessel. The schooner was bound from St. John to Lubec with four hundred tons of salt.

The gale worked havoc on the Hancock county coast. Many small fishing boats were blown ashore, and lobster cars and weirs were wrecked. The loss will run well into the thousands, it was estimated. Many wires were reported down all through the Ellsworth section.

A vessel in distress was sighted off New London, Conn., by Captain Grey of the Colonial line steamer Lexington, which arrived here from New Yor. Captain Grey reported that he had to put into New London on account of the storm, and that going in he saw rockets being fired from a vessel in the sound. He notified a wrecking company and the tug Tasco went out to the assistance of the craft.

A high wind storm that swept over the Connecticut shore cost one life, and did much damage to small craft. Russell B. Young, aged 10, was drowned despite an heroic effort at rescue by his father. Several yachts were washed ashore. At New London, the sea was said to be the highest in five years and the steamer Commonwealth did not venture from the harbor.

Estimates of damage by shifting gales which swept the Virginia coast place the losses as low as $40,000. A government ammunition barge with $50,000 worth of ammunition aboard, reported sunk, is safe at the navy yard. The steamer Tordenskjold is at drydock for repairs after a collision with a barge, as is the steamer Sturton. The Lucigen, also in collision, but little damaged, proceeded to England.

One of the worst wind and rain storms ever experienced on the eastern shores of Maryland tied up lower Chesapeake bay traffic. At Crisfield water was two feet deep in the principal streets and still rising, and fishing boats in the harbor were reported being beaten to pieces. Other towns on tributaries of the Chesapeake bay reported floods. Great damage to oyster and fish industries will result.

OREGON TO LEAD FLEET

Will Be at Head of International Fleet Through Canal

Washington, Oct. 22.—Secretary Daniels formally announced that the historic battleship Oregon, which made the famous trip around Cape Horn in the early days of the Spanish war, will lead the great international fleet through the Panama canal when the waterway is formally opened in 1915.

While plans for the event have not yet been formulated, Secretary Daniels will be aboard, as also in all probability, will President Wilson. It has been suggested, too, that all surviving officers who served on the Oregon during the 1898 cruise be again at their posts.

Washington, Oct. 22.—Secretary of War Garrison, Mrs. Garrison and Brigadier General Weaver, chief of coast artillery, sailed today for a week in Panama. Garrison will consider proposals for permanent government of the canal.

ROYALTY ATTENDS FUNERAL

Kaiser Joins Mourners Before Coffins of Airship Victims

Berlin, Oct. 22.—Joint funeral services were held over the bodies of twenty-three out of the twenty-eight victims of the disaster to the Zeppelin dirigible airship at Johannisthal on Friday last.

The ceremony took place at noon in the old garrison church near the imperial palace, in the presence of the emperor and his sons, the empress and the crown princess.

Count Zeppelin and about a thousand officers of the army and navy, together with a number of comrades belonging to the flying corps to which the dead men were attached, also attended.

After the service in the church seven of the bodies were taken to an adjoining cemetery for burial, the six sons of the emperor heading the procession of mourners. The others were taken to the late homes of the dead men in various parts of the country.

Prince Eitel Fritz while coming from Potsdam in his automobile to attend the funeral ceremony struck a 5-year-old boy with the wheel of his machine while the child was darting across the street.

RUNS OFF WITH WHISKEY

Three Portland Men Arrested For Robbing Railroad of 300 Gallons

Portland, Me., Oct. 22.—James J. Higgins was arrested here, in company with Frank J. Scully. It is alleged the pair made off with 300 gallons of whiskey consigned to Higgins. John P. Sullivan appeared to bail them out and he was also arrested.

The consignment recently arrived, it is said, from Boston. Three hundred gallons of whiskey is a large shipment, even for Maine. When Higgins went to claim it the railroad officials said the proper papers had not arrived and refused to give it up. It is alleged that Higgins took away his own whiskey during the night without waiting for the usual railroad formalities.

"SLAIN" WIFE ASKS FOR A DIVORCE

One of Spencer's Confessions Is Proven False

New York, Oct. 22.—Mrs. Nellie K. Spencer, wife of Henry Spencer of Chicago, the self-confessing murderer, brought suit for the annulment of her marriage to Spencer on Sept. 10, 1903. Spencer told the Chicago police she was one of the many women he had slain.

According to the murderer's discredited confession, he met Miss Koenig at the Martha Washington hotel here when she was employed by Helen Gould, married her after a three days' courtship, took her to Fort Montgomery, N. Y., four months later, and killed her with a hammer.

Mrs. Spencer says the only true part of the story was that he first met her at the Martha Washington hotel. She was married to Spencer after an acquaintance of four months, she charges, and he deserted her three days afterwards, taking with him $110 of her savings.

ONE MAN DYING

Electric Car In Manchester, N. H., Struck on Grade Crossing

Manchester, N. H., Oct. 22.—James Dowd, a liquor dealer, received injuries from which he is dying and three other persons were hurt seriously in a collision between a trolley car and a Boston and Maine freight train near the Elliot silk mill in East Manchester.

Dowd was hurled from the rear vestibule of the car and struck his head against a pole at the roadside, fifteen feet distant.

The car, carrying 35 passengers, was crossing a railroad track at a grade crossing where there is no gateman to hold up traffic, when an extra freight from Portsmouth struck it. The rear platform was demolished despite the steel construction of the car.

Vice President Hills expressed his appreciation of offers made by other local banks to assist the Traders' with loans. He did not say, however, whether any of these offers had been accepted. The bank is still in charge of Examiner Bean.

RAPID PROGRESS IS BEING MADE

Government Calls Eaton Neighbors to Witness Stand

NEVER SAW SIGNS OF LIQUOR

Admiral Was Planning Trip to Panama to See Completed Canal—Made Survey Across Isthmus In 1871—Mrs. Eaton's Trap to Find "Poison Cache" Failed of Results

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 22.—Rapid progress in the taking of testimony was made in the Eaton trial yesterday. The government called to the witness stand a number of neighbors of the Eaton family at Assinippi to tell what they knew of conditions in the household prior to the death of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, with whose murder his wife, Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, is charged.

The sun shone into the court room for the first time since the trial began a week ago. The spectators were fewer and, as usual, women predominated. Mrs. Charles M. Hilt, who lived near the Eatons at Assinippi, testified to conversations with Mrs. Eaton in which the defendant had said that the admiral was deranged and that she feared he would poison her mother.

Mrs. Eaton had told the witness in detail of the illness and death of Admiral Eaton and subsequently had said to her: "It is too bad the admiral died. If he had lived two or three years longer we could have gone to Europe." Admiral Eaton and his wife always appeared friendly, Mrs. Hilt said when cross-examined.

Another neighbor, Mrs. William Magoun, told the court of a strange preparation which Mrs. Eaton said the admiral had mixed for June, a daughter of Mrs. Eaton by a former marriage. The mixture, according to the witness' remembrance of what Mrs. Eaton had told her, contained soap, vinegar and either pepper or salt. This testimony caused Mrs. Eaton to smile.

Mrs. Magoun said she never saw any traces of insanity about the admiral. A Rockland tradesman, Charles E. Rice, testified to Mrs. Eaton's frequent airing of family troubles. Mrs. Abbie C. Cottrell of Hingham, who kept house for the Eatons for a time when Mrs. Eaton was not living with the admiral testified that she had never seen any signs of use of liquor by the admiral nor any indication that he was of unsound mind.

A month before his death Admiral Eaton was planning to take Mrs. Eaton with him on a trip to Panama, according to Samuel W. Baker, a Rockland opticion. Baker testified that in February last the admiral told him that in 1871, acting under commission from President Grant, he had made a survey for a canal route across the isthmus, and that he looked with pleasure to the trip that he and Mrs. Eaton were to take to see the completed cut. Baker also said that Mrs. Eaton had asked him to assist her in having the admiral committed to an insane asylum. She complained to the witness that her husband was dabbling in poisons and drugs and she feared he would cause the death of members of the household.

Frank L. Booth of Rockland said that Mrs. Eaton had told him her husband was trying to poison her, and that although she sprinkled talcum on the stairs she was unable to track him to the place where he concealed his drugs.

Frank S. Alger, a newspaper man of Rockland, told of several conversations with Mrs. Eaton. On the night that Professor Whitney of the Harvard medical school reported that the adopted son of the Eatons had died from natural causes and not by the administration of poison, Alger carried the news to the Eaton home. When he told of the chemist's finding Mrs. Eaton remarked in the admiral's presence, "There must be some mistake!"

At another time the admiral told of his objection to having June in the household because of a story she had circulated about him. Alger said that he did not consider Admiral Eaton insane.

ATTITUDE UNCHANGED

Ambassador Tells of British Policy Regarding Mexico

Washington, Oct. 22.—Dispatches were received at the state department from Ambassador Page describing in detail his conference with Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign minister, concerning the attitude of Great Britain in Mexico.

The position of the British foreign office was explained by the ambassador substantially as indicated in the press dispatches from London.

The American government, it is known, is not entirely pleased with the British governments policy, being particularly disappointed by the declaration of Sir Edward Grey that nothing thus far had occurred in Mexico to change the British view that recognition of Huerta was the correct policy.

Accuser Is Arrested

Zigzag Trail

It Was Difficult, but He Conquered It

By CLARISSA MACKIE

She came out of Cox's store, got on her pony and went a-kiting for the west bank of the crick. I followed her a little ways, thinking she was a tenderfoot, and I'll be blamed if she didn't turn spang into Zigzag trail and disappear!"

Hamp Tetlow looked around at his companions gathered about the mess table in the bunk house at the Twin Star ranch.

"Zigzag trail, eh?" repeated Jink Prole, helping himself to another hot biscuit.

"Yes."

"Have you ever traveled that devious route?" pursued Jink in his deliberate way.

"No, but I've heard tell that since the landslide there ain't footing there for man or beast."

"No more there ain't," returned Jink, buttering his ninth hot biscuit. "That's why I reckoned you was dreaming when you said you saw a girl and pony disappear down the trail."

"It was bright moonlight and I saw her plain as day," returned Hamp, undisturbed by Jink's skepticism. "Besides, I went back to the store and asked Dan Cox who she was."

"And who is she?" demanded a dozen eager voices.

"Dan said he didn't know; said she never asked for mail, and that, although she bought plenty of supplies from him, he didn't know any more about her than he did at first. Been around these parts about four weeks, Dan says."

Hamp Tetlow might have continued to discourse upon his chance encounter with the strange girl, but his companions were more interested in discussing the approaching roundup than listening to him.

Perhaps he would have risked their ridicule and described the singular beauty of the girl, but he had little desire to talk to empty air and presently forgot the stranger.

"HANDS UP!" CAME A SHARP VOICE.

One man among those at the table listened to Hamp's story, and because he was new to the country Bob Deering asked questions about Zigzag trail.

Jink Prole answered the questions readily and went so far as to tell the newcomer that somewhere along the abandoned trail was the tumbledown cottage of a sheep herder, who had left the country at the time when cattle had crowded the sheep from the ranges.

The next day Bob Deering was sent in search of a lost steer.

His search led him down the west bank of Red Spider creek, and eventually he came to the point where there were traces of an old trail that zigzagged down the canyon and disappeared in a heap of broken rocks and earth.

"Zigzag trail!" he exclaimed, bending down to examine the grass grown way.

His ten years of cattle ranching since college days had made the signs of earth and sky as an open book to him.

For the trained eye there was much to be read in the old trail.

"The lost critter went this way," mused Bob, "and the girl goes this way too. Why? There isn't a blamed thing on this trail except the hut—I have Jink's word for that—so the girl must have been bound for the hut.

"I scent a mystery, and, as duty calls me to hunt for the stray critter, here goes!"

Bob Deering left his horse and scrambled along the trail that zigzagged among the rocks in the most puzzling manner. So intricate were its windings that Bob presently found himself scrambling on to the main trail again and staring his horse in the face.

"Daniel, if you laugh at me I'll sell you to a soap factory!" panted Bob as Daniel resumed his nipping of the wayside grass. "I've certainly got to get on to the right trail if it takes me all day. I missed a turn somewhere."

Bob turned about and once more scrambled along the trail. At an egg shaped rock he paused and studied the ground, and then, plunging through a thicket of mesquite, he found himself on a well worn trail that circled the shoulder of the hill and gradually led upward.

Occasionally he stooped to study the ground, and each pause only strengthened his belief that he was on the right trail of the lost steer.

"Hands up!" came a sharp voice, and instinctively Bob's hands went over his head with quick discretion.

When he could discover the source of the unexpected holdup on Zigzag trail Bob found himself confronting a beautiful dark eyed young woman, who leveled a pistol at him with each steady hand.

She was the most beautiful creature he had ever seen; Bob was sure of that—jet black hair waving about shell pink ears, creamy skin, a pair of wonderful eyes, sometimes black, occasionally almost green. She wore a riding skirt of khaki and a white shirt waist. Her head was bare.

"Well," asked Bob pleasantly, "is it my money or my life?"

The girl laughed nervously, and then tears filled her eyes.

"It's neither one, if you will only go away," she answered in a pleading tone.

"Of course, if you wish it, only I am looking for a stray steer. Perhaps you have seen such a one. It has the twin star brand"—

He stopped short, for the girl's face had turned scarlet and then white. The hands that held the guns wavered.

"I've seen it," she said at last in a rather shaky voice.

"Where is it?" he asked quickly.

The girl's face went very white, and she leaned against a tree for support, the pistols hanging limply from her hands.

"It's—dead!" she said at last.

"Dead?" he echoed, puzzled by her agitation.

"We killed it. We needed it for food. I suppose we will hang for it," she said, with a desperate attempt at calmness, although Bob could see that she was panic stricken.

He sat down on a stone and clasped his sun browned hands around his knee. His broad hat lay on the ground, and the wind ruffled his crisp, fair hair.

"I hope you will pardon me. I'm not a bit curious, but I can see that you are in trouble of some sort. This is a lonesome country to be in when old man Trouble hikes along, so perhaps I can help you out. You may place perfect confidence in me."

The girl studied his face with her wonderful, changing eyes. Then, with a little catch of the breath, she said:

"If I tell you you must never betray my confidence."

"You may trust me," said Bob.

The girl drew a sharp breath.

"My father lies hidden in the hut yonder. He is a fugitive from justice. He killed a man. I came with him!"

Bob smothered an exclamation.

"What can I do to help you?" he asked quickly.

"Keep every one away and help me to get some supplies. Father is almost crazy with grief and remorse, and he is anxious to return and give himself up; but," she ended fiercely, "I have told him he must not—now! In the eyes of God he is innocent, and he should not be punished!"

"Thank you for the confidence you repose in me. I will do what I can to keep others away. Give me a list of things you need, and I will pack them here tonight."

Fifteen minutes later Bob Deering mounted his patient horse and sped about his business for the Red Star ranch.

After supper that night he rode over to Red Spider postoffice and astonished Dan Cox by purchasing a large quantity of supplies, including some fine cigars and a number of magazines and newspapers.

Bob read the papers while he waited for his packages, and when he finally turned into the trail along the creek his face was a study of mingled pleasure and regret.

The trip along Zigzag trail in the moonlight, with his supplies for the needy strangers, was no easy matter, and Bob was quite breathless when he reached the sheep herder's hut.

"Good news, Miss Greyson," he said after he had received her thanks and those of her aged, careworn father.

"Good news for us?" she asked incredulously.

He nodded and, pulling a newspaper from his pocket, held it to the light streaming from the doorway and read a paragraph that turned the current of their lives.

It appeared that the man whom James Greyson had struck in self defense had recovered and every effort was being made to discover the whereabouts of the missing financier and his beautiful daughter.

Bob Deering shared in their rejoicing, and it was he who helped them get away.

When they parted James Greyson held the young man's hand in his.

"The best ranch in the country for you whenever you say the word, Deering. Maybe you'll be getting married some day and settle down."

"Maybe," said Bob dreamily, for he was holding Helen's hand in his. "Maybe"—

His eyes met the splendid ones of the girl he had learned to love, and he read in them that there was no uncertainty before him.

He would be married some day, and to her!

And Hamp Tetlow never guessed why it was that Bob Deering nicknamed him "Cupid."

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

I leaped down and then turned to help my little mistress. She was very white, and I thought she was going to faint. I don't blame her, the scene was so terrible. I acted promptly. I reached up and took her in my arms and carried her as if she had been a baby, and, indeed, she was no great burden for me. Her head dropped to my shoulder. I didn't know whether she had fainted or not. Her eyes were closed. I ran swiftly across the inclosure, descended the steps and without hesitation turned to the edge of the cliff. I stopped there, cursing myself for not having brought any water, but as I stopped she opened her eyes.

"You are safe," said I gently. "The horrors are all behind us. See, there is before you naught but the beautiful greenery of the island, and"—

An expression of gratitude came across her face.

"Let us go down," she replied. "We must never come near here again."

"Please God, no," I repeated as we retraced our steps down the cliff and along the winding path, Mistress Lucy gaining strength and color as we passed out of sight of the hideous platform.

It was necessary to go back along the path to the foot of the stairs. There were savannas here and there in the way where we rested and a lovely brook of cool, delicious water, where we broke our fast, though it was not yet noon, but the openings all stopped before they reached the foot of the wall which was almost hidden in vegetation. I remembered the paths which had led off on either side from the stairs too. We followed one of them easily.

The wall to our left was dotted with openings to caves, but none of them seemed to fit the description we carried in our memories. The undergrowth deepened and grew denser as we progressed, and finally I had to open a way with my ax. The tangled masses soon gave way before my sturdy energy, and we entered a little clearing which extended to the wall. There above us were the three openings beneath the depression in the crest sure enough, the one in the middle being greater than the others, the entrance high enough to admit me, who am much above the usual stature, without bending my head. It was elevated half way up the surface of the cliff, and approach to it was by a pile of stones, not laid with the order and regularity of the giant stairs, but apparently piled together haphazard by people unskilled to make any other practical way of ascent.

It was difficult enough for us to climb as it was. The heap of stones evidently had not been mounted for years, and the stones had broken and fallen away in many places. Indeed I had to rebuild the pile here and there.

When after arduous labor I peered within the cave I could see nothing but the blackness. When we left the ship we had taken a lantern and a few candles. I had brought the lantern with me that day. We now lighted it with the flint and steel and tinder and stepped silently in. My lady followed me close, being, as she had said, unwilling to be left alone and ever ready to face any peril in my company.

Above the low entrance the cave wall rose to a height of perhaps twenty feet, making a vast vaulted chamber with gothic suggestions about it, for the coral before it hardened had been built into curious shapes and fantastic figures. We didn't notice this so much at first, for with a wild shriek, my gentle companion suddenly caught my arm and pointed downward.

The floor, like that of the central altar, was covered with human bones, a grewsome sight for any one and certainly for a woman, and made more grewsome because of the dull lighting of the cave. The bones were bleached white also and had evidently been there a long time. We could scarcely take a step without treading upon them. I had all I could do to keep my mistress from running back toward the mouth and thence to the ground, and it was not until I had reassured her that she would consent to go on.

As we had been compelled to pass on by our desire to get our bearings before, so if we were to get the treasure we would have to suffer this now. She summoned her courage and we went on.

As our eyes became accustomed to the light, for, indeed, the candle lantern cast but a dim radiance over the vast apartment, the entrance was so small that little daylight came through, we saw the same kind of altar, built of the same stones as on the hill, though much smaller. Bones of human beings, men, women and children, I judged from the difference in sizes, lay upon it, and there were heaps of bones on the floor around it. It came across me that it was another altar of sacrifice and that the worshipers had been also eaters of flesh—cannibals!

Turning away from the altar to the right we found the way clear, and, with a sigh of relief, I drew Mistress Lucy reluctantly on. She clung to me and was so frightened that I finally slipped my arm about her waist, whereat she made no objection. She has confessed since that she was indeed greatly pleased and that it was a comfort to her to feel the strength and power of my grasp.

Holding the lantern before me, we cautiously proceeded farther into the cave toward the inner wall. The cave wall opened out into rooms apparently. I didn't dare go any distance from the main entrance for fear that I should lose my way, so I stopped, undecided what to do, which opening to enter, that is.

"Oh, let's go back!" begged my mistress. "There is no treasure here, I am sure."

"Nay," I answered. "With your permission, Mistress Lucy, I intend to explore farther into the matter. Let's see." I held the lantern high above my head as I spoke. There above a certain entrance I saw a rude Latin cross. "Look!" I continued. "Some one has been here. 'Tis the sign of the cross!"

"Yes," she said, her hopes reviving and her spirits returning a little at the sight of that sacred symbol of our faith. "Don't you remember on the map marking the position of the cave there was a little cross?"

"So there was!" I exclaimed, "although the reading did not mention it."

"No, but it is there nevertheless."

I stooped down—the entrance was scarcely three feet high, but quite broad—and made to go through.

"Wait!" She seized me in great alarm. "You can't go there and leave me here!" she cried.

"I promise you that I will not stir three feet from the entrance if you will suffer me that far," I answered.

"I must come, too, then," she urged.

"I will see what is there first, and if it is safe you shall come with me," I answered.

As I spoke I crawled through and found myself in another smaller chamber. There being no danger, I stretched out my hand to her and brought her through after me. From some distant crevice the air came to us. We could feel it blow upon us, and it was sweet; also I could hear water babbling over rocks in the distance. It was a little damp in the cave, perhaps because of that. There was little light, however, save that cast by the lantern. I could not see the farther wall.

CHAPTER XIV.

In Which We Find the Treasure and Are Attacked.

We did not need to go further into the cave, for there before us lay a number of large wooden boxes or chests, moldy and ancient. The boxes had once been iron strapped, but the iron had rusted and the wood had rotted, I found. I stepped over to one of them, lifted the lid, which crumbled at my touch, and there was the treasure—ingots of gold and silver! Thousands of pounds lay to our hands! The old buccaneer had told the truth. The story of the parchment was not a romance; the plunder of the ancient galleon was there. For my part I would gladly have exchanged it all for a stout boat and a clear passage through the reef, with a chance for freedom.

"Well, your great-great-great-grandfather, for how many generations back I know not, was right," I said at last. "The treasure is here and we have found it. It is yours."

"Yes," she said, to whom the same thought had come, "but now that we have found it of what value or use is it?"

"None," I admitted, "that I can see."

"And what may be its value, think you?"

"It would make good ballast for a ship," I answered lightly.

"But if we could take it hence to England!"

"Millions I can only guess."

"I will give you one-half of it for your share," she said, laughing softly.

"I want none of it," I returned seriously enough.

What possessed her to do it I know not, and she since confessed she knows not either. We stood there, looking down upon the useless treasure, when she turned to me on a sudden.

"Now that you have seen it are you still of the same mind," she said mischievously, "that you would give up your portion of the treasure—for me?"

"Great God!" I cried, moved beyond measure by her imprudent remark and thrown off my balance by her dare I say—coquetry, "I would give up the world itself for you. Don't you know it?"

Thousands of Pounds Lay to Our Hands.

And I made a step toward her, but she put up her hand.

"Hush, hush, Master Hampdon!" she cried, affrighted at the consequences of her pleasantry, and I could swear she turned crimson in the candlelight. "'Tis not time or place now. Remember that I am alone and that I am at your mercy."

"I shall never forget that again," I said grimly. "This treasure removes you further away from me than ever."

"What mean you?"

"When you get back to England and take your place once more among your friends in that society to which your birth entitles you and which this wealth will enable you to sustain"—

"And who is to take me back to England?"

"I."

"How?"

"I know not, but I shall do it."

"And with the treasure?"

"With the treasure, too; at least a sufficiency o' it for all your needs."

"And when you have done this amazing thing for me you expect to disappear from my life, Master Hampdon?"

"Aye, if need be."

She laughed and I did not understand the meaning of that laugh either.

"Let us search and see if there be anything else. Your ancestor spoke of jewels," he said.

"Yes," she said, "there should be a smaller casket. Let us look further."

MIDNIGHT CAR FOR SQUANTUM

There was rejoicing in Squantum and Atlantic today when it became known that the Bay State railway had put on a 11.30 car from Neponset to Atlantic and Squantum nightly except Sunday. For the past year a car had been run only on Wednesday and Saturday nights. This made it necessary for Squantum people who wished at attend theatres or late performances in Boston to have their entertainment only on Wednesday and Saturday nights. Now they can attend theaters every week day night if they wish.

This added accommodation from the Bay State street railway was the result of an extended conference of representatives of the Squantum Improvement association and the Atlantic Improvement association with Superintendent Gammons of the Bay State street railway. This conference was recently held in Squantum and almost an entire evening was taken up in going over the street car traffic situation with Mr. Gammons. The first thing done was the addition of a High school car for Squantum and Atlantic pupils. Now follows the late car. Squantum and Atlantic people are taking off their hats to Superintendent Gammons as a man who realizes the needs of the community and is willing to do his share in aiding them in getting these needs.

Miss Louise Schultz of Squantum has been entertaining Miss Hickle of Worcester.

FIRST PARISH CLUB

ple on both sides all remember that day.

The speaker then referred to the second Revolution, which was started because some of the people who expected nice positions did not get them. When this second Revolution was put down the rebels fled.

The election came Oct. 6 and a president was elected for five years. The president has a strong cabinet and his prime Minister is a man of forcible mind.

He then spoke of the coming economic and industrial development. China wants money to develop. He then spoke of the prevailing prices for articles in the different parts of the country showing them to be of great variance, for in one place a penny would buy seven eggs, not the cold storage kind however.

Another great problem of China was its transportation. Contrasting his country with America, where the people were so united that if a New York bank fails it effects the whole country, so China therefore must build railroads and introduce modern manufacturing enterprises. We lack your factory system although we have the men and the goods.

He also spoke of the social problem of China and how it must develop along these lines. In China no child was expected to disobey his parents. Boys have no minds of their own, and that is why we do not find our young men progressive, for their natural instincts have been suppressed. In your country they say of the young men they know it all, and they have the push that our nation has not. He also spoke of the marriage custom where the marriages were arranged by the parents often when the boys and girls were so young that they did not understand. The bettering of these conditions has become a grave problem.

In speaking of the religious problem, the speaker said that many of his people were very superstitious and their religion was not a religion from a modern sense. So our President gives his personal support to the young mens christian movement, for he believes in the physical, moral and religious development of young men.

He then spoke of the young men that were being educated in the colleges of this country who return to work for their fellow men. This is what the American institutions are teaching us. So these students feel grateful for their education. There are over 400,000,000 souls to be reached, so China is a country worth working and living for.

At the close of his address he was given an outburst of applause, showing how much his hearers had enjoyed his address. Dr. Hudson then spoke briefly of one of the other guests of the evening, Gen. John E. Black, who however begged to be excused from speaking.

As Dr. Hudson concluded his introduction of the well known General, the club rose as one man and gave him a most unusual greeting, which caused the General to rise in his seat and acknowledge the reception with a bow. The reception accorded him left no doubt of the deep regard the club held for their guest and that they regretted his health prevented his addressing them.

Col. Anderson however in his inimitable way spoke briefly of Gen. Black paying a glowing tribute to this gallant soldier. He also referred to the speaker of the evening, saying that he was surprised at his vocabulary and that he could not understand such progress.

T. King asked about what China was doing to put down the opium traffic, and the speaker told how popular sentiment was working in this direction by stopping the raising of the herb.

In reply to a question by Rev. Mr. Martin, the speaker told of the Chinese language and writings, and also spoke of the need of a universal alphabet to simplify their language. What we write said the speaker is different from what we state. We all learn to write like Shakespeare. It is very difficult to simplify. The adoption of an alphabet is necessary.

Gen. Black asked the speaker how the nation had for 25 years prepared itself for the revolution and the speaker in detail told how men of education had by agitation aroused the people.

In closing the evening Dr. Hudson announced that the the next meeting the speaker would be J. F. Paige who would speak on Japan.

FUNERAL OF MRS. COLLINS

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Collins, widow of James Collins was held this morning from her home at 99 South street. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor. Monsignor Ambrose F. Roche of Watertown, a life-long friend was on the altar.

The Gregorian chant was sung by the regular choir under the direction of John Mahon, organist. Miss Eva Rice sang Pie Jesu at the offertory and Mrs. Mary Burns King sang De Profundis at the libera.

The attendance was large, many long time residents of the city being among those present. Although it was the wish of the family that flowers be omitted several handsome tributes lay on the casket.

The bearers were Michael J. O'Hara, William A. Carey, Alfred W. Goodhue, David Dhooge, Thomas W. Butler and Dennis Behan. Burial was in the family lot in St. Mary's cemetery.

THAT CAUCUS AT SQUANTUM

Editor Daily Ledger:

On September 25, a preliminary caucus was held at the Vacation House in Squantum. All known voters were present, with the exception of three. Hiram A. Morse was asked to call the names of the voters from the voting list of Ward Six who resided in Squantum. John R. Nelson verified it by reading from a similar voting list of Ward Six.

The meeting was organized by electing a president, vice president and secretary by ballots.

Then John R. Nelson and C. E. Carlson were proposed as candidates for the City Council for the coming election.

The voting list was scrutinized again and Mr. Nelson declared that he was ready to abide by the majority vote of that meeting.

The ballots were then given out and each voter was called from the voting list to walk up to the president's table and deposit his vote, one by one. Three tellers were appointed to count the votes, which were announced 23 in favor of C. E. Carlson, 15 for John R. Nelson and 2 blanks.

Then the presiding officer asked all those who were satisfied with the result of the meeting and wished to become members of the Squantum Political club to step forward and sign their names. Forty signatures were obtained without any further discussion.

Now, it appears that Mr. Neyson did not abide by the decision of said meeting; but has filed his nomination papers, claiming that 33 voters in Squantum have endorsed his candidacy.

To us it seems that all promises should be kept, even if they are political. And, we know for facts that a great many of the names published by Mr. Nelson in last night's Ledger were told that they had a right to sign as many papers as there were candidates to be voted for in Ward Six and on such representations the bulk of the names were received on Mr. Nelson's nomination papers in Squantum.

Any one interested to see the genuine handwriting of every voter, including Mr. Nelson, in Squantum, who was present at the above mentioned meeting, is invited to call on me for verification.

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. CONTAGIOUS HOSPITAL IS ADVOCATED

Should Be Built to Provide For Tuberculosis Patients

State Law Said to Require Such Institutions

A public conference was held in the Council Chamber at City Hall Wednesday afternoon under the auspices of the Philanthropic Committee of the Quincy Women's Club to discuss the subject of a contagious hospital for Quincy. There was a large attendance of ladies and several physicians among those present. From 3.30 to 4 o'clock there was an executive meeting of the committee at which reports were heard from several members of the work of the committee.

A 4 o'clock the meeting was opened to the public and there was a discussion of the needs of a hospital for contagious diseases in Quincy. At this meeting Dr. N. S. Hunting presided and in opening he spoke at length on the work of the Tuberculosis hospital at Mt. Pleasant which was established by the Tuberculosis Association.

The camp was built as an experiment and up to the present time it had cared for thirty patients. The first idea was to have a day and night camp. A day camp where patients could go during the day and receive treatment and instruction. The day camp however did not seem to be a success. The cases taken at the camp were the bad cases which could not be cared for as well at home, so that the home might be protected.

The city is paying the camp for the care of its patients at the rate of $8 a week which is hardly sufficient, the balance being made up by subscription. The association is now in need of funds to carry on its work and some things are lacking to strictly comply with the requirements of the State Board of Health. There is some question if it is desirable to make these changes or move the camp to a new location.

Chairman Teasdale of the Board of Health spoke briefly as to the law regarding the care of contagious patients, and the new law requiring cities to erect a contagious hospital. There was a fine of $500 for non compliance with this law. We have to take many of our cases out of town at a cost of $10 a week.

Dr. Jones secretary of the Board of Health, said that he was glad to see the enthusiasm that was being shown for a contagious hospital. To build a contagious hospital such as required in Quincy would cost from $40,000 to $50,000 outside of the land, which had been given by Henry M. Faxon. This was a serious question owing to the financial condition of the city. He spoke of the interest that Mayor Stone had taken in the subject and said that the Board had made a thorough study of the hospital question.

The doctor then spoke of the epidemics that Quincy had had and how the cases had been cared for, particular reference being made to the scarlet fever epidemic. He also gave the figures showing the number of cases each year for the past eight years.

Speaking of tuberculosis, he said that is was a very common disease, not easy to detect, and was more dangerous from this reason than most of the contagious diseases. We can not get rid of it until we make it a quarantined disease. There are many of tuberculosis that are not reported to the Board of Health.

He gave figures showing the number of cases reported during the last eight years and the number cared for. These figures showed that while the number reported was growing less, the number cared for was increasing. For instance he said that in 1912, 35 cases were reported and 54 cared for. We want to take care of the advanced cases.

The Board of Health, he said, had made a thorough study of the contagious hospital question, and had visited many hospitals and looked at many sites. Then came the gift of land from Mr. Faxon. The city is now paying the Mt. Pleasant camp about $4,000 a year out of its appropriation of $8,500 for contagious diseases.

The doctor explained briefly the plans that had been made by direction of the Board, which he said would cost from $40,000 to $50,000 to build. The Council at one time was ready to appropriate $30,000 but it was found that it would not be sufficient.

One thing, Dr. Jones emphasized, was the need of a paid physician to the Board of Health who could devote all of his time to the duties of the position and could visit every case of contagious diseases in the city, and in this way the Board could better keep in touch with the cases.

In some places he said that the contagious hospital was built in connection with the regular hospital. This had been taken up in Quincy but the trustees of our hospital did not seem to take kindly to the plan.

In reply to Dr. Jones, Dr. Hunting said that the reason the hospital trustees did not take kindly to the proposition for a contagious hospital on the grounds of the City Hospital, was that it would make a division of responsibility, or rather that it would be a complicated situation to have buildings owned by the city situated on land of the corporation. Then there was a question of what the city should pay to the City Hospital.

Dr. Harry Linenthal of the State Board of Health said that he was glad to see the general interest being taken in the subject of a contagious hospital. He had found that the expense was the great drawback. It needs a calamity in a city to arouse the citizens to act, and then they will not hesitate to make the necessary expenditure of money. The whole question has not been sufficiently agitated as yet. And this is what it needs to enable the Board of Health to do its work.

Rejoicing Over Completion of Addition to Chapel

At a large "Home gathering social" the members and friends of the Wollaston Baptist church gathered in the enlarged chapel, Wednesday evening, to rejoice in the good fortune that was theirs and review the beginnings of the church.

The meeting opened for the first time the increased accommodation, and that the added facilities were imperative was evidenced by the fact that the crowd of 311 that gathered could not possibly have been served at one time in the original quarters.

Following the blessing by Rev. C. C. Tilley those present sat down to an excellent repast prepared by the ladies and served by the young people of the church under the direction of Mrs. Edward J. Badger.

Rev. Joseph Walther opened the evening's program with an inspirational discourse in which he called attention to the splendid opportunities that lay before the church. "The time has not come," he said, "when we can say "We have done our work, let others take it up. We are in the prime of life." A piano solo was effectively rendered by Mrs. Charles M. Roach.

"Things as they used to be" an historical perspective of the beginnings of Wollaston was given by George F. Pinkham, who was one of the first residents of Wollaston Heights and in whose house the Wollaston Baptist church was organized.

"It was way back in April of 1869," said Mr. Pinkham, that I had my attention called to 200 acres of land along what was then the Old Colony and Newport Railroad, that could be bought for so small a sum I was frightened.

In August I had a chance through Mr. Beale to be one of a syndicate of eight men to buy the whole tract. I refused at the time but later came out to Wollaston.

The view from these hills impressed me so that I paid $3000 for a share in the syndicate that I could have had before for $1,500.

"Beale street was then a narrow lane leading from Hancock to Adams street and we got into the property by letting down the bars near the Dr. Record property.

"The Wollaston hills had hardly a tree and they were just a big cow pasture. They looked like barren hills upon which nothing could be raised but when we saw the view of the ocean and islands from the top and the surrounding hills I said to my wife, 'Nell, what do you say?' 'We'll move here,' she replied, 'as soon as you can build a house and we will have it right here.'

"So I joined the Wollaston Land Association and early the next spring plans were made and engineering work done for the development of the property. By April or May 300 trees had been set out on the streets.

"I had a good deal to do with the work and had a ploughshare lay out the streets on the Hill some 50 or 60 feet wide. I wanted wide streets where I lived. The Plain was another matter to be thought of afterwards.

"I was elected chairman of the board of trustees and manager of the property. As such I had the naming and locating of all the streets.

"There was then but one house on the west of the railroad between the Adams mansion on Adams street and Squantum street. That was the house of George W. B. Taylor, still standing on Newport avenue near Lincoln avenue.

On July 4, 1870 we had a big open-

Mrs. Pankhurst will find sentiment in this country against window smashing, but she might go out with the other kids Hallowe'en and remove some gates and window blinds.

Mr. McCall, Tammany candidate for mayor of New York, calls a lot of the New York newspaper men "cowards," but so far he has not called around to see the fighting eidtor.

Mrs. Pankhurst gets $1500 for a lecture, and if she would throw in a good satisfactory job of window smashing probably she could get double that fee.

It is claimed that the Volturno had defective lifeboats and fire hose. Steamship inspectors should realize that these articles have uses other than to make the passengers feel safer.

Aigrettes are still popular, although they mean suffering to the mother bird and the possessor can also boast that the customs officers have been outwitted.

President Huerta hasn't decided whether his trousers or his vest pocket shall be the ballot box for the Mexican election.

THE FIRE ON THE HEARTH.

A great many houses are still built, even in cold climates, without provision for the open fireplace. The gas-log is a favorite sham substitute in city life, put in by many people who are too indolent to carry a wood basket up stairs.

Recent years have shown a growing appreciation of the charm of the fire on the open hearth. An increasing number of houses make this provision for heat when conditions do not call for hotter fires. Probably no feature of home life is so effective in starting friendly conversation.

One reason why so little interesting talk is heard is that people are full of the strain and fret of a hurried life. Let a circle of neighbors and friends gather about the hearth fire on a cool autumn night, and they forget their irritations in the fascination of watching the dancing flames. Under these conditions, trains of reflection and reminiscence are started that lead to sparkling interchange of thought.

MODERN HEROISM.

It is often said that the growing scarcity of war is turning people into soft bodied shopkeepers, who are losing the gift of physical courage. The story of the Volturno disaster is one of many indications, showing that there are plenty of men and women still capable of heroic action. When those life boats approached the fated ship in a violently pitching sea, the men took all kinds of chances of being shipwrecked against the side of the burning vessel.

This may be a sordid age of buying and selling. But every newspaper brings tidings of some man who has plunged into a burning mine, penetrated a gassy sewer, dived under docks, in order to rescue persons in peril. The records of the life saving service in one recent year show 4089 persons in imminent peril through shipwreck, of whom all but 27 were saved by the heroic storm fighters.

Every day people enter hospitals with white faces and set teeth, with little word of complaint or faltering, for critical operations which they know may be fatal. Millions of people are carrying around with them diseases which they know constitute a death warrant.

People know too much about their interior workings and face death cheerily for years with a stout heart. The happy-go-lucky doctoring of former days did not save life so long, but it left people in a happier unconcern about their fate.

So modern life brings its specters that are just as fearsome as the incessant warfare of yore. That human courage still persists is shown by such catastrophes as the Titanic and Volturno disasters. Cowardice appears here and there. But probably when the much vaunted colonists of earlier days were fighting Indians so merrily, they left at home a vast body of poltroons who had no stomach for battle.

ELLIOTT NOW IS CHAIRMAN

DIRECTORS CHANGE BY-LAWS

Stockholders, In Lively Debate, Fail to Approve Acts and Recommendations of Directors — Ex-President Mellen Will Not Receive Salary From Road

New Haven, Oct. 23.—Opposition to commending the board of directors for its acts was the chief cause of a protracted annual meeting of the stockholders of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company, held here, with President Howard Elliott presiding.

After more than two hours' debate, which at times was very lively, that part of the first item of business which read: "To approve the acts and recommendations of the board of directors," was stricken out, and the proceedings then progressed with little further controversy.

A statement by Samuel Davis of Stonington that former President Mellen was to draw $30,000 a year for five years for services brought out a statement from Elliott that Mellen would receive nothing for his services, as he had absolutely declined to accept anything.

The chief change in the by-laws was that creating the office of chairman of the board of directors, which in effect gives each of the subsidiary properties of the New Haven system its own president and directorate with Elliott chairman of the board of directors, to direct the policies of the whole while the properties themselves are each under its own executive.

In accord with the change in the by-laws, the directors later met, when Elliott resigned as president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, to become chairman of the board, and Vice President J. H. Hustis was elected president of the road.

Before the meeting closed President Elliott thanked the stockholders for their interest in attending the meeting and made a plea for sympathetic co-operation to the end that the company may speedily be restored to its former prosperity.

"You have a magnificent property," said Mr. Elliott, "but there is no disguising the fact that the directors face a difficult problem. The gross earnings are falling off and the expenses are going up. We hope it will be possible to devise means by which the two ends may be met."

Clarence H. Venner of New York, who had opened the discussion at noon in opposition to approving the directors' acts, rose with a resolution which instructed the directors to take no steps toward issuing and delivery of $67,000,000 in debenture bonds until the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts had passed upon the legality of the issue on the appeal from the order of the public service commission of that state. He said he expected his resolution to be voted down because "the directors controlled the proxies."

The motion to table the Venner resolution and spread it on the minutes was carried and the meeting adjourned.

Senate Desires Assistance of Men Familiar With Movement of Gold

Washington, Oct. 23.—Plans for securing the aid of experts to frame proposed amendments to the administration currency bill were made by the senate banking and currency committee.

Hearings on the bill will be closed formally Saturday, and then consideration of amendments will begin. Other witnesses whom the committee wishes to hear, particularly financiers familiar with the movement of gold between the United States and Europe, who have not been able to attend so far, are to be examined as work on the amendments proceeds.

Dawson, N. M., Oct. 23.—Two hundred and thirty miners were entombed in shaft No. 2 of the Stag Canon mines here when an explosion occurred at the property, according to an unofficial estimate.

Two men found on an upper level were taken from the mine. Rescuers were called from all parts of the southern Colorado coal fields.

The day shift working in shaft No. 2 numbered 230 persons. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

TEXAS TRIALS BEGIN

Newest and Largest of United States Navy Is Expected to Be Fast

Rockland, Me., Oct. 23.—The battleship Texas, the largest of the American sea fighters, dropped anchor in Rockland harbor. She is expected to begin her builders' acceptance trials over the government measured mile course today. The standardization runs will be first in order.

The Texas left Old Point Comfort Monday, commanded by Captain W. G. Melvin and manned by 750 men from the yards of her builders. On the run from Cape Henry to Nantucket she faced a fifty-mile gale and was able, her officers say, to maintain an average speed of over nineteen knots, with a maximum of twenty knots. The Texas is equipped with electric steering gear.

Washington, Oct. 23.—Senator Lewis of Illinois introduced a resolution requiring the United States to "use its good offices" with the Russian government to end the alleged persecution connected with the trial of Mendel Beiliss, charged with having killed a Christian boy to use his blood for religious purposes.

The resolution proposes that the senate direct federal officers to take up the subject with Russia "to the end that the unjust ritual charge against the Jewish people at large, and Mendel Beiliss in particular, be withdrawn and the Jewish people receive the vindication justice requires."

RALPH KEYES IS LAST WITNESS

Prosecution Closes In Eaton Murder Trial

NO TRACE OF POISON PURCHASE

State Took Eight Days to Present Evidence—Expected June Keyes, Elder Daughter of Mrs. Eaton, Will Be Principal Witness For Defence, Which Opens Today

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 23.—The prosecution closed its case in the trial of Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton for the murder of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton yesterday afternoon, and court adjourned for the day. The state has had eight days to present its evidence. The last evidence presented included the admiral's will, a mortgage on the house, and other documents.

The defence opened this afternoon. It is expected that June Keyes will be a principal witness for the defence.

Ralph P. Keyes was the last witness for the state. He is the husband of June Keyes, Mrs. Eaton's daughter. He admitted that after his wedding Mrs. Eaton assisted him financially. Under cross-examination, it was brought out that Mrs. Eaton, on her last visit to his house, had urged June and him not to separate and had tried to reconcile them. She left their home only because the admiral needed her care, Keyes said.

He said Mrs. Eaton and the admiral were apparently happy and on friendly terms. He said he had never heard that Admiral Eaton tried to prevent the separation of himself and June. He said Admiral Eaton gave him a reception at the Algonquin club after their marriage.

Admiral Eaton's will was dated June 30, 1906, and left the buk of his estate to his widow.

The prosecution has been unable to find any evidence that Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton bought arsenic at any time before the death of Admiral Eaton from arsenic poisoning. This was the testimony of State Detective John H. Scott.

Detective Scott said he had searched all over Greater Boston, and even in Georgetown, D. C., and in Alexandria, Va., Mrs. Eaton's birthplace.

An address was also given in the evening by Rev. M. J. Twomey of Portland.

HAS JUST DIED

Coffin Was Ordered For Sick Soldier Fifty-One Years Ago

Utica, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Charles F. Page, 69 years old, and a native of Deansboro, Oneida county, has just died, fifty-one years after his coffin was secured.

Page was a soldier in the Civil war, and was encamped with his regiment, the One Hundred and Seventeenth New York volunteers, at Fort Alexander in the fall of 1862, when he was taken seriously ill.

As one of the quartermasters' teams was going to Washington for supplies, and Page's death seemed imminent, a requisition was made for his coffin.

There was no proper use for the coffin so Lieutenant Colonel Alvin White utilized it as a feed box for his horse in camp. Page some years ago went from his home in this locality to Columbus, N. C., and there he died.

since then has been devoting his time to enlarging his acquaintances among his parishoners.

Born in Sweden on March 24, 1867, he came to this country at an early age. He received his education in the United States and subsequently graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary in 1892. His first work in the ministry was at Batavia, Ill where he remained for three years.

After a stay of 14 years at Sioux City, Iowa, he accepted the call to Quincy. Between his two terms at Sioux City he was pastor at Grand Rapids, Mich.

He is prominently known among the Swedish ministers of the country. He is amember of the Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant and of the Hymnal committee which compiled the hymn books used in the Swedish Congregational churches. He is a forceful preacher. Mrs. Sporrong is also interested in church work.

SCHOOL CENSUS.

The school census which is taken annually in September has been tabulated and the returns filed with the Superintendent of Schools. The returns show that there are in Quincy, 8967 children between the ages of 5 and 15, divided by wards as follows:—Ward One, 1537; Ward Two 1251; Ward Three 2220; Ward Four 1650; Ward Five 1053; Ward Six 1256.

Compared with last year, this represents a total gain of 319, scattered through every ward. Ward Six has a gain of only six children, but shows more shifting about and moving from street to street and in and out of the ward than any other district of the city.

Ward Three leads with a gain of 8[illegible] children; Ward One, gains 72; Ward Four gains 68; Ward Five gains 53 and Ward Two gains 35.

The large gains in Wards Three and Four undoubtedly reflect the gain in Finnish and Italian residents who have been settling in those wards in great numbers. The gain in Ward Four is in contrast to a loss in the same ward last year.

The total gain of 319, compared with a gain of 152 in 1912, and as the gain in school population is a reliable index to the gain in general population it will be seen that the city has increased in population 1,000 to 1,500 during the twelve months.

The figures of the school census in detail will appear in the Daily Ledger of Friday.

THE NEW ADAMS

The news that the Adams school is about ready for occupancy will be received with pleasure by all in that district. Because of the added accommodations that the new school will provide and the overcrowded conditions in the Washington school and in some rooms at the Coddington school it wouldn'a be surprising if the school Committee in arranging the boundaries for the district, should increase the territory served by taking in some streets now in the other districts This will probably be determined by the committee at its next meeting.

PRAISE FOR SCHOOLS.

Those who were present at the last meeting of the Coddington Parents and Teachers' Association heard the speaker, R. O. Small, Deputy Commissioner of Education, give emphatic praise to the Quincy School department for its progressive work in developing its schools on the prevocational and industrial side, characterizing the city as one of the leaders of the state in educational progress.

RICH PROGRAM.

It is doubtful if any School association in the state can produce a programme which will equal that prepared by the Wollaston Association this year. It is needless to say that the meetings will be largely attended and greatly enjoyed.

POSTER WEEK.

The schools will do their part in the way of co-operation with the "Poster Campaign on Alcohol" that is now under way in the city. One or two of the posters, carefully selected for undoubted facts will be exhibited in each school building and copies of Emperor of William's address will be furnished for distribution to the pupils. Beside this copies of pamphlets covering the latest research work on the effects of alcohol will be furnished the teachers.

As only exact facts are stated in any of this material intended for exhibition or distribution the matters contained therein can be discussed with the school children logically and effectively.

EVENING CLASSES.

The class in Gear Design began its sessions at the High school on Monday evening in Room 38 and will continue for a term of 20 nights, meeting on Monday and Friday evenings. George S. Colburn, formerly superintendent at the Boston Gear Works, will be in charge of the class which ensures instruction of high grade and thoroughness.

The number of pupils entering the commercial class at the Evening High school for the purpose of civil service instruction has become so large that a division has been formed especially for such pupils, under the instruction of Mr. Fuller, a teacher in the High school.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a recent meeting of the Parker Round Table, held at the home of H. Forest Wilson, resolutions were unanimously adopted on the death of Henry L. Upton, the beloved master of the Willard school.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

Last Friday evening an illustrated lecture was given in the West Quincy reading room by the Rev. Richard Armstrong. It was a most enjoyable account of life in the Philippine Islands. Many interesting photographs shown by means of the library's opaque projector added greatly to the pleasure in a lecture that was both instructive and delightful.

Saturday, Oct. 18, was the 110th anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Crane, to whose memory our most beautiful library building was erected. The copper vase in the reading room containing a large bunch of beautiful lavender tinted chrysanthemums was placed before the pastel portrait of Mr. Crane which hangs on the north wall facing the doorway of Crane Memorial Hall.

Now that the Public Library is open until 9 o'clock every evening, it is hoped that those who come in to enjoy the newspapers will appreciate the addition of New York Times and the Springfied Republican to the list of local and Boston papers to be found in the newspaper corner by the fireplace.

SUCCESS OF QUINCY SINGER.

The many friends of Mrs. Edith Cary Page, a well known and popular singer of Quincy, were delighted to learn that she has been engaged as soprano soloist in the quartet at the First Church, Malden, which is one of the most desirable church positions around Boston. Mrs. Page was selected from about 30 candidates and won the honor purely on merit, for the beauty of her tone production and her ability as an artistic singer. After leaving the First Church, Braintree, where she has sung for about five years, she received many letters and expressions of regret which showed the respect in which she was held there. Mrs. Page is also engaged to sing at the Porter Congregational church, Brockton, for the month of November.

BIRTHDAY OBSERVED.

Mrs. Amelia H. Carter celebrated her 87th birthday Sunday October 19th at the home of her daughter Mrs. Charles W. Scott, 25 Ellington road, Wollaston. There was a gathering of children and grandchildren, four generations being represented. Friends and neighbors called with flowers and good wishes. Presents, birthday cards and congratulatory telegrams were received. Mrs. Carter is the embodiment of good cheer, and her heart and spirit are as young as ever.

JOHN R. NELSON REPLIES

Argues That He Has the Squantum Endorsement

Editor Quincy Ledger:

During the past month there has appeared in your paper mis-statements and misrepresentations about myself in reference to my candidacy for Councilman from Ward Six. Not seeking notoriety through the press I have ignored same.

In last night's Ledger, however, there appears an article addressed to "Editor Daily Ledger" and signed "Squantum Political club, by Joseph E. Allen, President," which I believe it is my duty to answer, and which answer L will beg your indulgence to print.

The article starts in by saying that "On September 25 a preliminary caucus was held at the Vacation House in Squantum." In the first place the notice sent out for this meeting, which purported to be called for the purpose of organizing a political club, did not have one word or intimation in it about any caucus.

When Mr. Allen further states that "All known voters were present, with the exception of three" it is not a fact. Besides I have a list of thirteen voters who never received any written notice whatever, while others received same on their return home from Boston the night of the meeting and too late to attend. Under such conditions it is hard to see what kind of "voting list of Ward Six" Mr. Allen refers to.

Before the vote referred to, was taken, I openly stated that I would abide by the decision, provided all entitled to vote had been properly notified, which latter clause I repeated at least three times to save any misunderstanding, and I even questioned the chairman, Mr. Allen, as to several that were not present whether they had been notified. He most strongly affirmed they had been, which affirmations were later totally disproved as above stated. Furthermore, I have it on good authority that there were men at that meeting and voting who neither then nor since have become voters and have no legal residence in Squantum.

Is such a caucus worthy the name, and con my opponent take pride in exploiting it through Ward Six?

As to signing names to a blank slip of paper to indicate membership in this club, I and others did so at this meeting simply to preserve our right of protest against irregularities, and there was no mention as to "those who were satisfied with the result of the meeting."

The value of this precaution was well evidenced at meeting No. 2 of this political club. This I also attended and voiced my protest against above mentioned irregularities and underhanded tactics. I also declared then and there that in the interest of decent politics in Squantum I would be and remain a candidate until the finish, which statement resulted in a motion by President Allen that I be expelled from the club as detrimental to candidate Carlson's success.

I will also state that Oct. 8 I wrote to Mr. Carlson urging that a proper caucus be called of all the voters of Squantum, to determine choice of candidate from this section. This he refused to agree to. He has even gone so far as to state that if there were not five voters in Squantum supporting him he would still be a candidate.

Just one more word. President Joseph E. Allen, either wilfully or through ignorance confuses my nomination papers with a separate, unqualified endorsement of myself as the one candidate from Squantum which reads as follows:—

"Quincy, Oct. 11,1913.

"To the Voters of Ward Six:

"We the undersigned registered voters of Squantum do hereby endorse and pledge our support to Mr. John R. Nelson as one of the candidates for Councilmen from Ward 6. We feel that Squantum should have a representative in the City Council this year and urge the voters of Ward Six to stand by Mr. Nelson as our choice from this section."

There are at present 55 voters in Squantum, besides the two candidates and 36 of these voters have signed above endorsement, and there are more to follow. The voters of Squantum—at least those I have seen—are intelligent enough both to read, write and understand, and not one of the 36 signed without knowing first what he signed, and what he signed for. If there is one of these 36 voters dissatisfied with having his name on that paper, all he will have to do is to come to me and it will be taken off.

CONTAGIOUS HOSPITAL

The speaker said that he doubted if the general public understood the good work that the Board of Health had done in the case of a recent epidemic of typhoid fever, and he paid the Board of Health a great compliment on the way in which it had handled this epidemic, saying that in a few hours after the first case had been reported the Board of Health had traced the cause of the cases to milk which came from Connecticut, and how the disease had been prevented from spreading by their prompt work.

If there should be an epidemic of some disease in Quincy there would be no question about the immediate erection of a contagious hospital. We can never estimate in dollars and cents the amount of good done by the Board of Health in the epidemic of typhoid fever mentioned.

The State law now requires that cities provide a contagious hospital for the care of contagious diseases. It is now a proved fact that the main source of the spread of diseases is the patient himself and his environments. Members of his family may be perfectly healthy and still be carriers of the desease. The only way is to isolate these cases.

This does not mean that every case will have to be committed to the hospital for it may be possible to isolate the case at home, but this has been found impossible in the cases of many poor people. A step in this direction will reduce the number of cases and prevent its spread. A hospital alone is not sufficient, but there should be a general supervision over all cases by a paid physician of the Board of Health. No doubt when you have a hospital it will be found that the number of cases is reduced, but that is no reason why you should not have a hospital. That the hospital will be idle during certain seasons of the year is no reason why one should not be erected.

Dr. Linenthal then gave some statistics of cases of diphtheria, scarlet fever, and tuberculosis in Quincy, showing the maximum and minimum number of cases since 1900.

Dr. Morris, superintendent of the contagious hospital at Somerville was then introduced and he spoke at length about the work being done by the contagious hospitals throughout the state which he had visited, and particularly the work being done by the Somerville hospital.

The meeting throughout was an interesting one and the audience seemed to be thoroughly enthused over the subject of a contagious hospital for Quincy, and there is no question but in the very near future such a hospital will be erected.

Among the gentlemen present were Chairman William H. Teasdale, Dr. Fred E. Jones and James Thomas of the Board of Health, Dr. W. H. Blanchard, Dr. E. H. Bushnell, Dr. N. S. Hunting, Rev. T. C. Martin of the Hall Place church and Rev. William B. Ayers of the Park and Downs church,

CLAIMS OF HOUGHS NECK

M. J. Connors Replies to the Daily Ledger

Editor Quincy Ledger:

Your article of October 15 on the movement for the separation of Houghs Neck from Quincy indicates that you think it would be well for the rest of Quincy to leave the residents and property owners of the peninsula district to their own resources. If you really believe this, no doubt you will be glad to assist in the movement for separation.

While I do not agree with you that Houghs Neck is an expensive part of the city, I think separation would prove of advantage to Quincy in some respects. It seems inevitable that so long as the peninsula is governed from Quincy there will be misunderstandings and friction due to difference in points of view and lack of common interests, and in endeavoring to overcome the friction and misunderstandings both sides will use up much valuable time and effort.

I fear that the figures given in your article may lead some to the thought that the peninsula district is not financially able to care for itself. You state that, "The Houghs Neck committee claim the district pays to Quincy in taxes about $65,000. Over one half of this $65,000 or $33,000 goes for Houghs Neck share of the state and county taxes, debt and interest" Since the Houghs Neck share of state, county and the metropolitan district assessments for 1913 will amount to less than $13,000, there would be left $20,000 to apply on the city debt for which many people believe the peninsula district has not had adequate return. As to the other $32,000, I wonder if the Ledger believes it is all to be expended for the benefit of Houghs Neck.

You mention that this year there have been two large special appropriations made for Houghs Neck, $10,000 for widening and rebuilding Sea Street and $20,000 for water standpipe on Great Hill. As both of these are permanent improvements the payment for them will be distributed over a number of years, and in the past two years Houghs Neck has paid to Quincy without return sufficient revenue to cover the entire cost of both improvements.

You state also, "the police and fire protection of Houghs Neck cost more than any other small section of the city." The district has an area of 1.3 square miles and an assessed valuation of two million dollars. The cost last year for Police protection was $2,000, and for fire protection $2,700. I doubt if any other equal area of the same valuation was protected for a less amount.

In the same paragraph you state "Houghs Neck claim that it is not getting good school accommodations is unwarranted." In answer I would refer you to the 1912 report of the Superintendent of Schools where on page 25 Mr. Barbour recommends additional accommodations at the Atherton Hough School, and states "this is the only district of the city where there is any congestion at the present time." No additional accommodations have been provided there and at the opening of the schools last month the Atherton Hough School was the most crowded in the city.

I do not understand why you should hold Houghs Neck responsible for teachers at the High School receiving $29,424.38 in salaries. Since it is estimated that the cost for educating a pupil at the high school for a year is about $50 the above amount would cover the education of 588, and the number from Houghs Neck attending is considerably less.

If the majority of the residents and property owners of Houghs Neck wish to govern themselves and are willing to pay for what they get when they feel they are getting all they pay for, and the rest of Quincy looks upon the peninsula district as expensive, there should be no delay about securing a separation. Quincy cannot afford to be charitable to such an extent.

If, on the other hand, Houghs Neck needing to have money spent for its own development, is called upon to contribute toward a city debt that has been acquired without proportionate advantage to Houghs Neck, there is an injustice being done of which fair minded citizens of Quincy will not care to take advantage.

I believe that the assistance of the Quincy Ledger will be welcome to the Sea Girt Development Committee.

Sincerely,
M. J. Connors.

QUINCY'S WIN.

Pleasant weather again smiled on the grammar school soccer league Wednesday and Merrymount park was the scene of one of the warmest contests yet played. Quincy defeated the John Hancock aggregation 1 to 0 and was stubbornly contested throughout. The players are exhibiting a fine inside knowledge and when their post poned games are over expect to rank in the first division.

TENNIS CLUB BOWLING LEAGUE

When the bowlers of the Wollaston Tennis Club arrived at the Coliseum alleys Wednesday evening the teams and captains were known only to the executive committee. The makeup was received with general satisfaction and a large gallery was on hand to make the opening night of the league a gala one. Cheer after cheer floated down the alleys as moments of brilliant bowling nosed the glooms of hard luck to one side. All in all the last seasons standard was not reached but the showing of several demonstrated that as small ball men they give much promise as top liners.

Jesse Litchfield, the league secretary, made the best showing, reaching a 300 total after three nice strings. Captain Green and Hillman of Captain Litchfield's team were tied at 113 for high single. Several men expected to figure in the topnotchers failed to buy up the spares at the proper time.

The teams are called by the names of their captains. There are eight contesting for the big prizes and the roll-offs will take place every Wednesday night.

Capt. Litchfield's five brushed one of the heaviest coats of whitewash on the Capt. Estes boys that was ever administered on the alleys.

NEW TYPEWRITER RECORD

Miss Margaret Owen Writes 125 Words a Minute For an Hour

New York, Oct. 23.—All world's records for typewriting speed were broken at the national business show here by Miss Margaret B. Owen of this city, who wrote 125 words a minute during an hour's dictation. The previous record was 117 words.

Miss Owen was awarded a silver trophy valued at $1000. Emil . Tresseger was second with a speed of 120 words, while his brother, G. R. Treeseger, was third with 117 words a minute.

There have been but four world's champions, Miss Margaret B. Owen being the fourth. The original champion typist was Rose L. Fritz, who made a record of 82 words a minute. The next was H. O. Blaisdell at 109 words a minute, and the third, Florence E. Wilson at 117 words a minute.

There was a penalty of five words for each error made.

FIGHT FOR SUFFRAGE

Plan to Defeat Candidates Who Oppose Constitutional Amendment

Washington, Oct. 23.—Defeat for re-election of all those who oppose the adoption of a constitutional amendment to assure nation-wide woman suffrage, including senators and representatives of congress and the members of state legislatures, is the avowed object of Dr. Anna H. Shaw, president of the National Woman Suffrage association.

Dr. Shaw made this announcement following a conference with Washington suffragists at which plans were discussed for advancing the movement for the proposed amendment. She will inaugurate her campaign at Lynchburg, Va., next Friday night, when she will address the Virginia Suffrage league, and proposes to continue it before other suffrage organizations in various parts of the country.

MONEY BACK PLEA IN SUPREME COURT

To Decide Fight In Alleged Fraud In Stock Sales

Washington, Oct. 23.—With nine New York judges holding to one view and three to the opposite, the United States supreme court is to take its turn at deciding whether some of the subscribers to the syndicate known as the Sheffield Coal and Iron company are to get their money back for alleged fraud.

James Sim of New York claims William Edenborn, manager of the syndicate, induced him to subscribe for $15,000 worth in the syndicate, which was to buy the property of the United States Iron company. Sim declares Edenborn's action was fraudulent because the latter did not disclose that he owned the controlling stock in the United States Iron company.

The New York state court held a discontented syndicate subscriber may return his syndicate stock and get his money back. The federal courts held to the contrary, because it would break up the syndicate, notwithstanding some subscribers knew of the ownership.

DENY COMBINATION

Coal Companies File Answer In Federal Anti-Trust Suit

Philadelphia, Oct. 23.—Denials that they are parties to any alleged combination in restraint of the anthracite coal trade were filed in the United States district court here by five of the nine companies mentioned in the government's suit to dissolve the so-called hard coal trust.

The answers filed to the suit brought by Attorney General McReynolds on Sept. 2 were by the Reading company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railway company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron company, the Wilmington and Northern Railroad company and the Lehigh and New England Railroad company.

SYLVIA PANKHURST FREED

Released In Weakened Condition as Result of Hunger Strike

London, Oct. 23.—Sylvia Pankhurst was released under license from Holloway jail. She is much enfeebled and emaciated in consequence of a hunger strike of a week's duration.

She was arrested Oct. 14 as she was about to enter the Poplar town hall to address a meeting of militant suffragettes. The night previous Miss Pankhurst was the central figure of a fierce struggle between the police and a crowd of suffragettes after she had addressed a gathering at Bow Baths, in the East End of London.

Monmouth, Me., Has Big Fire

Monmouth, Me., Oct. 23.—Three buildings containing stores and the postoffice were burned here. The loss is between $15,000 and $20,000. Those burned out were the R. E. Woodbury company, shoe and general store; C. W. Prescott, druggist; C. O. Flanders, confectioner.

Boy Robs Woman and Escapes

Westfield, Oct. 23.—A boy in chaps and sombrero held up Mrs. Jacob Rosoff at the point of a revolver in her store on Washington street while he rifled the cash register. When Mrs. Rosoff's cries for help were answered the boy had made his escape.

EXPECTS FARCE IN ELECTIONS

Danger Increasing For Americans In Mexico

MAY CALL FOR QUICK ACTION

Five Candidates In Field For Mexican Presidency and It is Believed No One Will Receive Majority—More Foreigners Left Mexico Last Week Than In Any Similar Period

Washington, Oct. 23.—The Mexican elections next Sunday are to be a farce. This is expected both at the state department and in administration circles. But in holding them President Huerta has added to the danger of all foreigners in the southern republic. Because of this there is grave apprehension in officialdom here.

It is feared the announcement that there has been no choice and that Huerta will continue as "Provisional President" and absolute dictator will precipitate demonstrations that may call for immediate action by the United States.

The policy of "hands off" announced by President Wilson will only be changed by serious outrages against foreigners. But with prices of all foodstuffs and clothing advancing by leaps and bounds, and exchange in Mexico City already beyond the prohibitive mark, the feeling against Americans, who are held responsible for existing conditions, continues to grow.

All of the confidential advices received by the state department during the last ten days have emphasized the gravity of affairs, and the president and Secretary of State Bryan are holding numerous conference on the subject.

A plan of action has been completed. It is carefully guarded. But it is known that if it should become necessary both the army and navy could act at a moment's notice. The Atlantic fleet starts Saturday for the Mediterranean, but officers and men here on furlough declare they expect being caught by wireless orders before they are half-way across the Atlantic and ordered to Mexican waters. The ships are in good condition for either a fight or a frolic. Ammunition magazines and coal bunkers are jammed to the limit, and the crews are recruited to the top notch mark.

With five candidates in the field for the Mexican presidency, it is believed no one will receive a constitutional majority. And there is little doubt here that as soon as this is demonstrated Huerta will take further steps to emphasize his control of the government. After that, the officials here say, anything may happen, and they intend to be prepared for every contingency.

Confidential reports from Mexico City show that in the last week more Americans fled Mexico than during any similar period since the first Madero outbreak.

Diaz Urged Not to Land

Vera Cruz, Oct. 23.—General Felix Diaz arrived here from Havana aboard the German steamship Corcovado. A silent crowd greeted him at the pier, because of the popular impression that Huerta had ordered the soldiers to fire on too noisy demonstrators.

An air of suppressed excitement pervaded the whole city as the Corcovado drew into the harbor. Diaz did not land immediately. It was said he did not know when he would land.

French Cruiser Ordered to Mexico

Brest, France, Oct. 23.—The French armored cruiser Conde was ordered to take on board ammunition and coal and proceed as quickly as possible to Mexico.

NO NEGRO BISHOP

Matter Is Postponed For Three Years In Episcopal Convention

New York, Oct. 23.—The general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church has postponed for three years action on the question of giving the negroes of the south a bishop to represent them directly in the house of bishops.

Majority and minority reports from the committee on radical episcopate of the house of deputies, approving and opposing the proposal, came before the convention. Neither report was adopted. The entire problem was referred on a viva voce vote, to a joint commission of deputies and bishops which will report to the next general convention in 1916.

The commission will consist of five bishops, five presbyters and five laymen.

Lightning Kills Three Soldiers

Houston, Tex., Oct. 23.—A bolt of lightning struck the wagon train of the Sixth United States cavalry, marching between Texas City and Galveston, killing Privates Monroe Morris, George Morris and John Zimmer. Many soldiers were severely shocked. Scores of horses and mules were knocked flat.

China Gets British Admiral

Pekin, Oct. 23.—The Chinese government has decided to appoint a British naval officer as naval adviser to the Chinese admiralty. The officer chosen is Rear Admiral Arthur H. Christian, attached to the home fleets at Devonport.

LOWELL GIRL KIDNAPPED

Was Seized on City Hall Steps and Hurried Away In Automobile

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 23.—While standing on the lower steps of the city hall in this city, Miss Ethel Scraggs, 18 years old, of 33 Clare street, was seized and forcibly hustled by two men into an automobile that had been driven hastily to the curbing, and being securely placed in the auto, was rushed away, according to the thrilling story she told her mother.

The excitement of the abduction and the rough usage given her caused her to lapse into unconsciousness, and she did not awake till she was in a room in a country house some distance from Lowell.

The men then took her, she says, to Waltham and let her out of the automobile in the business section of the town and then rode swiftly away. On being free, Ethel Scraggs says she sought a telephone and communicated with her mother telling her of her plight. She then went to the Waltham police.

Acting upon the request of her mother, the Waltham police kept her in the station house over night, when Mr. and Mrs. Scraggs called for her and took her home. All efforts to get a statement from either the parents of the girl proved fruitless.

FOR THIRD TIME

Seventy-Five-Year-Old Lee Couple In Novel Ceremony

Lee, Mass., Oct. 23.—A wedding unique in the annals of this town was solemnized when Mrs. Anna D. Morsehouse of Otis, Mass., and William W. Houghton of Stamford, Conn., were made man and wife.

The contracting parties are each 75 years of age, and the wedding is the third marriage for both bride and groom.

Immediately after the ceremony the couple started on an automobile honeymoon that will take them through New York state, after which they will take up residence in Lee.

EUROPEANS LIKE OUR NEW TARIFF

Are Planning to Invade America With Their Goods

New York, Oct. 23.—European merchants are jubilant over the new American tariff bill and now are making plans for an invasion of the United States with their goods, according to Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel company, who returned from Europe on the Olympic.

"Everywhere throughout Europe," said Schwab, "the merchants are preparing to ship heavy consignments of their products to America. It will take some little time before the invasion is well under way, but it will surely come."

AUSTRIAN DEFICIT LARCE

Must Secure $30,000,000 Loans For First Half of 1914

Vienna, Oct. 23.—Loans amounting to nearly $30,000,000 will be necessary to meet the deficit in the Austrian budget for the first half of 1914.

This so-called transition budget, intended to pave the way for transferring the date of the beginning of the fiscal year from January to July, estimates the expenditure for the six months at $312,891,776, and the proceeds of the loans required to balance the deficit between the revenue and expenditure will be applied to the army, the navy and the railroads.

Baron Engel von Mainfelden, in introducing the budget in the lower house of parliament, explained that this "unfavorable budget" was due to recent events in the Balkans, but that the economic organization of the country was sound.

CRUSHED IN ELEVATOR

Eighteen-Year-Old Bellboy Killed by Accident In Boston Hotel

Boston, Oct. 23.—Francis McKinnon, an 18-year-old bellboy, was killed last night by the elevator at Hotel Somerset. He was in the act of relieving the regular man.

It is supposed he tripped and fell as he entered the elevator, and as he fell his arm caught the electric switch, starting the car. The young man was crushed between the elevator and the wall. It required the services of a ladder company working for half an hour before he could be released.

Two Fight Over Girl

Pawtucket, R. I., Oct. 23.—Stanley Dill is probably dying at the Memorial hospital here and Peter Kockhanek is under arrest as the result of a fight over a girl whom both insisted on seeing home from a Polish wedding in Central Falls. Antonia Stiek was the bone of contention. During the argument Kockhanek stabbed Dill.

Negro Lynched For Insult

Monroe, La., Oct. 23.—Warren Eaton, a negro, accused of having made an insulting remark to a white woman here Monday, was taken from the jail by a mob and hanged to a telegraph pole.

Strikers Fire on Mine Workers

Trinidad, Col., Oct. 23.—Coal mine strikers fired on Hastings, a camp of the Victor-American Fuel company, according to mine officials here. The fire was returned. So far as known no one was wounded.

Two Masquerading Cops

Each Played His Game Well

By RVLAND BELL

When I was a roundsman at Arlington I was sitting down to breakfast one morning when there came a hurry call for me to report at once at the station. I found two or three other roundsmen there, listening attentively to Inspector Harker, who was giving them instructions.

"Hello, Blaney!" he said as soon as he saw me. "I want you. Come here and listen to a statement of a case we have on hand."

I joined the row in front of the desk, and the inspector continued:

"This morning an old man named Hennessy, who keeps a little store at 92 Union street, went to his place of business at 6 o'clock as usual to open up. He kept no clerk, doing everything himself. About half an hour after he entered the store a policeman in uniform was seen to come out of it. The person who saw the cop was on his way to Hennessy's store to buy some coffee for breakfast. He found the storekeeper lying dead, shot through the head, before a little open safe in which he kept his funds.

"The man who made the discovery ran out for a policeman and met

"THERE HE IS. HELP ME TO RUN HIM IN."

O'Neill, who went back to the store with him, and at once sent in a report of the occurrence. What money had been taken from the safe is not known, since Hennessy is dead and can't tell us how much was there.

"The queries are: Who was the policeman who came out of the store after the murder? Was he one of our force? If so, was he the murderer? Had he adopted a policeman's uniform to enable him to escape detection? Is he or has he been a policeman in another town who has gone to the bad?

"We have no time to lose, because there is a hope that we can get him before he can take off his uniform and put on citizen's clothes. I think that if I were in his place I would try to get out of town as a policeman. He would run some risk in taking off his uniform before doing so, since should we find it we could work from it to its owner, or rather to the man who had worn it, whereas if the murderer could get beyond our bailiwick it would be much easier to get it off and conceal it."

That was just like Harker. He always began a hunt for a criminal by going over the ground just as if he was the criminal himself. But Harker used to say that what was most likely to throw him off the track was some foolish move on the part of the fugitive.

"I shall work on two theories," he continued—"the one that he remains for the present in town, the other that he tries to get away in uniform. You men will be used to work on the latter theory. You have one advantage—you can hurry, while the murderer can't. Haste would give him away. I shall give each of you so many degrees of the circumference of our town limits and trust to your perceptive faculties to spot the man."

He gave us our positions, and each man made his way to where he was to go by the quickest possible means, some going by trolley, some on horseback and some in hacks hired for the purpose. I was assigned to a section where our own city limits met those of the neighboring town of Burtonville, the two towns being built up continuously. I took a trolley car and got out at the end of the route, and a few steps took me into Burtonville.

The uniforms of the police of the two towns were alike or so nearly alike that there was not enough difference to act upon. This was both an advantage and a disadvantage to us. We need not be recognized as Arlington policemen, but the man we were after could not be detected wearing our uniform. Indeed, we did not know what special uniform he wore, except that it was a policeman's.

I was but one of some twenty men who were covering the ground, and there was but one chance in twenty, if the criminal was captured at all, that I would run across him. Consequently there was mighty little chance of my doing the job. But I kept my attention fixed upon it just as keen as if I knew my man was within reach.

There were two main thoroughfares in Burtonville leading from the trolley stables toward the railroad station, about a mile beyond. I walked to the station by one route, keeping my eye skinned for policemen. The policemen belonging to the town had been notified of the possible presence of the criminal and were much better fixed to take him if he was there than one of Arlington, because they knew their own men. I said nothing about the matter to those I met, confining my attention to meeting a policeman who by some bit of nervousness would give himself away.

Not meeting any suspicious person on my way to the station, I walked back by the other thoroughfare, which was much less frequented than the first. Meeting a cop, I asked him what was the hour for change of the force on duty. He told me that he was then expecting every moment to be relieved. I continued my way back toward the trolley stables and was walking slowly along when I saw a policeman coming.

Some of us fellows of the police have a way when walking along, especially when entering upon our term of routine duty, of throwing our sticks outward, drawing them back by the throng that attaches them to the wrist and catching them. The man coming toward me was doing this. That fellow, I remarked to myself, whatever else he is, is a cop. He is throwing his stick like a policeman and catching it as if he had been doing the trick all his life.

When we met I nodded to him, looking him over carefully, as I did every cop I passed, for anything that might give away the man I was after. There was nothing in his uniform, nothing in his walk, which had the elasticity of a man just going on duty, contrasting with that of one just going off duty. But there is one telltale feature that cannot well be covered, though I have known many persons to do so with marked success. I refer to the eye. It is usually a sure indicator. It is the feature on which one fighting for his life keeps his own eye fixed without a moment's removal. The man I met looked me in the eye. I looked him in the eye and saw in it an uneasiness that was in strong contrast with his careless walk and otherwise confident appearance.

While there was not enough in this to warrant my assuming that he had an uneasy conscience, it was sufficient to induce investigation. I stopped for a bit of chat.

"Just going on?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied. "Are you?"

Here was a probable giveaway. I knew by sight every person connected with the police department of Arlington, and this man should have known those of Burtonville.

"Let me see," I said. "I don't exactly place you. Haven't you recently come on the force?"

He saw danger in the question, and I saw dread in that telltale eye of his.

"Not so very recently. I've been mostly on night duty."

"That's the duty I've been on," I said, in order to push him further. "It's singular that I haven't ever seen you at the station."

"It is queer we haven't met," he half stammered. "But I must go on. I'm a bit behind time and have some distance to walk."

"I'll go with you," I said. "I'm not satisfied at seeing a man on the force that I never saw before. I'm going to investigate you."

No will power could keep the blood in the man's face when he saw that he was in imminent danger of being exposed as masquerading in the Burtonville police force, to which he did not belong, for this would almost surely connect him with something worse. But he pulled himself together, saying that I was welcome to investigate him as much as I liked.

He walked beside me sullenly. I did not jump at a conclusion that he was my quarry, but I believed there was a fair chance of it. At the same time I didn't care to place myself in a ridiculous position by making a mistake.

"How do I know," he said presently, "that you are a member of the force? I've never seen you before."

"You'll find that out." I replied, "when we meet a policeman."

Suddenly the man stepped to the curb and began to rap on it with his stick. A cop came hurrying toward us, and my companion said to him:

"I'm an Arlington policeman, after a man who is wanted for masquerading as a member of your force. There he is. Help me to run him in."

It was a desperate game to play, but he had no other. It confirmed my belief that I had got the man I was after, and I did not worry as to the result. The Burtonville man looked us both over, then said to me:

"I've been ordered to look out for you myself. Come along."

"Not without my accuser," I said.

The real criminal's eyes were darting about for some method of escape. He put his hand to his hip, but took it away. I watched him closely in order to be ready to shoot first if there was any shooting to be done.

The Burtonville cop settled the matter by rapping for assistance, and when it came we two strangers were taken to the station and held till Harker came out in the police buggy and set the Burtonville authorities right as to my identity.

The man I had encountered was taken to Arlington, where he was questioned and cross questioned till a confession was wrung from him. He was tried and suffered for his crime.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

There were perhaps a dozen large boxes. I opened them all. Some were quite empty, with a little pile of dust in them and a few shreds of color here and there which indicated silk had been packed in them. There were also broken barrels around which still clung a faint odor of spices. There were piles of rotted debris further on, and as I stirred one of them with my sword I struck something more solid. I brushed aside what seemed to be the decayed remains of cordage and canvas and finally came upon a smaller casket bound, hinged, and cornered with some kind of metal which I afterward found to be silver, for iron would have rusted away long since. The casket was about a foot long by six inches wide and six inches deep. The metal which completely covered it was curiously chased. The casket was locked. I crumbled the wood in my hands, but could not open the lock. The edge of my ax, however, proved a potent key, and at last forced it apart, and as I did so out fell a little heap of what I judged to be precious stones. There were green, red, blue and white ones, among them many pearls sadly discolored and valueless. The stones glistened with an almost living energy. My mistress was more familiar with these things than I, and I presented a handful to her.

"Why, they are precious stones!" she cried in an awe struck whisper. "Look!" She held up a diamond as big as her thumb nail. It sparkled like a sun in the candlelight. "And there is an emerald," she cried, picking up one of the green stones. "This blue one is a sapphire; this a ruby. Why," she exclaimed, "there is a fortune alone. These jewels must be of fabulous value. The gold and silver we might leave behind, but these we can carry with us."

In my heart I was sorry we had found them, yet I had the grace immediately to say:

"I am glad for that. We must gather them up, but where shall we put them?"

"In the pockets of your coat for the present," she answered.

Now there were not so many of them—perhaps three or four handfuls—not nearly enough to fill the casket. I figured that it had been a jewel box with little trays or drawers and that the stones had been wrapped separately, but had all fallen together when the partitions rotted away. I easily found room for them in the capacious side pockets of my coat, and then we turned back to the outer room. Passing by the hideous altar, we gained the light. It was now late in the afternoon, we found to our surprise.

We had spent hours over the treasure and we had just time to retrace our steps and get back to the boat on the beach and partake of our evening meal when night fell. As we sat by the fire that night I made little bags out of a piece of canvas taken from a bread bag and we put the jewels into them, dividing them into equal parts. One bag she wore constantly thereafter on her person and I the other. She insisted that the rough and ready division we had made was permanent; that the bag I carried belonged to me and the bag she carried belonged to her. But I refused to have it so in spite of her argument, and there we left it.

During the next two or three days we leisurely explored the island. There was nothing else on it to see which merits any particular description. We did not again visit the central hill, nor did we enter any other cave. We did not even go near the treasure cave again. On the contrary, we kept to the open. We chose to live near the sea on the beach, which was high above all tides and which was removed from the charnel spots which made a mockery of the sylvan groves within the walls. The island was well provided with tropical fruits, many being good for food, as I knew. We caught fish in the lagoon and turtle on the sand. We lacked nothing to make us comfortable, even happy, except the means of escape.

We spent our days in trying to devise some means of getting across the reef and back home again—that is, when I was not idly lying at the feet or following the footsteps of the woman I loved. I didn't want to get away, so far as I was concerned. I didn't care whether we ever got away. I had wit enough not to let her see, not to let her suspect that for a moment, however, and I tried to convince her by my conduct toward her that my kissing her on the ship had been but momentary madness, but I learned later that I failed lamentably. She says now that a baby could see that I was dying for her, and I suppose it is true, but at least I didn't say anything. After that outbreak in the cave I kept silence.

Late one afternoon we stood at the head of the stairs looking seaward. We had come from a long ramble throughout the cup of the island, and as we stood on the top our gaze as usual instinctively turned toward the sea, perhaps seeking for the sail of some rescuing ship. The water was black with great savage war canoes.

"Great God," I cried; "look yonder!"

"I see, I see!" she cried in turn. "Who can they be?"

"Dwellers from the other islands to the westward," I answered.

They could not see us yet, fortunately; but, after all, that mattered little. My little lady did not seem to be nearly as disturbed as I.

"The reef will protect us," she said at last, looking at me confidently.

"Not for a moment," I answered. "They will ride that reef in those light canoes more easily than we did."

"And you think"— she instantly began.

"Our lives are in God's hands. If I know anything these will be ferocious, bloodthirsty savages. See! They are armed."

I pointed to one tall brown man, who stood up in the bow of the nearest canoe, flourishing a broad bladed spear.

"We must hide," she said.

"But where? They will search the island."

"In the treasure cave," she answered.

And indeed that was the most likely spot. We had brought but little with us that afternoon. I had thrust a brace of pistols in my belt, and she herself, by my advice, always carried her two small ones, and I had my sword and ax, but everything else was in the boat on the beach. For a moment I thought of running down there and getting some of our things, but as I half turned to descend the stairs she detained me, divining my purpose.

"No, no!" she urged, clasping my arm with both hands. "We must make shift with what we have. Perhaps they may not discover us, and we can hide safely until they depart. Come! Let us go."

There was sense in her remarks. It might be that after performing their awful worship these most unwelcome visitors would return as they came, and by keeping closely hid we might escape an encounter with them. They would certainly find all our goods as soon as they crossed the reef and landed. But there was no help for that now. We had to make the best of a bad situation.

We turned and ran down the path across the wall. I had forethought to gather a number of cocoanuts and some other fruits as we passed. I filled my own pockets, and then she made a bag out of the skirt of her dress and carried the rest. Presently I reflected that we had no need for such haste. There would be plenty of time for us to reach the cave and conceal ourselves long before they landed, so we progressed more slowly. It was almost dusk when we reached our shelter. I uprooted a small tree just as we started to climb the pile of stones, which I used as a lever to push down the heap in every direction as we climbed, so that it would be impossible for any one else to enter the cave without piling up the stones again. We passed by the stone altar and its skeletons, crept into the inner room, flung ourselves panting upon the sand, and there we waited.

In that secret and secluded shelter I thought that we were safe for the time being. Especially was I sure that they would make no effort to find us at night, as the place had anciently been some sort of a shrine. And in the morning I did not think that they would chance upon that particular cave out of the many in the coral walls without a long search, unless they had proposed coming just there for other reasons than we gave them. Even if they did stumble upon our hiding place early in the hunt, which I felt sure would be made for us as soon as they discovered evidences of our presence on the island in the shape of the dinghy, or at least at daybreak, it would take them some time to rebuild the rock wall again; and when they did enter the outer room they would find it a matter of extreme difficulty to get into the inner chamber so long as I was there. Unfortunately we had brought no powder or ball with us. We had no means of reloading our firearms, once they had been discharged. I resolved to reserve the four pistols we had for the last emergency. For other weapons I had my ax and sword, to say nothing of stones and even of the human skulls about the altar.

I have said, I think, that the inner cave was slightly damp. The dampness arose from a spring of water which bubbled away in some dark corner which we had not cared to explore. We had what provisions we had brought with us left over from our luncheon, which I had luckily preserved instead of throwing it away, and an armful of cocoanuts and other fruit. These, however, would last us but a short while. If they couldn't come at us by force they could easily starve us out. Also they could, without too much trouble or danger, make themselves masters of the outer cave. Indeed, I scarcely thought it would be wise for me to attempt to prevent that, and in that case they could wall up the entrance and leave us there.

CHAPTER XV.

Wherein We Are Beleaguered In the Cave.

It did not occur to us for a single moment that the savages had any knowledge of the treasure and that they could be after that. Not for the thousandth part of a second did I dream that the savages were led by Pimball, Glibby and most of the other seamen of the Rose of Devon. I did not know then that the Rose of Devon had gone ashore in the terrific storm I have described, or that there had been a battle with the savages, who sought to plunder the ship, but were prevented at frightful loss to the islanders, who were unable to contend successfully against the firearms with which the ship was abundantly provided. A means of communication between the ship and the shore had been found subsequently through one of the seamen who had sailed the south seas. The savages had been told of the treasure, of which indeed they had some dim traditions from days gone by; they also held the cave as one of their most sacred spots, scarcely less sacred than the great altar on the hillock in the center of the island, for what reason I cannot tell. Some of this I learned afterward from our assailants, and much of it I divined on reflection on our voyage homeward.

By some persuasion, I know not what, Pimball and Glibby had won them over. Together they had organized an expedition to come and seize us and take the treasure. The Rose of Devon I guessed was not badly damaged and could easily be made seaworthy.

We sat silent in the cave for a long time. I had not lighted the lantern we had left there at our last visit, and some of the light of the dying day filtered through from the outside cave. There was nothing that we needed light for. We sat close together on the remains of one of the chests to protect us from the damp sand. I always carried with me a flask of spirits. Not that I am a drinking man; I left and still leave that practice to the gallants of the day, but I have often found it useful in some dire emergency, and as Mistress Lucy shivered in the chill, damp air I heartened her and strengthened her with a dram.

ing, Thayers Block, now the Wollaston hotel was approaching completion. Josiah Quincy, the father, then Mayor of Boston delivered an oration. Then there were from 12 to 15 houses in Wollaston. In a year and a half there were 50 good solid houses costing $2500 at a minimum and going as high as $15,000.

"I came to Wollaston with my family on August 1, 1870 and boarded in Thayer's block until my house was completed on November 1. I have lived there ever since.

"When we came here there were no religious services held but one good man Moses A. Swift of Clay street established with his wife a Sabbath school in the railroad station.

"By and by we outgrew the railroad station and a Union chapel was established in Thayer's block where services were held every Sunday until our church was dedicated. I was chairman of the board of trustees that built the church and have been its trustee for 34 years.

"We tried to establish Wollaston by shutting out the hovel and saloon. It is the only part of Quincy and the only suburb of Boston that has not had saloons galore.

"We started Wollaston in the right direction and I have seen it grow from a cow pasture to the fifth ward of Quincy and the cream of the entire city."

Herbert W. Pinkham, son of the former speaker explained the many views of Wollaston 50 years ago that were hung around the room.

"First hill" was then called "Blackberry hill" and this with the two other hills were shown from all view points Historic photographs and works of art by old residents were also displayed.

Amos D. Albee, another old resident spoke on "Personalities of the past." He came to Wollaston on April, 6, 1876 and spoke of the group of people he met the first Sunday at church.

Among them were the Pinkhams, Sparrows, Olneys, Macfarlands, and Seaveys while young Charlie Pinkham presided at a wheezey cabinet organ.

Lucius A. Eliot, the Capens, Chas. F. Parker, Dr. Hale, Preston Gurney, Fred Dewhurst and others were mentioned.

Miss Lovett who became Mrs. Howard Gannett, Miss Lottie Dow who became Mrs. Battison and Miss Harper who became Mrs. Albee all came from the Shawmut Avenue Baptist church.

Mr. Albee taught a group of young men which included Charles Pinkham, Frank Waterhouse, Eben Sanborn, Moses Swift and others and has had charge of the music at the church since April 1876.

Charles A. Kempton sang "In Cordeval" and "The song of the armorer."

John L. Miller, chairman of the building committee, offered in a very happy frame of mind his thanks for the completion of the chapel addition.

Elford L. Durgan, superintendent of the Sunday school responded to the toast "How glad I am."

"Maker of my destiny" was sung by Avard L. Walker, accompanied by Mrs. Charles M. Roach.

A most happy speech was that of Rev. C. C. Tilley of the Calvary Baptist church. He offered his felicitations in a very humorous manner and many times had his audience convulsed with laughter.

A piano solo by Leon Biganess, the singing of "Blessed be the tie that binds" and the benediction by Rev. Thomas S. Barbour D. D. closed an evening that was most interesting and inspiring.

NEW STORE OPENED.

The new store of John J. Gallagher, Quincy's dealer in polishing and masons supplies, 230 Water street, was opened this morning, and many customers and friends took advantage of the invitation to drop in and inspect his future place of business. Mr. Gallagher was on hand all morning to welcome his friends. The building is situated on the land formerly occupied by the James Craig Co. granite cutting sheds. A new office and store rooms have been erected, the latter fronting on the street. The complete stock includes lubricating oils, polishers and mill supplies, air and water hose, cotton waste, brick, lime, cement and other supplies.

DISTRICT COURT.

Frank L. Allen was sentenced to the state farm for being idle and disorderly at Braintree. Sentence suspended until Jan. 24, 1914.

Herbert H. Holmes was arraigned for neglect of his family at Braintree. Case continued until Nov. 13.

Guiolo Troia was arrigned for drunkenness at Quincy and for threatening to assault Emelio Troia. Both cases continued under bonds until Friday.

The continued case of Raheririe Dobrowski and Mary Khisshie for lewdness at Quincy was heard and they were found not guilty and discharged.

POSSIBLY A RUMOR.

Word was received from Gov. Foss this morning that he might visit Quincy tonight, and speak in City Square. He stated that if he thought he could get any kind of an audience he would come.

CHRISTIAN MYSTICS.

A dispatch from Los Angeles, Cal., tells an amazing story by Alice M. Robinson, a former Braintree woman, in her suit for separate maintenance against Dr. Rockwell R. Robinson, a former Philadelphia dentist. The suit brought to light in a sensational manner the alleged teachings of the order of Christian Mystics. The religious order has its centre in California, and the secretary Dr. F. Holmes Curtis and his wife are charged by Mrs. Robinson with having influenced her husband against her. Woven in the tale is a rare record of reincarnation from the lost continent Atlantis where weird and esoteric rites are said to have been performed. According to the statement of Mrs. Robinson, Dr. Curtis and his wife believe that on Atlantis the former was a priest and the latter a priestess, Rahmea.

BARN FIRE AT QUINCY POINT

Thought to Have Been of Incendiary Origin

Fire, thought to be of incendiary origin, was discovered in the barn attached to the Ring homestead on Washington street about 1.50 today. Before extinguished, it badly damaged the southerly end of the barn and roof and the smoke penetrated to the home and did considerable damage to furniture.

The fire was discovered by Daniel Ring and he sounded the alarm. The contents of several old boxes were scattered about the floor of the barn and several pieces of furniture were disturbed.

Mr. Ring believes that someone has been rummaging through the barn regularly, as at different times he has found the order of things upset. The conditions surrounding the fire at the time it broke out convince him that it was set. The loss will be about $500.

The only person in the house at the time was Daniel C. Ring who was aroused by the smoke. Hastily running out of the house he jumped into a passing automobile and went to the house of Hose 4, whom he notified. In the meantime someone had run to Box 72 and sounded the alarm. Sparks from the burning barn threatened several houses and the department was called to extinguish a blaze on the roof of a house belonging to the estate west of the burning building. The damage to this house was confined to a few shingles.

RUMORS HAVE NO FOUNDATION

Battleship Rivadavia Will Meet All Requirements

A dispatch from New York, Wednesday night, stated that there was a story in circulation there that the Argentine Republic Commission had refused to accept the battleship Rivadavia, built at the yard of the Fore River Corporation.

An official of the Fore River, when interviewed about the story, said that there was absolutely nothing to it, and that they had not even heard a rumor to that effect. They further said that Argentina had no cause whatever for rejecting the battleship.

There have been many rumors coming from an unknown New York source detrimental to the Quincy shipyard, and this story evidently came from the same source. The particular spite of the unknown correspondent seems to be the Curtis turbine engines. It will be remembered that there have been many similar stories about the North Dakota, all of which were proved to be false.

—The proposal in Congress to make a "Fathers' Day" national holiday seems only fair, if they make such a holiday for the mothers, as has been urged. The children already have Saturdays and ten weeks in summer besides, so they are taken care of, for a time at least. We foresee an extension later to take in remoter relatives. Why not "Uncles' Day," too, with directions that pawnbrokers' shops be closed for those twenty-four hours?—Hartford Courant.

FR. HARKINS PASSES AWAY

Graduate of Quincy Schools and Assigned to Reading

Rev. Fr. John Howland Harkins, Quincy's youngest clergyman, died about 2 o'clock this morning at the Carney hospital where he has been a patient for two weeks. He has been ill for several months. Father Harkins was the third of his family to pass away within a year.

Rev. Fr. Harkins was born in Quincy, 30 years ago. He was the son of Mrs. Sarah and the late John Harkins and brother of the late Annie Harkins. He attended the Washington school in his younger days and later was graduated from the Coddington school to which he was transferred.

He entered Adams Academy where he was a general favorite and his athletic prowess aided in establishing the fame of their football teams. After graduating in 1901 he became a student at Boston College. He was secretary of his class and an officer of the Fulton Debating Society. He was awarded his degrees in 1905. For four years he was student at Niagara University, and while there was on the editorial staff of the Index, the university paper. After a year's study at the St. John's Seminary at Brighton he was ordained to the priesthood by Cardinal O'Connell on May 20, 1910.

Shortly after his ordination he was assigned to the parish of Reading, where he the assistant of Rev. Fr. Francis Walsh, a Quincy born priest, and after several months was permanently appointed curate at Amesbury. Obliged to relinquish his duties owing to ill health he returned to Quincy several months ago and despite the efforts of physicians steadily failed.

Father Harkins was one of the best known of Quincy's young men. From his childhood he was an altar boy at St. John's church and active in all its affairs. Wholesome and kind, with a cheerful disposition he was the favorite of young and old alike and the news of his death was a great shock to his friends.

B. J. LORING DEAD.

Benjamin J. Loring of 110 Front street, East Braintree, passed away this afternoon. He was well known in police circles, and for several years has been State agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He was a Civil war veteran, and a past commander of Reynolds post of Weymouth. He was a member of Rural lodge of Masons of Quincy, and also the chapter.

He was 71 years of age and leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Charles O. Miller.

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. If you want your own town to thrive

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

NO CURE, NO PAY PRESENTED

Jolly Time at the Fair of Quincy Chapter, Eastern Star

The second afternoon and evening of the annual fair of the Quincy Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, was a success socially and financially. The guests of the evening were Miss Myrtle Brundage and Miss Louise Moyle. In the afternoon many children were present. The supper which was served between 6 and 8 oclock under direction of Mrs. Sadie Files, consisted of cold ham, cold corned beef, hot tongue, potato salad, baked beans, hot rolls, fancy pies, cakes, coffee and tea.

In the evening an entertainment, "No Cure, No Pay," was given by Miss Annie Rose, Miss Mildred Crowley, Miss Mary Milne, Miss Cora Barnicoat, Miss Bessie Roberts and Miss Ruth Kemp. It was under the direction of Mrs. MacDonald.

After the sketch those present indulged in all kinds of fun and G. Harvey Field became the centre of attraction when he loaned a nickel to a young lady and received a card, "Thank you, Mr. E. Z. Mark." It was nearly an hour before Mr. Field was able to pass the card along.

All ladies visiting the basket table, which was in charge of Mrs. Edith Crocker, were given a souvenir hand made wicker basket, and she received a rousing cheer for her generosity. Prizes were awarded to Miss Margaret Carruthers, J. McLeod, and Mrs. James Gibbs. Hugh Ralph secured 40 peanuts in one grab, and was awarded a decorated china mayonaise bowl and china ladle but he refused to tell what he would do with it.

HAYDEN FAMILY HOLD REUNION

Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Hayden of 140 Elm street were hosts to about 50 members of the Hayden family at the annual reunion at their home Thursday afternoon and evening. Guests were present from Randolph, Stoughton, Weymouth, Medford, Fitchburg and Burlington, Vt.

All gathered around the festive board for dinner after the afternoon reception. Autumnal foliage and flowers were tastefully arranged in all parts of the house, and the Hayden colors, red and white, bore a conspicuous place in the decoration scheme.

After dinner the older guests passed the time in playing whist, the first prize going to Mrs. Laura Brock and the consolation prize to Mrs. Bradford Hayden. In the evening musical numbers were rendered by Mrs. Blanche V. Hayden, Ruth Cleverly, Pearl Hayden, Viola Hayden, Mrs Forrest Hayden, Kenneth Colburn, Forrest Hayden and Sherman Hayden. Piano solos were given by Herbert Hayden and Irving Hayden. Ice cream and cake were served.

LINEN SHOWER AT ATLANTIC

A half hundred friends tendered Miss Gertrude Golden of Atlantic a surprise linen shower Thursday evening at the home of her aunt, Mrs. John Golden, Madison street, Miss Golden, a popular young lady, and Jeremiah Donovan of Quincy Point will be married Nov. 5.

Miss Golden after much persuasion agreed to change her plans and spend the evening with her aunt and when quantities of linen literally "poured" from the ceiling as she entered her home she was very much surprised. Her young men and women friends gathered around and heartily cheered, and after Miss Golden recovered she joined the happy gathering and participated in the fun of the evening. Miss Helen Cummings and Miss Catherine Dolan sang several solos, Miss Florence Glynn rendered piano solos, and games were played. Refreshments were served before the adjournment at midnight.

FINE SUPPER AT BETHANY

Philathia Class Observe Anniversary of Organization

Over 200 assembled for the first supper of the season by the ladies of Bethany church, and no one could find fault with such a feast served for 25 cents. It included cold lamb and ham, escalloped potato, rolls and coffee, pies and fruit.

Mrs. H. Everett Crane was in charge and the committee included the ladies whose names come at the end of the alphabet, from R. to Z. A bevy of young ladies served as waiters, and were adept in that line.

Later in the evening the Philatheas observed the 23rd annniversary of the organization. Reports showed that the Bethany class is doing considerable good work. The pastor of the church, Rev. B. A. Willmott, addressed the organization, complimenting on the good work done, and speaking of its field of usefulness.

Wednesday evening the Philathea class held an autumn party in the chapel with Rev. and Mrs. Willmott as guests. It was really a Hallowe'en night with ghosts, games, fortune teller, etc. Miss Maude Read of Atlantic gave readings and Miss Ruth Packard sang. Ices and cake were served.

IN MEMORY OF REV. FR. HARKINS

The body of Rev. Fr. J. Howland Harkins was taken from the Carney Hospital, Thursday afternoon, to the home of his mother, Mrs. Sarah Harkins on Adams street and during the evening many called and viewed the remains. Among them were members of St. Joseph's parish of Amesbury, where Father Harkins was curate until sickness obliged him to relinquish his duties.

This evening the remains will be removed to St. John's church where the casket will rest on a catafalque, before the altar on which Father Harkins served at many masses during his boyhood days. Prayers will be recited by the clergy assembled and the body will lay in state until the high mass of requiem which will be said at 10 o'clock Saturday morning.

Tonight guards of honor from all the societies of the parish will stay with the remains of the beloved priest and arrangements have been made for them to attend the funeral. The burial will be in the family lot in St. Mary's cemetery which has received three, a father, son and daughter, within a year.

POSTER WEEK WELL RECEIVED

Mayor Stone has had put on some of the city bulletin boards the alcohol posters furnished by the "Think it over" committee. Thus Quincy becomes the third city in the country to officially post alcoholic facts, Cambridge and Fitchburg being the two prior ones. The matter will be presented in the schools of the city Monday and blotters with alcohol facts will be given the school children on Sunday in nearly all the churches and Sunday Schools the facts will be presented.

In the window of the Department store is an alcoholic display, due to the kindness of J. H. Fitzpatrick in the use of the window and to Johnson Bros., who furnished the groceries. Every one has been most cordial to the scheme.

ONLY ONE NOMINATION.

But one set of nomination papers were filed with the City Clerk today. These were by Edwin B. Poland as Councilman from Ward Six. The time for filing papers expires Saturday at 5 oclock and the City Clerk will probably keep his office open during the afternoon to receive papers.

TO WIDOW OR ASSIGNEES

Court Must Decide on Insurance of G. E. Williams

Acting as trustees, the Connecticut Mutual and the New York Life Insurance companies have filed answers in the Superior Court in the suit of Aaron Hailparn against Mrs. Sadie E. Williams, widow of George E. Williams, the Boston insurance man, to recover on notes aggregating $15,000 purporting to bear the signature of the defendant and her husband. The genuineness of her signature to all the notes is denied by Mrs. Williams.

The plaintiff, says the Transcript, sought to reach Mrs. William's interest in various policies of insurance issued on the life of her husband. In their answers, the insurance companies show that the several policies were assigned by Williams and ask the court to determine whether the amounts due thereon belong to the widow or the assignees.

The New York Life Insurance Company requests that the assignees of the policies, Emma R. Wellington, William's stenographer; John K. Norwood of Lawrence, and Atherton N. Hunt of Boston, be made to appear in court to show what rights they have to the funds. The company issued policies amounting to $12,500 on the life of Williams. The Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company asks that John K. Norwood, Annie E. Wadsworth, Abby B. Kilburn and Augusta M. Bibber be summoned into courts to show their rights to the funds due on the policies, and asks the court to say what amounts, if any, those assignees or the widow are entitled to receive. Whatever interest the widow has the plaintiff seeks to reach with a view to have it applied to any judgement that may be obtained against the defendant.

ADAMS SCHOOL OPENING

Considerable Mystery Yet About Date of Occupancy

Sewer connection with the new Adams schoolhouse has been completed. Now when will the new building be occupied? The school Committee is probably waiting for Mayor Stone to hand over the keys. A meeting of the School Committee will be held Tuesday evening. But the school should open next Monday.

DISTRICT COURT.

The continued cases of Simone Marchesione of Quincy for a statutory offence was called and again continued until Oct. 31.

The continued cases of Guito Troi for drunkenness and threatening to assault Comelia Tori was called. He changed his plea to guilty and was sentenced to two months in the house of correction on the complaint for drunkenness. Sentence suspended until July 24, 1914. The case for threats was placed on file.

Improvements have been made at the market of Coughlin & Donovan to better accommodate the increasing trade. Quality is the watchword of the company.

The Mt. Wollaston club, composed of members of the Mt. Wollaston lodge of Odd Fellows held a well attended whist party in their hall Thursday evening and among the winners were Mrs. Flora E. Gomez, Mrs. William Westland, Mrs. Adeline Young and Abel Gomez.

The six boys who were arrested some days ago in connection wtih the sounding of a false alarm of fire from Houghs Neck were given a hearing in the juvenile session of the court Thursday afternoon. There was no direct evidence to connect the boys with the ringing of the alarm although they were in the immediate vicinity. After hearing the evidence the comlaints were dismissed.

The funeral of Mrs. Rose Macalini was held from her home 23 Water street Thursday morning. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. John J. Casey. The Gregorian chant was rendered by the regular choir under the direction of John Mahon, organist. The services were well attended by many Italian residents of the city. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

The average citizen may get to understand differential calculus, but the currency bill looks hopeless to him.

BASEBALL FOR PRISONERS.

When the American Prison Association, in session at Indianapolis, got to talking about baseball for prisoners, they did not perhaps realize how much copy they would be making for newspaper paragraphers. The editor can think offhand of two or three squibs that would amuse his readers, and add sparkle to the paper.

The original idea of a prison was a place where a man was shut up, that he might meditate on his sins, and resolve to live a better life. About the only recreation was meeting Sundays to sing gospel songs, while the chaplain gave them advice that would be excellent if they would follow it.

But it's a pretty hard proposition to get abnormal man to become a normal one, if during the process he has to live a life that is also abnormal in every particular. You can't get a strong healthy plant by growing it in a cellar where sunshine never penetrates. It will be pale and sickly.

Modern ideas of prison management are tending away from the punitive idea. The conception is more that of separation from the rest of the world. The theory is that these people have proved their unfitness to mingle freely with their fellows. Therefore let them be separated until they learn better. Meanwhile the life should be as nearly normal as it can be without making it attractive to the idle and lazy.

If you work along that theory, the idea of baseball and other games in prisons does not seem so absurd. A hearty contest once in a while might do a world of good in betterment to physical health, in checking the inroads of despair on the struggling soul, in making attractice the pursuits that accompany a life of honest work. The privilege of playing such games might well be used as a reward, to be given to men who show an ambition to learn useful trades, and to fit themselves for a self respecting life of honest industry.

NEWSPAPER FAKING.

Much interest will be felt among newspaper men in the announcement of the New York World's new "bureau of accuracy and fair play." The purpose of this department is to check carelessness, avoid needless libel suits to promote fair play, and stamp out fakes and fakers.

The public sometimes laughs at the smaller newspapers as collections of curbstones gossip, and looks with a certain awe at great metropolitan journals of hundred thousand circulation, as institutions dealing with great national issues on which a high standard of accuracy and truth telling is required.

In actual practice the situation is reversed. The smaller papers, those that are close to a small city or village constituency, are held down very rigidly to high standards of accurate reporting. If some one's initial is printed wrong, they will hear about it next day. The most offhand remark is often accepted as containing deep and poisonous innuendo.

On the other hand, even the best of the big metropolitan papers print news on mere hearsay, affecting the most important and delicate interests of business and government. The next day the whole thing is riddled by the people who know about it, error is admitted, and every one forgets about the incident except those who are injured.

The smaller city daily and the country weekly realize fully the folly of all this. It sells papers for the moment, markets a pot boiler for today. In the long run it hurts newspaper circulation and disgusts the public. It places irritations and obstacles in the way of the true newspaper man who is working every minute to find the truth and give it to the public. The World has taken an advance step of the first importance, and one that could do much, if imitated elsewhere, to elevate journalism into a high degree of professional dignity.

JURY RETURNS AN INDICTMENT

Harry K. Thaw and Four Others Charged With Conspiracy

IS SUBJECT TO EXTRADITION

Thaw Apparently Unworried Over Report of Action by New York Officials—Not Probable New Indictment Will Have Any Effect on Extradition Case in New Hampshire

New York, Oct. 24.—The grand jury returned an indictment charging Harry K. Thaw with conspiracy.

Thaw is subject to extradition under the offence charged. The indictment returned is a blanket one covering five persons. Besides Thaw those charged with conspiracy are Richard Butler, Michael O'Keefe, Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. Bench warrants for the arrest of the accused men were immediately issued by Justice Gavegan.

The examination of witnesses before the grand jury was conducted by William T. Jerome. But eighteen witnesses were called and the grand jury returned the indictment within two hours and a quarter after the examination of witnesses began.

The indictment was returned as a result of the contention of the state that the plans for his escape from Matteawan were laid in New York with those named in the indictment as involved in the conspiracy. Roger Thompson drove the automobile in which Thaw fled and Butler was the chauffeur of the second machine.

Mr. Crossman, one of Thaw's attorneys, when informed of the indictment, said:

"A man who has been committed to an asylum as an insane person cannot be adjudged guilty of the crime of conspiracy. I do not believe the indictment will stand, and I do not believe it will have any effect on the proceedings in New Hampshire. I have contended all along that it is not the intention to try Thaw on any indictment for the obvious reason that no conviction could be had."

Thaw Unworried Over Indictment

Concord, N. H., Oct. 24.—Harry K. Thaw was apparently unworried by the report of an indictment returned against him in New York. When he heard the news he sat down before his secretary's typewriter and wrote the following statement:

"We do not know by what alleged testimony Mr. Jerome got this indictment, but judging by falsehoods previously used we may easily guess.

"In any event does it not appear plain that no verdict can be legal from the fact that Judge Seabury of the supreme court of New York within six months instructed the New York grand jury of the April, 1913, term that I was to be considered by the grand jury as under commitment in New York as irresponsible? What answer can be made to this?"

It is stated that the new indictment cannot have any effect on the time set for decision in the extradition case unless the Thaw attorneys ask for delay that they may prepare additional briefs. Such requests for delay would probably be granted.

WILSON'S FIRST VETO

Disapproves Joint Resolution to Reinstate Cadet Who Failed In Exams

Washington, Oct. 24.—President Wilson has sent his first veto to congress.

He disapproved a joint resolution to reinstate Adolph Unger of Mansfield, O., as a cadet at West Point. Unger, appointed by Representative Sharp, failed in examinations after strenuous effort to succeed, and his friends sought another chance for him.

"I regret to do this, but I deem it my duty," wrote the president. "I have the greatest sympathy and admiration for young men like Unger, who seek in spite of difficulties, to show their mettle, but I am convinced, upon careful inquiry, that he cannot, with his present preparation, advantageously continue his course at the West Point military academy."

THOUSANDS GATHER

National Women's Christian Temperance Union Meets In New York

New York, Oct. 24.—More than 3000 delegates from the four corners of the earth opposed to the liquor traffic came here to attend the ninth annual convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance union and the fortieth annual meeting of the National W. C. T. U.

The first meeting was in Plymouth church, Brooklyn, and it was crowded to the doors. Several conferences were also held on woman suffrage and temperance. The New York state organization banquetted the guests at the Hotel Astor. Business sessions began in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn.

Drinks Sweet Cider Nightcaps

North Adams, Mass., Oct. 24.—Sweet cider nightcaps were used for the first time in the local police station cells by Harry Saffor, a 33-year-old farmer of Stamford, under arrest here charged with passing worthless checks. He had a large jug of sweet cider with him when arrested, and insists on taking his usual nightcap before retiring.

MORE STRIKE RIOTS

Thousand Men and Women Battle With Knives and Revolvers

Calumet, Mich., Oct. 24.—Serious rioting broke out afresh in the Red-jacket district of the copper strike zone. A thousand men and women engaged in a fierce battle in the streets following an attack upon a strikers' parade by mine guards and imported gunmen.

Women as well as men were beaten and bruised. Revolvers and knives flashed in the battle, and before state militiamen could restore order half a score of persons were wounded and bleeding.

Women strike sympathizers and wives of miners used the staffs of the flags which they were carrying in the parade to beat off the mine guards. Three guards were beaten over the head and badly hurt; one was stabbed in the head and another in the back. After a hard struggle the militia finally dispersed the mob. Fourteen arrests were made, mostly strikers, including two women.

FIND LOST STEAMER

Centennial, Which Disappeared Six Years Ago, Fast In Ice

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 24.—The steamer Centennial, which left Japan six years ago for San Francisco with a cargo of sulphur and was never heard from, is reported fast in the ice off Saghalin island, Okhotsk sea, near Siberia.

A Russian expedition, bound through the Okhotsk sea, discovered the missing vessel with lifeboats gone, the name partly obliterated and her ironwork corroded. There was no sign of a human being on the ship.

Captain E. Hieber, who piloted the Russian expedition that found the Centennial, told G. A. Griffin, an engineer of the Philippines coast guard, of his discovery, and Griffin repeated the story here at headquarters of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial association. Hieber has been asked for further details.

COMSTOCK BAN ON PANKHURST PAPER

Objects to Article Printed In "The Suffragette"

New York, Oct. 24.—Foes of the suffrage movement enlisted the services of Police Commissioner Waldo in a new fight against Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst because of the paper, "The Suffragette," which Mrs. Pankhurst and her agents have placed on sale.

Anthony Comstock, after announcing three possible violations of the state law by the paper, carried a protest to Waldo, who promised an immediate investigation.

An article on "The Dangers of Marriage," by Christabel Pankhurst, daughter of Emmeline, considerably shocked Comstock and surprised even Waldo. Police activity and Comstock's comments have created a bigger demand than ever for the papers, and those who were selling copies could hardly supply the demand.

TEACHERS RESIGN

New York Instructors Leave School to Become Mothers

New York, Oct. 24.—Fifteen women were named by Superintendent of Schools Maxwell in the first report thus far made on teachers who have been absent since Jan. 1 to become mothers. Included in the list were Mrs. Helen L. Becker, wife of Lieutenant Becker, and Mrs. Katherine C. Edgell, the only two of the fifteen who are now teaching in the schools.

Ten of those on the motherhood roll have already resigned; two others have been suspended, and one is still absent without any action having been taken in her case. This last teacher is Mrs. Hattie V. Barre, who left Sept. 3 last, and supplied a substitute.

The submission of the motherhood register was made after the board voted to dismiss, for alleged neglect of duty, Mrs. Cora Horan, a teacher in school No. 5, Manhattan.

FIGHTING RAT PLAGUE

Situation In Seattle More Serious Than For Six Years

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 24.—Dr. James E. Crichton, health officer of Seattle, says the bubonic plague rat situation in Seattle is serious, but that the health department hoped to prevent an outbreak of the disease.

In six years we have found twenty-four plague rats. A considerable number were taken during the plague outbreak six years ago, and recently seven were killed in a section of the water front which has been thoroughly isolated.

"Thousands of dollars are being expended in Seattle under orders of the health department in tearing down wooden buildings, constructing cement basements and otherwise making the water front as rat proof as possible."

BOY DESPERADO RESISTS POSSE

Holds Off Pursuers Till Severely Wounded by Bullets

FIGHT THROUGH THREE CITIES

He and Companion Had Been Discovered Breaking Into Depot at Waltham—Brought to Bay In Bushes In Newton and Surrenders When Too Weak to Shoot

Boston, Oct. 24.—Brought to bay in a clump of bushes in Newton, after a running battle through three cities and towns with a posse headed by the police of four departments, William Dubois, a 17-year-old Methuen youth, stubbornly resisted his pursuers until riddle with bullets and almost unconscious from the loss of blood.

Twice after he had taken refuge in the brush, which was surrounded on all sides, the police called upon him to surrender. The response each time was a fusillade from the youth's revolver. At last the police opened fire upon his refuge and their weapons pumped bullets through the bushes for several minutes.

Then the members of the posse saw a revolver hurled over the rim of foliage that marked the position of their quarry. Almost inaudibly came the surrender of the boy, against whom all the resources of the police had been pitted: "I'll give up!"

He is in the Newton hospital, one buckshot wound in his neck, another in his head behind the right ear and a bullet wound and buckshot wound in his body. Despite his many wounds, the hospital officials say that he will live. As soon as he recovers sufficiently he will be arraigned in court.

Not since the memorable battle with three yeggs in the streets of Jamaica Plain and in Forest Hills cemetery, five years ago, in which Edmando Gutman was killed, has a manhunt so thrilling and spectacular been staged in the limits of Greater Boston.

Dubois, a mere youth, held off for three hours the posse in pursuit, and appeared to disregard absolutely the pain he must have felt from his wounds. From an exposed position in a rowboat, where he made an admirable target for those on shore, he kept up a steady fire practically all the way from the California street dam in Bemis to the Newton shore, near Riverbank road.

Dubois and a companion were seen attempting to break into the Bleachery depot of the Boston and Maine railroad in Waltham by the station agent, William Mason, whose unexpected return drove them away.

Mason reported the matter to the police, who believe that Dubois may have been one of the gang of four young men who were surprised the night before in an attempt to break into a Watertown grocery, and who made their escape by firing on their pursuers.

When searched by the police he had on his person two .38-caliber revolvers and 200 cartridges. He fired fully fifty bullets in his flight, but no person in the posse was injured.

The police found in his pockets a list of railroad stations which he and his companion, who escaped, had planned to rob. He refused to give any information regarding his comrade, but gave his own name as William Dubois, of 17 Gaston street, Methuen.

MURET ON TRIAL

Charged With Counterfeiting Together With Hans Schmidt

New York, Oct. 24.—A truck bearing printing outfit, stamps, dies and other materials used in the manufacture of money was wheeled before a jury in the federal court when Ernest A. Muret was placed on trial on a charge of counterfeiting.

Muret was indicted on this charge with Hans Schmidt, who confessed to the slaying of Anna Aumuller. Schmidt is in the tombs awaiting trial on the charge of murder, and probably will be a witness in the Muret counterfeiting trial. Schmidt is not likely to be tried under the federal indictment, the state's murder charge taking precedence.

While the jury to try Muret was being drawn, 11 talesmen were excused when they declared themselves prejudiced against Schmidt and Muret.

MONARCHIST UPRISING

Murder of Portguese President Part of Plot Against Government

Lisbon, Oct. 24.—There was a second outbreak in the Portguese monarchist uprising when a group of students stoned the government buildings. Their leaders, as well as fifteen other persons, were arrested.

According to the reports one of the prisoners confessed that President Arriaga and the premier were to have been assassinated as part of the plot against the government. The city is under martial law. Members of the cabinet do not venture abroad unless surrounded by soldiers.

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

In the November Woman's Home Companion the campaign for "Better Babies" is still further carried forward by the establishment of a special department for "Better Babies" in which a series of articles is to be published containing practical sugestions to mothers for the care of children.

Other splendid contributions to the November issue are: "The New Freedom for Little Children," by Mary Heaton Vorse, in which the author shows how the Montessori principle of education may be applied by American mothers. "My son-in-law's wife" by a mother-in-law and "Reducing the Meat Bill," by a retail butcher.

Fiction of Special interest is contributed. The regular Cooking, Fashion, Housekeeping, Home Decoration and Young People's Departments are filled with good things. Special art features and musical contributions complete an issue of unusual beauty interest and practical value.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.

The November issue of Lippincott's contains a full complement of interesting material from writers who are well known to discriminating readers. David Potter, who wrote those famous books, "The Streak," "An Accidental Honeymoon," "I Fasten a Bracelet," etc., is the author of the complete novelette, "The Unspeakable Turke." It is characterized by delightful humor, yet the plot is strong enough to demand and hold the reader's undivided attention. A Southern girl and her mother, through ignorance of business methods, find their house sold over their heads, and they naturally conceive a strong dislike for the one they consider responsible. As it happens, this man has met and fallen in love with the girl. There are some exciting happenings before they finally understand and appreciate each other.

Leonard P. Ayres, Ph. D., Director, Division of Education, of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, gives us some straight-from-the shoulder facts about "The Revolution in Education and Its Cause." It's a big, vital subject, and ought to interest everybody. Other worthful papers are "Destiny in Action," by George L. Knapp; "The Passing of the Gentlewoman," by Nanna E. Frank; "Success," by Ellis O. Jones.

AMUSEMENTS

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

MURRAY STOCK COMPANY.

One of the best stock companies on the road is the famous Peter Murray Company, the plays are all well staged The Quincy public is to receive the biggest value in an entertainment that has ever been offered at Quincy Music hall as this is the first real stock Company that has played in Quincy for years and should bring out the lovers of first class productions. Mr. Murray and his players will leave a lasting impression in their favor. They will play Monday afternoon and evening "The Servant of the House"; Tuesday afternoon and evening "The Pride of Virginia"; Wednesday special performance of "Lena Rivers", a book that many have read and enjoyed Wednesday night "The Boy from Yankeeland." A fine vaudeville show between each act is another feature that should not be overlooked.

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Lovers of clean amusement should not fail to take in the show this last half week at Quincy's pretty playhouse for it certainly is more than good all the way through. James, Horne & Co present a very pleasing playlet, entitled "A New Year's Dream." They are talented artists and with their special scenery and light effects produce a very enjoyable sketch. Last but not least on the program, is the Verdi Quintette in "A Night in Naples." The curtain rises on one of the prettiest scenes ever on this stage and one by one the five artists from across the water make their appearance. Their music, both vocal and instrumental fills the theatre for many minutes.

Among the attractions coming Monday are the Ricci Trio, a singing and musical act featuring Senor Ricci's $10,000 violin; Ajax, the world's strongest man, assisted by Mlle. Emelin wonderful feats of unbelievable strength; Frank Montgomery and Florence McClain, colored stars, late with Williams & Walker Musical Comedy Co.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

On next Monday "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's masterpiece, presented for the first time in this country, in motion pictures, will enter upon the ninth big week of its engagement in Boston at the Tremont Temple. The popularity and interest in the production, increases with every performance. There are few people who are not familiar with the story of this universally read novel. The leading characters are portrayed by an extraordinarily competent cast of French actors. If you desire a wider knowledge of Hugo's world-famous story don't fail to see this production There are daily matinees at a popular scale of prices.

PARK THEATRE.

A new American comedy will be the next attraction at the Park Theatre Boston opening Monday night, October 27. It is called "The Strange Woman" and serves to exploit that delightful actress, Elsie Ferguson pleasantly remembered to Boston playgoers through many different engagements. The comedy abounds in types, mostly humorous ones. Miss Ferguson's managers, Klaw & Erlanger, have provided an adequate production and surrounded their star with a carefully chosen company, some of its better known members being Charles D. Waldron, Alphonz Ethier, Hugh Dillman, Otto F. Hoffman, Georgie Drew Mendum, Mrs. Felix Morris Sarah McVicker, Sara Von Leer, Frances Whitehouse, Annie Buckley and Lois Frances Clark.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

At the Majestic theatre, Boston, October 27th, William A. Brady's production of George Broadhurst's "Bought and Paid For" will be presented for the third "capacity" week It would not be possible to have a play that had been better received or more highly praised. To every man is given the ability to create a masterpiece. Some have the ability to create a number of them, apparently Such a man is George Broadhurst, and "Bought and Paid For" is the acme of his genius. When Broadhurst wrote "The Man of the Hour" it was thought he had written himself out. But he followed with that terrible indictment against man's selfishness, "The Price." And now he offers us "Bought and Paid For," doubtless one of the greatest efforts at characters of the age. This play will not be seen in New England outside of Boston.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

The bill presented at the Orpheum Theatre yesterday was headed by that popular actor Thomas J. Ryan, assisted by his company of players in one of his best sketches entitled "Mag Haggerty's Reception." Mr. Ryan kept his audiences in laughter throughout his thirty minutes. Others to appear were the Florence Trio, direct from the London Music Hall, in a refined operatic offering; Savoy & Brennan amused with their funny sayings; William Morris & Co., presented a dramatic playlet; Bragaw Bros., amused with their comedy acrobatic stunts; Hendricks & Lawrence pleased; and Fox and Foxy created no end of amusement with their specialty

COLONIAL THEATRE.

In the Colonial Theatre, Boston, for two weeks beginning Monday evening, October 27th, Mr. H. H. Frazee will present Victor Herbert's new comic opera, "The Madcap Duchess," in which Miss Ann Swinburne, late prima donna of "The Count of Luxembourg will create the title role. "The Madcap Duchess," is described as a comic opera in two acts by David Stevens and J. H. McCarthy, the latter, one of the most noted writers of England and an authority on French and English historical events. Additional interest attaches to the premiere of "The Madcap Duchess" in Boston by reason of the announcement that Mr. Herbert himself will conduct the opening performance. The production has been staged by Fred G. Latham and the special orchestra of 30 musicians under the direction of Max Hirschfeld The usual matinee performances will be given on Wednesday and Saturday

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

One of the first and best of Civil War plays, "Held by the Enemy," is certain of a cordial welcome at the Castle Square next week. Written by William Gillette at the beginning of his career as actor and playwright, it has had many long runs and revivals and its return to Boston will be the occasion of no little rejoicing. "Held by the Enemy" is not a play of battle and martial conflict. The atmosphere of war is ever present, but its series of scenes are more of romance and personal adventure than of the actual events of war. The plot of "Held by the Enemy" tells the tale of the love of a brave Union officer, Col. Prescott, for a southern girl who returns his love in spite of the fact that he is on the other side of the struggle. Her hand is been pledged to another, a Confederate officer, and the complications that arise therefrom give no little romantic spirit to the play as a whole The cast will be William P. Carleton as Col. Prescott, with Miss Doris Olson as Rachel McCreery, and Mr Craig as the Confederate Lieutenant Gordon Hayne.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

An extraordinary engagement is announced by Manager E. D. Smith for the one week beginning Monday matinee, October 27th. Maeterlinck's exquisite fantasy, "The Blue Bird," which packed that theatre to its utmost capacity on a former three months' visit, is coming back for just this single week. In order to take care of as many "Blue Bird" admirers as possible, daily matinees beginning at 2.30 P. M. will be given. These are additional to the nightly performance, making 12 times of "The Blue Bird" in one week. Among the novel characters are the dog, cat, bread, sugar, water, fire, milk, etc., animals and things transformed into humans by Fairy's wand. There are 11 gorgeous scenes in the production, which is said to have cost the new theatre directors the sum of $150,000. There are also 5 "trick" illusions, and the special music and dances are delightful features. Manager Smith has organized a special mail order department, to take care of "The Blue Bird" mail orders, and patrons sending in their reservation with check or money or der will be promptly served.

BOSEON OPERA HOUSE.

Anna Pavlowa, the incomparable dancer, who still knows no rival in either America or Europe, comes to the Boston Opera House for a series of three performances to take place on the afternoon and evening of Oct. 27 and the evening of Oct. 29. Her supporting company will be the largest and the finest which she ever has brought to these shores, including as it will nearly a score of solo dancers in addition to a ballet of forty and an orchestra of thirty men. Most prominent in her support will be M. Novikoff, premier dancer at the Imperial Opera House, Moscow and M. Cecchetti who holds a similar office at the Opera in St. Petersburg. It was necessary to obtain the permission of His Majesty the Czar before any of these artists could be brought to America. The programs for Saturday matinee at 2.30 and evening at 8.15 will be:

The Soiree de Chopin.
Suite of Dances. Music by Chopin.

QUINCY MUSIC HALL.

Saturday afternoon and evening those attending Quincy Music Hall will be treated to a splendid entertainment. The pictures are all of a high and entertaining character—and the feature picture entitled "The Judges' Vindication" is a powerful drama of absorbing interest. Prof. Neville, America's celebrated photo play lecturer whose power of oratory, elocution and dramatic art have secured for him the meritorius praise of press and public—will lecture on this picture. Also a great amateur show headed by the great Sam Cohen will be given. Laughable farce comedy pictures will close the entertainment.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

With the opening of the engagement of the Henry Jewett Players, at the Plymouth theatre, Boston, on Monday, October 27, will mark the first step in an effort to establish permanently, in Boston, a high class repertory company. The company is newly organized and incorporated in accordance with the laws of Massachusetts. The company is in no sense a "stock" organization. On the contrary, it is a high-class producing company, composed of competent players, and may be classed on a similar plan as the famous Irish Players and Miss Horniman's company. Henry Jewett, director of the company and its leading spirit, is an actor of nearly 30 years' experience in prominent roles. For the opening attraction Mr. Jewett has selected a brand new play, written by Florence J. Lewis, a Radcliffe graduate, entitled "Let's Go a' Gardening." Miss Lewis has taken the "Forward to the Land Movement" as the theme, and has succeeded in writing an interesting novel play, abundant with bright and clever dialogue, with a delightful love story as an undercurrent. There will be no change in policy at the Plymouth Theatre, during the engagement of this company. That is to say there will be the usual Thursday and Saturday matinees, with the only change that on Thursday a popular price matinee, with $1.00 as the top price, will be given.

BEECH WOOD MUCH USED.

In this country beech is the favorite material for wooden shoes, the manufacture of which has reached considerable proportions in the United States according to the department of agriculture, which has just issued a bulletin on the use of the wood. These shoes, the department says, cost from 50 to 75 cents a pair and are good for two years. They are worn by those who have to work in cold or wet places, such as tanneries, breweries, and livery stables, and by workmen in steel mills and glass factories who must walk on hot grates or floors. Farmers, too, are classed among the users.

Beech wood is put to a very much wider range of uses than the average person would be likely to suspect. The department says beech enters into hundreds of articles from hobbyhorse rockers to butchers blocks. We walk on beech floors, eat off beech picnic plates, carry beech baskets, play with beech toys, sit on beech chairs, and in dozens of other ways use articles made of beech almost every day of our lives. Its freedom from taste fits the wood especially for articles which come in contact with foodstuffs, and beech meat boards, skewers, lard tubs, butter boxes, sugar hogsheads, refrigerators, dishes, spoons, and scoops are widely used.

Only one species of beech grows naturally in the United States, but few trees in this country have a wider commercial range. It extends from the Gulf of Mexico into eastern Canada, and in practically every place where it grows it is cut for market. The total yearly output of beech wood in the United States is approximately 500 million board feet.

CAPTAIN BARR

Captain Barr commands the Cunard liner Carmania, which was the first vessel to reach the burning steamer Volturno in response to wireless calls for help. Ten other steamers helped in the rescue work.

Transfer Postponed.

"So you want back your presents?" "At once," declared the girl.

"Well, here's your photograph and your lock of hair. These embroidered suspenders I shall have to mail you."

THOSE HORRID DISHES.

How to Make a Disagreeable Household Task Less Unpleasant.

Most people put off doing disagreeable things. "Won't tomorrow do?" is a familiar household question, and the easy promise, "Yes, I'll do it in a little while," has often tided us over until that merciless "eleventh hour" that finds so many things undone or done helter skelter, in order that we may be ready when the clock strikes 12, says the Youth's Companion.

It is disagreeable to wash dishes. Even mothers, who do most things cheerfully, will sometimes pass the dishes on to youthful and unwilling hands. The schoolgirl invariably has other things to do, and the dishes are so insistent! Even when stacked in the sink they look reproachful. Left in disorder on the table, they glare at you every time you pass, and, hanging over your head when you are playing tennis or finishing a book, they loom like a thundercloud. "I just dread to get at them," you say, and the dread grows greater every time you think of them.

But is doing the dishes as bad as dreading it? To scrape off the leftover food, to pile spoons with spoons and plates with plates, to have a sparkling lather of soapsuds and hot water, to tackle the dishes in the order of their cleanliess instead of inversely or haphazard, to hang up the towels and see a clear sky spanning a golden afternoon—surely there are worse things than that! Washing dishes, like many other disagreeable jobs, requires no concentration. The mind is free to dwell on pleasanter things.

The sense of freedom and the feeling of self righteousness that follow the prompt washing of the dishes are enough to raise the humble task into a fine art and insure that it be done not quickly, but well. "There," said one valiant girl, hanging up the dishcloths with a flourish; "if I plunge headlong into them I am half through before I know it. It is only dreading to do them that gets on my nerves." That, as all who know will admit, was hitting the nail squarely on the head.

WATERMELON PARTY.

How to Give a Novel Porch or Lawn Function.

A watermelon party may be given on the porch or lawn in the fall. Have the color scheme of decorations and menu in pink and green. Send the invitations on cards decorated with watermelons and pickaninnies. Decorate with grinning jack o' lanterns made from small melons or citrons. For the centerpiece select a fine round melon, cut a large slice across the top, scoop out the heart, using a dinner spoon with rotary motion, so as to form pretty cones, which may be thoroughly chilled and served for the first course of the luncheon. Then fill the shell with pink roses and place on a bed of green leaves. Have table dollies of pink crape paper, with a border of melon seeds stuck on with mucilage. Make place cards by writing guests' names on squares of the rind with a sharp knife. Serve:

Chilled Watermelon Cones.
Tomato Bouillon in Green Cups.
Pink Radishes.
Salmon a la Newburg With Parsley.
Saratoga Chips. Rolls.
Watermelon Cake.

The watermelon cake is simply a pink and white layer cake with currants in it.

The melon seeds may be used for games, such as outlining animals or birds, or stringing them with threaded needles, the longest strand threaded in the shortest time bringing a prize.

How to Choose a Vocation.

In choosing your vocation it does not matter so much what you choose as how you do it, and how well you stick to it, says Elizabeth Towne in the Nautilus. Pick out something you think you can do exceptionally well and then devote yourself to it. Choose something you desire to do.

Go in to win on that line, and stick to it through thick and thin. Work at it, develop it, learn all you possibly can about it, and then discover new ways of doing it better than anybody else has ever done it before.

Everybody has more than one talent Pick out the one you like the best and cultivate it and direct it. In doing this you will become self confident quick to think, bright and efficient and successful. Success is one part good choosing and nine parts good sticking to it.

How to Make Comfort Protector.

To make a comfort protector take a piece of cheesecloth four inches longer than the bedquilt is wide, split it exactly in the center, hemstitch both pieces on all but the selvage edges and you have two pretty and inexpensive comfort protectors. A mattress cover is made by taking two pieces of unbleached muslin larger than the mattress by three inches all around. Finish off the bottom with hems and buttons and buttonholes.

How to Adjust Dress Shields.

Instead of sewing or pinning shields in a waist sew a narrow piece of tape or baby ribbon at each end of the shield and sew similar pieces at the proper distance apart in the armholes of all your waists. The shields are quickly tied in place, they are easily changed in wash waists, and there are no pins to rust or prick.

How to Protect White Skirts.

Sew on the edge of the dust ruffle on your white petticoats coarse rick rack braid, which will stand hard wear and prevents fraying of the edge of the ruffle and protects the delicate lace and embroidery on the outside ruffle.

You've often heard us speak of greater value-giving, and small wonder when you stop to consider that this is the basic policy of the live store.

By greater value-giving we mean that for every dollar spent with us, you receive a greater measure of style, quality and workmanship, than you can possibly secure from others for a like amount.

Miss Raymond was assisted by Mrs. Marguerite Pierson Moss, violinist, and Willard Flint, bariton. There was a large audience and Miss Raymond's reception was most cordial.

SPECIAL MATCH.

Weymouth failed to appear at the City Square alleys Thursday night for the final rolloff with the Poehler All Stars. Santa Cruz who has rolled in two matches with the All Stars bunched four men and a special match was held.

Poehler, who has been easing up in his Quincy matches and making phenomenal scores out of town, indulged in a little exertion and rolled a total of 340 one of the best the alley has had. Topping the century by six in his first, he jumped to 121 in the second, and closed with 113. Quinn, his associate, and the well known New England league umpire, reached 111 in his second. Williams of the losers made two 103 singles and a 92 for the best showing on the other team, and Santa Cruz went over 100 only on one string.

The fans were greatly disappointed with the forfeit of Weymouth. The series stands one apiece and it was expected that the final would be a most spectacular one. The score:

Y. M. C. A. BASKET BALL.

Twenty men responded Thursday evening for the call for basket-ball practice at the Y. M. C. A., and from all indications the Association will be represented by two very fast teams. The evening was devoted principally to long and short underhand passing of the ball, working for accurancy and speed. After about twenty minutes spent in this preliminary work the squad was divided into four teams and some snappy scrimmages were indulged in.

The following men were on the floor L. Andrews, R. Corthell, R. Kenn, G. Shirley, F. Croucher, E. Brown, A. Robertson, H. Price, W. Kemp, J. Melville, A. Thomas, C. Parker, H. Trask, H. Miller, S. Dinneen, W. Childs, D. Gearwar, P. Parker, W. Cranshaw and C. Bishop. There are about five men who played on last year's teams who are still to be heard from.

HEPTASOPHS LEAGUE.

Granite conclave of Heptasophs completed a social program at the meeting in Protection hall Thursday evening which includes a supper and entertainment on Thanksgiving eve, and the annual dance which will be held about New Years. One candidate will be initiated at the Nov. 13 meeting. Mark Gill, a well known bowler, is chairman of a committee appointed to consider the formation of a bowling league. Up to the present the Heptasophs have been unable to make arrangements to roll in Quincy and the committee is considering out of town matches. The league will have four clubs and the members all say Tuesday is their night. The only open night is Thursday and regular meetings occur then.

SOCCER LEAGUE.

Two soccer games in the Grammar school league were played on the upper Merrymount park field Thursday afternoon. Montclair beat Wollaston 3 to 0 and the Massachusetts Fields beat the Gridley Bryants 1 to 0. Montclair is exhibiting a fine inside knowledge of the game and the prospects are that they will be among the first place teams in their divisions. Massachusetts Fields appears to be slightly stronger on the offensive than the Gridleys and may develop in a fast team. The indications are that the weather will once again interfere with the schedule.

CASE DISMISSED.

The continued case against J. L. Wright for neglect to support his family at Quincy was heard this morning and the complaint dismissed. It seems that the complaint was an old one and that since it was issued Wright had been sending his family money from Newport News and from Panama. As there was no further cause for court interference in the matter the case as stated above was dismissed.

EATON DEFENSE OUTLINES CASE

Mrs. Eaton Will Tell Story of Her Life

MAY NOT CALL JUNE KEYES

Counsel For Defendant Says Admiral Had Double Personality and Was Drug Fiend—Boston Physician to Testify He Sold Forty-Six Grains of Arsenic to Eaton

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 24.—In an opening address bristling with sensations, Attorney Francis J. Geogan, junior counsel for Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, on trial here charged with murdering her husband by poison, declared that the defence would produce a Boston physician who would testify that he had sold Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton 4600 tablets containing a total of forty-six grains of arsenic. The autopsy on the admiral's body showed that it contained 16.67 grains of this poison.

"Our duty to the living compels us to speak plainly, even though at the expense of the dead," said Geogan. "We will show you that Admiral Eaton had a dual personality. He was a veritable Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. One side of his nature was that of a polished gentleman. The other side was that of the vilest of the vile."

Mr. Geogan said Mrs. Eaton would take the stand and tell the story of her life. He said she would not raise the defence of insanity. He declared that Admiral Eaton was a drug fiend." Speaking further of the admiral's habits, he said: "We will show you that he was on a drunken spree when his first wife was dying in Washington and that he didn't attend her funeral.

"We will show you how the officers underneath him disobeyed his commands, as they knew they had to. One night he created a scene aboard ship by coming out on the quarter-deck in pajamas, giving illogical and dangerous orders to his inferior officers.

"We will show you that he was the vilest and coarest of men while under the influence of drugs. Mrs. Eaton will tell you she had no motive for killing him. We ask no favors, no mercy, no charity. All we want is a just, true and righteous verdict."

Attorney Geogan said that when the admiral gave "crazy" orders aboard ship he was not under the influence of liquor, but under the influence of drugs.

Court did not convene until 2:15, the opening having been postponed to await the arrival of the noon train from Boston. Geogan began his address at 2:30. He said:

"The trial of a capital case with its story of death, desolation and woe is one of the most solemn occasions of human life."

He dwelt at length on the responsibilities of the jurymen who have to decide "such a portentious issue as this which decides the life or death of the defendant.

"You shall not take her life until it is proven beyond suspicion that she is guilty," he declared.

"Unless you find Jennie M. Eaton committed the overt acts that brought about the death of her husband, you cannot consider the question of insanity.

"You cannot find her insane until you find her guilty of the crime charged.

"She does not raise the defence of insanity.

"She herself will tell her life story to you on the witness stand."

The defence will undoubtedly require four days to put in its evidence, according to W. A. Morse.

It has not been decided whether Mrs. June Keyes, favorite daughter of Mrs. Eaton, will be called to testify for the defence.

"I have not decided about putting June on the witness stand," Morse declared. "Her appearance will depend altogether on circumstances."

The mother and daughter of Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. Virginia Harrison and Dorothy Ainsworth, will probably be recalled to the witness stand by the defence.

MEMORIAL TO BUTT

Fountain Has Been Completed and Will Soon Be Dedicated

Washington, Oct. 24.—Plans will be completed in the near future for the dedication of a fountain south of the White House, in honor of the memories of Major Archibald W. Butt, former White House military attache, and Francis D. Millet, painter and author, who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster early in 1912.

Announcement of the completion of the fountain has been made. Former President Taft is chairman of the committee which raised the fund for the erection of the memorial.

The fountain includes a large bowl of Tennessee marble, from the center of which rises a shaft to the height of twelve feet. The water is thrown aloft from four globes brimming over the sides of the bowl in a cascade. Two allegorical figures symbolizing chivalry and art, are a part of the general scheme. Around the edge of the bowl is the following inscription: "In memory of Francis Davis Millet, 1846-1912, and Archibald Willingham Butt, 1865-1912, this monument had been erected by their friends, with the sanction of congress."

Both the sculptor and the architect of the memorial donated their services to the memorial committee.

WOULD BAR SULZER

Effort to Be Made to Keep Him From Assembly If He Is Elected

New York, Oct. 24.—If William Sulzer, the deposed governor, is elected to the state assembly, efforts will be made to bar him. This announcement was made by Assemblyman Louis Cuvillier, who said:

"The assembly has the right to pass upon the character of its members, and I believe removal from office is sufficient grounds for an open expression on the part of the assembly as to whether that body deems Mr. Sulzer fit for membership."

DRINKING WATER IS CONDEMNED

Railroad Furnishing Passengers With "Diluted Sewage"

Washington, Oct. 24.—One great railroad system has been furnishing drinking water to its passengers which the experts of the public health service have pronounced, after bacteriological examination, to be nothing less than "diluted sewage."

Surgeon General Blue reported to Assistant Secretary Newton of the treasury department that an investigation disclosed that the railroad company had been filling the water tanks of its passenger coaches at a supply 300 yards down stream from the sewage outlet of a large eastern city. An examination disclosed more than 60,000 bacteria in each teaspoonful of water. The investigator reported that the water was "turbid," had a "pronounced taste" and was "grossly polluted."

Pending the outcome of a notice to the railroad company to change its source of supply, officials have withheld the name of the line.

SAVED BOY'S LIFE

Boston Elevated Inspector Lifts Front End of Electric Car

Boston, Oct. 24.—Morris Weisfield, 19, of 865 Harrison avenue, was saved from certain death by the efforts of Inspector M. Kearney of the Elevated company when the latter lifted the front end of a big car at the corner of Massachusetts and Huntington avenue so that Weisfield could be dragged from beneath the fender.

Weisfield ran in front of the car, and before the motorman could stop Weisfield was knocked down and pushed under the fender.

Inspector Kearney, who was riding on the front of the car, and who is a powerfully built man, jumped off and lifted the front end while the motorman and conductor pulled Weisfield in an unconscious condition to a place of safety. The boy was hurried to the city hospital, and although seriously injured, the surgeons say he will recover.

The crew succeeded in launching a boat, but the steamer sank in a few minutes. The boat was swamped.

Several of the crew clung to the rigging, but with one exception all succumbed to the cold and exposure during the night.

Richest Young Man In the World Gives Time to New York Politics

ASTOR IN POLITICS

Believes All Citizens Should Be Interested In Civic Affairs

New York, Oct. 24.—Seated at a desk in the Mitchel league headquarters, Vincent Astor labored with figures and plans for the Mitchel mayoralty campaign.

It is up to him to make ends meet, and he has buckled down to his job just as though money matters represented the greatest problem in the world to him. He could sign a check for enough to carry the entire fight through and never miss the money, but he is working at his job in an entirely different manner.

Astor rapidly grasped the details and soon was making plans and offering suggestions.

"The statement of Sulzer as to the domination of Tammany in the state government is an indication of a situation which must be corrected. Everybody has probably felt that this power was being wielded," said Astor.

The young multi-millionaire will confine his work to the direction of the finance committee and will not go out himself in an effort to raise campaign funds.

"I probably wouldn't be much of a success at that," he said.

Astor intends to make his office hours from 10 to 5.

MISHAP TO TEXAS IN SPEED TRIALS

Breaks Valve Stem and Will Be Delayed In Tests

Rockland, Me., Oct. 24.—Engine trouble halted the standardization trials of the government's largest dreadnaught, Texas. The breaking of a valve stem on the forward low pressure cylinder was the cause of the trouble. It will take at least two days to make repairs.

So far as the tests went they were declared by officials on board to be satisfactory. She had just completed her first run at twenty-one knots when the accident happened. This last run will have to be repeated, and then will come the five top speed runs before the standardization trials are completed.

SHERIFF SUED FOR LOSS

Fairbairn Is Held Accountable For Clerk's $35,151 Shortage

Boston, Oct. 24.—District Attorney Higgins has brought suit against Sheriff John R. Fairburn on behalf of Middlesex county for $50,000 as the result of shortages in the accounts of the East Cambridge house of correction, discovered earlier in the year and shortly after the death of a bookkeeper who had them in his charge.

The defalcation amounts, according to the report of the American Audit company, which made a report early in September, to $35,151.

Mr. Higgins said that he was led to make his action public because he has recently been charged by the Progressive candidate for district attorney with neglecting to take action in the case through allegiance to the Middlesex "county ring."

SUICIDE FROM GRIEF

Mother Ends Life With Revolver as Baby Dies From Burns

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 24.—Mary, the 3-year-old daughter of Mrs. John Most, was playing with matches when her clothing caught fire. The mother heard the little one's cries and went to her assistance. The daughter, however, died in a short time from burns.

The mother, frantic with grief, procured a revolver, and standing in front of a mirror, shot herself through the head, dying almost instantly.

Put Ice In "Cooler."

A Marked Bullet

How a Country Boy Got Away From the Farm

By EDWARD L. PARKER.

A murder in a quiet farming community relatively excites as much commotion as the shooting down of a mob in a city. I was then eighteen years old and had never known anything so exciting as the killing of a man whom I had known all my life. I ran out of the house and down the road to the scene of the murder. On my arrival I saw several of the neighbors standing on the porch discussing who the murderer could be.

Pushing by them, I went into the room where the crime had been committed and saw the body stretched on a lounge, where it had been lifted from the floor. I noticed that the shirt front, besides being covered with blood, had been blackened. Mr. Ackers had probably been shot by one so near him as to produce this blackening by burnt powder. Turning my eyes from the body, I saw a little round thing on the floor about the size of a small marble. I picked it up and found it to be a bullet. It was sticky with blood.

It occurred to me that it was the bullet with which the shooting had been done. I had never heard of detectives, for I had always lived on a farm, and this was before the day when the country newspapers were filled with stories about the wonderful tracings of this class of persons. Therefore it did not occur to me that the bullet might be of use in furnishing a clew to the murderer. It did not occur to me that it would be a fine thing to possess a bullet that had killed a man, and I thrust it into my trousers pocket.

I had no sooner done so than Dr. Budd came in with several others and, after examining the body, said:

"He has been shot through and through."

Some one, noticing me, told me to get out. I did so reluctantly, for since this was the only exciting event that had come into my life I thought it a hardship not to be permitted to remain to see and hear all there was to be seen and heard. I joined the loiterers outside and learned that the police had been notified and were expected soon. A big man with a badge on his breast came before I left and went into the house with an air of authority. I envied him, thinking him to be a very important personage, for everybody made way for him.

"I CONFESSED THAT I HAD THE BULLET."

I knew nothing, at least for some time, of what was going on with reference to the matter. The body was duly buried, the funeral being a very large one. I attended myself, moved by a desire to see all that I was permitted to see connected with the event of the murder, and when it was all over and I was obliged to settle back into my farm duties, unrelieved by any excitement whatever, I felt like a boy the day after the circus had come and gone.

It was then that I took the bullet from my pocket and looked at it as the only memorial I possessed of the only exciting event that had entered into my uneventful life. I owned a squirrel gun and was more or less interested in arms and ammunition. I dropped the bullet into water to wash the blood off it and wiped it on my trousers. I owned a little magnifying handglass which I had bought for 10 cents. Without any especial object in mind I brought it to bear on my prize. Two scratches on the lead were revealed by the glass, and I noticed that they were parallel.

Now, if I had not been of an inquiring mind my story would here come to an end, or, rather, it would never have been begun. I certainly did not connect these scratches with the discovery of the murderer. I simply couldn't understand what caused them. But I was not long in suspecting that they had been produced by the tiny protuberances, probably rust, in the barrel of the weapon from which the bullet had been fired. That theory accounted for their parallelism.

But I was not sure, and in order to prove the matter I got down my squirrel gun, and, looking down into the barrel, by focusing the sun's rays with my magnifier I saw a minute speck which might cause a scratch on a bullet fired past it. Loading the gun with a new bullet, I fired the ball into a tree, cut it out and examined it. But if the scratches had been made they had been so added to that I could not detect them. I fired another bullet into a bank with the same negative result. Looking about for some softer substance to put it into, I noticed the barrel used to catch rainwater from the roof of the house, and it occurred to me to catch the bullet in water. I made my experiment again, this time in the water barrel, and, examining the ball with my microscope, saw a scratch corresponding with the rust speck in the barrel of my gun.

Then the fact came into my brain that the barrel of the pistol which had been used to kill Mr. Ackers undoubtedly contained two little protuberances against which the bullet had rubbed on being fired, and the distance between these protuberances would be exactly the same as between the scratches. I do not mean that this occurred to me as a possible means of discovering the murderer. I merely looked upon it as an interesting fact.

Meanwhile the police were investigating. The period of the detective was coming on, and two or three men were working on the case. But they worked secretly, and I knew nothing about what they were doing, nor did I receive any information upon this till a man of the name of Coyne was arrested for the murder and held for trial. There was a lot of circumstantial evidence against him. Mr. Ackers had owed him some money, which Coyne had vainly tried to get. Coyne had been heard to use violent language to Ackers. Indeed, a threatening letter from the former was found among the latter's papers. Immediately after the murder Coyne had disappeared and was arrested in a distant city. He owned a pistol, which was captured by the police, and one chamber was found empty. The evidence consisted in these two features—the matter of securing payment of the debt and the revolver, one chamber of which had been discharged.

I was in court during the trial and heard the prosecuting attorney make a strong point against the prisoner by producing the accused's revolver. When the court adjourned I went to Coyne's counsel, and I confessed that I had the bullet which killed Ackers and which had not been found by the police. I also told him of my experiments and that I believed the pistol with which the murder had been committed could be identified by the scratches on the bullet.

The lawyer—Truesdale—stared at me while I spoke with eyes as large as butter plates, then asked me a lot of questions. The trial had ended for the day, and he immediately adopted means to be ready with the new evidence on the morrow. He told me to bring the bullet to him at once in cotton, fearing that it might receive other scratches. I did as he bid me, and the next day when the court convened I went there, as requested.

The moment I entered the courtroom Coyne looked at me with terrible anxiety on his face, having been apprised of what had passed between me and his counsel. As for me, I was wondering whether I would prove him a guilty on an innocent man. A barrel of water stood in the courtroom beneath the judge's bench. Truesdale instructed me to load my squirrel gun with a new bullet and fire it into the water. I did so, and he showed the bullet and the interior of the gun barrel to the jury, using the same means as I had used in my experiment, except that his microscope was more powerful and his light was electric. The scratch on the lead was apparent.

The bullet that had killed Ackers was then produced and the scratches shown the jury. It was of the same caliber as Coyne's revolver. A new bullet was then put in Coyne's pistol and fired into the water.

I was watching the prisoner, and as soon as the experiment with the squirrel gun had terminated I saw his face light up with hope. When the bullet was taken out of the water he showed great agitation. His counsel first examined the bullet, then looked at him with an expression of joy. The ball was examined by the jury and found to be without a scratch.

The demonstration that Ackers had not been killed from the prisoner's revolver was conclusive, and since this was the keystone of the evidence against him the state's case fell to the ground. He was acquitted, and, though many still believed him guilty, most persons were convinced of his innocence.

The moment he was made free he came to me and embraced me. "Come with me," he said. I went home with him, and he asked, "What can I do for you?"

"Help me get away from the farm."

"The best way to do that is to educate you. Would you like to go to college?"

I replied that I would, and he sent me to a preparatory school and after that to college and gave me also a profession.

The real murderer of Ackers was subsequently arrested. I took enough interest in the case to hunt down the pistol with which the murder was done and tested it for the scratches. It had become somewhat rusted and showed other marks besides those on the bullet in my possession, but there were two that gave the same distance measurement. The evidence was not necessary, for the murderer confessed.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

As it was summer and not far from the line, I had not brought the boat cloak with us. I had not even worn my sailor jacket, but my waistcoat was heavy and warm, and I was thankful that I had it. I took it off and, despite her protestations, slipped it on her. In girth it was big enough to encircle her twice, which was all the better for her comfort. I drew it around to cover her breast with a double fold, and with a length of line I had in my pocket I made it fast. We sat close together and talked in low whispers, and I thrilled at the contact of her sweet presence in spite of our peril.

How long we talked or how long we waited I have no means of telling. It grew dark in the cave very early, and when I ventured into the outside room after what seemed an interminable wait, I found night had fallen. I felt pretty sure that we need apprehend no attack that night, and yet it was necessary to keep watch, so I proposed that one of us should sleep while the other listened. Naturally she was the first to take rest. It was too damp and cold to lie down on the sand, so I wedged myself against one of the least rotted of the chests, whose shape had been kept intact by the pile of gold and silver bars, and somewhat hesitatingly offered her the shelter of my arms.

"Madam," I said, with all the formality I could muster, "you must have sleep. You cannot lie upon this damp sand, and it is bad enough to sit upon it, but upon my shoulder and within the support of my arms you shall have rest. I swear to you"—

"Swear not," she replied, coming closer to me. "I trust you, and if I am to sleep I know that I will be safe within your arms."

"As my sister, had I one, or as my mother, were she here, will I support you," said I.

Before she closed her eyes she made her evening prayer for herself and for me, and then she made me promise that I would awaken her when I judged it to be midnight, and, upon my promise, without more to do she nestled down and went to sleep, her head upon my shoulder.

Surely, never had man a greater compliment paid him than I by that maid that night!

I sat there motionless, my bared sword at my side, listening. I could hear nothing, no sound except her soft breathing and once in awhile the sough of the night wind through the trees outside, which penetrated faintly into the cave, and at infrequent intervals the cry of some night bird came to me, but there was no sound of humanity.

How long we sat there I know not. It was my purpose to keep awake the night through, and I think I must have kept awake the greater part thereof, but toward morning my head dropped back on the pile of ingots, and I fell asleep. Yet I did not relax my clasp upon the sleeping figure lying upon my breast. It was she who awakened when the dim light began to sift through the narrow opening into the little cave where we sat.

"Master Hampdon," she said, bending over me, having arisen without disturbing me, "it is morning."

I sprang to my feet instantly, as she shook me gently and grasped my sword as I did so, whereat she laughed.

"Why did you not awaken me?" she asked reprovingly.

"I don't know. I must have"— I began in great confusion.

"You must have gone to sleep yourself," she laughed.

"I am ashamed," I replied, "that I should have failed in my duty to keep good watch. I didn't awake you when I might because you needed sleep yourself, and then, like a big animal, I went to sleep myself."

"I am glad," she said, smiling at me, and I could just see her lovely face faintly in the dark twilight of the cave, "that you did and nothing happened."

"It is just as well then," I said, smiling in turn, "we have both slept. I feel greatly refreshed."

"And I."

"Thank God!" I said fervently.

"What is to be done now?" she asked.

"First, breakfast."

I broke open a cocoanut with my ax. I had become expert at it, and we had food and drink in plenty and for variety some of the hard bread which still remained which I had brought with us and other fruit. I lighted the lantern for a moment and went toward the sound of the falling water. The cocoanut shell made an excellent cup, and I brought her enough clear, cool, sweet water to lave her face and hands. Save for the stiffness of the constrained position and some slight pain caused by the damp we were both fit for any adventure.

Well, we should have need of our strength. When we finished our meal and our refreshing ablutions, she looked at me inquiringly.

"Well, what next?"

"The next thing," said I, "is to see what is toward."

"You won't leave the cave," she said, catching me by the shoulder.

"I should find it difficult were I so minded," I answered, smiling and thrilling to her touch again, as always. Indeed, I have never got used to it even after all these years. As I look back at it now I do not think I have ever had happier moments in my life than those in which she clung to me and was dependent upon me.

"Why not?" she asked.

"You forget that we broke down the way last night."

"But you are a sailor; you might make shift."

"Yes; but not you," I answered.

"Without me?"

"Without you I go nowhere."

She looked at me with shining eyes.

"Come," said I, "let us go into the outer room. We may find out something."

I had wound my watch in the dark and looked at it now as we came into the light. It was three bells in the morning watch, or about half after 9. We went past the altar with its grim, bony circle of attendants and stared through the entrance. There was an open space in front of the cliff forty or fifty yards wide perhaps. After looking some time and seeing nothing I foolishly—and yet it would have made no difference in the end—stepped out upon the shelf which made a sort of platform in front of the cave, and Mistress Lucy fearlessly came with me.

We had scarcely appeared in view when to our astounded surprise we heard the report of a firearm and a heavy bullet struck the coral wall just over our heads. I had just time to mark the spot whence it came by the betraying smoke as I leaped back into the shelter, carrying my precious charge before me. I was puzzled beyond measure. I was certain that the savages in these parts of the south seas knew nothing about firearms, and I could not account for it. The shower of arrows and spears that came through the opening and fell harmlessly on the sand I could easily account for, but not that shot.

"That," said I solemnly, "was a narrow escape."

"Do these islanders have firearms?" she said, the same thought in her mind.

"I never heard of it. I cannot account for it."

"I can, though," she said. "Just before the discharge of that gun I caught the sight of a man in clothes such as you wear. Could it be possible that it was some one from the ship?"

I nodded my head.

"It is quite likely," I answered.

At this moment conversation was interrupted by a hail. I heard in that lonely island my own named called.

"Master Hampdon," the cry came to us, "will you respect a flag of truce? If so show yourself at the opening, and I shall do the same."

"Don't go," cried my little mistress, hearing all; "they are utterly without honor and"—

"I think it will be best for me to go," I said. "Stand clear so that if any treacherous movement be made I shall have space to leap backward, and meanwhile look to your weapons."

I examined my pistols and then calling out that I would faithfully observe the flag of truce I stepped out into the open. There below me on the edge of the glade, convenient to a tree behind which he could leap, for the rascal trusted me apparently as little as I trusted him, stood the wretch, Pimball. Back of him, beneath the trees, I distinguished Gibby and a number of the crew, nearly all of them, I should judge, and back of these were massed the savages. Pimball had a white neck cloth tied to the muzzle of his gun.

"Say what you have to say and be quick about it," I said, but he looked past me and took off his hat with a profound sweep.

"Good morning, Mistress Wilberforce," he cried.

I turned in a hurry and found that she had stepped out by my side. The two of us presented a fair mark for any weapon. One might have escaped, but hardly two.

"Get back," I cried harshly.

"I stay where you are," she answered firmly. "See, I too am armed." Her little hand lifted a heavy pistol.

"I can talk with the two of you just as well as with one," said Pimball.

"Talk on and be brief," I returned, seeing that there was no use arguing with my little mistress.

"You have found the treasure," he began; "there is no use denying it. We have it from our savage friends that the things are there. In years gone by they sacrificed here and on the cone yonder; but for generations the island has been taboo. The white man has broken the ban and we are here to take the treasure."

"Indeed!" said I sarcastically, whereat he turned pale with anger but still mastered himself.

Pimball Had a White Neck Cloth Tied to the Muzzle of His Gun.

SCHOOL CENSUS GIVEN BY AGES

Seven Year Olds Lead While Number at Five is Small

As already noted there are in Quincy 8967 children over five years of age and under 15 years, a gain of 319 over a year ago. They are divided among the different ages as follows: Five years, 561, Six years, 962; Seven years, 1045; Eight years, 880; Nine years, 982; Ten years, 912; Eleven years, 956; Twelve years, 888; Thirteen years, 941; and Fourteen years 840.

The South Quincy ward, although the smallest in area has the largest number, 2220, and leads at every age except one. Ward Six has the most five year olds; but why are the figures for this age so low in the city?

NORTH STREET FIRE.

District Engineer Frank C. Packard was in charge of the fire on North street, Thursday afternoon, during the temporary absence from the city of Chief Litchfield. Frank did a good job, making a quick stop and preventing the fire from communicating with the house, where the only damage done was by a little smoke, not even water being used in the house part of the structure. The barn is attached to the house, and being an old building, prompt work only saved the building. The fire looked wicked at first, with it great clouds of black smoke shooting heavenward, but well directed hydrant streams soon assumed control . A carriage and some other small articles in the barn were destroyed.

GOVERNOR DID NOT COME.

Gov. Foss, who informed the City Clerk Thursday morning that he might come to Quincy that night, and speak in City Square, did not put in an appearance. Morning papers report him as being one of the speakers at the banquet tendered to Grand Exalted Ruler Leach of the Elks at the Somerset that evening. However His Excellency may decide to pay Quincy a brief visit before the present campaign is over.

DASH FOR LIBERTY.

People living in the vicinity of Marsh street witnessed an interesting Marathon race Thursday afternoon between Sergt. Bishop of the police department, Assistant Court Officer Hultman and a Russian who was about to be taken to an insane asylum.

The man had been ordered committed and the two officers brought him from the station to put him into the wagon when he made a dash for liberty and started on the run down Marsh street. Sergt. Bishop was a close second at the start, but Hultmans long legs soon outdistanced the sergeant and he took second place. The escaped prisoner however was no mean runner and for a time he continued to hold a good lead. Eventually however the long strides of Court Officer Hultman won out, for he gradually shortened the space between him and the sprinter although it looked for a time as if he would win.

A small boy came to the rescue of the pursuing officers and his foot correctly placed resulted in throwing the fleeing man. The officers then closed in on him and the race was over. It was interesting however while it lasted.

ST. MARY'S LEAGUE.

The St. Mary's Bowling league will open the St. Mary's hall alleys Nov. 5. The ten high average men of last season will be apointed team captains. The committee is making up the schedule and are considering entering a City league if one is organized. The alleys which were installed last season are in fine condition and the bowling this year will undoubtedly be classy.

REPUBLICAN RALLY.

The Republican City Committee announce a rally for Saturday evening at New Colonial hall to be addressed by Candidates Gardner, Langelier, Piper, Sandberg and others. Presiden John R. Richards will preside.

—If it is true, as Secretary Lane has been quoted as saying, that but two per cent of the land that has been reclaimed by the government is under cultivation, the fact would seem to show that making more land is not the whole solution of the agricultural problem. Beside the land there must be people who will cultivate the land and that is much more difficult to obtain.—Taunton Herald.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The Thursday Evening Club which voted not to incorporate a building association for the purpose of erecting a club house is planning several improvements for their present quarters in the Ellsworth block.

Hallowe'en Eve will be the occasion of much festivity this year. At the Cunningham gym preparations are under way for a social, and several clubs in Milton have planned their annual affairs. Numerous house parties in all parts of the town will take place that evening.

The wind and storm of the past two weeks did not strike in very heavy in Milton although a gale of 62 miles an hour passed over the town. Most of the boats moored off the Milton Boat Club had been taken from the water and the few that were in were buffetted about but not damaged.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cushing and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Nelson who were married during the past week will live on Clapp street, Milton. Both brides are Quincy girls.

Friends of William Graham of Bryant avenue are pleased to learn that he is quickly recovering from a severe case of typhoid fever at the Milton hospital.

Mrs. George Simpson, who was operated on at the Convalescent Home, is doing well and is expected home during the coming week.

Mrs. John Jones of Beale street is at her home with a slight illness.

John, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. George Rawson of Edge Hill road fell Wednesday and received a bad scalp wound. The child is under the observation of physicians.

Football activities at the Cunningham gym are not equal to past years owing to the dearth of good material. The last season players still reside there but many will not don the togs. The bowling league is almost under way, the opening matches taking place Tuesday evening.

At football last Saturday, Newton High defeated Quincy High 20 to 7.

The Milton Educational Society held its meeting of the season Wednesday evening.

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. If you want your own town to thrive

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

PROVED FATAL.

Jennie DiBona, four year old daughter of Antonio DiBona of 215 Copeland street died last night at the Quincy City Hospital from severe burns received Wednesday afternoon. The body is at the home of her father. The clothing of little Jennie took fire while she was lighting the wick of a discarded lamp which she found in the yard. Her 12 year old sister Lora beat out the flames with her bare hands. Both were treated by Dr. John H. Ash. Jennie was removed to the Quincy City Hospital in the police ambulance but was beyond aid. Lora is at her father's home, suffering from a severe attack of hysteria.

QUINCY WINS AGAIN

Shut Out South Boston High School

Was Strong On Offensive

Quincy High school gave South Boston the biggest defeat of the season when they beat them 24 to 0 on the new Merrymount oval. Friday afternoon. The local team showed more real inside knowledge of football than in past games, but lost 95 yards through penalties while the visitors lost but 20 yards.

Quincy, strong on the offensive was able to penetrate the Boston line at will, but on the defensive was rather weak. Several plays that occured did not look quite right to the spectators, but on the whole they were pleased with the game. Over 300 braved the elements and many on the side lines were High school pupils, evidence of the growing popularity of the team.

Paige opened the scoring in the second period by kicking a drop from the 35 yd. line. Larkin made the first touchdown by receiving pretty forward from Paige. Jepson bucked the line for the second, and Larkin made the third by skirting right end for 35 yds. Hamlin kicked three goals.

The field and ball was heavy otherwise Quincy would have rolled up a larger score. They lost the ball several times on fumbles, recovered it and lost it again. In the third period, South Boston just escaped being held on their three yard line. The backfield of Quincy worked very fast at times.

The first period opened when South Boston kicked off to Crosscup who rushed ball back 10 yds. Crosscup gained 1 yd., White 4, Brown 1, Page 4, making first down. Hamlin made 2, Jepson 2 and on the third down tried a forward which Skayhan intercepted and ran back 35 yds. Larkin recovered a fumble. Larkin gained 6 and White 5 making first down. Crosscup gained 3, Brown 5, and Hamlin 4, making first down. Crosscup gained 3. Jepson 2, White 2, Larkin punted, White recovered on a fumble by South Boston. White and Crosscup failed to gain. Page lost 5, and the period closed with ball in Quincy's possession

NEW PASTOR SELECTED

Quincy Point Church Will Call Rev. S. C. Lang

A church meeting of the Washington Street Congregational church at Quincy Point was held last evening. It was unanimously voted to extend a call to Rev. Stephen C. Lang of Boston, who has been an assistant of Rev. A. A. Stockdale. A meeting of the parish will be necessary to act on the selection, but all are enthusiastic for Mr. Lang who is a young man of promise and ability.

BURGLARY REPORTED.

It was reported to the police Friday that the house of Mrs. Chappel on Ocean avenue, Squantum, had been entered by burglars during the absence of the family. Capt. McKay who investigated, found that entrance had been made by forcing one of the windows. On the floor was a suit of old wet clothes while a set of dry clothes was all that was found missing. This leads the police to believe that the party was not a burglar but got thoroughly wet through by the rain, and that he entered the house and after getting a change of clothing took his departure.

Although Amos D. Albee has directed the music of the Baptist Sunday School at Wollaston since 1876, it was Albert G. Olney who had charge of the church choir from 1876 to 1885. Mr. Albee succeeded him.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell of Labrador is to be Francis Sayre's best man at the White house wedding. It will not be necessary to build a hot fire in the furnace on his account.

As only one person in 200 has to pay the new income tax, there is great enthusiasm for the law among 99 per cent of the people.

When Mrs. Pankhurst gets elected to the English parliment, all she will have to do when the majority goes against her will be to go without her breakfast. Then they will pass any law she wants.

Jack Johnson has become a naturalized French citizen, and no deputation of prominent Americans has gone across to persuade him not to go back on his native land.

Jessie Wilson has had a chrysanthemum named after her, but few of the girls show interest enough in the vegetable garden to christen any potatoes or cabbages.

If the President and Congress wished to satisfy Mrs. Pankhurst, they should have proceeded to Ellis Island personally, and let her out immediately.

Owing to the fact that President Huerta kicked his dog savagely yesterday, Wall street thinks the prices of stocks are too high.

It is complained that 3000 Methodist ministers get only $500 a year each, but think of all the slippers and motto cards presented by admiring parishioners!

Ambassador Gerard can't find a suitable house at Berlin, although it had been supposed in this country that one of the boarding houses for American tourists would fulfill all requirements.

The small boy, who is expected to go to dancing school about now, agrees heartily with his great grandmother that it is a demoralizing amusement.

The popular way for the girls to observe Apple day Oct. 21 was to have mother make some apple pie.

Julian Hawthorne has finished his prison term for violation of the postal laws on mining promotions. If now he should sell a sufficiently large quantity of his stock, will he regain his social standing?

Mrs. Wilson took a barrel of New Hampshire apples back to the White House. On those long winter evenings when there is nothing else to do, she can roast some of them over the fire on the parlor hearth.

The expectations of the immigration officers that Mrs. Pankhurst would not require anything to eat, while detained at Ellis Island, were disappointed.

Ambassador Page may have felt worried about being the only man at the British royal wedding without gorgeous uniform and decorations, but anyway he was not put out of the building therefor.

THE AIGRETTE WEARERS.

Much lamentation is reported from the steamship docks, where women tourists returning from Europe are being ingloriously despoiled of aigrettes and other illegal bird plumage under the new laws.

It is the province of women to make themselves attractive by all legitimate adornment. The slender, feathery form of an aigrette seems to many of them to give the final touch of grace and lightness. They forget how fast public sympathy is moving in favor of all forms of bird life. To the majority of persons, an aigrette suggests some sordid scene where ruthless hunters are killing beautiful birds for the dollars there is in it. This makes the wearer repulsive instead of attractive.

Students of bird life say that a great deal of millinery sold as artificial, in order to satisfy the demands of humane purchasers, is not really so, but is murderously robbed from wild birds.

DOCTOR TELLS OF POISON SALE

Says Admiral Bought Forty-Six Grains of Arsenic

MRS. EATON ON WITNESS STAND

Is Delighted at Chance to Tell Her Story In Effort to Save Herself From Electric Chair—Eaton Admitted to Drinking Liquor Enough to Float Battleship

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 25.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton went on the witness stand today to tell the story of her life in an effort to establish her innocence of the murder of her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, and thereby save herself from the electric chair. Mrs. Eaton expressed keen delight at the opportunity to tell her story.

"I shall establish my innocence beyond a doubt when all the facts are heard by the jury," she said. "I have long waited for such an opportunity."

Dr. Jacob W. Brown, an 84-year-old Boston physician, who is serving his fourth term in state prison for an illegal operation, testified that he had sold Admiral Eaton 4600 tablets containing arsenic. This is the kind of poison from which the naval officer died.

"I noticed one thing," said the old physician. "He took his knife out and scraped the label off. I told him he would forget the directions. He said he would remember them, but didn't care to have them lying around. He said his adopted baby had eaten one of these tablets and died, and he was afraid there had been poison in the tablet. He said that he had, therefore, destroyed the remainder of the tablets.

Under cross examination, Dr. Brown testified that it was a phosphorous pill that Admiral Eaton said a baby had died from swallowing. The old man said the naval officer told him he was taking phosphorous pills and that a baby had "accidentally got hold of one and died after swallowing it." He contradicted his previous statement that the baby was in the admiral's family. On direct examination the old physician said the child was Admiral Eaton's adopted baby. Dr. Brown shook with palsy while on the stand, and his testimony was given in a rambling sort of way.

"I told him he ought not to keep it secret that he was taking tablets," continued the doctor, "for if he died arsenic would be found in his system and somebody would be accused of poisoning him. He said that if he couldn't get back to his normal condition he didn't care how quickly he died."

The old man testified that Admiral Eaton came to him in June, 1911, opened a package containing sixty capsules and said there was a grain of arsenic in each capsule.

"I kept them for two weeks for him at his request," he added.

He testified that the admiral was last in his office in March, 1912.

"He told me that he had drank enough whiskey and champagne to float a battleship," said the old man.

He first met Admiral Eaton in February, 1910, at his office at 126 Berkeley street. On the first visit he gave him some dyspepsia tablets, but on the second visit, when the admiral told him he was suffering from an organic disease, Dr. Brown said he gave him 100 tablets each containing .01 of arsenic and .01 of gold chloride. A week or ten days later he gave him 500 more of the same kind of tablets.

Three months later 1000 more pills were sold to the admiral by Dr. Brown, so he testified.

"He told me that he had taken everything to get over the disease he had," said the physician.

Dr. Brown is now at the Bridgewater farm hospital, where he was transferred from state prison because of illness. Three of his terms in prison were for illegal operations, and the fourth for forgery, he admitted. Each term was for from five to seven years.

NO JANE DOE WARRANTS

Magistrate Refuses to Issue Papers Against Sellers of "The Suffragette"

New York, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant British suffragette, left New York for Cleveland, where she will lecture.

Chief City Magistrate McAdoo refused to issue any Jane Doe warrants for women who sold "The Suffragette," alleged to have contained matter which might be classed as obscene.

"I do not feel called upon to take action in the matter at this time," the magistrate said, "for the reason that Anthony Comstock has submitted the whole matter to the district attorney."

CHURCHMEN DEADLOCKED

Upper House Favors Negro Bishop While Deputies Do Not

New York, Oct. 25.—A deadlock between the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies, the governing bodies of the Protestant Episcopal church, was brought about at the general convention, when the bishops voted to establish a separate bishopric for negroes of the south, the bishop of that district to have a seat in the upper house. The house of deputies a few days ago rejected this plan and asked the bishops to refer the matter to a joint commission which would report at the next triennial convention.

The House of Bishops voted that the Episcopal Church shall sanction religious communities within dioceses. This was suggested in a speech early in the convention by Bishop Franklin S. Spalding of Utah, and was introduced later in the form of a proposed canon. The bishops requested the House of Deputies to concur.

CAR STRIKE THREATENED

Reinstatement of Conductor Accused of Larceny Is the Issue

Holyoke, Mass., Oct. 25.—This city faces the possibility of a strike of trolleymen as a result of a dispute over the reinstatement of Arthur Fairhurst, one of the conductors tried in the police court several months ago on the charge of larceny, but whose case was thrown out by the superior court because the complaint was not specific enough.

The men voted to have a poll taken on the question of enforcing the arbitration clause in the articles of agreement. Should the poll be in accordance with the sentiments expressed after the meeting the officials of the national body will have power to call a strike in case the officials of the Holyoke Street Railway company still decline to arbitrate.

New York, Oct. 25.—Several persons are reported missing, two girls and two young men are dying, and many others were injured in a fire caused by a terrific explosion, which swept through the six-story factory building at 208-212 Canal street.

Five hundred women and men were in the structure when the flames started. They stampeded to the street by stairways and fire escapes.

More than a score, finding themselves trapped on the second floor fire escapes, leaped to the street. Others were seen to fall back into the flames. Whether they perished or not could not be learned by the police.

Rockefeller. The young woman before her marriage was employed in the coupon department of the Southern Pacific railway.

It is alleged that on the day she gave up her position to be married to James A. Rutherford she concealed the coupons about her person and deposited them to her credit in a bank at Atlantic Highlands, N. J., where she resided.

Saunderstown, R. I., Oct. 25.—The British schooner Annie M. Parker limped into this port with part of the sails and deckload of lumber gone after a tempestuous voyage of thirty-five days from Clarabela, Fla.

The vessel is bound for St. John, N. B., where she is owned. She hails from the Barbados. The Parker bore the brunt of two hurricanes, the worst weather, Captain Rafuse declared, he had ever experienced during his thirty-five years of sea-faring life. Repairs were begun on the vessel, and she will await instructions here from her owners.

It is the sign of the greatest improvements ever made in oil heating devices.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

The Perfection Heater, as now made, gives more heat, holds more oil, is better made and works better than any other heater on the market.

It has a wide, shallow oil font, which allows the oil to pass readily up the wick and insures reliable, unchanging flame and heat, whether the font is full or nearly empty.

The Perfection is smokeless, because the patent locking flame-spreader prevents the wick being turned up high enough to smoke. It is easy to re-wick, because the carrier and wick are combined—just turn out the old and slip in the new.

Indicator tells how much oil is in the font. Filler plug is pushed in like a cork—no screw, no thread to wear. Attractive latticed window frame.

PLAN OPPOSED BY PRESIDENT

Does Not Favor Central Bank Plan as Suggested

GLASS-OWEN BILL IS SUITABLE

It Is Apparent That Course of Several Members of Committee Will Be Determined by Attitude of Executive and Other Leaders as to Expediency of Single Bank Plan

Washington, Oct. 25.—Whether there shall be one federal reserve bank, with branches throughout the United States, or several banks, as provided for in the administration bill, promises to be the chief issue of the final currency reform fight in the senate committee that is to open up Monday.

The president made it known that he was opposed to the central bank plan, as suggested by Frank A. Vanderlip of the National City bank of New York, known as the Standard Oil bank, and as indorsed informally by many of the senate committee.

He reiterated through Secretary Tumulty that the Glass-Owen bill with its system of twelve regional reserve banks related only through the functions of one federal reserve board sitting at Washington, "was admirably suited" to the needs of the country.

While members of the senate committee, including several Democrats, were drawing out witnesses in further support of the single bank idea, President Wilson talked at length with other senators, outlining his desire that the Glass bill be left unchanged in this particular.

It is apparent that the course of several members of the committee will probably be determined finally by the attitude taken by President Wilson and other party leaders as to the expediency of the single bank plan.

Senators O'Gorman, Hitchcock and Reed, Democrats, all favor the idea of a single federal reserve bank, as opposed to many separate ones, but it is believed that their advocacy of the plan may be abandoned, if the Democrat leaders insist that such a measure could not be passed through the house.

Questions directed to H. P. Willis of New York, an expert who helped frame the original Glass bill, indicated the extent to which Senators O'Gorman, Hitchcock, Bristow, Weeks and others approved of the scheme of one central reserve bank under complete federal control, instead of several scattered ones.

Secretary Tumulty expressed the White House views in this statement:

"When inquiries were made at the White House as to what the president's attitude was toward the proposals made by Vanderlip of the National City bank, to the currency committee of the senate, it was stated with the expected emphasis that, of course, the president would not recede in any respect from the position he had already so clearly taken and which the whole country understands.

"The evidences which have reached him of the support of the country are unmistakable and overwhelming."

Willis was the chief witness before the senate committee during the afternoon. He did not indorse the single bank idea, but suggested many other changes that might be made to perfect the bill.

TORPEDO BOATS FAST

Ten of Them Show Better Speed Than Contracts Called For

Newport, R. I., Oct. 25.—That some of the torpedo boat destroyers have improved rather than deteriorated, was demonstrated when ten boats, all oil burners, belonging to the fourth and fifth divisions, engaged in speed and smoke tests, and one of them, the Jouett, exceeded her contract speed, while the Beale scored 100 percent in a smoke test trial.

The Jouett averaged 32.9 knots in her two-hour speed test, and the Beale ran four hours with no smoke.

The two divisions will scatter to the different navy yards for two months' overhauling, after which they will join the battleships off Guantanamo.

MAY LEAD TO INTERVENTION

Holding Up American Steamer Is Termed An Insult

ENVOY LIND'S WIFE ON BOARD

Washington Officials In Touch With Situation Believe Huerta Following Plan Outlined by Others—Situation More Critical Than Ever Before—No Interference With General Diaz

Washington, Oct. 25.—Ominous in the extreme is the Mexican situation in the opinion of administration officials.

Defiance of the United States by Huerta has brought armed intervention perilously near. Following on the heels of a "hands off" warning from the provisional president the bold holding up of the steamer Morro Castle, flying the Stars and Stripes, while four American warships swung lazily at anchor only a mile away, was characterized in official circles as insulting.

And behind it all the officials in closest touch with developments insisted they saw evidences of outside interference. Huerta, they said, was following out a program which had been outlined for him by others. And no one cared to forecast a guess regarding the outcome.

Standing out peculiarly significantly was the fact that one of the passengers on the Morro Castle was Mrs. John Lind, wife of President Wilson's special envoy to Mexico. When Minnesota's former governor was first commissioned to Mexico, Secretary of State Bryan made especial mention of the fact that Mrs. Lind was accompanying him. He used this as an illustration that no real danger was feared or she would not have made the trip. Now she is coming back, but her husband remains in Vera Cruz as the "eyes" of this government in Mexico.

Five American war vessels are on the east coast of Mexico and four on the west coast. At Vera Cruz are the battleships Louisiana and Michigan, the armored cruiser Tacoma and the gunboat Wheeling. The battleship New Hampshire is at Tampico.

On the west coast, the California, Maryland and Nanshan are at Guaymas and the Annapolis at Topolobampo.

On Oct. 29 the battleships New Jersey, Virginia, Rhode Island and Nebraska will sail from Hampton Roads for Vera Cruz to relieve the present squadron there, which will remain, however, until the relief squadron arrives.

Will Not Molest Diaz

Mexico City, Oct. 25.—There is no intention on the part of the Mexican government to molest General Felix Diaz, according to Querido Moheno, minister of foreign affairs, who said that General Diaz was at liberty to come to the capital when he chose.

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM

Mayor of New York Says Process of Education Will Solve It

New York, Oct. 25.—Mayor Ardolph Kline was not applauded when, in his address welcoming the delegates of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance union to New York city he suggested that the solution of the liquor problem lay not in absolute prohibition, but in a gradual process of education.

The mayor said that the best sentiment upheld the Woman's Christian Temperance union, and its efforts were bound in the long run to educate people to the conviction that temperance was best for the nation.

Mrs. Lillian L. M. Stevens, vice president of the organization, presided in the place of the Countess of Carlisle, who was unable to be present, but who sent a letter of regret.

Mrs. Stevens, who was presented with a loving cup by Lady Aurea Howard, daughter of the countess, in behalf of the foreign delegates, announced that the countess had contributed $5000 for white ribbon missionary work.

GOVE MANSION BURNED

Was One of Most Historical Houses In New Hampshire

Seabrook, N. H., Oct. 25.—The famous Gove mansion of this town was practically destroyed by a fire that is believed to have been started by an incendiary. The police are working on the case.

The Gove mansion was one of the oldest buildings in this part of New Hampshire, and was used, it is claimed, during the revolution by both American and British soldiers.

Government May Help Build Road

Portland, Me., Oct. 25.—Fourth Assistant Postmaster General James I. Blakslee at a conference on the proposed $150,000 highway to be built from Portland to Bath, expressed his opinion that the federal government will contribute $50,000 toward the expense of construction.

Officials See Fleet Start

Washington, Oct. 25.—Assistant Secretary Roosevelt of the navy department, with a party of government officials, left here aboard the dispatch boat Dolphin for Hampton Roads to witness the departure of nine Atlantic fleet battleships for their Mediterranean cruise.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

By

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Copyright, 1912, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

"We offer you," he continued, "safety. We cannot take you with us, but we will leave you here on the island after we have taken the treasure, and," his eyes turned from me to my companion, "if you are willing to give up the woman I will enroll you with our following and we will all get away together on the Rose of Devon."

"What of the ship?" I asked.

It was a hard thing to control my temper, but I wanted the information.

"She was badly stove up but not entirely wrecked. We fought the savages, conquered them, made them our friends. We can get away in her and you can navigate her or we can do without you for that matter and make shift to get back to the South American coast at least."

"So you offer me free passage and my share of the treasure if I will give up Mistress Wilberfore, do you?"

"That is it," answered Pimball, "Eh, mates?" whereat a deep chorus of approval came from Glibby and the men.

"And this is my answer," I said furiously, leveling my pistol at him. "Get back, you villain, or you will have looked your last on life."

"But the flag of truce?" he cried, dropping his weapon.

"It is not meant to cover such propositions as yours. As for the treasure you shall have it when you can get it."

As I spoke he sprang behind the tree and motioned to his men to fire, but I was too quick for him, and we were safely within the cave when the sound of the reports came to us.

"Now what is to be done?" said my little mistress.

"The next move," I answered, "is with them."

"Shall we go further back into the cave?"

"No," I replied. "We will stay here for the present."

We were not long left in suspense, for I could hear them breaking through the woods and rushing toward the opening. Missiles in the way of weapons there were none in the cave, but I picked up a skull that lay on the floor and hurled it out of the opening into the unseen crowd below. A shriek told me that I had hit some one, but I saw at once that the game was one I could not play. The white men had some skill at warfare. They had posted covering parties to protect the workmen. I crept cautiously toward the entrance, where I could see them working hard, piling up the stones to enable them to get at us, while back of them stood others with drawn bows and presented weapons.

I didn't come off unscathed, for as I sprang back after having thrown another skull and taken my look an arrow hit me in the fleshy part of the arm. My mistress noticed it instantly. The stone head had broken off, and it was the work of an instant to draw out the slender wood shaft. It was not a bad wound, but it was painful. The next thing she did amazed me beyond measure, for before I could prevent it she had put her lips to the wound.

"What mean you?" I cried, when I could recover myself.

"It might have been poisoned," she said, quietly looking at me with luminous eyes, "and I cannot have you die!"

I was amazed, astounded even, at her hardihood in sucking any possible poison out of that wound in my arm at so great a risk to her own life, if the weapon had been envenomed. And I was most profoundly touched too. But I had had my lesson. I viewed it as done out of common humanity and to preserve a life useful to her—nothing more. Meanwhile, in my turn, I took such hasty precautions for her safety as I could. I bade her rinse out her mouth thoroughly with cold water and then with the strong spirit of which I still had in my flask.

CHAPTER XVI.

In Which We Fight For Life In the Cave of the Treasure.

WE had withdrawn by this time to the back of the outer cave. Indeed, that was the only safe place for us, for a constant succession of weapons was thrown through the opening. We needed no further warning to keep out of reach. Master Pimball was showing himself something of a general. He was keeping us away from the entrance, and with the great host of men at his command he was building up the broken down heap of stones which would presently enable them to come to us.

I considered what was to be done. I had four loaded pistols and, therefore, four lives in my hand. No man could show his head in that entrance without receiving a shot. After that I could account for a few more, perhaps with sword, ax or naked fist, but in the end they would inevitably master me. Unfortunately, the entrance was broad enough for three or four, or even more, to enter abreast.

Should I open the battle there or retreat into the inner cave and wait? was the question that had to be decided.

Perhaps the latter would be the safer plan, but I had a strange unwillingness to adopt it. It would be like burying ourselves, for once within we should never get out alive, except as prisoners, so long as they had the outer cave. And I could never dislodge them from it. There was not much more chance of getting out alive from the outer cave, for that matter, but still it seemed so. We could at least see the sky and the sunlight. Should we stay there or go further into the wall?

I decided upon the former course. I explained to my mistress that I would keep the outer cave as long as I could, begging her to retreat to the inner chamber. She demurred at first, but when I spoke to her peremptorily at last—God forgive me—she acceded to my request humbly enough. I thrust the best pistol into her hand and told her to reserve it for herself in case her capture was inevitable, but not to pull the trigger until the last moment; and I promised her faithfully that I would not foolishly or uselessly jeopardize myself, but that after I had made what fight I could I would join her, if it were in any way possible.

She hung in the wind awhile, seeming loath to go when all had been said between us. Finally she approached me, laid her hand on my arm, and looked up at me.

"Master Hampdon," she said softly, "here we be, a lone man and woman among these savages and murderers with but little chance for our lives, I take it. I am sorry that I struck you on the ship, and—you may—kiss me goodby."

With that she proffered me her lips. I could face a thousand savages, a hundred Pimballs, without a quiver of the nerves, but at these words and that proffer my knees fairly smote together before this small woman. I stood staring down at her.

"You were overeager once to take from me what I now offer you willingly," she said, half turning away.

With that I caught her to me and once again I drank the sweetness of her lips. I forgot the savages outside, the spears, the arrows streaming through the entrance. I held her in my arms and without resistance. I could have held her there forever, quite willing to die in such sweet embrace. She pushed me from her at last and I could swear that my kisses had been returned, and then with a whispered blessing she dropped to her knees and crawled within the cave.

I could have fought the world thereafter, for her kisses intoxicated me like wine. Yet even then I did not delude myself. I knew that, on her part at least, it was a farewell kiss, such as two friends might give each other in the face of death. To her the pressure of my lips had only been as the salute of an ancient gladiator about to die was to the Caesar who watched the struggle. Well, I blessed her even for that condescension.

With a pistol in each hand and the third upon a rock close at hand I waited. I had not long to wait. There was a sudden fiercer rain of arrows and spears, some of which struck at my feet or by my side. I gathered up a sheaf of them and laid them with the pistol on the rock.

The next instant two tremendous savages and a white man appeared in the opening. The shot was easy, the target fine. I couldn't miss. The first bullet went into the brain of Master Glibby, the next tore off the head of the leading chief. Reserving the third pistol, I seized a spear and drove it through the throat of the other savage. I shouted with triumph, and Mistress Lucy has since confessed to me that, kneeling down and peering through the opening, contrary to my explicit order, which was for her to seek safe cover, she saw all, and that my call of victory was the sweetest sound she had ever heard in her life.

I thought we had done, but they were an indomitable lot those south sea islanders, and they were well urged. Four others took their places at once, spears in hand, which they threw at me. I jumped aside with difficulty and let fly the third pistol. They came crowding this time, and the bullet from the heavy weapon accounted for two others, but the survivors had gained a footing and the shelf behind them was suddenly filled with lifting heads and climbing men. I clubbed my weapons and hurled them one after another fair and square into the mass. One went down with a broken skull. The rush was checked; they gave a little. I cast spears at them and arrows, but now the shield men had come up, and they caught the missiles on their shields. The front rank wavered, and perhaps, if they had been unsupported, they might have been driven below, but the crowd behind would not let them. Slowly they began to move toward me.

I doubt not I was a terrible figure, for I had whipped out my cutlass by this time and stood at bay. I had forgotten for the moment all else but the lust of the conflict, and in another second I had flung myself upon them in fury. It was my mistress who recalled me to myself.

"Save yourself!" she shrieked. "They are upon you. Come hither!"

With that I dropped to my knees and made a spring for the opening. I had waited too long. The leading man would have pinned me to the earth with his spear. The entrance was wide, fortunately, and Mistress Lucy could see through the part I did not block with my huge bulk. Disregarding entirely my instructions, she fired the last pistol at the nearest man. He went down like a ninepin, both legs broken, which gave me time to gain the inner chamber and stand upright. I was bleeding, for I had been cut here and there, but was otherwise all right."

"That shot saved my life!" I cried, panting. "You should have kept it for yourself."

"I can find means to die," she answered, "if naught else, by your sword blade."

"Good," I exclaimed, proud of her prowess and her resolution.

They gave us no time for further speech, for, urged by what promises of reward, what passionate hatred, I knew not, they came on. The narrow entrance was suddenly black with the islanders, who thrust their spears at us. Fortunately, my mistress had moved aside and was out of range, but I was perilously near being cut down. Mistress Lucy had the sword which I had thrust into her hand, and I the great ax which I had cast into the inner cave ahead of me.

ORGAN RECITAL PLEASES ALL

Good Program Presented at Water Street Church

Many attended the recital and concert at the First Presbyterian church Friday evening and the benefit of the building fund. The artists included Miss Agnes Hyde, reader, Miss Margaret K. Alexander, soloist, and Ernest Leslie Mehaffey, organist. The Tremont male quartette, Charles H. Goodrich, first tenor; Everett M. Clark, second tenor; Alfred Halverson, first bass and Frank E. Wharton, second bass, gave two of the best numbers. The program was highly entertaining. Mr. Mehaffey opened with the "Trgumphal March," and gave two double numbers, closing with the Pilgrim Chorus from "Tannhauser." These selections by Costa, Lemare, Salome, Guilmant and Wagner showed the wide range of the organ and the skill of Mr. Mehaffey. Miss Alexanders solos were very pleasing, and Miss Hyde is always a favorite here.

The Massachusetts District officers will attend the next meeting and address the members in regard to increasing the membership of the order and the charter may be opened to obtain new members.

Fisher, 181 Whitwell street, and the whist on Friday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. Fred Grignon on Bradford street, will be devoted to the table. The guest of the evening was Hrs. Mabelle E. Gooding of Weymouth, department aid.

MANY PRIESTS ON ALTAR

Fr. John Burns, Rev. Fr. Robert E. Lee of Boston, Rev. Fr. J. L. Driscoll of South Boston, Rev. Fr. Joseph E. Murphy of Wellesley, Rev. Fr. John J. Powers of Cambridge, formerly of West Quincy.

The bearers were John Cashman, M. Vincent Reardon, Dennis S. Sweeney, of Quincy, George B. Gavin of Braintree, Dr. Michael Sweeney and Dr. Matthew Sweeney of Weymouth, Dr. Thomas N. Roche and William Healey of Amesbury.

Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery where three members of the family have been interred within a year. The committment prayers were chanted at the grave by the clergymen who also dropped earth on the casket.

The funeral was largely attended and the church was filled with friends to whom Father Harkins was near and dear. The immediate family were seated close to the casket. The ushers at the church were John J. O'Hara, J. Aloysis Carey and Lawrence J. Lyons.

The eulogy of Father Lee brought tears to the eyes of many. His text was "Having lived a short time he accomplished much." Father Lee said it was a little over three years since the tremendous power of a priest was bestowed on Father Harkins. It was my good fortune to have him sent to my parish. I can speak from my own personal knowledge of him, we labored for the same purpose and I can truly say that Father Harkins, of a lovable and sunshiny disposition, began his work with promises of great worth for the salvation of souls.

He was a priest of God. It was his labor to stand between the people and God, to offer up his own name for them the prayers and sacrifices for which he labored. Daily he offered up the adorable sacrifices of the mass, lovingly, carefully and piously for those to whom he was the minister.

In the confessional he did the work so loving to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. He encouraged those whose softened hearts had turned away and brought them back through his disposition and kindness. To the sick he was ever attentive, never sparing himself to bring them the consolation of religion, to soothe them in their sorrows, to stand by their bedside, to help them bridge over that step from life to death.

And the children, how they loved him. His heartfelt look made them feel that he was one who loved them and their joy was never complete unless he was in their midst. What he accomplished among them will never be forgotten.

Today throughout the parish of St. Joseph's of Amesbury, and its whole community there is universal sorrow for those hearts will never forget him. There it will always remain for they respected him because of his office and loved and esteemed him for the great qualities of mind and heart which he possessed. He came among them when a young priest.

It is unnecessary to speak of what he has been in Quincy during his life. You have seen him at the altar, know of his leaving school and studying for the priesthood. You rejoiced when you knew he had dedicated his life to the service of God, to the highest office that can be given the man and you prayed that God might give him the courage to persevere to the end.

And so you rejoiced with him, his family and his friends when he ascended the altar on last Trinity Sunday to offer up the mass of his third year in the priesthood.

God's ways ore not our ways. He knows best. We know he wanted him. Not my will but God's will be done. And in deep sincerity and with true feeling we extend his bereaved family our consolation and sorrow, the genuine regrets of the people of Amesbury and Quincy and the unspeakable sadness of the priests of the diocese.

☞The Play, "CRANBERRY CORNERS," given by local talent and for a local object, is creating much interest, and the King's Daughters are to be congratulated upon the efforts they are making to fill Music Hall, on the evening of Nov. 18.

GRAND DANCE OF REDMEN CLUB

The Redmen Athletic Club held their first grand dance in Alpha hall Friday evening with guests present from Boston and vicinity. Over forty clubs were represented.

MRS. C. W. FAIRBANKS

Wife of Ex-Vice President Is Dead From Pneumonia

MRS. FAIRBANKS DEAD

Wife of Former Vice President Stricken With Pneumonia.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 25.—Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks, wife of the former vice president of the United States, died in this city. She was stricken with pneumonia on Oct. 15 and hope of her recovery had been abandoned almost from the outset.

Mrs. Fairbanks was prominent socially in Washington during her husband's term in office. She entertained lavishly, and in many cases, with a charming informality. She was interested in many charitable works, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, 1901 to 1905, and also served as president of the American League of Junior Republics. She accompanied the ex-vice president on his tour of the world in 1909.

Mrs. Fairbanks was born in Marysville, O., 61 years ago. She was the daughter of Judge P. B. Cole. Shortly after graduating from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1872 she was married to Fairbanks, then a newspaper man. They resided in Pittsburg several years before Fairbanks, later a lawyer, took up his residence in Indianapolis.

TEA STORE ROBBED AT POINT OF GUN

Proprietor Forced to Give Cash to Young Bandits

Boston, Oct. 25.—Two robbers with a revolver executed the boldest robbery attempted in Boston in many months at 43 Washington street, with thousands of people nearby, last night.

The robbers, both young men, effected a clean getaway after their escapade, which netted them $66.49 in cash.

With a revolver pointed at his head, Michael J. Corkery, 111 Beacon street, Somerville, manager of the Teacoff Tea company, was forced to turn over to the two robbers $66.49 that was in the safe of the tea company, located on the second floor of the building.

One of the robbers is said to be a former employe of the tea company.

With Corkery in the tea store was Irving J. Hatch. There were no customers in the store at the time.

NEW THAW PAPERS

Jerome Goes to Concord With Latest Requisition For Extradition

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 25.—William T. Jerome and Deputy Attorney General Franklin Kennedy left for Concord, N. H., armed with new papers requesting the return of Harry K. Thaw to this state.

Governor Glynn signed the new requisition for extradition after a conference with Jerome, Kennedy and Attorney General Carmody.

While it was agreed that new papers were not absolutely necessary, it was decided that they be issued in order that there might be no question raised as to the validity of the requisition formerly made on the New Hampshire authorities.

Councilman John R. Richards, president of the Republican City Committee presided and on the platform besides the regular speakers were President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council, Mayor Eugene R. Stone, Charles H. Johnson, the candidate for Mayor, ex-Mayor John O. Hall, president John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade, John D. Mackay, Thomas Butler, Eugene F. DeNormandie, Councilman Stephen L. Devaney, Dr. Bowker, candidate for County Commissioner, C. L. Burrell, candidate for State treasurer, Louis F. R. Langelier, candidate for senator, and Walter E. Piper and Edward J. Sandberg, candidates for Representatives.

An orchestra furnished music during the first part of the evening and as Candidate Gardner entered the hall they played "Hail to the Chief." In opening the meeting, President Richards welcomed the audience and spoke briefly of the several planks in the Republican platform. These he read and briefly commented on each.

Candidate Gardner received an enthusiastic welcome. He said there comes a time in the history of parties when the surgeon's knife must be used in order to promote a healthy growth. This had been done in the Republican party and he asked that the citizens of Quincy help him put the party where it should be, a party of liberal and enduring ideas. The United States should be a liberal nation and keep abreast of the times, yet we have lagged behind in some things and he asked the help of the Republicans to make the party one of construction.

He then spoke of several planks in his platform some of which were not adopted. When he entered the campaign for the nomination he said that he would do certain things and he felt that he must stand by that statement. First, he believed a minimum wage for women should be established. That there should be a new method of settling disputes between labor and capital so that the public shall not be held up either by the employer or employees.

Four of the planks he had advocated had not been accepted, but he had to do as he said he would, and if elected he was going to get those measures through the legislature if he could. He knew personally all about the labor trouble in Lawrence, and he believed that it was the government that was at fault. Such a disturbance may come at any time in any cotton district. If elected he would send for the best labor leaders in the textile industry then for the best mill owners and say to them, get together. Then he would send a message to the legislature.

He took up the immigration plank of which so much has been heard. He said that 14,000,000 souls were annually coming in from Europe which was more than this country could assimilate in a year, and maintain our standard of living. This is an economic problem. The old law of supply and demand. We want them to come, but not in too great numbers.

How can American laborers expect to get $12 a week when we let in 14,000,000 who are willing to work for $10. The additional number above what we can properly assimilate are keeping the standard of living down. It is human nature to buy where we can buy the cheapest and get our labor performed as cheap as we can, and just so long as we let in annually 14,000,000 souls just so long will we have the seed of discontent. The illiteracy test, he said, about which so much has been heard was simply that a man coming to this country must be able to read thirty words in his own language.

He also spoke of the minimum wage for women which he believed should be established.

In closing, he said that he had been sent to congress for seven terms. That he had always been a strict party man and that he would remain with the party whether it went up or went down.

The first speaker was Senator M. Sumner Cogan of Malden. He spoke especially for the local candidates for the senate and representatives telling why it was most important that Republicans should be elected for the senate and house. Taking up each of the local candidates he spoke of the good work which they had accomplished on Beacon hill and showed why they by their past experience were better able to represent Quincy than their opponents. He also spoke of Langelier's good work as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors committee and of his work and personal effort in getting the $9,000,000 Boston Port bill to include Quincy. When you vote for a Progressive you vote for a Democrat and if you get a Democratic legislature Quincy's metropolitan assessment will be increased. Speaking of Mr. Piper, he said that the city was fortunate in having an opportunity to get a man with experience like Mr. Piper who could give all of his time to the duties of the position. Mr. Sandberg he said was a man who represented the Swedes of whom the United States was proud, and the citizens ought to feel proud to have such a man represent them.

Ex-Senator C. H. Brown of Medford also said a good word for the local candidates with whom he was personally acquainted. He then took up the several candidates for Governor, speaking briefly of each. He spoke at length upon Gardner's work in Congress and his fearlessness, and of some of the great measures he had strenuously advocated. He was a man who had the courage of his convictions and a fighter for the right.

Ex-Senator Frank Seiberlich wanted the Progressives to come back into the Republican party for he did not believe they could accomplish anything by breaking away. He then spoke of some of the reforms advocated by Candidate Gardner.

Guy Ham, the present councillor from the Quincy district and a candidate for re-election, said that Candidate Gardner had been nominated without the influence of the so called machine, while the two other parties had dictated who should be nominated. He then took up the several planks in the Republican platform and said that in making up the platform the views of everybody had been asked. That the platform met with the views of the

CONGRESSMAN A. P. GARDNER

HANCOCK AND ADAMS

President Wilson Tells of Their Influence

At Congress Hall Saturday

The city of Quincy the birthplace of John Hancock, was not the only place to recall his name on Saturday, Oct. 25. At Philadelphia, the historic Congress Hall was rededicated, and President Wilson was the principal speaker. As Congress Hall, John Hancock, presided over the Continental Congress, George Washington was inaugurated for his second term as President, and John Adams of Quincy for his second term as Vice President, and Washington delivered his famous farewell address. Congress sat in this hall from 1790 to 1800.

At the rededication, President Wilson occupied the high backed chair used by John Hancock, and in front of him was the age-stained flat top desk on which many of the signers of the Declaration of Independence attached their signatures.

President Wilson said in part:

"There has come over me since I sat down here a sense of deep solemnity, because it has seemed to me that I saw ghosts crowding in, a great assemblage of spirits, no longer visible to us, but whose influences we still feel as we feel the moulding power of history itself. The men who sat in this hall and to whom we now look back with a touch of deep sentiment, were men of flesh and blood, face to face with extremely difficult problems.

"I feel today a compulsion of men, a compulsion of examples which were set us in this place. And of what do their examples remind us? They remind us not only of public service, but of public service shot through with principle and honor.

"I can feed my own mind as happily upon the circumstances of the revolutionary and constitutional period as you can, but I cannot feed my thoughts with them in Washington now, because every day problems arise which wear some new face and aspect. I must fall back, if I would serve my conscience, upon those things which are fundamental, rather than upon those things which are superficial. I ask myself this question, 'How are you going to assist in some small part to give the American people, and by example, the peoples of the world, more advantage, more liberty, more happiness, more substantial prosperity, and how are you going to make that prosperity a common heritage, instead of possession?'

"The men of the day which we now celebrate had a very great advantage over us in this one particular: Life was simple in America then. All men shared the same circumstances in almost equal degree. Our task is very much more difficult. That sympathy which alone interprets public duty is more difficult for a public man to

OLD OFFENDER ARRESTED

Also Wanted in Boston in a Murder Case

William Smith, although that is not his correct name, who was defaulted in court Aug. 1, was arrested by Inspector Goodhue in Roxbury Sunday night. Smith was arraigned in court July 27 on three complaints, charging him with assault and battery, keeping and exposing liquor for sale, and with keeping a disorderly house, and the cases continued until Aug. 1. At that time one of his friends drew $140 from the bank, which represented his savings for years and put up a cash bail for Smith. When the case was called Aug. 1. Smith was defaulted. Inspector Goodhue secured a picture of the man and has been successful in tracing him to several places but never in season to catch him until Sunday night he received a tip that he was in a house in Roxbury.

Inspector Goodhue visited the house late Sunday night and found his man, although his flowing mustache had been shaven off and Smith denied his name. He was placed under arrest however. As the party were leaving the house Smith accused one of the men in the house of betraying him, and told Inspector Goodhue that he was wanted by the police for murder in the north end of Boston some weeks ago. Acting on this information Inspector Goodhue placed the man under arrest and took him to Station 10, and turned him over to the Lieutenant in charge. Later he brought Smith to Quincy. In court he was held in $200 bail until Oct. 29.

The Quincy Young Women's club meets Tuesday evening in the High School gym for a Hallowe'en frolic, the affair being in the hands of the entertainment committee of the club, of which Miss Mabel T. Pratt is chairman.

DOUBLE WEDDING.

Two sisters became brides at Maplewood Saturday morning on the thirtieth anniversary of the marriage of their parents, when Misses Elizabeth Robinson MacDonald and Agnes Kemp MacDonald, daughters of the late Captain and Mrs. Angus MacDonald, were married, respectively to Charles Clifford. Dailey, son of Mrs. Ada R. Dailey of Laurel street, and Lewis Helmer Davidson, Jr., of Rockwell street, Maplewood. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride, 5 Swains Pond avenue.

Both couples left at once on a honeymoon trip to New York, Washington and Philadelphia and upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Dailey will reside in Quincy, while Mr. and Mrs. Davidson will occupy the old homestead on Swains Pond avenue.

LOST IN BOSTON.

Mary Saloney, an immigrant Finn girl, who was taken in charge by the police in Boston Saturday night as she was wandering about the street, and sent to the Chardon street home, left the home today in the company of Mrs. J. Haskonen of 68 Albertina street. She will stay with Mrs. Haskonen from now on. The attention of several police were directed toward Mary when they saw her approach people and talk excitedly in Finnish. When they questioned her all she could say was that she came from Quincy and knew a family here by the name of Haskonen. They informed Quincy headquarters and Mrs. Haskonen was located.

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL.

Phelix Lynch, a Fore River employee, was removed to the Quincy City Hospital Sunday night and was immediately operated upon for ulcers of the stomach. He recently left the State hospital at Bridgewater against the advice of physicians. He occupied a room since then at the Waverly hotel Washington and Chubbuck streets and became seriously ill Friday. Officer Johnson was notified and when he reported the condition of the man to headquarters Dr. John H. Ash was summoned. He ordered his removal to the hospital.

SEVERAL MUNICIPAL CONTESTS

Republican for Councilmen at Large

Democratic for Mayor

Although the City Primaries have not been held, the nominations for the same have been closed. The Republicans and the Progressives have no contests for Mayor and have already selected their candidates:—

Republican—Charles H. Johnson.
Progressive—William G. Shaw.

The Democrats have a Mayoralty contest between Dr. John H. Ash of Ward Four and Edward J. Fegan of Ward One.

Relative to nominees for the City Council the situation is reversed and the Republicans have several contests particularly for Councilmen at large, where seven men are seeking the five positions.

For Ward Councilmen there is a merry fight on in Wards One, Three and Six among the Republicans and in Ward Four among the Democrats.

In Ward One there are six candidates seeking the three nominations. Of the six William P. Thompson, Charles A. Ericson and Joseph L. Whiton are members of the present council, the other three being new men.

In Ward Three there are four candidates seeking the three positions. Of the four Charles A. Ross is a member of the present council and Robert B. Craig was a member of the council of 1912. The others are new men.

In Ward Six there are five seeking the three places. Of this number Herbert G. Beeman is a member of the present council and John R. Nelson is an ex-councilman. From the Squantum end of the ward there are two candidates, and the fight in this section will be the hottest of any section in the city. These are the only Republican contests.

Among the Democrats the only contest outside of Mayor is in Ward Four where there are five seeking the three places. Of this number Daniel F. Corcoran and Stephen B. Little are members of the present council. The Democrats have but one candidate for the council from Ward One and none from Wards Three, Five and Six.

The Progressives made no nominations in Wards One, Three or Six. In Ward Five they endorsed two of the Republican candidates. They have but one candidate for councilman at large and but one candidate for the council in Wards Two and Four.

It will be seen by the list of candidates seeking nomination that there are several of the present City Council who will retire this year. Among these are Councilmen at Large Bryant who has served the city as Mayor and a member of the Council for fifteen years, and John R. Richards who has served for several years as a member of the City Council from Ward Three

HALLOWE'EN DOINGS.

The way Young America handles the hoary old festival of Hallowe'en is typical of his rollicking type. Across the water this survival of old superstition is quaint, poetic, imaginative. Here it is rough-house.

There is a characteristic Irish superstition, in which a girl throws a ball of yarn out of the window. She repeats the pater noster backward, and the vision of her future husband is supposed to appear. The weirder side of it is seen in the old English bonfire habit, in which every member of a family would throw a white stone into the ashes. The stones were dug up next day, but if one was missing the one who threw it was expected to die in a year.

Polite and proper little Hallowe'en games have been in vogue in this country for many years, and are played with enthusiasm at children's parties. Bobbing for apples, walking down cellar stairs with a mirror to see your future husband, throwing apple peeling over your shoulder to read his name in the shape it falls— these amuse little girls in starched dresses and combed hair.

No such innocuous pursuits please the American boy, but all give a sense of exultant freedom that the grown-ups dislike to abridge.

MILLIONAIRE BENEFACTIONS.

Big public benefactions from men of great wealth are coming along pretty fast now. This is remarkable in a country where such ardor at money getting is manifested. There is here a lust for dollars, a feverish competition and commercial activity, that seem unfavorable to generous impulses.

Perhaps the strongest motive working against these gifts is the sentiment of family pride. There is a hereditary feeling tending to confine the succession of a great patrimony within the bosom of one family. This custom is so strong in Europe that there are comparatively few of the great gifts that have perpeuated the names of so many American millionaires.

Benjamin Altman, the merchant prince who has just made magnificent gifts to the city of New York, was a bachelor. The principal motive for the retention of his estate in one family did not exist. Still he had nephews and nieces, whom many men of wealth would have petted, and who would have received the bulk of such a fortune.

No doubt Mr. Altman was one of the millionaires who have learned that the best thing in their careers was not the golden prize they gained, but the fun of playing the game. They wish their descendants to be self reliant, to fight their own battles, and enjoy the same zest of struggle. Many of them realize that endowing young people with a fortune of over powering size tends to stifle manhood.

But the majority of the money kings are still passing beyond with no recognition of the matchless opportunity for service that they possess. It is the great misfortune of wealth that it tends to separate a man from his fellows. Isolated by his fortune, he misses forever the joy of giving. "If you miss the joy, you miss all," said R. L. Stevenson.

BALLOTS CAST FOR PRESIDENT

Mexican Military Patrols Streets as Voters Go to Polls

ELECTION MAY BE INVALID

Candidates Sign Proclamation to Peacefully Bide by Result—General Caranza Declares Rebels Will Not Recognize "Electoral Farce" and Will Continue Fighting

Mexico City, Oct. 27.—Conditions were fairly quiet when the voting began in the election to choose a successor to Provisional President Huerta, who has held the presidential chair since the overthrow of the Madero government, when hundreds died in the fighting in the streets of the capital.

Military patrols were everywhere to be seen, and caused grave apprehension among the lower classes. Hundreds of voters, opposed to the present government, remained at home, fearing to vote for any of Huerta's rivals.

All the candidates have signed a proclamation that they will abide peaceably by the result of the voting, and unite to aid the successful candidate in restoring law. In the event of the election not being valid, as it will be if not more than a third of the eligible voters exercise the right of suffrage, they all agree to assist the provisional government in restoring peace so that new elections can be held.

That the election will not result in a new president is a strong possibility, in view of the disturbed condition of the country. In the capital and in the southern and central states it is considered likely that a fair vote will be cast. In the north, however, the greatest number of votes cast were those of the various federal garrisons. The failure of more than a third of the electorate to vote would keep Huerta in power indefinitely, as he need not call for new elections until he saw fit.

General Venusliano Carranza, the constitutional leader, who is at Hermosillo, has declared that the result of the election will have no effect on the activities of the constitutionalists.

"Constitutionalists will not recognize the result of the electoral farce," he said, "whether it is said that Huerta or any other citizen is elected, as in the actual condition of the country it is absolutely impossible to hold legal elections. Therefore, we will keep on combatting with arms the regime that may result."

The last thread binding General Felix Diaz and General Victoriano Huerta was severed when Diaz telegraphed to the department of war his resignation as brigadier general of the army.

The negotiations regarding his return to the capital on invitation of the provisional president ended by his flat refusal to accompany Colonel Vidaurrazaga, secretary to General Blanquet, war minister, giving as his reason the illness of his wife. Vidaurrazaga continued his efforts to induce Diaz to change his decision, but finally returned to the capital on a special train. Diaz and his family remained at Vera Cruz.

On the eve of the election it was announced that the government had taken all precautions for any emergency and that both Mexicans and foreigners could feel assured of protection and enjoying the rights guaranteed by the constitution.

General Jose M. Servin has been arrested charged with plotting to foment a disturbance here. He was on the staff of General Mondragon when the latter was minister of war. Manuel Madero, a cousin of the late president, has been arrested at Saltillo charged with plotting against the government.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 27.—For alleged cruelty to his wife and daughter, Albert Jensen in the municipal court in Kansas City, Kan., received one of the severest sentences ever imposed in that court.

He was sentenced to 100 days "on the rock pile," during which time he is to be shackled with a heavy iron ball and chain. When he appears in court as a party to divorce suit against his wife he must wear handcuffs and iron ankle bracelets, and at the expiration of his jail sentence he must leave the city or receive another term in the workhouse.

Oswego, N. Y., Oct. 27.—A band of young miscreants tried to tar and feather Dr. Mary Walker at her home three miles from Oswego. The young men knocked at her door and told her that her barn was on fire.

When she opened the door one of the men caught hold of her, but she broke away and ran into the house, where she quickly telephoned to Justice of the Peace W. W. Rounds. When the justice arrived the men had dispersed, leaving behind a kettle of tar and a feather pillow.

Justice Rands says he is reasonably sure he knows the men who were in the band and that he will have them in custody within twenty-four hours.

WOMAN MAY BE CHIEF

Mayor of Chicago Considering Mrs. Britton to Head Police

Chicago, Oct. 27.—A woman for chief of police of this city is being seriously considered by Mayor Harrison.

The mayor has not made known his choice for successor to Chief McWeeny, resigned, but it is learned that Mrs. Gertrude H. Britton looms large in the mayor's canvass of the field.

Mrs. Britton is a woman of independent means, who has for years been prominent as a social worker. She is familiar with police work, is a member of the police examining board of the city civil service commission and lectures in the police schools.

It was not long ago that Mayor Harrison appointed ten police women for special service, including censorship of dancing in public halls.

TO DEPOSE MAD KING

Steps Being Taken to Oust Otto of Bavaria and Elevate Regent

Berlin, Oct. 27.—The Bavarian government has published the text of a confidential government memorandum about the regency question which found its way into Socialist hands and was read to a Socialist meeting at Munich a week ago.

The main point of the memorandum is that the deposition of the mad King Otto and the elevation of the regent to the throne of Bavaria can properly be accomplished only by legislative amendment to the constitution. A bill has been drafted in the ministry of justice, but it is not stated whether the government has already decided to lay the bill before the diet.

SEEK EVERETT FIREBUG

Set Church on Fire While Camp Fire Girls Were Holding Meeting

Everett, Mass., Oct. 27.—The police of two cities are searching for the firebug, believed to be insane, who fired the First Methodist Episcopal church while the Camp Fire Girls were holding a meeting.

An investigation conducted by State Officer Thompson and Chief Joseph Swan of the Everett fire department into the cause of the fire revealed positively that the work was that of an incendiary. No saturated rags were found near the organ where the blaze originated, and it is a mystery what means the incendiary took to set the church structure ablaze.

"SENORITY" RULE STAYS

'Fitness," Also, Safeguarded In New Code on New Haven Road

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 27.—New rules for engineers on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad will be distributed to the engineers at meetings of their brotherhood locals, and the men will have a chance to study the text as compared with the rules originally promulgated by General Manager Bardo.

The text of the rules is widely changed from the original. Concessions were made by both sides during the conference between the officers of the brotherhoods and the officers of the company.

The seniority provision which the men feared was doomed under the original rules by General Manager Bardo, remains with the word "fitness," to which objection was made. This, however, is safeguarded by other clauses.

There are minor changes in several rules, among them being that an engineer shall not be responsible for work on his engine after he has reported it in the workbook at the roundhouse, a rule growing out of the Stamford wreck.

TWO KILLED WHEN CAR STRIKES CART

Two Other Whitman Employes Injured In Collision

Whitman, Mass., Oct. 27.—Two town employes were killed and two injured when the tip cart in which they were riding was struck by an electric car of the Brockton and Whitman Street Railway company at the corner of Bedford and Temple streets.

Michael Keating, aged 64, and Frank Gaffney, aged 38, were dragged underneath the car for nearly a hundred feet and were killed instantly. Both leave families.

James Poole, aged 64, and Patrick McCrate, aged 58, were hurled clear of the car, but were badly cut and shaken up. Poole is thought to have internal injuries, but will probably recover. McCrate got off with a few severe cuts. Both were given hospital treatment.

The men in the cart tried to cross in front of the car and had nearly cleared the tracks when the car crashed into it heavily. So great was the momentum on the slippery rails that the car slid along for a hundred feet before coming to a halt. Gaffney was decapitated.

Installment Concern on Pacific Coast Wants to Collect $1,000,000

Washington, Oct. 27.—Bills aggregating $1,000,000 for jewelry charged against enlisted men of the army have been forwarded to the war department by a large installment jewelry concern on the Pacific coast, with an appeal for Uncle Sam's aid in collecting the indebtedness.

The department has declined to act as collector and the creditor's only recourse is to proceed against the individual soldiers. How much more jewelry the soldiers have paid for is conjectural.

THE ROAD TO ROCK ISLAND

H. W. French Says It Is Needed For Protection

Editor Daily Ledger:

Another fire at Rock Island; nothing now remains but the cellar; the fire department responded and after twenty-four minutes delay reached what remains of the building.

These are the bald facts. Those not acquainted with the circumstances could hardly believe that such condition existed with the Hose house at Houghs Neck only five minutes walk from the scene of the fire.

The City Council has referred to the next year's legislative body, to be elected, the small matter of expending $7,500 for constructing a street to Rock Island.

That is, if it can now be constructed for that amount. Last spring, Messrs. Cavanagh, Norterman and Dunham were willing to give all land necessary for the laying out of this street, and the Broken Stone Tide Water Co. was willing to give the material for the fill only a short haul away.

No, the Council could not see any way to make the appropriation.

And this is what the Councilmen or some of them on the Committee of Streets asked: "Why did you buy land and make your home in such a locality as Rock Island?"

Then the people of Rock Island might say, "If you think Rock Island so inaccessible and barren a place, why does your honorable Board of Assessors journey to such a far land, jack up our valuation to the notch just above the top notch, and soak us with your renowned $23.70.

If we pay as much for our little home, which we love as much as you do City Hall, should we not receive the proper attention for our money.

If you take from us by force of law a certain amount of money and agree to protect us from fire, flood and assessors, and then let our houses burn and our children wade through water when the tide serves right to get an education in our over crowded Atherton Hough School, and we do not receive agreed protection from the above mentioned evils, are we allowed to suggest that you are obtaining money under false representation.

That's what the people of Rock Island might say if they had a chance; but they don't get the chance, so the petition is handed along to the next Council. They will not hand it along if there are any business men who can discover that an expenditure of $7,500 will build a street, which in time might cost the city ten times as much when they are obliged to build it and no favors granted.

The pioneers of Rick Island have developed land and erected homes, and increased the value and earning capacity of this section a thousand per cent. They want a road and they want public sentiment to help them get it.

Will the public spirited candidates for councilmanic honors make this a promise to give just a square deal to the Rock Islanders?

We have been talking into the economy ear of the Council. Now we will go around to the efficiency ear. The fire department at the Neck can't be efficient until there is a passable street to Rock Island in the proposed location laid down by our efficient City Engineer.

Will one of the present Council so far go against the wishes of his colleagues as to recall the order for appropriating the $7,500, and in the enlightened state in which the present body now stands ask for another vote on this matter.

Thirty-seven children who now stem the tides across the marsh will thank him. The mothers will bless him and the fire department will be able to make the run in two minutes.

SUNDAY IN QUINCY CHURCHES

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.

In his sermon Sunday "On the application of religious standardse to th problems of busines life." Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson made a strong argument against the fallacy that the prier object of business is to make money.

He defined the term "business" as covering the whole range of varied activities whereby the world's crude materials are made to supply the world's diversified needs, including not only the original discovery, production or manufacture and transportation to the place of final consumption, but also the cars and control of the medium of exchange, together with the storing, insuring and handling of the completed product until it reaches the ultimate consumer. Every man engaged in this complex undertakin may fairly be called a business man. And as such his primary object, in any legitimate interpretation of business ethics, is not simply to make money for himself but to regard himself as a servant of the public with a specific duty to perform.

That duty, plainly, is to carry out his particular function in such a way as to avoid waste and delay and to secure to the customer the maximum o quality in goods or service at the minimum of cost compatible with a legitimate profit.

The more efficiently he performs this duty the more successful he will be, that is to say the more money he will make, so long as business is carried on along legitimate lines. Whenever it fails to be so carried on, whenever business men forget that they are public servants and become mere money grabbers, then society suffers just to that extent, and the channels of trade are thrown into disorder.

The acceptance of the idea tha "business is business" and anything to make money is all right as long as a man keeps out of jail, is responsible for much of the unsettling of confidence and of commercial values, which leads to periods of depression and panic, to political upheavals and even to social revolution.

The only safe basis for business activity is found in Paul's' theory o social relations, viz: that human society is an organism, like the body and that we are all members one o another. And of course the only logical background for this theory is the religious hypothesis, that each man is a part of the Universal Life in which "we live and move and have our being," and that all human relations are conditioned by that fact.

Mr. Hudson expressed the opinion that on the whole business ethics are growing better rather than worse, under the influence of an awakening public conscience, and the lime light of searching investigations into business methods. Although the increasing publicity given to wrong methods might lead to an opposite conclusion

But he sounded a note of warning as to the great danger, in the present tendency to large combinations, that business men surrender their own personal conscience and ideals to a corporate mechanism which has neither conscience nor ideals.

Mr. Hudson's special theme for next Sunday will be "The Man in Politics."

In the Sunday school lesson hour Mr. Hudson met his class in the study of the world's great religions, and gave a talk introductory to a consideration of the religion of China which will be taken up next Sunday.

In the afternoon at the meeting of the Young People's Religious Union of the First Parish, Mrs. Clarence Burgin gave a most interesting talk on the work of the "Quincy Day Nursery" with which Mrs. Burgin has been intimately connected. Her story disclosed the fact that the nursery is not only doing a great deal of good in helping the mothers of small children who have to work for a living to be self supporting, but that it helps to make the lives of both the children and the mothers happier and more hopeful.

PARK AND DOWNS.

Rev. William B. Ayers, pastor of the Park and Downs Congregational church gave a very interesting sermon at the morning services Sunday, on "the practical direction to those who seek God," and at the Sabbath school Bible class he commenced a series of discourses to be given on the book "The Inside of the Cup." The evening service was a bright cheery optimistic sermon , containing at the same time, some very pointed criticisms of some modern conditions. The minister took for his text the words of Psalm 144, "That our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similtude of a palace; that our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth,," and illustrated what he had to say by scenes from "The Shepherd of the Hills." He examined conditions in the great strata of society, the poor, the rich and the middle class; their heredity and environment and showed how God is working in the race, not because of humanity's efforts upward and desire for improvement, but in spite of, to a large extent the very absence of these. He condemned the modern tendency to make a fad of plain speech and the popular exaggeration and exploitation of existing evil. Showing how reformers advertise the very evils they seek to stamp out. He used many excellent illustration of deeds and characters to show how the world is growing steadily better and to reveal God's hand in the forward Movement.

Sabbath school attendance was 197, of which 63 was in Kindergarten class.

"Christ is the supreme example of the self-controlled, the perfectly disciplined life. He was "made perfect through suffering" what restraint of soul He reveals. He was patient, submissive, silent in the great crises; but He conquered. The long silent march will end at last in splendid victory. Every Jericho will fall, in God's way and time for the obedient soul, that builds life on the Divine plan.

The sermon subject for the evening was "Eve's Serpent and Adam."

HANCOCK AND ADAMS

acquire now than it was then because we live in the midst of circumstances and conditions infinitely complex.

"The city of Washington is in some respects self-contained. It is easy there to forget what the rest of the United States is thinking about. I count it a fortunate circumstance that almost all the windows of the White House and its offices open upon unoccupied spaces that stretch to the banks of the Potomac and then out into Virginia and into the heavens themselves. As I sit there I can constantly forget Washington and remember the United States. Not that I would intimate that all of the United States lies south of Washington, but there is a serious thing back of my thought.

"If you think too much about being re-elected, it is very difficult to be worth re-electing. You are so apt to think that the comparatively small number of persons, numerous as they seem to be when they swarm, who come to Washington to ask for things, do not constitute an important proportion of the population of the country, that it is constantly necessary to come away from Washington to renew one's contact with the people who do not swarm there, who do not ask anything, and who do trust you without their personal counsel to do your duty. Unless one gets this contact he grows weaker and weaker.

"My theme here today, my only thought, is a very simple one. Do not let us go back to the annals of those sessions of Congress to find out what to do, because we live in another age and circumstances are absolutely different. Let us be men of that kind. Let us feel at every turn the compulsions of principle and honor which they felt."

JUST THINK OF IT.

A little boy once said to his schoolmates, "I don't make any more mistakes in my music." This little boy had such poor eyesight that he could not read letters three and one-half inches square more than six feet away from him, and yet he had been repeatedly punished by his violin teacher for making mistakes while taking his lesons. Just think of it; punished for making mistakes when he could not see his notes plainly!

How did he find out that his eyes were weak? His schoolteacher had been making tests of the sight of her pupils and had discovered that this boy could not see well. She reported the fact to his parents, who got glasses that made him the happiest boy in the school. saved him many undeserved punishments and caused him to say, "I don't make any more mistakes in my music."

This boy did not know, nor did his parents know, but that he saw as well as every other boy, and his mistakes were thought to be from carelessness and inattention.

This same boy afterwards became a noted violinist, was educated abroad and played before royalty. His glasses enabled him to see his notes plainly and he made no more mistakes in his reading music.

There have been thousands of just such boys and girls in our public schools in the past, who have been stumbling along, hating their lessons, scolded and punished by their teachers and parents just because they had a defect of vision of which they and their parents and teacher were ignorant.

Parents, do you know that your children have good eye-sight? Do you know that they are not "long-sighted," "near-sighted," or color blind? Do they often complain of being tired, or of having a headache when they return home from school? Do they dislike school? Are they sleepy and dull when trying to learn their home tasks? Is it hard for them to keep up with their class? Are they inclined to "play hookey?" Then do not punish and scold them, until you first find out if there is not some physical cause behind it all, so that you may not regret later and blame yourself for neglect or injustice to one of your own.

Ignorance of the law is no excuse to the lawbreaker in court. Ignorance is no excuse for neglect of your children. Fifty per cent. of the blindness caused by separation of the retina (the sight seeing membrane within the eye) occurs in people who are near-sighted. Many of the headaches of children and others are the result of eye-strain caused by the attempt of the delicate eye muscles to overcome the defect. This overtaxing of them strains the eye muscles, then the letters blur or run together, the child feels tired and the eyes pain or head-aches follows.

Do not neglect your children's eyes!

Fourteen little boys and girls of the Greenleaf school helped six year old Ervin Hinds celebrate the sixth anniversary of his birthday at the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. James P. Hinds on Hudson street Saturday afternoon. The time was spent in games and refreshments were served.

CANDIDATE GARDNER HERE

candidate with two exceptions. He did not agree with the candidate on these but applauded his sincerity. He was a man who would bring credit to the good old commonwealth. In closing he thanked the people of Quincy for the confidence they had expressed in him. He had labored earnestly to see that the funds of the commonwealth were legitimately expended and that the state got a dollar for every dollar expended. He also had a good word to say of the local candidates for the legislature.

Louis F. R. Langelier had just begun to speak when candidate Gardner appeared and he cut short his remarks that the speaker of the evening might be heard. Mr. Langelier spoke briefly of his work in the legislature and of some of the important measures that would come up this year.

Charles L. Burrell, the candidate for the State Treasurer, followed Candidate Gardner. Other speakers who spoke briefly were Walter E. Piper and Edward J. Sandberg, the Quincy candidates for representatives; and Everett M. Bowker, the candidate for county commissioner.

At the close of the rally, Candidate Gardner was pleased to meet all personally and was one of the last to leave the hall.

WINDOWS SMASHED.

William Souden, of the granite firm of Souden & Morrison reported to the police on Sunday that 15 panes of glass had been broken in his sheds of Gilbert street, between noon Saturday and noon Sunday. The glass was covered with a heavy wire netting, the wire on which had been snapped and bent by the force of stone used in doing the damage.

The sheds sets almost on the southerly side of the Ward Three playground and people living in that neighborhood use a path that skirts the property as a short cut. Most of the damage was done from the playground side. Mr. Souden said that the firm did not object to people taking the short cut for convenience, and has no knowledge of any ill feelling toward them. He states however that the window smashing has been going on for sometime and that his last discovery is the worst. The police are making an investigation.

MRS. LILLBACK AT HOSPITAL.

Y. for another month. Mrs. Lillback is at the Quincy City Hospital recovering from a successful operation.

The resignation of Rev. Mr. Lillback was to take effect Oct. 31 and since he tendered it three months ago the pressure of friends and members of the congregation toward his withdrawal of the Brooklyn acceptance has been great.

AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

In the November American Magazine, Maravene Thompson begins a new serial story entitled "The Woman's Law." It is a story of double identity; time, the present; scene, New York. It starts out with the proposition made by a judge who said he could find his double in New York City inside of a half hour—his double, as regards height, weight, shape of the head, color of eyes and hair, his double in these and all of the characteristics that can be conveyed by a description. In the story, a woman, in order to protect her child, acts on this opinion expressed at a dinner party by a judge, and substitutes an innocent man for a murderer under circumstances that make an interesting and thrilling story.

Ray Stannard Baker writes an article entitled "The Glory of Panama."

Peter Clark Macfarlane goes on with his series entitled "Those Who Have Come Back"— true stories of men, who, disgraced or failures at forty, have regained their powers and made a success. "Interesting People" and "The Interpreter's House" are full of good reading.

The funeral of Jennie, the four year old daughter of Antonio DiBona who died at the Quincy City Hospital Friday from burns, was held from her father's home, 215 Copeland street Saturday afternoon. A large number of Italian residents attended the services which were held at the home. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

SUBURBAN LIFE.

If anything were needed to justify its sub-title, "The Countryside Magazine," the November issue of Suburban Life would amply serve this purpose, From cover to cover the contents of this beautiful monthly savor of the affairs of the countryside. Not only does it treat of the things practical, but also of the things beautiful and the things that make for civic good. Harold J. Howland, the contributing editor, has a strong presentation under the title "Why Not Church Unity—Now," of the possibilities that the religious bodies have for concerted effort for the good of their communities. Every woman, and most men, will like "How I Made Money and Remade Myself," the story of how a young woman regained a new lease of life.

"Ideal Garages for Country Homes," "The Proper Care of Ferns in the Home," and "The Public Library as an Educator" are some of the other worth-while articles.

Karan was charged with the larceny of $127 and sentenced to six months in the house of correction. The case was continued on probation, the understanding being that he should make restitution. Karan paid $58.20 of his indebtedness and then stopped and failed to report. The probation officer therefore issued default warrant against him and he was arrested. The suspension was revoked and he was sentenced to six months in jail.

BROKEN EYEGLASSES.

"How did you break your glasses?" inquired the optician of the young woman.

"Oh, they just slipped off my nose without warning and fell down before I could intercept them," she replied.

"Well, that's not strange at this time of the year," continued the optician. "As soon as the weather grows cool in the fall the nose seems to contract and glasses slip off very easily. I have had many cases similar to yours.

"Some people say that my theory about the nose expanding and contracting according to the temperature is all rot, but I find evidence to support it. In summer the glasses fit snug and tight and sometimes the most violent actions fail to dislodge them. Then in the cool weather the glasses are continually slipping and sometimes tumble from the nose without warning, as they did in your case. I have often warned my customers to watch their glasses when the weather is cool."—New York Sun.

ANOTHER WRECK ON NEW HAVEN

Express Ditched by Spreading Rails Near Westerly, R. I.

FIFTEEN PEO LE ARE INJURED

Gilt Edge Express Was Going at Rate of About Thirty Miles an Hour When It Struck Spreading Rails and Five Cars Went Down Ten-Foot Embankment and Landed on Sides

Westerly, R. I., Oct. 27.—Fifteen persons were injured more or less seriously, when the Gilt Edge express from New York for Boston, over the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, went off the track on White Dog curve, a mile and a half east of Westerly. Heavy rain is believed to have undermined the roadbed, causing the rails to spread.

Mrs. Louis Bennet of Winthrop Beach was said to be the most seriously hurt. She was returning home, convalescing from a surgical operation in New York. She has a fractured collarbone, badly sprained foot and possibly a broken leg. Others were conveyed to their homes.

Many of the passengers and physicians who were first on the scene praised the work of the train crew, particularly Brakeman Swan. Swan, although having a gaping wound on the back of his head, helped his comrades quell the first outbreak of panic, and got the wounded out of the overturned cars.

There were six cars in the train, three of wood and three of steel. Five of these cars went down a ten-foot enbankment and turned on their sides. The buffet car, next to the locomotive, left the track, but remained upright. The locomotive remained upright on the rails.

The passengers said that the train, just getting up speed after pulling out of the Westerly station, was going about thirty miles an hour. They felt five or six terrible jars. Then the cars went over.

The two rear coaches, a smoker and a parlor car, broke away and toppled down the embankment. They managed, however, to derail the other four cars, the strain being less severely felt on the buffet car than on the others.

White Dog curve is a lonely spot. A quarter of a mile away were two small farmhouses. As soon as the most seriously hurt were removed to the buffet car, a messenger was sent to one of these houses to telephone to Westerly for assistance. The first word reached here half an hour after the accident.

An examination of the roadbed disclosed that one of the rails was broken and that three other rails were spread, according to some of those who made up the relief party from Westerly. The Westerly chief of police said that he also noticed a broken rail.

PLANS OCEAN FLIGHT

Pegoud, Upside-Down Aviator, Believes Feat Can Be Accomplished

Paris, Oct. 27.—Adolphe Pegoud, the topsy turvy aviator, intends, if he manages to keep alive, to give exhibitions of upside-down flying in New York at the conclusion of his present tour.

Last week he severed his connection with Bleriot, from whom he received a mechanic's salary of $10 a week, and is now charging each aerodrome where he appears, $6000 for a series of flights, covering three days.

Before going to Vienna, Pegoud expressed his willingness to attempt a flight across the Atlantic, provided a proper naval patrol was guaranteed.

ONE KILLED AT POLLS

Italian Government Is Assured of a Large Majority

Rome, Oct. 27.—General elections were held throughout Italy. The disorders were not so grave as expected, although one person was killed and many were wounded. Numerous arrests were made in various quarters.

The balloting was light, because, on account of spring-like weather, the people preferred to go on excursions, rather than to the polls. Results of the elections are not definitely known, but the government is assured of a large majority.

Giovanni Giolitti, the premier, has been re-elected almost unanimously, with the other members of the cabinet.

TARS ARE CHEERED

Arouse Enthusiasm When They Attend W. C. T. U. Meeting

New York, Oct. 27.—Enthusiasm was aroused at a mass meeting held at the Brooklyn academy of music when eight sailors from the United States steamship Washington, the receiving ship at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, made their appearance at the convention of the World's Women's Christian Temperance union.

Many people in the audience rose and cheered, and after the meeting was over Lady Aurea Howard, who was representing her mother, Rosalin, Countess of Carlisle, at the convention, chatted with the men for several minutes.

Mrs. Anderson Hughes-Drew, delegate from New Zealand, won the woman suffrage element in the audience by her speech.

"I never knew what an 'anti' was," she said, "until I came to America. It was very surprising to me that any woman should ally herself against suffrage for her sex."

IS AWAITING STORK

Russian Royal Family Hopes for New Heir To the Throne

St. Petersburg, Oct. 27.—That old question of a successor to the throne of the Romanoffs may be settled soon, for Europe is interested in the announcement that the czarina is expecting an addition to her family.

For months past she has been living in retirement at her summer home in Livadia, in excellent health, and will remain there until the interesting event occurs. All her other children were born at Peterhof, except the Grand Duchess Olga.

The only boy in the family is 9-year-old Alexis, who is in wretched health, having always been delicate, and, though the facts are shrouded in deepest mystery, is said to be slowly dying. A paper circulated by the Nihilists boldly declares that the doctors give the boy only a few months longer to live.

WILD FAMILY IS FOUND IN WOODS

Mother and Eight Children Were Living In Cave

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Oct. 27.—The discovery of a half-starved, ragged and wild family of a mother and eight children, living in a cave among the rocks in the Dover mountains, was made by Miss Anna Hotchkiss, county agent for dependent children of Dutchess county.

The woman, who gave her name as Mrs. Charles Stevens, was scantily clad. The oldest of the children is a girl of 16 years, and the youngest is 2 months.

When visited by Miss Hotchkiss the woman and her children were greatly frightened, and their language is of such a queer nature that only the mother can be understood. The hut occupied by the family was destitute of food.

WELCOME PRESIDENT

Cheering Throngs Greet Wilson on Trip Through South

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 27.—Thousands of southern folk in great, cheering throngs welcomed President Wilson to Dixie land as he sped through Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia, en route to the Southern Commercial congress at Mobile, Ala., where he will deliver an address.

The shrill notes of the rebel yell at Salisbury, N. C., awakened the president earlier than he had intended to rise, and as the autumn sunlight streaked over the Blue Ridge, a pilgrimage of admiring hosts began. At villages and hamlets where the president's train ran slowly, at cities where stops were made there were huge crows, enthusiastic and happy at their first glimpse of Woodrow Wilson, the first native of the south elevated to the presidency since the Civil war.

MINE GUARD KILLED

Battle Rages In Mining District of Ludlow, Col.

Ludlow, Col., Oct. 27.—A general battle between strikers, mine guards and deputy sheriffs was waged twelve hour in Berwin canon, at Hastings and in the vicinity of the Colorado and Southern station at Ludlow.

Firing started at 3 o'clock in the morning and continued intermittently until late in the afternoon. One mine guard was killed and, according to union men, one striker is missing.

More than 700 armed strikers are reported to be in the field against the mine guards.

Armed strikers patrol the entire district in the vicinity of Ludlow, and communication with the camps of Cedar Hill, Tollersburg, Berwin, Hastings, Del Augua and Tobasco has practically been cut off.

WIDOW FACES GREAT ORDEAL

Mrs. Eaton Cross Examined by District Attorney Barker

INSANITY EXPERTS PRESENT

Watch Her Closely as She Gives Her Testimony—Prisoner Cheerful After First Day on Stand and Appears Confident—Her Two Daughters May Be Called For Defense

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 27.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, thankful of having had the opportunity to tell her story of the death of her husband, the late Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, and confident of acquittal on that charge, will today face the most trying ordeal of her life—her cross examination by District Attorney Albert F. Barker.

During the whole time she was on the stand Saturday Mrs. Eaton was incessantly watched by insanity experts engaged by the prosecution, and planted in such a position in the court room that they could catch each every one of the woman's words and watch every expression of her face. She did not seem at all disconcerted by this espionage.

A point that escaped general notice in Mrs. Eaton's examination may make it necessary to call June Keyes to the stand provided the judge will allow her testimony. When Ralph Keyes was on the stand he was asked if he was the father of June's baby, and before the judge could call a halt he replied strongly that he was not, whereupon the judge ordered the answer stricken out, refusing to allow the matter to be gone into.

Mrs. Eaton evidently noticed this exclusion, for while she was on the stand and the same matter touched on she slipped in a quick denial of Keyes' statement by remarking that he was the father of June's child. The judge at once struck out the answer, but Mrs. Eaton was apparently well satisfied.

The question that is on everybody's lips about the streets and hotels of Plymouth is, "How will she stand the cross examination?"

Those who have attended the trial have seen the district attorney in all his moods and his quick shifting from the quiet, soothing, gentle-mannered lawyer to the merciless, brow-beating examiner has led to much speculation as to the manner in which he will handle the woman accused of Admiral Eaton's death.

Attorney Geogan admitted there was a possibility that the defense will summon June Keyes as a witness. This, according to the junior counsel for the defendant, will depend wholly on what is developed during tomorrow's session, but he stated his belief was that such action would not be necessary.

During her cross examination Mrs. Eaton will face a larger than ever array of medical authorities. All during her occupancy of the stand Saturday Medical Examiner Osgood and other medical authorities were observing her actions and manner of talking.

It could not be learned definitely whether Dorothy Eaton, the crippled daughter of the accused woman, will be recalled as a rebuttal witness. One issue in the case, that which concerned the baby boy adopted by the admiral and Mrs. Eaton, was made a strong issue by the defense; and as Dorothy is said to have been present during the affair, it is possible that she may be recalled to the witness stand to testify concerning it.

OLD SWEETHEARTS WED

Were Parted In Youth by Opposition of Families and Married Others

Vineland, N. J., Oct 27.—Lovers of thirty years ago were married here. They were A. S. Forbes of Haverhill, Mass., and Mrs. Charles Brown of this city.

Parted in their youth by opposition of members of their families they married others. Hearing that each was free to marry again a correspondence was begun that ended in an offer and a promise of marriage.

The bridegroom is a retired shoe manufacturer and a member of Major Howe Post, G. A. R., of Haverhill. He served in the Civil war in the First Massachusetts heavy artillery. Rev. F. A. Demaris, pastor of the First Methodist church, performed the home wedding.

FIRST HUNTING FATALITY

Man Taken For Deer by Boy Receives Charge of Buckshot

Guilford, Me., Oct. 27.—The first fatality since the fall hunting season opened was reported from Abbott. Herbert Foster, aged 25, of Guilford, was shot by Morris Crockett, aged 14, of Abbott and died four hours later.

Foster and Joseph Smith were watching for deer in a field beside the main road, when the Crockett boy came along. In the growing dusk he mistook Foster for a deer, he said, and fired a charge of buckshot into his body.

THOMAS GAHAN,
Superintendent.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

"Now, Ebenezer, what are your plans? I should advise you to find a good housekeeper, marry and keep your home. I've heard it mentioned that you thought of selling. Don't do that. If you do you'll be sorry. The house needs repairing. See to that, and in the meantime be looking about for a wife. I'd like to spend a month here later on, in August, perhaps, and I want the repairs to be done at once. I will advise about altering and making the house more convenient."

"Wait, Eliza Jane. Don't spend your strength along that line, as they say. I might get a wife, but I sartinly wouldn't be crazy enough to tear out these partitions and make over my dear old home—which I sartinly don't mean to sell. I want to die right here where the rest of our family hev, and be laid away out yender, where we hev jest put sister Mary Ann. She and me were pretty happy here together; and she loved everything about the house, no matter if it was unconvenient and beyond paperin' and paintin', which she was a calkerlatin' on; the repairs ken wait till I'm dead and gone!"

Ebenezer Halpin, having delivered perhaps the longest speech of his whole life, looked at his sister, Mrs. Monie, with a sort of determined meekness which somewhat surprised her.

"Why, Ebenezer, you wouldn't think of asking any woman to come here with such an unhandy house to do work in. I couldn't think of allowing you to do so."

"Wall, Eliza Jane, I'm of age, I calkerlate. The farm and everythin' on it belongs to me. I shan't ever ask any woman to marry me, 'tain't 'tall likely, for I'm old fashioned enuff to b'lieve a man and wife should love each other, and I don't think any one is a goin' to fall in love with such an old crank as I am, to say nothin' about the other side of the question. It'll be lonesome enuff, the land knows, for I'll miss sister Mary Ann every time I turn round. You hev a habit, I can see, of hevin' your own way 'bout most things. You allus did I calkerlate, afore you left home to get an eddication, likewise a rich husband and everything along that line. Me and Mary Ann just worked along here, talked things over and fixed them up together, and we are still goin' to be partners, if she is a silent one." The man's voice broke, ending in a sob.

"Well, well, Ebenezer, I am surprised! I want to help you, and I am sure I never supposed you had so much independence. However, I'll say no more. As you say, you have a right to your own way with your own property. I have been intending for several months to return here for Old Home Week, and it is so quiet among the hills I would really love to spend the entire month of August here if you are willing. I had written a letter to sister Mary—here it is—asking if I could come, and enclosed this check, thinking it might please her to receive a little present. Then the telegram came telling of her sudden death. Will you accept it, brother Ebenezer?" and Mrs. Monie extended the letter in a deprecatory manner.

"No, thank ye, Eliza Jane. Me and Mary Ann allus got along on the money we scraped together 'mong these old rocks and hills, and I calkerlate I'll hev enuff to git me thru life if I don't scrape up eny more. Come and make a visit if you want to."

After a moment's pause he continued: "We never made money so much an idol as we might hev, at the same time we saved up some 'gainst a rainy day. I calkerlate there's lots of sinnin' 'long jest that line, lovin' the stuff and hoardin' it up. Now old Mis' Graves, over t'other side of the hill, she's allus talkin' about money. Me and Mary Ann jest lived a day at a time; tried to love the Lord better'n we did our money, and we had powerful good times. Seems like I'll miss her more'n I can bear!" and Ebenezer Halpin arose from his seat on the broad piazza, which overlooked the dear old hills he so fondly loved and passed down the flower bordered walk, through the June sunshine to the open gate, through which, earlier in the day, his twin sister had been borne by the loving hands of his neighbors.

The days and weeks sped by. Old Home Week came and passed, but Mrs. Monie did not return to the Old New Hampshire hills. People talked, wondered and speculated as to what Mr. Halpin would do, and more than one interested female renewed former attempts to secure his favor, but all in vain.

One morning in September his nearest neighbor Deacon Plowman, was quite surprised to see him driving up to the door, dressed in his Sunday clothes, his face wearing a happy expression, his whole manner indicating pleasant anticipations.

"Wall, wall, Eben, what's to do? "Ain't goin' to surprise us after all these years, air ye?" said the deacon jocularly.

"Wouldn't wonder a mite if I did do a little suthin' 'long that line," chuckled Eben. "I called to see if you'd let your hired man do my chores for a day or two, perhaps longer; can't jest say how long I'll be gone. Take the milk right home, what's left after the calves are fed. I brung along what cream I had on hand. Think you could spare 'im?"

"Sartin, sartin; allus glad to do ye a favor, and haven't forgotten my own young (?) days when I went sparkin'," returned the deacon laughing at his own joke.

Eben dropped his eyes with a well simulated air of embarrassment, clucked to his old horse and drove away.

The news spread, and after passing through severel hands or mouths, assumed this form: "Ebenezer Halpin has gone to get married. Deacon Plowman says he has gone to Manchester and will be gone a week or so when in truth the good deacon had only remarked, when quizzed about his neighbor's plans, that he "knew no more'n the dead where he had gone. He went down the hill, he may be in Manchester; he may be gone a week, but I don't know a thing about it."

Three days only had gone by when, passing up the long hill which led to Ebenezer's home, a load of furniture drawn by a span of horses, was seen in the late afternoon. It was driven into the long open shed adjoining the house. The horses were taken to the stable and fed, the driver making his own meal from a lunch-pail he had brought along.

"Wall, stranger, you better come down to the house and sleep to-night. Suppose Mr. and Mrs. Halpin won't be along 'fore to-morrer," said Deacon Plummer's hired man, as he arrived on the scene just as the stranger had finished his supper.

The man grinned as he replied, "Thank ye, thank ye! No. I don't think Mr. Halpin and his wife will git here 'fore that time. I'm goin' to unload and after the horses have baited and rested shall hitch and start back hum. Mr. Halpin said as how you'd prob'ly be here and would be glad to help me with the load. I've got a key to the back door, and we'll just set the things in the kitchen."

"Whew! a wheel chair!" ejaculated the hired man as the stranger unloaded that useful article, pausing to note the look of astonishment with which it was greeted his own face full of fun.

The hired man continued after a pause.

"Say, I'm sort o' cur'us to know who he's married to anyhow. I hope she ain't a cripple!"

"Call her what you please, the woman who is comin' here has to use that chair all the time," was the answer.

"All the time? Wall that beats me. I allus thought Eben Halpin an odd stick, but to go and marry a cripple at his time o' life! Wall, 'taint none of my bizness," wisely concluded the hired man.

The sun was nearly out of sight the following day when Ebenezer Halpin's old sorrel horse, wearing a new harness and drawing a new canopy topped two-seated carryall containing an old, old lady and a girl of ten or twelve years of age, came slowly up the hill. Apparently Ebenezer was unconscious of the eyes peeping at him between open places in stone walls, and from behind trees which lined the road on either side, but a close observer would have noted the twinkle in his eyes, and the lines about them which showed his merriment. When he had driven up to the door of his home, he turned to his companions and said:

"Welcome to your home. Feel that it is your home, and be happy." Then apparently not seeing the tears which were running down the aged woman's face, he alighted from the carriage and entering the house brought out the wheel-chair to the piazza, and a moment later had lifted the crippled woman in his strong arms, and placed her in it.

"Now, Clara, take Kitty Budge right in the house in his basket, and I'll unload the other stuff, put up old Sorrel, and then we will see what there is for supper. Tomorrow we'll hav' a woman here to work and make our butter, a man to help about the farm work while me and you'll do odd jobs and take care of grandma," and with a heart full of happiness, that kind which comes with the doing of a good deed, Ebenezer proceeded to take care of his horse.

It was late in October. The leaves from the beautiful trees around the farmhouse had many of them fallen, and the winds were gently blowing through the branches, and sighing through the numberless pines in the "pine woods" back of the barn. Towering above all the rest was "Father Pine" the grand old tree, the first to come, and from which had sprung the lesser ones, which people said were to fill Ebenezer Halpin's purse whenever he should decide to sell.

Many would-be purchasers had sped up the long hill in their autos only to go down again without having attained their object.

"Ain't ready to sell. Don't know as I ever will be," the farmer would say, and then gaze lovingly at his trees, and think of his sister who with him had watched their upspringing and steady growth.

Out in the cemetery a double shaft had been placed, of roughly hewn granite, while a small pine had been planted near by. Here Ebenezer always stopped on his way to church every Sunday morning, rain or shine. Loving, tender-hearted as a child, he cherished his twin sister's memory, and seemed to think of her as still with him in spirit. So closely had their lives been interwoven that he thought he knew what her wishes would have been, and always deferred to what he imagined her plans might have been.

On this glorious October afternoon Mrs. Monie flew up the hill in her auto finding the newly organized family all seated on the piazza. Astonishment sealed her lips at first and, fearing an outbreak which might wound the feelings of "his family." Ebenezer promptly wheeled the old lady indoors and sent her granddaughter after her.

By the time this was accomplished, his sister had found her tongue and exclaimed:

"Who on earth have you here, Ebenezer?"

"Go slow, go slow, Eliza Jane; only some folks I've invited here for a spell!"

"For how long?" continued the wondering lady.

"Wall, that sort o' depends on how long I live or how long they live, Eliza Jane!"

"Will you tell me who they are and what you have done! Mrs. Monie's face was a study as she asked the question.

"Sartin! Sartin! 'Twon't take long to tell the hull story. One day the first of last month, I was over to the postoffice, waitin' for the mail which was late. Me and our minister fell to talkin' 'bout the hard times poor folks was hevin' most everywhere. We hed talked some little spell 'long that line, when he drawed a long breath, and sed he'd jest got a letter from a friend 'o hisen, in a place where he uster preach, tellin' him of a sad case of a family he knowed well. Fust of all the wife took sick and died, leavin' her husban' and little girl of eight years old. Her husban's old grandmother had a home with them. 'Twan't very long arter she died when her husban', John Carter, put his money inter a 'vestment that went under, an' worryin' over that an' other things wore on Carter some considerable. Then the old grandma in tryin' to do the work with the little gal's help fell on the floor and broke her hip. Carter got clean discouraged, couldn't get work, and finally he took sick and died, leavin' the poor old woman and little Clara to go to the poorhouse. They was to be taken there the very next week arter the minister told me on't.

"I came home that night and dreamed a powerful funny dream. I thought that Mary Ann came back and told me to go and git that old lady an' little Clara; anyway to take care on her and not let her go to the poorhouse I didn't stop to think it over much afore I went to see the parson, and when I told him my bizness, I declare he broke right down and couldn't speak at fust. Wall, he give me a letter to give the s'lectmen of the town where they lived, and I started off the very next day arter them. I didn't have any trouble. They was real glad to come and the s'lectmen were glad to hev them. The fun of it was, everbuddy here thought I'd gone to get a wife," concluded Eben with a chuckle.

Drawing himself up to his full height, he turned toward the auto, smiled and said:

"That machine cost a pile of money! You got it for the sake of the enjoyment you could git out of it, I s'pose. Wall, I can git a lot more out of my 'vestment I'm calkerlatin'; and, 'side from a two-seater, and a new harness for old Sorrel, me and Mary Ann allus meant to have when we had 'dopted somebody; we meant to when the chance come 'long. I've not paid out nigh onto fifty dollars yet. It'll cost more of course. Clara takes to me fine, and she is goin' to be eddicated enyhow. Goin' to hev papers fixed day arter tomorrow, so it will be all right if anythin' happens to me. Now, let your man drive your machine into the barn floor, and come in an' stay a week or a month with us, and git 'quainted with my family, won't ye?"

"Ebenezer, you were rightly named, 'A stone of help.' I am proud to call you brother. Yes, I came to have a rest in the old home, and I'll stay for awhile and help you all I can to make your family happy." Holding out both hands to her brother as she alighted from the auto, she raised her face, with eyes full of tears, to receive the caress Ebenezer was only too ready to bestow.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

Those outside were even less able to see than we, and perhaps they thought we had withdrawn or been driven back, for they crept forward. While I had lived in the gardener's lodge of Wilberforce castle I had got to be quite an axman. I brought down the heavy weapon on the first head, striking with just enough force to kill the man and yet leave me able to recover myself without delay, and when three heads had been knocked that way in rapid succession with no more damage to me than a trifling spear cut on the ankle, the battle stopped for a moment. I laughed.

"Come on, you dogs!" I shouted. "I can play at that game until you are more tired of it than I."

I spoke without thought, however, for those outside the opening drew back the bodies by their legs and thus cleared the entrance. I judged that the outer cave, which was large and spacious, was now filled with men. They were shouting and gesticulating in great excitement. But none made any effort to enter. Finally I heard a human voice speaking English. It was Pimball.

"Master Hampdon!" he cried.

"Speak not to me, you murdering villain!" I answered.

"Now, this is madness," he went on. "You are trapped like rats. We have only to wall up the entrance or build a fire in front of it and you will die."

"It is better to die even so," I replied, "than to live with men like you."

"You are a fool!" he exclaimed.

He dropped down on his knees as he spoke, and I could see his face in the opening, but too far away for me to swing my ax. If it were my last effort I was determined that I would get him, and so I waited.

"Don't lose the sword!" I cried to my lady across the chamber, where her white face stared at me out of the dimness.

"I shall not," she answered undauntedly.

Then I lifted the ax and waited for Master Pimball and his men to come on. But he had a better plan. Bullets and powder they had in plenty, and he knew from the fact that I had thrown my pistols at them that I had none left. With a deafening roar a storm of bullets from a dozen weapons swept into the cave. I leaped back. I had to or I should have been shot where I stood. Of the way thus opened they took advantage, and under cover of a second volley they entered. Well, it was all up. All I could do was to leap upon them as they rose, and—

But at that moment the solid rock beneath my feet began to sway. It was as if I had been instantly translated to the deck of a tossing ship. I stood rooted to the spot trying to maintain a balance. Pimball had lifted himself upon one knee and was almost clear of the entrance, but he, too, stopped appalled. A sickening feeling of apprehension that all the savages on earth could not inspire came over me. My mistress screamed faintly. The natives outside broke into terror stricken shouts and cries: an oath burst from the lips of the leader of the murderers.

The next moment, with a crash like a thousand thunder peals, the earth was rent in twain.

The earthquake shook that rocky island like a baby's cradle. A great mass of rock over the entrance fell. With another roar like the first the cliff was riven in every direction. The noise outside eased. The men with Pimball were ground to death. Upon his legs lay fifty feet of broken rock. Darkness, total and absolute, succeeded the dim light. I remember realizing that the attack had failed and then something struck me. Down upon the wet, still quivering sand I fell and knew no more.

Water, icy cold, trickling upon me from some spring, opened in the wall by the earthquake presently brought me to myself. I lay for a moment listening. I could hear nothing at first, but in a little while a deep groan and then a faint whispered prayer came to me.

I strove desperately to collect my senses, and finally I realized where I was—the cave, the battle, the earthquake, Pimball and the woman!

"Mistress Lucy!" I cried.

"Oh, thank God!" her voice came through the darkness hysterically, "I thought you were killed."

"No," I answered, slowly rising to my knee and stretching my members to see if I had control of them, which, fortunately, I soon discovered I had. "I was stunned but otherwise I believe I am not much hurt. How is it with you?"

"I am well and unharmed."

"Thank God!"

"For heaven's sake, water," interrupted a trembling hoarse, anguished voice.

"Who speaks?" I asked.

"I, Pimball. I am pinned to the ground, my legs are crushed, my back is broken, I am dying."

"There should be a lantern here," I said. "I placed it—let me think—where did I place it?"

"It was just to the left of the opening," answered my little mistress.

I was turned around and giddy, but I managed to fix the direction of the entrance by Pimball's groans and by good fortune presently found the lantern. It would burn but a few hours, but we never needed a light as we did then. My flint and steel I carried ever in my pocket, and to kindle a flickering flame was but the work of a moment. If I had not possessed it I would have given years of my life for that light which threw a faint illumination about the place.

There, opposite me, where I had stationed her, protected by a niche in the cave from the rain of rocks which had beaten me down, was my mistress, safe and unharmed. I stepped toward her and with a low cry of thankfulness she fell into my arms. I soothed her for a moment and then turned to the other occupant of the chamber. The entrance was blocked up, the rock had settled down. Pimball's legs were broken and his back as well. It was impossible to release him—what lay upon him weighed tons and tons.

"You murdering hound!" I cried, "you have brought this upon us." But he would only plead for water, disregarding my reproaches.

I was for killing him with my cutlass, which I picked up, but she would not have it so. She filled a half cocoanut shell with water and brought it to him. She bathed his brow and gave him some to drink. It gave him temporary relief, but his minutes were numbered. His life was going out by seconds.

"God!" he cried as his eyes caught the gleam of the gold and silver; "the treasure!" He stretched out his hand toward it and then stopped. "I am undone," he choked out with a fearful scream. "Mistress!"

"Yes?"

"Forgive"—

Indeed, she forgave him, I make no doubt, but her forgiveness came too late, for his head dropped—he had been looking sideways—and his face buried itself in the wet sand.

"Is he dead?" she asked, awestruck.

I nodded. No closer inspection was needed to establish the truth of that fact.

"And we, too, shall die," she said, shuddering. "We are buried here in the bowels of the earth, in this treasure lined prison."

"The earthquake which closed the mouth of the cave may have opened the other end."

"It is possible," she answered, "but not likely."

"And, besides, you remember the running stream on the other side, which we did not follow?"

"Yes."

"It must run somewhere."

"Well?"

"Where water runs man and woman may follow."

"At least it will do no harm to try."

"Come, then," said I, extending my hand to her and holding the lantern before me for pitfalls.

STONE CUTTERS CONSUMPTION

Demand for Humanitarian Laws, Says Writer

James F. Ried, the Quincy correspondent of the Granite Cutters Journal writes as follows in the October issue:

"We know the stiff fight that many of our branches have had to drive the surfacing machine from the shed. The action of our 1912 convention in connection with the "bumper" was good legislation, but does not go far enough. The monthly death reports for years past in our trade show that consumption or tuberculosis, whichever sounds worst, is the cause of the deaths of the great majority of our members.

"Inventive minds have produced wonders in the way of granite cutting machines. Every machine produced has shortened the lives of our members and thereby increased the death rate.

"The death rate from consumption in many trades is appalling, in ours it is especially so, and humanitarian laws making for the conservation of health are sure to come.

"I believe if employers would place human life above profit in the shape of the "Almighty Dollar," they could help greatly in the conservation of life among our members. The most conservative must admit that when comparatively young men, of vigorously robust constitutions, die when they should be at their best, there must be a cause. It is agreed that the inhalation of dust is the cause.

"The Quincy Avenue Granite Co., M. Adrian, manager, have had in operation for some time a suction device in connection with the surfacing machine which is almost perfect. Every particle of dust is absorbed, and the device is so simple and can be installed at such a small cost that I cannot conceive why other employers in this city at least have not installed like devices.

"Mr. Adrian has proven himself a humanitarian of the best type, one who realizes the dangers to which the granite cutter is exposed by inhaling dust, and who, man-fashion, does what he can to prevent the dieases resulting from its inhalation.

"State laws making for compulsion along this line will cause men with inventive minds to bend their energies on the production of devices which will be preventative and precautionary.

"When funerals occur the boss generally heads the subscription list for flowers. I would advise the investing of these amounts in an up to date suction device, so that the dreaded dust would be safely removed and the sheds would be filled with healthy robust men who would live to a good old age."

Fate of the Peanuts.

A popular author, who writes human interest stuff for several newspapers, went to the department of agriculture in Washington one day and secured a peck of diseased peanuts. The scientists in the department were having a hot argument as to whether or not the peanuts, if eaten, would kill a human being, and the author took the edibles to his office to have them photographed. He saw a big story in the fact that the high browed scientific men could not tell when a peanut was fatal.

The next morning, when he entered his office, he found that the whole peck was gone. He instituted a search, and finally discovered that the colored janitor had stolen and eaten the peanuts.

After keeping the janitor under observation for three days and seeing that he neither peeked nor pined, the author abandoned his story and wrote to the department:

"Quit arguing. The peanuts are harmless."—Popular Magazine.

A Coaxer For Noyes.

Alfred Noyes after a lecture at Dartmouth college received the following dispatch from President Dr. Ernest Fox Nichols:

Come back to us in winter time, in winter time;
Come back to us in winter time (it isn't far from Boston).
The college hasn't had nearly enough yet, so won't you and Mrs. Noyes try to return to us later for two or three days? Mr. Knapp is telegraphing your manager for another longer engagement. Please influence the tyrant to grant it.

The first part of this telegram is a parody of a refrain in Mr. Noyes' "The Barrel Organ."

Come down to Kew in lilac time, in lilac time, in lilac time;
Come down to Kew in lilac time (it isn't far from London!)
And you shall wander hand in hand with love in summer's wonderland;
Come down to Kew in lilac time (it isn't far from London!)

Fourteen In a Bed.

Hospitals are so plentiful and so efficient nowadays that we are apt to forget how we have advanced since the "bad old times" An account is given in the London Hospital of the work done by the Hotel Dieu in Paris a century or two ago

The herding together of patients was a marked feature, and, though the beds were big, it is startling to read of twelve or even fourteen being placed in one. Up to the seventeenth century four posters were in common use and the brilliant idea that the convalescents might be provided for on the solid canopies was duly carried into effect. The patients mounted by ladders. It is stated that in 1592 no fewer than 63,000 persons died of plague in the Hotel Dieu alone.

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

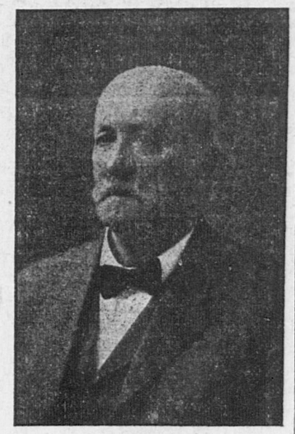
You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. If you want your own town to thrive

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

ELISHA THAYER.

Had Elisha Thayer of South Braintree lived eleven days more he would have rounded out 88 years and as usual opened his house to relatives and friends. One hundred or more people gathered at his home annually, on his birthday, out of respect for this grand old man. He passed away Saturday evening at his home 20 Crescent avenue. The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 oclock, Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern of Worchester, his former pastor and Rev. Tyler E. Gale of the South Congregational church officiating.



ELISHA THAYER,

Elisha Thayer was born in Holbrook, Nov. 5, 1825, and when about ten years old his parents moved to South Braintree. April 20, 1851, he was united in marriage to Miss Celia A. M. Bates of Hanover and has resided in South Braintree ever since. Older residents will remember when he kept a grocery store on Hancock street living in the tenement over the store.

He also served for a number of years as postmaster giving up the foregoing occupations to start a slipper business, manufacturing in a building occupying the site of the present Tracey building on Pearl street. He continued there temporarily, then removed the business to Boston. Some twenty years ago he retired from mercantile life attending entirely to his real estate and other personal business interests. For three years he was president of the Hingham, Nantasket, and Hull Steamship Company and has filed many positions of trust in the state and community.

About seven years ago Mrs. Thayer passed away leaving two daughters, Mrs. Charles Henry Sprague of South Braintree and Mrs. Samuel A. Willis of Worcester.

Mr. Thayers eighty-seventh birthday the fifth of last November came on the day of the national election. In the morning Mr. Thayer visited the polls and for the seventeenth time cast his vote for president. During the afternoon he received his relatives and friends. He was remembered with a birthday cake, boxes of confestionery, flowers and many other gifts. He was assisted in receiving by his two daughters Mrs. Samuel A. Willis and Mrs. Charles H. Sprague, his granddaughters Mrs. E. A. Santon and Miss Ethel B. Sprague and his great-granddaugters Miss Harriet Hutchins and little two year old Charlotte Santon.

Rrefreshments were served throughout the afternoon. Mr. Thayer, as has been his custom for a number of years, sent pieces of his birthday cake and ice cream to those of his friends who were too aged or infirm to call.

—The Philadelphia Record admires the energy with which Boston addresses itself to the task of becoming a great seaport. Steamships are outgrowing dry docks, and the Imperator is to go to an English port for repairs because there is not a dock in her own country that will hold her. Nor is there a dock in New York, unless it be in the navy yard. Boston has contracted to build a dry dock that will take in any steamship afloat, and in return the Hamburg-American, Cunard and White Star Companies agree to provide a minimum number of dockings.—Banker and Tradesman.

ANOTHER NOMINATION FOR C. H. JOHNSON

Has Already Filed Papers As Citizens' Candidate For Mayor

Brief Sketches of Candidates Now in the Field

Now that the excitement of filing papers for the municipal primaries has passed interest in city politics will centre in the Democratic nomination for Mayor and independent papers. There have been many rumors that the election would see one if not more added to the list seeking election to the office of Mayor. John L. Miller is now the only one in sight.

From what is now known, it is certain that there will be at least four candidates seeking election as Mayor in December. As but one can win out, one guess at the present time is as good as another, as to who will win, although Mr. Johnson seems to stand the best show.

As announced, Monday, Charles H. Johnson, who will get the Republican nomination without opposition, took out papers as a Citizens candidate, or rather for a Citizens endorsement. One of these papers he filed later in the day, so that he has clinched the designation of "Citizen," for there can be only one of the same designation.

John L. Miller has papers out and he will probably run as an Independent, although it can not be told just what his designation will be until he files his papers.

In the list of nomination papers filed up to Saturday night for the different offices it should be stated that none of these papers had been certified by the Registrars of Voters, for the Registrars had no opportunity to examine them.

As it takes but five names to nominate a candidate from the ward and but thirty names to nominate a candidate to be voted for at large, there is little question but what all of the papers filed will be passed, as all have more than enough names.

Take for instance the papers of Mr. Johnson, for Mayor, he had over six hundred signatures. The Registrars will not bother to go over the entire list to see if they are correct. As soon as they have checked up thirty names the paper will be passed, and the same will be true in regard to other papers. It would be a waste of valuable time for the registrars to go over several hundred names when but thirty are needed.

Brief sketches of the Mayoralty candidates follow:

CANDIDATE JOHNSON.

Charles H. Johnson, the only Republican candidate, is a native of Middleboro, although he has been a resident of Quincy since 1880. He was born Feb. 15, 1861, and early in life removed to Hingham, where he obtained his education, coming to Quincy in 1880, where he was employed for a number of years by the late Mayor William A. Hodges. In 1889 he established himself in the grocery business at Quincy Point where he remained for several years.

In politics he has always been a Republican, and for many years served on the Ward Committee of the ward in which he resided. He has always been an active worker in the cause of temperance and his first public speaking was as a temperance orator. His public career began in 1893 when he served Ward Two as a member of the City Council. He was returned in 1894 from the ward, and 1895 as councilman at large. In 1891 he was appointed on the Board of Assessors and served during the years 1901, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, and was chairman of the Board in 1905, '06 and '07. He also has served as an inspector of provisions and for fifteen years has been a truant officer. He is also the census officer for the school board.

He was for many years superintendent of the First church Sunday school. He is a member of Rural lodge F. & A. M., St. Stephen's Royal Arch chapter, the Ancient order of United Workmen, Board of Trade, Quincy Yacht club, Quincy Teachers association and of the First Parish club.

CANDIDATE SHAW.

Willlar G. Shaw, the Progressive candidate, is one of Quincy's well known business men, being proprietor of the well known Shaw Furniture house. While he has always been active in matters tending to advance the material interests of the city, this is his first appearance upon the political stage. His entrance into the contest was a surprise to many, but to no one more than himself,as he did not seek the position.

Mr. Shaw is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Bethany Congregational Church. He is married and has a family. He was at one time president of the Quincy Merchants' association and is now a member of the Board of Trade.

CANDIDATE ASH.

Dr. John H. Ash is a native of North Weymouth and came to Quincy upon his graduation from the Harvard medical school 22 years ago and has built up a large practice. He has always been prominent in public affairs and has served on the school committee, the board of health and the trustees of the Thomas Crane Public Library. During the last two years he has been city physician.

He is the examining physician of a number of fraternal orders. He is a member of St. Mary's church.

CANDIDATE FEGAN.

Edward J. Fegan is a native of Quincy where he was born, June 26, 1880. He was educated in the Adams and Coddington grammar schools. He went to Boston College preparatory school in 1894 and entered Boston College in September, 1898, from which he received the degree of A. B. in June, 1902. While at Boston College preparatory school he won the prize debate medal besides winning several class meals.

He entered Georgetown University in the fall of 1902, taking the post graduate course in addition to the law school course.

He received the degree of M. A. from Georgetown in June, 1903, capturing the first prize in both courses. He was graduated from Georgetown law school in 1905 with the degree of LL. B., took the Massachusetts bar examination, and was admitted to practice in the courts of the commonwealth in August, 1905, and in the United States courts in 1907. He has had law offices in Boston and Quincy since 1905. Mr. Fegan is a member of Quincy lodge of Moose and Quincy lodge of Elks, and St. John's church.

CANDIDATE MILLER.

John L. Miller who has taken out papers as an independent candidate for Mayor is a well known granite manufacturer. He was the nominee of the Progressive party in 1912, and also ran as a Republican Independent. In a three-cornered fight he polled nearly 1600 votes. The only public office he has held is that of member of the school committee, being chairman of the board at the present time. His term expires this year, and he is not a candidate for re-election. Mr. Miller is a member of the Wollaston lodge of Masons and the Wollaston Baptist Church.

He was for several years the president of the Granite Manufacturers association and was chairman of the recent convention of the Retail Monumental Dealers association.

The public schools will be closed Friday because of the Norfolk County Teachers' convention held at Jordan hall, Boston.

DENVER CLUB VISIT QUINCY

Knights Templar Surprise Em. Sir. Walter E. Piper

Quincy commandery, Knights Templar, received a fraternal visit at its regular conclave Monday evening from a delegation of sir knights from St. Omer commandery of Dorchester and Palestine commandery of Chelsea. The visiting sir knights composed the larger part of the Denver club who recently made the pilgrimage to Denver, Col., to attend the trienial conclave of the Grand Commandery.

Em. Sir Walter E. Piper, commander of Quincy commandery, was a member of the club to the conclave and the visit was complimentary to him, and was in the nature of a surprise as their visit was unannounced.

The visiting sir knights were headed by Generalissmo William G. Irwin who was the acting commander of St. Omer commandery on the pilgrimage. The delegation, which composed twenty swords was received shortly after the business session and was accorded due honors. The work of the evening was the Illustrious Order of the Red Cross which was exemplified by the officers of Quincy commandery in a manner that was highly complimentary to them.

Following the work of the evening, Commander Piper gave a short account of his visit to Denver, and brief addresses were made by several of the visiting sir knights, all of whom had a good word to say for the commander of Quincy commandery. They were enthusiastic over their trip which had been an incident never to be forgotten. It was urged that as many as possible should attend the grand conclave which is to be held in Los Angeles, Cal., in 1916.

At the close of the conclave an adjournment was made to the banquet hall where refreshments were served, and there was more speaking.

PRETTY WEDDING AT BRAINTREE

Miss Irene Holbrook Bride of Arthur W. Drollett

A pretty wedding was solemnized Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Holbrook, 185 Middle street, Braintree, when their daughter Irene Altha became the bride of Arthur Wendall Drollett, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Drollett of West street. The ceremony was performed at 7.30 o'clock by Rev. John A. Mitchell, pastor of the Braintree Baptist church. The best man was Frank W. Drollett, and the bridesmaid Miss Clara N. M. Holbrook. She wore a beautiful gown of blue messaline and carried a bouquet of white bride's roses. The ushers were Alfred H. Holbrook, Irving N. Holbrook and Wendall A. Harvey all of Braintree, Steven Pratt of South Weymouth and George Porter of Holbrook.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her dress was a beautiful creation of white satin charmeuse trimmed with pearls and chantilly lace of red rose pattern. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The wedding march was played by Alfred N. Holbrook, Jr., the little nephew of the bride.

A reception followed from eight until ten o'clock and the happy couple were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. Drollett, Frank W. Drollett, and Miss Clara Holbrook. Two ladies, harpist and violinist, rendered popular selections. It is worthy of note that the wedding occurred on the 38th anniversary of the marriage of the bride's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Drollett are both well known and popular young people of this town and they received a large number of handsome presents from relatives and friends. After the reception they left, amid showers of confetti, on their wedding trip. On their return they will reside in Braintree.

POEHLER WINS FROM HINTZE

Remarkable interest was displayed in Somerville Monday evening when Paul Poehler of Quincy, the recognized small ball champion, defended his title against his rival, Harvey Hintze, whom he defeated here last winter. The first 10 strings went to Poehler, 1073 to 1029.

Poehler's high single was 125 and his low 95. Hintze reached 121 for his high single and his low was 90. The match was interesting from all points, and although Poehler took the lead at the start and had a lead of 20 in three strings the excitment never diminished until the last ball was rolled.

In passing over the fifth Poehler was ahead by 69, his biggest lead, and it was reduced to 46 when Hintze finished his eighth. Poehler boosted it to 54 but Hintze cut it to 44 in the final string. Monday evening the remaining ten strings will be rolled at the Brunswick alleys, North Cambridge.

The sensation of the evening was the buying up of difficult spares by the champion. By far the greatest attempt, although unsuccessful was his narrow miss of a tough 8 to 10 spare where the deadwood was a little too low for buying. Poehler shot the small down at lightening speed, depending on a quick break to do the trick, but as it curved it struck the rim too forcibly and kicked it across too sharp for the candle in the right corner. The scores were:

Hintze—103, 103, 98, 94, 98, 121, 98, 119, 90, 105—1029.

NO-LICENSE LEAGUE.

There will be a meeting of the advisory committee and members of the Citizens No-License League on Monday evening, at the Y. M. C. A. building, Washington street, for the election of officers and to formulate plans to maintain the "No License" vote.

REPORTED TO HAVE ELOPED

Miss Brown and Paul Zerrahn Said to be in Springfield

George H. Brown, father of Miss Madeleine Brown, whose engagement to Paul Zerrahn of Milton was broken by consent of both parties, said this morning that although frankly anxious concerning the whereabouts of his daughter, he would not credit the reports that she was in Springfield with Zerrahn and making preparations to be married to him.

Carl G. Zerrahn, father of the boy, told Mr. Brown after the engagement was broken, that his son had left for other parts of the country, and he last night refused to credit the story that the couple were in Springfield, where his son is thought to be employed with a newspaper.

A dispatch from Springfield states that the young people are there and have taken a flat. Some of the furnishings that were to be used in the home ready for occupancy some time ago are said to be in the flat.

Mr. Brown said this morning that Madeleine had gone to Philadelphia on a visit where she wa sto be guest of Dorothy Cook. She would also be the guest of another friend in New York, but nothing further was known regarding the present whereabouts of his daughter.

Latest reports say Paul Zerrahn and Miss Madeleine Brown of Quincy have been married. Mr. Zerrahn this morning told a reporter of a Boston paper that the ceremony had been performed in Hoboken by Rev. Mr. Gastin an Episcopal minister. No marriage license was issued at Quincy to Miss Brown and it is possible that during her absence she claimed New York as her residence and filed her intention in that city.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

Ex-Governor John D. Long quietly celebrated his 75th birthday anniversary at his home on Cottage street, Hingham, Monday. In the evening he entertained a small party at dinner. Many flowers and letters and telegrams of congratulations were received.

ADAMS SCHOOL NOW READY

Pupils Will Probably Move In Thursday Afternoon

The new Adams school, the target of much comment the past month because of several delays, will be occupied for the first time Monday. The building has been turned over to the School Committee by Commissioner Tupper.

The rough grading, almost as mountainous in some places as the site of the building has not been completed and a temporary set of wooden steps will be installed until the grounds are ready for the granolithic steps on the front of the building.

The action promised at the meeting of the School Committee tonight on the delay of the building will not be taken since it is ready for occupancy. Some comment may be made on the condition of the grounds and streets however.

Thursday the actual transfer commences. The pupils, several rooms at a time, will carry their books and other paraphernalia from the old to the new building and the rooms will then be assigned. Maps and other supplies will be transported by express.

Friday and Saturday the work of transfer will be completed, no session being held Friday on account of the annual convention of the Norfolk County Convention at Boston.

Mrs. James B. Pollock of White Plains, N. Y., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Penniman of Goffe street.

The doctors are operating on people at Chicago to remove moral defects. If they aren't careful with their knives, they may inadvertently saw off a few virtues.

Crazy Snake does not show up to get the money the government owes him, but perhaps he does not realize that with money you can buy firewater.

Until it is found out whether the railroads can raise the rates five per cent, their employes have not decided whether to take a raise in pay every six or every three months.

Many people think they can spite the bosses and machines by not voting, which is precisely what the bosses want.

A great number of people are being run over by automobiles, but it is generally felt that as they hadn't provided themselves with their own machines, it's their own fault.

Every one agrees that the food supply is awfully short, and yet every one seems to want to buy food rather than raise it to sell.

The price of hair cuts in Milwaukee is up to 40 cents, but it is not thought this will affect much the many Socialists of that city.

"THE PERFECT MAN."

Ralph Rose, holder of Olympic and world's records for shot putting, has just died. He was called the "perfect man," from the symmetrical character of his measurements and physical development. Rose's death occurred from typhoid, so it can hardly be charged to the strain of athletics. Still it shows how fine physical development does not assure long life.

People who are naturally frail often envy these robust physiques. But if they had this animal perfection, they would quite likely ignore the laws of health.

Five years after graduation, the college athlete is apt to feel that he must motor to the office, or if he can't afford it, he takes the street car. Walking might take 15 minutes each way, which couldn't possibly be spared.

Many fine specimens of physical manhood come in among the immigrants. On the dock they are like great healthy oxen, the product of open air labor, plain eating and restful sleep. The pale, slim professional or office man envies their round faces and big muscles.

They work long hours, often 12 to 15 a day if they own farms or little gardens of their own. They eat ill cooked and unsubstantial foods at boarding houses, restaurants, and bake-shops. They smoke many cigaretts, sit up late with their compatriots, and drink heavily of bad beer. They had a capital of good health with which to begin, and to hold and improve it they have all the tools of civilization, but they don't know how to use them.

The best physical gift is not the raw perfection of the open air laborer, nor scientific athletic training, but an intelligent realization of the value of exercise, and determination to follow the laws of health at all costs.

SENTENCE SERMONS.

YOUNG FARMER FALLS IN TRAP

Set Upon by Thieves and Is Left Unconscious and Dying

TROUBLED BY HEN THIEVES

Tyngsboro Man Had Fired at Marauders Several Times—Gang Laid in Wait on Lonely Path and After Binding and Gagging Him Proceeded to Wreak Their Vengeance

Tyngsboro, Mass., Oct. 27.—Beaten, bound, gagged and left in the underbush about 100 feet off the main road from Lowell to Nashua, Charles W. Marinel, aged 21, of this town, is dying at his home. The attack culminated a week's persecution by unknown men, which originated Wednesday night, when Marinel fired a shotgun at some chicken thieves.

It was nearly midnight Wednesday when Marinel was aroused by the cackling of his hens. He slipped out of the house and the thieves started running. Marinel then fired two charges in the direction of the fleeing men. Curses and threats followed the shooting.

Marinel dismissed the matter from his mind. On Friday, midnight, a shower of rocks, some of which broke several windows, were hurled at the house. Again taking his shotgun, Marinel went out in the direction from which the rocks had been thrown, but could find no trace of the offenders.

Accompanied by two cousins, Marinel went to Lowell to visit a dentist, and returned about 10 o'clock. They stopped for a moment under the electric lights at the car stop. The cousins then went to their home.

Whistling as he walked along the lonely country road, Marinel soon turned into a lane, used as a short cut to his farm.

He had proceeded up this lane but a short way when he tripped and fell over a rope stretched between two trees.

Before he could recover himself he was jumped upon by four men and a woman. The police say the woman was a man wearing a dress for a disguise.

A handkerchief was stuffed into his mouth, but before the gag was tied he managed to break away from his assailants, and started running toward his home. He slipped on wet leaves, and before he could again rise to his feet he was pummelled and beaten by the men until he lasped into unconsciousness.

The last thing he remembers is hearing the supposed woman say, "You will shoot my husband, will you?"

Some time later he regained his senses and managed to loosen his bonds so that he was able to hop and roll along the ground in the direction of his home.

When within about 150 yards of his home his strength gave out. His groans were heard by his mother, who was fearful some harm might have befallen her son owing to his not returning home, and was waiting for him.

Believing hen thieves were about, Mrs. Marinel fired six shots from a revolver. This aroused the neighborhood. In a few moments men and women scantily clad, and all armed, made their way toward the Marinel home.

A search party was organized and one of the men stumbled over Marinel. Physicians were called and after an examination held out little hope for the recovery of the lad. Posses are in search of the assailants.

NEW ISLAND REPORTED

Gloucester Skipper Reports Land In Path of Ocean Steamships

Halifax, Oct. 28.—Captain Anderson of the Lizzie Griffin, a Gloucester vessel, reports to the marine department that he has discovered a new island in the Atlantic, about fifteen miles east of Sable island.

The Gloucester skipper says the island is a dry bar and stands about ten feet above high water. Captain Anderson has cruised around Sable island for many years and is well acquainted with the bars. He is positive that the land he reports is new.

The Lady Laurier, a steamship, will be going to Sable island in a few days, when efforts will be made to verify Captain Anderson's report.

If Anderson is not mistaken, the new island is in the course of ocean going vessels and a menace to navigation. It lies outside the zone of the Sable island light, and well in the path of ocean going steamships.

Chicago, Oct. 28.—John Niemetz, a highway robber, died of a hatpin wound here. When he attacked Mrs. Josephine Karmufisk recently, the woman, who is six feet tall and weighs 200 pounds, stabbed him behind the ear with her hatpin. The wound incapacitated him for flight and blood poisoning resulted.

HELD AS MURDERER

New Mexico Lawyer Accused of Poisoning Wife and Daughter

Alamagordo, N. M., Oct. 28.—H. H. Major, an attorney, was arrested here on a charge of murder growing out of the death of his daughter Eudora. Her death followed that of her mother and the payment of the mother's insurance money.

The insurance company declined to pay the policy on the daughter and her body was disinterred and the stomach analyzed in El Paso, Tex.

Meantime Major married again, his bride having been Miss Isabel Gibson, an El Paso school teacher, formerly of San Antonio, Tex. She is seriously ill and under observation.

Disbarment proceedings against Major are pending before the attorney general of New Mexico on charges of having illegally disposed of funds of his clients.

SHOT IN RUNAWAY

Trapper Killed by Own Gun When His Horse Bolts

Monson, Me., Oct. 28.—Everett Dore, a trapper, lost his life in an unusual manner. He was driving to the north of the town to visit a line of traps. Seeing a squirrel which he desired to kill and use as bait for them, he cocked his gun. Just then the horse started to run and he laid the weapon on the seat of the wagon.

A few seconds later it was discharged and Dore received injuries from which he died an hour later at the village, where he was taken by men who saw the accident. He was about 55 years of age, and leaves a widow, a daughter and four sons.

YOUTHFUL BANDIT SENT TO CONCORD

Dubois Sentenced to Reformatory by Waltham Judge

Waltham, Mass., Oct. 28.—Following the testimony of Dr. Walter E. Fernald of the Waverley home for feeble minded to the effect that the boy was an imbecile and a dangerous person to have at large, Willie Dubois, who startled the police of many cities by his daring robberies and gun play, was sentenced to the Concord reformatory by Judge Luce.

His committment was on the charge of breaking and entering the Bleachery station of the Boston and Maine railroad. The complain against him for assault with intent to kill Officer John Clifford of the Watertown police during a gun play previous to the arrest was placed on file.

Dr. Fernald was most emphatic in the declaration that Dubois is of unsound mind that he has the tendency to influence other boys. Fernald also recommended that Dubois be sent to the Massachusetts reformatory, declaring it to be the only place strong enough to hold the boy.

Agent Barter of the Lyman school did not want the Dubois lad at his institution, declaring they had had him once and that he influenced other boys to insubordination.

ONE KILLED IN WRECK

Fireman Goes Through Bridge With Tender and Four Cars

Island Falls, Me., Oct. 28.—Fireman Faye Arbor of Bridgewater was killed when the tender and four cars of a south-bound freight train on the Bangor and Aroostook railroad crashed through the bridge over Fish stream. The locomotive passed over the weak spot in the bridge and remained on the rails, so that Engineer P. F. Jenkins was not injured.

A section crew repairing the bridge claimed that they displayed danger signals.

VOLTURNO IS SUNK

Crew of Tramp Steamer Boards Her and Open Sea Valves

Lizard, Eng., Oct. 28.—The burned steamship Volturno was sunk Oct. 17, according to the tramp ship Sabine Pass, which passed here. The captain of the Sabine said his men boarded the Volturno on that day, finding the fire entirely out.

They saw the bodies of several dead on the deck and in the engine room. The interior of the vessel was entirely burned out, and when the Sabine's men left they opened the valves and saw the hulk sink.

MERCURY VICTIM DEAD

Levy, Who Made Wonderful Fight For Life, Succumbs to Poison

New York, Oct. 28.—After a wonderful fight of eight days against poisoning by bichloride of mercury, which he took by mistake, Isaac Levy, a wealthy manufacturer, died here. During the night Levy, whose bodily functions had stopped, suffered great agony. He became unconscious and the deadly poison completed its work.

When the pain was the most severe he smiled wearily and clung to the hands of his wife, who for eight days had remained at his bedside, eating and sleeping little.

The process of sweating was discontinued at the urgent request of Levy, who declared it irritated him beyond endurance. Once only was he able to whisper to his wife that he would win out even yet.

His diet was changed to wholly liquid food, and he was fed frequently on barley water, grape juice, plain vichy and strained fish bone marrow.

Doctors and nurses declared Mr. Levy's fight was the most remarkable they had ever known, and his ability to bear excruciating pain without a murmur was beyond understanding.

BODY UNDER WHARF

Think Man Found at Gloucester Must Have Fallen From Yacht

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 28.—The body of a man, wearing clothes similar to those of a yachtsman, was found by Fred Wilson under the wharf of Tarr & Wonson.

As there is no one answering the description reported missing from Gloucester or surrounding towns, the police are of the opinion that the body was that of someone who fell overboard from a yacht.

The body was that of a man about 43 years old. He was about five feet nine inches in height, and wore black clothes, short dark moustache and stiff shirt.

WILL NOT ADVANCE VOTES FOR WOMEN

Militant Tactics Denounced at New York Suffrage Meeting

New York, Oct. 28.—"Suffrage has never been extended anywhere through a militant movement," declared Dr. Anna H. Shaw at the symposium of the Women's Christian Temperance union convention.

"When the women of England cease to be legally militant, they take that step which no woman can take and succeed. It's not proper for either men or women to go into a battle to destroy life and property. I say this not because I care a fig for a mail box or a minister's house, but because of my common sense."

The greater part of the afternoon session of the convention was given over to suffrage. Many women from suffrage states told how the vote was won. The convention put itself on record as favoring woman suffrage and against government regulation of vice.

Mrs. Mary H. Armor of Georgia introduced a resolution, which was passed, calling on the steamship companies to forbid the sale of liquor on ocean liners.

Westerly, R. I., Oct. 28.—Trains are running over the tracks near Bradford, where about thirty-five people were injured in the wreck of the New York, New Haven and Hartford "Gilt Edge" express Saturday night.

The last of the damaged cars and debris was removed and workmen graded off the side of the tracks where it had been ploughed up by the cars.

Mrs. D. M. Strous of Boston, who was one of the most seriously injured of the passengers, was said to be in practically the same condition. It is not expected that her injuries will prove fatal.

Newburgh, N. Y., Oct. 28.—A powerful bomb, supposed to have contained nitroglycerine, was exploded on the window ledge of an Italian saloon in the center of the Italian colony at Highland Falls, near the West Point military academy.

A dozen or more buildings were damaged, scores of people were thrown from their beds and a panic ensued. No person was hurt, but damage to the amount of $25,000 was done. Three foreigners were seen leaving the neighborhood just before the explosion.

CARING FOR FERNS.

"Change of air is important with all ferns, and should be effected as often as convenient unless the home is equipped with apparatus to secure this end. Airing out the home before retiring at night is one of the best ways of changing the air. The odor from the lights, if there be any, is in this way done away with. Take care to have the plants out of all cold draughts in frosty weather. By all means stand the ferns in a light place, preferably in a window, but not close to the glass if there is danger of frost."—Surburban Life.

—The information that men's clothes are to be "tighter, closer fitting, more narrow shouldered and shorter amidships than before" raises no hue and cry from the other sex but it must excite their ridicule over the attempt to follow the vagaries of feminine styles. Men's tailors seem to have surrendered completely to the women's fashion plates; but the picture is not at all pleasing in comparison with the effect on the figures of the women.—Barre Vt. Times.

THE SCRAP BAG IS A USEFUL FRIEND

From Its Odds and Ends Many Holiday Gifts May Be Made.

ODDS and ends of cretonne, silk, linen or velvet should be brought out when the Christmas gift giver sits down to plan tokens that shall be both attractive and useful.

With these fabrics she can design bags of any sort, from dainty party or opera bags for the society girl to stanch looking laundry or work bags for the housewife.

The house mother will appreciate a sewing bag like the one here illustrated. It is made of stout cretonne and is lined with plain material. A feature of this bag is its roominess. The top is gathered over a wooden embroidery hoop, and a cover is cut out of heavy cardboard to fit it. The cardboard is covered with cretonne and lined to match the inside of the bag. A band of elastic is sewed inside the cover, and in it is slipped a paper of needles of assorted sizes or a little needlebook supplied with them. Scissors, bodkins, darning needles and a thimble case are added. Suspended inside are a little button bag and a pincushion well supplied with all sizes of pins. Two ribbons are added to the bag, by which it may be carried.

Figured ribbon was used for making the dainty fancy workbag, which has two ribbon covered embroidery hoops as handles. A wide band of the ribbon was gathered to the hoops to form the lower part of the bag, while inserted inside the circle were bands of the ribbon gathered on elastic. Inside the bag are pockets in which to place embroidery silk, needlebook, scissors, etc., required by the fancy worker.

The other bag illustrated is made with plain red ribbon combined with Dresden ribbon. It is intended as a party bag for a girl. Made in rather smaller proportions, it will do for the accommodation of opera glasses, gloves and the fan for the theater.

Canvas may be made into many dainty articles. A big workbag or a bag for soiled handkerchiefs or collars is fashioned of cream white canvas decorated with a simple design in cross stitch. This is lined with pink or blue lawn, and the top is gathered over an embroidery hoop.

Englishman's Tea.

If an Englishman could put his gospel of life into words he probably would say, "Give me liberty and tea, but if I can't have both I'll take the tea."

There are few differences between England and America so marked as in this matter of preference for a hot drink. The United Kingdom uses 6.5 pounds of tea per capita per year. The United States uses only a little over one pound per capita, and probably the bulk of this is consumed by Britons and Canadians living in this country. On the other hand, the American people use 9.5 pounds of coffee per capita in the course of twelve months, while Britishers consume less than a pound each in the same period.

This last is not surprising, however. Any American who has made acquaintance with the stuff that bears the name of coffee in England, especially that served at the breakfast table, will wonder why Britain uses any coffee at all. —Chicago Journal.

The Romantic Salute.

The young lieutenant in his trim and elegant uniform saluted in the stiff and yet somehow graceful military manner a pretty matron.

"The military salute," he said, "is peculiarly appropriate to you, madam. Do you happen to know its origin?"

"No."

"Well, its origin goes back to the days of chivalry, to the tournaments of the middle ages. In those tournaments the knights, before the combat began, rode past the queen of beauty on her throne. As they caracoled by her they simultaneously brought the hand to the horizontal position above the brows, then dropped it to the side again—a genuine military salute. And this they did in their chivalrous way to protect their eyes from the blinding rays of the queen of beauty's lovelliness. That, madam, is the origin of the military salute, and that is why the military salute is so appropriate to one like you."—Los Angeles Times.

A Sermon on Stones.

Sam Buckalew was a lone policeman in a little town in Tennessee. His main duties were to look out for trouble in the negro part of the town down by the creek, especially on Saturday nights. Came one night a general fight in the bottom, after a dance in a cabin. The engagement, starting inside, grew too large to be accommodated indoors and continued outside. Rocks were handy, and the fracas extended. Sam Buckalew heard it all from a safe distance, but made no attempt to drive the enemy across the Yalu. The justice of the peace called Sam to account next day.

"Why, looky here, Tom Keel—you all's honor, I mean," Sam Buckalew protested, "them rocks was flyin' near as thick as wheat beards. Maybe they wasn't aimin' to hit me, but don't you all know rocks ain't got no eyes?"—New York Post.

Two Curious Autographs.

One of the most expensive autograph albums ever bought was that purchased by Lord Clancarty at Paris in 1831 for the sum of £1,500.

Among these autographs, all of which bear the signatures of celebrated personages, there are two which are curious because of their brevity. The first one reads:

"Mlle. Clairon has no bread. Lucien Bonaparte."

The other consists of two lines only:

"Good for 2,000 francs, payable on sight to Mlle. Clairon by the treasurer of the ministry. Chaptal."

The money was paid within the hour.

These two slips of paper are witnesses to the fact that the claims of want and suffering were recognized by the French government even during the most turbulent times of its existence.—London Post.

Tht Conquest of Disease.

The wonderful achievements wrought by bacilli cultures and the preparation of preventive serums place modern physicians in a position surpassing that of the ancient magi or medieval alchemists and render their services to mankind more striking than the proudest exploits of Alexander or Cyrus. In the campaign against virulent diseases the quiet microscopist in his study, be he a Pasteur, Flexner or Carrel, is unostentatiously warring with armies the conquest of which outmatches the military feats of a Caesar or a Charlemagne.—Philadelphia Press.

How Does It Get Across?

At a certain eastern university one of the professors was conducting an examination in physiology. He asked for a description of the circulation at the extremities, meaning, of course, the capillary circulation.

The youth he called upon evidently did not know much about the matter, for he replied that the blood went down one leg and up the other!—Youth's Companion.

A Condition.

"My dear," said the bride, who had been her husband's stenographer, "there is one speech you used to make in the office which I want you never to repeat in our home."

"You alarm me, my dear. What was the speech?"

"'I want you to take my dictation.'"—Baltimore American.

Not Well Advertised.

Physician—Well, but if your little pig won't grow big and fat you must go to the vet. Woman (who has brought her pet pig to the doctor's)—Oh, doctor, I have no confidence in him, he's so thin himself!—Fliegende Blatter.

Laughing cheerfulness throws sunlight on all the paths of life.—Richter.

PARTY FOR NURSES.

The Nurse's Home at the Quincy City Hospital will be the scene of a merry Hallowe'en party Friday evening. This is the first social event of its kind planned for the home which was dedicated last fall for the convenience of the nurses.

The arrangements are in charge of Miss Eva Blair, assistant superintendent, and she is assisted by the following senior nurses—Miss Alma Reed, head nurse; Miss Florence Hanson, Miss Alice McGlew, Miss Anna Youngquist, Miss Christine Shane, Miss Martha Morrill, Miss Sigrid Swanson, Miss Leona Carter and Miss Irene Corbett.

MILTON DEFEATED.

Dorchester High had an easy time with Milton High Monday afternoon at Dorchester piling up a score of 22 to 7, Milton making a touchdown in the last half of the game when Coach O'Reilly had substituted nearly all his second string of men for the regulars. Milton played a miserable game all the way through and so easy was it for Dorchester that in the second half they put in some of their substitutes to try them out. Milton did a little better against them but was unable to whittle down the score that had been piled up in the first half.

LECTURE WALKS.

Six lecture-walks have been arranged by the park and recreation department of Boston for the purpose of acquainting the public with the beauties of the park system. The first walk was scheduled for last Saturday and other walks are as follows: Nov. 1, Arboretum; Nov. 8, Stony Brook Reservation; Nov. 15, Olmsted Park and Jamaica Pond; Nov. 22, Blue Hill Reservation; Nov. 29, West Roxbury Parkway.

—The Pennsylvania railroad some time ago warned its women passengers against narrow skirts. Now it tells its employees, if a woman slips on its property as the result of the hobble, to report the fact in print. The company feels that it is a dangerous style, and one that causes accidents. The modern girl is taller and broader, as the result of her tennis, her horseback work, her golf and her swimming. If women had always been as athletic as they are today there is little reason to suppose that the epithet the "weaker sex" would have ever have had any meaning. If the remark may be permitted, it does seem too bad when any styles come along that for the time being hinder this better physical development.—Haverhill Gazette.

Quincy branch of the Street Railway Employees held a well attended meeting in the Johnson building Monday evening. During the evening six new members were admitted.

LIGHT VOTE IS CAST IN MEXICO

Less Than Five Thousand Go to Polls In Mexico City

KEEP HUERTA AS PRESIDENT

New Mexican Congress Will Ask Dictator to Continue In Office Until New Election Can Be Held, Which Will Be When Provisional President Sees Fit to Call It

Mexico City, Oct. 28.—Returns from the Mexican election show that less than 5000 votes were cast in the federal district, including this city, where there are 80,000 voters.

In spite of the meagre vote, it was expected the congressional candidates, with the approval of General Huerta, would declare themselves elected and organize. Their first act, it is said, will be to declare the presidential election null and void because the total vote vast was not sufficient to make a constitutional majority for one candidate.

Then they are expected to "request" Huerta to remain president ad interim until another election can be held, which will be whenever Huerta sees fit to call it.

The stumbling block in this program is the difficulty of calling the congressional election legal and satisfactory while declaring the presidential election void, when the same ballots were used in both. Those opposed to Huerta, though, say that a little thing like that will not bother him.

The Mexican constitution sets forth that there are approximately 3,000,000 voters in the republic, and that one-third of them must vote in order to make a presidential election binding.

The Diaz leaders and the Catholic party, of which Frederico Gamboa was the candidate, requested their partisans not to vote. Few of them did. Early returns showed that very few votes in the federal district were cast for Huerta and Blanquet.

Whether from apathy or fear, Mexico City was quieter than on the average Sunday. The mounted patrols who guarded the streets and the troops on guard at the national palace and the home of Huerta had little to do. The few street gatherings that were seen were quickly dispersed.

In some of the polling places no votes were cast all day, and it was reported that at several voting tables even the election officials failed to show up.

Returns today showed that voting in the outlying districts was even lighter than in Mexico City. A long the northern border it was said that only the soldiers voted, the officers casting the ballots for the privates.

In the states where the rebels held forth, very few votes were polled. The constitutionalists refused to recognize the election and took no part in it.

Huerta has issued a decree raising the federal army from 80,000 to 150,000. It is said conscription will be necessary to carry out this order.

STATE SAVES MONEY

Rhode Island Court Accepts Manslaughter Plea From Negro

Providence, Oct. 28.—Because a trial for murder would be long and expensive, William H. Tyler, a negro, indicted on July 1 on the charge of having murdered Mrs. Agnes Bluett, a white woman, was allowed to plead nolo to a manslaughter charge at the request of Attorney General Herbert A. Rice.

Judge Doran sentenced Tyler to seven years' imprisonment. Attorney General Rice told the court that the state's case would depend largely upon the testimony of experts, and that the trial would necessarily be long, and would cost the state much money.

MISS KATHERINE ELKINS

Her Marriage to William F. R. Hitt Is Announced

MISS ELKINS BRIDE OF "BILLY" HITT

Girl Once Reported Engaged to Duke of Abruzzi

Elkins, W. Va., Oct. 28.—Katherine Elkins, daughter of the late Senator Stephen B. Elkins, who is supposed to have caused the Duke of Abruzzi to seek seclusion in the Himalayas a few years ago, because the dowager queen of Italy frowned on their betrothal, surprised even the members of her own family by marrying William F. R. Hitt, the wealthy Washington society man, who has been her ardent admirer for the past ten years.

The wedding was so sudden that friends of the couple had no chance whatever to send presents and the bride was even without a trousseau.

A few years ago Washington society was certain that Miss Elkins would become the bride of the Duke of Abruzzi, a member of the Italian royal family and a famous naval officer and explorer. The queen dowager of Italy is said to have interferred. At any rate, the duke went on a two years' cruise and the romance, if it was one, came to an end.

LOCK MAN IN ROOM

Burglars Then Go Through Fruit Store at Their Leisure

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 28.—Constantine Ktistis, who sleeps over his fruit store at 27 Washington street, arose and found the door of his room securely locked and no key in sight.

He finally came to the conclusion he must have locked the door and then thrown away the key in a somnambulistic fit; but after breaking out of his room and going down stairs into his store he found that burglars had regaled themselves heartily on fruit and had then departed with $5.65 in cash, as well as a couple of boxes of cigars.

Earlier in the evening three men were seen seated on the schoolhouse steps across the way watching Ktistis through an open window, go to bed. This trio is suspected of the burglary. It is supposed the burglars forced a window, and after locking him in his room went through his stock of goods at their leisure.

The New York authorities were notified of the dismissal of the indictment, and the Austrian consul was expected in Goshen to take Gibson to New York, where indictments have been found against him for misusing the funds of Mrs. Szabo's estate. It is alleged that there is $7100 unaccounted for.

MRS. EATON IS CALM ON STAND

District Attorney Fails to Shake Story In Cross Examination

SIX AND A HALF HOURS' GRILL

Was Near Losing Self Control at End of Forenoon Session, but Regained It After Rest—Prosecution Springs Sensation In Producing Letter Written by Defendant

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 28.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, with a composure that seemed almost uncanny, passed safely through the greatest ordeal she has undergone since her life battle began.

For six and a half hours she faced the jury which must determine before the superior court here whether she murdered her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, U. S. N., retired, and successfully withstood a persistent inquisition by District Attorney Albert F. Barker.

She admitted many things she heretofore denied, refuted testimony of witnesses who appeared against her, even evidence offered by her crippled daughter, Dorothy, and by her aged, invalid mother, Mrs. Virginia Harrison; yet never once, save for an hour prior to the noon recess, was there the slightest sign of weakening.

During that one hour, though, Mrs. Eaton was visibly ill at ease. The district attorney, in manner suave and ingratiating, with always an underlying note of sarcasm, was confining his cross-examination to poison and insanity, and the woman accused of killing the admiral by the administration of white arsenic seemed on the verge of losing her self-control.

She had taken the witness stand unperturbed, apparently prepared to submit the story told by her on Saturday to the most rigid analysis, but the rigor of the examination began to tell about two hours later. Her voice, clear and sibilant, broke slightly; there was a noticeable hesitancy before she made response to questions. The color of her cheeks was heightened and she drained glass after glass of water, carried to her by her senior counsel, William A. Moore.

Then came the order for the noon recess, and when, an hour and a half later, Mrs. Eaton resumed the stand she had fully regained herself.

Just before the close of the afternoon session the district attorney introduced a letter which caused a sensation in the court room. Not even the defense had an inkling of it, and Mrs. Eaton's face was a study as the communication was read. Almost reluctantly she admitted its authorship.

In it she referred to the death of the boy she and her husband had adopted and who Mrs. Eaton maintained on the stand had been poisoned by her husband.

From the very outset of the district attorney's inquisition it was apparent he intended to be kindly in his manner of questioning. The attitude he would take had been the moot question, and his first inquiry answered it. Only an underlying vein of sarcasm was noticeable.

TEST JURY ACTS

Supreme Court to Pass Upon Legality of "Averaging" Awards

Washington, Oct. 28.—The question long disputed whether a jury verdict reached by means of chance is legal will be passed upon by the supreme court.

The court took the unusual step of directing the fourth circuit court of appeals to send up for review a case involving this point. The federal court in western North Carolina declined to allow A. K. Hyder, juror in a case in which D. J. McDonald of Illinois was seeking to set aside a verdict obtained against him, to testify that the jury arrived at a verdict by each juror estimating the amount to be awarded and then dividing the sum by twelve.

ENGAGEMENT CANCELLED

Mrs. Pankhurst Will Not Address Woman's Franchise League

Indianapolis, Oct. 28.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the English suffragette, will not address the Woman's Franchise league of Indiana in this city as had been planned. The engagement was canceled.

The reason given was that Mrs. Pankhurst requested that she be permitted to take up a collection at the meeting, in addition to the stipulated sum which she had first agreed to accept for addressing the league.

Rodin's Test of Sculpture.

Rodin's favorite way of showing off his sculpture is by the light of a shaded lamp at night. In his way, especially when the light is projected from below, every rugosity of the skin, every subsurface muscle, every vein or wrinkle is accentuated. The trouble with this test when applied to statues not by Rodin is that frequently the veins and muscles and wrinkles have not been chiseled into the stone, and no projected light, no matter what its intensity or angle of projection, can cast shadows not raised by the inequalities of the sculptured surface.—W. Francklyn Paris in International Studio.

FABRICS THE THING.

Gorgeous Coloring In Materials Never So Pronounced.

COSTUME OF OLD ROSE PEAU DE PECHE.

The chic of the new frocks lies in the fabrics this season. It is the beauty of the coloring and the novelty of the weave in the material that distinguish the best looking costumes, not the line nor the design. The result is a vast amount of materials richer in tone and more original in design than anything that has bewildered the eyes of women in the past.

Of all the silk materials duvetyn (a combination of silk and wool) is at the present moment the most popular. It is claimed that duvetyn is not practical because the silk face causes it to wrinkle easily. For this reason some of the exclusive importers are advising peau de peche, a fine interpretation of velours de laine and in all wool material. It has a high luster, which makes it quite as dressy as duvetyn, and, being wool, it is said not to wrinkle and show the signs of wear quickly.

The very delectable costume seen in the illustration is of peau de peche in a lovely shade of old rose, having the new full tunic skirt effect over a tight skirt of velvet. An oriental embroidered brocade vest crosses in the front of the coat and ends in a broad folded girdle across the back.

School Shoes and Boots.

If the girl who is to spend three or four months at a school so far from home that she cannot economically visit it at stated short intervals is not provided with several extra pairs of shoes and boots she cannot be thoroughly comfortable in so far as her feet are concerned. And the comfort of the feet always reacts upon the mental condition. For wear in the house and in the classrooms there should be three pair of lightweight oxfords, in order that the same ones need not be worn two days in succession, even while one pair is being repaired.

While exercising in the open air during cold weather the boarding school girl should wear quite high topped waterproof boots with heavy soles rather than lightweight shoes under rubbers, as the latter are apt to heat the feet and make them tender if worn for several hours at a time. But as heavy soles take a long time to dry there must necessarily be two or more pairs of such boots always on hand.

The girl who attends the average moderately priced boarding school can get along comfortably with two pair of evening slippers or low cut shoes—one pair in bronze or black kid and the other in white glace or suede. Satin in any shade is much too dressy looking to go with the sort of evening frock that sensible girls pack into their boarding school trunks.

Concerning Women.

W. C. Brownell has given two new prizes to Vassar college in memory of his wife, who was a graduate of the class of 1873. One hundred dollars is to be given each year to the senior holding the highest rank in biology and $100 to the senior holding the highest rank in history and economics.

Delegates from the principal industrial countries of Europe will meet Sept. 15 at Berne, by invitation of the Swiss government, to consider the drafting of an international agreement to prohibit the employment of boys and girls below specified ages and to fix a maximum ten hour day for workers within certain ages.

Refinishing Easy.

A chest of drawers or an old cupboard that is in need of refinishing can be restored by the application of a coat or two of mahogany stain after the old paint or varnish has been removed. In place of the wood or brass handles to the drawers substitute the little glass knobs that adorn real pieces of colonial furniture. The glass knobs cost merely a trifle and are easily screwed into place.

A TRIBE OF TRAMPS.

East African Outcasts That Won't Work and Will Steal.

While on a hunting expedition to British East Africa in quest of pictures of wild horses Paul J. Rainey discovered that even among savages there is a tribe which closely resembles our own "knights of the road." They are the Wandorobo. They are found along the Guaso Nyiro and Guaso Narok rivers and are regarded as outcasts by the other native tribes.

The Wandorobo most closely resembles his American brother, the tramp, in that he refuses to work. He is a hunter and is exceedingly expert with the poisoned arrow, which he uses exclusively. A large club he carries is used to ward off and to scare wild beasts that may come too near.

Although the Wandorobo has settlements in some places, he wanders far from home and usually makes his bed in the top of a tree to be safe from wild animals. He is a notorious thief, and whenever he approaches an encampment the askari, or policeman, who is the only native permitted by the government to wear arms, watches the Wandorobo very carefully, for there is nothing too hot or too heavy for him to try to make off with.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

CUTTING THE BASES.

Mike Kelly Once Scored From Second Through the Pitcher's Box.

Writing on "Take a Chance Versus Play It Safe" in baseball in the American Magazine, Hugh S. Fullerton tells the following story about Mike Kelly, the great Chicago ball player of a generation ago:

"The chances Kelly took were the marvels of his era. I have seen him again and again cut straight across the diamond from first to third base or from second to the home plate and land in safety because the umpire failed to see his reckless move.

"One day Kelly cut from first to third on a slow infield bounder. He ran past the umpire, who was racing toward first, screaming at him to watch the play, and, swinging straight across, he tore for third. Gaffney called the runner out at first and whirled just in time to catch 'Kel' going into third, then called him out. Kelly walked to the umpire, protested an instant; then, knowing Gaffney had caught him in the act, he remarked, 'All right, Mr. Umpire; I've never been on these grounds before and didn't know which was second base.'

"Two innings later he scored from second base through the pitcher's box and was not seen."

Curious Ear of the Catfish.

The catfish uses his lungs as an organ of hearing. The needless lung becomes a closed sac filled with air and commonly known as the swim bladder. In the catfish, as in the suckers, chubs and most brook fish, the air bladder is large and is connected by a slender tube, the remains of the trachead, to the esophagus. At its front it fits closely to the vertebral column. The anterior vertebrae are much enlarged, twisted together, and through them passes a chain of bones, which connects with the hidden cavity of the air. The bladder therefore assists the ear of the catfish as the tympanum and its bones assist the ear of the higher animals. An ear of this sort can carry little range of variety in sound. It probably gives only the impression of jars or disturbances in the water.

A Singer's Avarice.

We hear a great deal about the enormous salaries paid to famous prima donnas nowadays, and we also hear a great deal about their charity and good nature. In the reign of Queen Anne one of the most celebrated singers was Mrs. Tofts, who had a veritable craze for money making as well as a great deal of personal conceit. Pope, who never spared any persons or objects that he satirized, wrote an epigram that must have greatly annoyed the avaricious singer:

So bright is thy beauty, so charming thy song,
As had drawn both the beasts and their Orpheus along.
But such is thy avarice and such is thy pride
That the beasts must have starved and the poet have died.

—London Standard.

A Doubtful Transaction.

"I don't know whether my older boy is treating me right or not," said Mr. Bliggins, rather gloomily. "I told him that if he wouldn't smoke until he was twenty-one years old I would give him a thousand dollars."

"Did he keep his part of the agreement?"

"Yes, but he took the thousand dollars and bought an interest in a cigar store."—Washington Star.

All In a Bunch.

Father (looking up from his book after a volley of questions from eight-year-old son)—The answer to the first five questions is yes, to the next four no, and to the last question, I don't know.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cheer Up.

"I sometimes wonder if life is worth living," mused the pessimist.

"It is," replied the optimist. "It is worth living much better than most of us live it."—Lippincott's.

Blinding the Idols.

While repairing a temple the Chinese cover up the eyes of the idols, in order that the deities may not be offended at the sight of the disorder.

After all, there is nothing in this world but character.—Bishop Fowler.

CHAPTER XVII.

In Which We Win Light, Life, Liberty and Love.

We went down the cave. To find the water was easy. Sure enough, it led away through a narrow rift in what direction we could not tell, although its tendency was downward, and I knew it would come out upon the beach somewhere. It had not seemed to me as I examined it before the earthquake that the rift was more than enough to carry the water, but it had probably opened wider now by the shock, and so we followed it. Although sometimes the walls closed over the water course, making tunnels, we managed to force our way through them. I went in the advance, for I knew that what my bulk could pass would present little difficulty for her. We wandered in and out among the coral until it seemed to me that we had gone miles, although in reality it could have been but a few hundred yards.

At last we came to a place too low and too narrow for me to pass, although I might, perchance, have thrust her through.

"You see," she said, "this is the end."

"No," said I.

I still had the ax with me and the sword which I had thrust into my belt. The rock seemed soft. Lying down upon my back and covering my eyes with one hand, I struck at it with the ax, thus enlarging the passage. The water beneath me was deathly cold, the candle in the lantern was burning lower and lower, but I hung on. Never did I work so in all my life as then. At last I loosened a huge rock, which fell suddenly upon me. Had I not seen it coming and dropped the ax and stayed its progress with both upraised hands it might have crushed me. As it was, it fell fairly upon my breast. I could not throw it aside; the way was too narrow. I held it up in my hands and forced my way through, although what I should meet or where I should bring up on the other side I knew not. I thrust hard and harder with my feet and presently my way was clear, and I shoved myself through the opening. With one great final effort I rolled the rock aside and then lay on my back on the sand, breathless, exhausted.

She dragged herself over my body and through the passage I had thus made and then knelt by my side, kissed me, murmuring words I did not dare to listen to lest I should go mad with joy. And, indeed, I was so exhausted that I could scarcely credit that I had heard anything real. Presently, however, I staggered to my feet again. She had forgotten the lantern, but I went back after it.

We were in a more spacious cave. The stream, fed by other brooks, had become larger. The descent was much more rapid. The cliff wall was, I believe, narrower at the treasure cave than anywhere else in the island. It was, perhaps, not more than half a mile wide. We stumbled rapidly down the long vaulted passage to the other wall. As we approached it I half feared that the rock might be solid, and that the brook might plunge beneath it, but fortune did not do its worst for us. There was a rift in the wall, around which the brook ran. A long distance away appeared to me a spot of dimness. Recklessly we clasped hands and ran to the opening.

Alas, when we reached the light we found that the entrance was closed by a huge stone. It did not exactly fit the opening, and the light filtered around it. I stood panting, staring at it.

"Are we to be ended now," I cried, "after having come thus far? Stand clear," I shouted, not giving her time to answer.

Then with all my strength I swung the ax and struck the rock fair and square and by good fortune upon some fissure, for it shivered and a crack started. Once again, this time with tremendous force, I swung and struck. The ax sank into the stone, the helve shivered in my hand. It was a right good blow, if I do say it myself, for the rock was by this time fairly split in two, the pieces falling to the right and left. Still it was well in the entrance. We had not yet a clear passage.

I was mad now, as mad as I had been in the inner cave fighting for her. The blood rushed to my face, a mist to my eyes. I stooped down and with my hands I seized one piece of that rock and, with such strength as Hercules might have used, thrust it aside. My mistress stood staring at me in awe, also in terror. The way was opened.

We stepped out upon the sand. My clothes were torn to rags; blood was clotted in my hair and on my forehead; my face was black with sweat and dust. There were wounds on my arms and legs. I was a gory and horrible spectacle. Mistress Lucy had suffered no wounds, but her clothes were rent and torn. Her face was grimy and beneath the dust and earth stain it was as white as the cap of a wave.

"Thanks to God," she said at last, "and you, we have won!"

I thought she would have fainted. I caught her by the arm, sat her down upon the island and sprinkled the water from the brook in her face until presently she revived.

"We are not safe yet," I urged. "There were hundreds of savages upon the island. They could not all have been in the cave. We must go warily. We cannot rest now."

"I am ready," she said with great spirit, getting to her feet and stretching out her hand: "if you will help me I can go anywhere."

I still had my sword. I drew it and led on, keeping well under the shelter of the cliffs. We walked up the end toward the giant stairs. There were men, islanders, at the top of the wall, but my first glance told me that we had nothing to fear from them, for the stairs were gone. They were but a scattered heap of stones. The earthquake had crumbled the work of the builders of bygone years, and as the stairs had fallen away they had left the cliff sheer and bare for a hundred feet. They couldn't come at us.

"It is an act of God," said I, "that has broken down the stairs."

"But there may be another way of descent," she said after a moment. "Oh, let us leave this dreadful island!"

I had no hope that the dinghy had been spared, but its place was not far away, and we walked to it in silence. It was gone. A tidal wave had followed the earthquake. The canoes in which the islanders had come had been dashed to pieces and their keepers killed. The survivors were prisoners on the island unless their friends came to their help and even then until they could devise some way of getting down the cliff. And we, too, were prisoners. Some of our gear, the compass, some provisions which I had stored in the crannies of the rock were still there, but they were useless to us. Something else had happened. The earthquake had broken the vast barrier reef. Before us was a practicable passage to the sea!

If we only had a boat! I turned to the canoes hopeful of finding one seaworthy, and as I did so my little mistress caught me by the arm.

"Look!" she cried, pointing far up the horizon.

I turned, and there, bottom upward, floated the dinghy. The sight of her was like a draft of wine. I turned and ran up the sand, followed by my lady. When opposite the boat I kicked off my shoes—I had on little else but shirt and trousers—jumped into the lagoon, swam to the dinghy and towed her ashore. Assisted by Mistress Lucy, I turned her over. I then hunted up the few things we had saved, with a little store of cocoanuts which we had accumulated in one of the caves, shipped the oars, which, being tied to the rowlocks, had not been washed away, and shoved off.

The mast was still lashed to the thwarts, and a boat cloak had been caught under the forward thwart. The painter was still fastened to a ring bolt in the bow, and as soon as I had rowed through the narrow entrance I stepped the mast and improvised a sail with the boat cloak and the painter. The breeze blew softly. We passed the island and then set our course by the compass to the eastward, headed for the great South American coast so many miles away.

We had gone through many perils, but had sustained them all. Fortune, as if ashamed of her allotted trouble, made it up to us in the end, for in a few days we fell in with a Spanish ship of war in the service of the viceroy of Peru, which had been exploring the south seas and had been driven far out of her course by the same storm which had wrecked the Rose of Devon. Commander Don Antonio Recalde was an officer and a gentleman. There was no war between our English king and the Spanish monarch then, and he treated us courteously, gave us food and raiment, assigned a spare cabin to my mistress and berthed me aft with the officers. He was bound for Valparaiso, which in due course, without mishap, we reached. There we took ship for the Portuguese possessions on the other shore of the continent and thence we got a ship from Rio de Janeiro to Lisbon, and so at last we came to England and to Plymouth harbor, whence we had set forth nearly a year ago.

We Fell In With a Spanish Ship of War.

I paid the captain of the Spanish frigate which had picked us up with an emerald of great price, which he was loath to accept, but which we pressed upon him. We had little difficulty, through his kind offices, in selling another stone or two for ready money at Valparaiso, so we experienced no difficulties which could be avoided by the expenditure of money upon the way.

I took my mistress to the house of the devoted Master Ficklin, who, with that kindly woman, his sister, greeted us as if we had risen from the dead, and, greatly rejoicing in my lady's good fortune, gave us the warmest of welcomes. There I had what I expected would be my last interview with her. We had been thrown constantly together during the six months that had elapsed between our great adventures upon the Island of the Stairs and our arrival in England. We had discussed everything else, I think, but I had said naught of my love. Indeed, each league of sea over which we passed on our way homeward seemed to remove her farther from me.

We were alone. Good Mistress Ficklin had given us her parlor for the afternoon. I took from my pockets the canvas pouches filled with her treasure and laid them on the table.

"These, Mistress Wilberforce," said I, formally enough, although my heart was beating rapidly, "are yours."

She waved her hand as if they were of small moment.

"We have discussed that before," she said. "What of yourself?"

"Last night," I replied, "I went down on the docks. A company's ship sails for India next week. They want a chief mate, and if my references serve they will engage me."

"And you have these references?"

"I thought, madam, that your friends in the city might give them to me when they know."

"But I have no friends in the city," she said.

"These," said I, pointing to the table, "will buy them for you."

"And so," she said, without looking at me, "and so it is goodby, then. May you be happy."

She extended her hand to me, and I caught it. I kissed it passionately, but when I made to let it go she would not.

"Master Hampdon," she said, looking at me, her eyes brighter than the diamonds and bluer than the sapphire upon the table, "you are a fool."

"Right well do I know that, mistress," said I, striving to fetch a smile to match her own.

"And a blind man as well."

Whereat I was a blind man indeed, for my eyes misted up, but not with the blood as in the battle. And I, as strong and tough as a mountain oak, was as like to faint as any lovesick girl.

"John, John," came the sweetest voice in the world to me through the darkness, "don't you see? Don't you know that I love you and you only, that you have all my life, and that my life, which is yours a thousand times on sea and shore, is not worth living without you?"

"But your friends, your world," I protested as she came nearer.

"I have no other friends, I want no other, and you are my world."

Well, it is not in me to resist after that, and for the third time in my life I held her in my arms, where since that hour she has often been again, and for the third time I drank the sweetness of her lips.

"Do you remember that night on the Rose of Devon when first you kissed me?" she asked, laughing.

"If I should kiss you a million times, sweetheart, as I mean to do," I answered boldly, "I should not forget a single one of them, much less that."

"And to punish you for your presumption, although my heart went out to you, I confess, I struck you; and to teach you to be a dutiful husband, loving, devoted to me," she paused and laughed again, "I strike you once more."

Whereat she laid her hand once again, but in tenderness, upon my cheek, following it with a kiss.

I have had his majesty's sword laid upon my shoulder after I had led one of the king's ships to victory in the French wars, and I am now, if you please, Sir John Hampdon. We live at Wliberforce Castle, and our children play on the sward, but the royal accolade meant not so much to me as that light blow upon my cheek with which my dear mistress sealed our plighted troth.

THE END.

—The marvel where all the money comes from for automobiles remains unsolved. In eight months of this year 130,000 machines have been licensed in the State of New York, a gain of 30,000 over last year. At the present rate of licensing, the total number in the Empire State licensed in the calendar year will approach 200,000, and may probably exceed that, for the rate is increasing all the time. When a single factory turns out 1000 a day this newest of large industries attains proportions difficult to comprehend. —Philadelphia Record.

—Vice President Marshall says his present great happiness is due to the absence of children from his home. "The man and wife who have no children to take up their time," he remarks, "can remember and observe their own anniversaries." Of course, Vice President qualifies his daring statement. "I would advise others to get married young and have children," he says. The Indiana statesman is a great hand at giving advice—to others. —Philadelphia Telegraph.

TWO GAMES IN SOCCER LEAGUE

Coddington and Montclair Were the Winning Teams

Interest in the workout of the soccer grammar school schedule did not lag during the stormy weather which required postponements, and on the Merrymount upper field Monday the rooters of four schools witnessed one of the fastest sessions played this season.

Coddington, winners of every game this year defeated the Gridley Bryants 2 to 0. The contest was warm and the field rather heavy, but the fine passing and accurate shooting of the Ward One aggregation overcome the feature work of the Ward Four eleven.

Montclair, which is fast developing into a top notch team, beat the Atherton Houghs 1 to 0. The latter school is handicapped because of the small number of boys that attend compared with the chances other schools have for picking teams and even though they lose occasionally the game is not thrown away since they present strong opposition on all corners of the field.

Today the games are between John Hancock and Wollaston, Lincoln and Massachusetts Felds.

READING OF FANCHON

Miss Starks Delights Park and Downs People

Miss Marion Evelyn Starks gave a clever reading of "Fanchon, the cricket" before an appreciative audience at the Park and Downs church, Monday evening. Miss Stark's portrayal of the varied characters was all that could be expected and the rapid change of tone and gesture as a different ohe was delineated was exceedingly well done.

The reading was given in four parts and between each an orchestra consisting of Miss Emily Bjorkman, Charles A. Richardson, Frederick Richardson and Ernest Pletsch rendered seelctions.

Miss Starks concluded her performance with two short readings, "Encouragement," a humorous Negro poem in Negro dialect, and "The little rid hin," from Irish folklore.

The proceeds went toward the running expenses of the church and during the intermissions candy was offered for sale by a committee of the ladies.

MUSIC HALL SHOWS.

The Murray Stock Company opened at Quincy Music hall on Monday presenting "The Servant of the House." Peter Murray as Alex Ferguson, a friend of young Graham, was always there at critical times, either with his Kodak or revolver. It was a comedy drama in four acts with many amusing incidents. Tonight the same company will present "The Pride of Virginia."

ARE YOU A HOBAB?

Are you a Hobab? is the subject announced by Rev. George M. Bailey for Sunday evening at the Wollaston Methodist church. A series of sermons on "The Man Outside," will follow, the subjects being:

Nov. 9—"Who is he?"
Nov. 16—"Why is he there?"
Nov. 23—"Why he should come in."
Nov. 30—"The best way to reach him."

THE BLUE OF THE SKY.

It Is Caused by the Oxygen In the Air, Says a Scientist.

Professor Spring of the University of Liege has a theory of his own regarding the blue of the sky.

Scientists have tried to explain the blue of the sky ever since the days of Leonardo da Vinci and Sir Isaac Newton. Some have held that it was due to the polarization of the solar light, while others have held that the blueness is due to the reflection, or, rather, the vibration, upon the minute drops of water which the atmosphere holds in suspension or upon the matter in the atmosphere, according to Tyndall.

Professor Spring has rejected all these theories, denying the "dust theory" altogether. He holds with Lord Rayleigh that instead of the dust increasing the blueness it diminishes it greatly. And according to Professor Spring, all of the appearances of blue tints in the atmosphere are explicable when we consider liquid oxygen. "Liquid air" is known to be decidedly blue in color, so the contention that blueness is due to the oxygen in the air seems to be substantiated.

If condensed and liquid air are blue in color it is most probable that the blueness of the sky is due to the oxygen in it.—New York World.

INGENUITY IN SUICIDE.

This Parisian Planned a Most Dramatic Taking Off.

Some years ago, when there was an epidemic of dramatic suicides in Paris, a man who had visited the French capital told of an extraordinary suicide he had heard of in that gay city.

"He was a Frenchman, who was nothing if not original," said the teller of the tale, "and even when he grew despondent he planned his death in a most original fashion. He locked the door of his room in the Rue Nitot and, removing the weights of the window cord, fastened them to the window itself. He added to the weight of the window by attaching six flatirons. On the sill he adjusted a large triangular bread knife, such as is used by chefs, and made ready a small balloon, capable of lifting fifty pounds.

"The ingenious Frenchman then put his head out of the window after attaching the balloon to his neck and by releasing the clamp that held the window cut his head off completely with the improvised guillotine. The decapitated body was discovered several days later, but it was not until the balloon and the head were found a week later in the field of a peasant, eighteen miles from Paris, that the method of suicide was really known."

Cornish Humor.

The magistrate at the Liskeard police court might well have excused the laughter which greeted the remark of a police witness only a short time ago who said with all seriousness: "He was drunk, your honor, and couldn't stand. I told him to go away, and as he wouldn't I locked him up."

The laugh in another court was against the solicitor who severely asked, "Were you present when you heard this?"

Mixed metaphors are not a peculiar nor indeed a common failing of the Cornishman, but a certain eloquent town councilor quite recently got entangled when in the course of a protracted debate on the momentous subject of the local dust bins he declared indignantly, "It is time we put our foot down with a loud voice."—English Illustrated Magazine.

Buried Upside Down.

If Major Labelliere of Dorking was buried on the top of Box hill, head downward, in 1800, he probably got the idea from Mr. Hall of Leith Hill place, who in 1767 built the tower on the neighboring Leith hill and was buried there six years later. The usual Leith hill story, as recorded by one writer, is that the tower "marks the spot where an eccentric farmer of the neighborhood was buried on horseback upside down, so that when the world was turned, as he believed it then soon would be, topsy turvey, he might at last come up in the right position." The tradition might easily be transferred from one hill to its neighbor. There seems no doubt, however, that Mr. Hall was buried on the summit of Leith hill.—London Chronicle.

Chief Justice's "Hantecedents."

Lord Alverstone's gift of song has sent the tourist on his track. There is a story that one Sunday an American lady attended the morning service at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, and asked the verger which of the choristers in the chancel was the lord chief justice. "Well, mum," replied that dignitary, "that is the vicar, and them's the curates, and I'm the verger. But as for the choir, as long as they does their duty we don't inquire into their hantecedents."—London Chronicle.

Hard Luck.

"So your baby won a prize in the baby show?"

"Yes," replied the proud but worried father. "And I guess we'll move out of the community. All the envious neighbors will resent it as long as he lives."—Washington Star.

His Ears.

"If Smithers undertakes to pull my ears," said a fellow at a street corner, "he will have his hands full."

The crowd looked at the man's ears and smiled.—London Telegraph.

Had It Located.

"Which tooth are you going to have pulled, Sam?"

"Upper six, sir," answered the Pullman porter.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Speedy Coasting.

The finest coasting hill in the world is at St. Moritz, in Switzerland. The hill is a mile long, and to coast down it takes, on an average, sixty-seven seconds. The Cresta course, as it is called, is iced and runs between snow banks. Its turns are dangerous, and only skilled coasters venture on it. They use the American flat toboggan, lying on the stomach and steering not with the feet, but with lifts and jerks of the body. A few seconds from the start on this course the coaster is going at a speed of twenty miles an hour. This speed soon increases to forty miles. Faster and faster he flies, swooping down the precipitous Church leap at the speed of an express train, and then on to the long, straight Shuttlecock run. To fifty, to sixty, to seventy to eighty miles an hour the pace grows till it is like the flight of the swiftest bird through a blinding blur of snow. Yet the speed still increases, and at the end of the Shuttlecock eighty-seven miles an hour is registered. These Cresta course speeds are not problematical. They are the accurate timings of an electric clock.

Say the Kind Word Now.

Oh, my dear friends, you who are letting miserable misunderstandings run on from year to year meaning to clear them up some day; you who are keeping wretched quarrels alive because you cannot quite make up your mind that now is the day to sacrifice your pride and kill them; you who are passing men sullenly upon the street, not speaking to them out of some silly spite and yet knowing that it would fill you with shame and remorse if you heard that one of these men was dead tomorrow morning; you who are letting your neighbor starve till you hear that he is dying of starvation or letting your friend's heart ache for a word of appreciation or sympathy, which you mean to give him some day—if you only could know and see and feel, all of a sudden, that the time is short, how it would break the spell, how you would go instantly and do the thing which you might never have another chance to do!—Phillips Brooks.

A Gigantic Neptune.

At Monterossa, near Spezia, Italy, there is an architectural curiosity, a gigantic figure of Neptune, constructed of cement and used to support the extreme end of a terrace for a seaside villa. The house is the Villa Pastine, says the Wide World Magazine, and the statue is the work of the Signor Arrige Minerbi, a talented sculptor of Rome. The small promontory on which the villa is built presented many difficulties to the architect, but he finally succeeded in building there a very commodious and comfortable villa. The statue is wonderfully lifelike and is eleven meters in height. The body, which, like the head, is built of reenforced cement, is hollow and contains a spiral staircase. Considering the nature of the material with which Signor Minerbi had to work, he is to be congratulated on the result of his labors.

The Navy of Today.

The transformation from the sail propelled man-o'-war to the complicated mass of machinery known as the modern battleship is not one bit more pronounced than the improvement which has taken place in the personnel of the men who compose the human working parts of these great machines. Time was when the navy was looked upon by many as a sort of reform school, a last resort to which young men could be sent who were not quite bad enough to be put in jail and not good enough to roam at large. Such conditions have, fortunately, passed away, and the American navy today is composed of brains and muscle of the highest order and a personnel of which the country can well be proud.—Popular Mechanics.

Customs at Eton.

In no other community are so many sumptuary laws stringently enforced as among the boys of Eton college, England. As a rule, they wear Eton jackets or tailcoats, the latter being allowed only on boys who have attained the height of five feet five inches. Then the trousers must always be turned up and the bottom button of the waistcoat undone. Should an Etonian carry an umbrella he must never venture to roll it up.

Wanted Information.

Harold, aged five years, was visiting his aunt. While at dinner the grown ups were talking and paying little or no attention to Harold. He was ready for dessert, and to attract the others' attention he said:

"Please, Aunt Mame, is that pie an ornament?"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Base Suspicion.

Guest (in cheap restaurant)—That's queer. I ordered three dishes and you are out of all. Waiter—It's very late, sah. Guest (suspiciously)—Not saving 'em for yourself, eh? Waiter (haughtily)—I don't eat here, sah!—Yonkers Statesman.

Appealing to Her Pride.

Weary Willie—When you want to touch a lady always appeal to her pride. Tottering Tommie—I did. I said, "You proud thing, please give me a nickel!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Made Good Her Word.

Black—She said on her wedding day that she would go through everything for him. White—Well, I guess she has. I loaned him a ten spot this morning.—Judge.

I go at what I am about as if there was nothing else in the world for the time being.—Charles Kingsley.

OSTA—BALDOVIN.

Miss Enis Baldovin of 137 Common street and Nilo Dall Osta of Boston presented themselves Sunday evening at the St. Mary's parish house, but could not be married because they had not secured the license from the office of the city clerk. They adjourned to the home of the bride where the guests had assembled for the wedding feast and after explaining the situation bade them make merry. Until midnight jollity was king and Monday the couple secured their license and in the evening were married by Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy. They will live in West Quincy.

In Mexic elections are held on Sunday. In the United States the day cannot be used for balloting, as it is considered too valuable for electioneering purposes.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Club notes in Daily Ledger tomorrow.

According to the Old Farmers Almanac there will be a new moon Wednesday and it is possible that then we may have some seasonable weather, and the long delayed Indian summer.

A week from today will decide the campaign whether it will be Governor Gardner, Walsh, Bird or Foss next year. With such a contest means a big vote.

The body of Mrs. Marcia R. Sprague was taken from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Amos Damon of Edwards street this morning to Marshfield, where the funeral will take place this afternoon.

Some of the ladies have already begun to plan their new gowns for the annual ball of the Quincy Firemen's Relief association to be held in Music hall, Friday evening, Nov. 21, and this year's affair promises to be a grand event.

Witches, ghosts and goblins will be in charge of a Hallowe'en party at the Park and Downs church on Thursday evening given by the Women's Guild. There will be Hallowe'en games and refreshments for children and grow ups.

The contest for Registrar of Probate and Insolvency in Norfolk county is waxing warm. With the Norfolk County Bar Association as well as the numerous local bar associations throughout the county working for J. R. McCoole it looks as though he had a good chance of winnig.

DISTRICT COURT.

Peter Thomas was fined $15 for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

Thomas Uniac, William B. Holbrook and John J. Delory were fined $10 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

Martin Purin was arraigned for evading fare of the street railway and for drunkenness at Quincy. He was fined the costs on the drunk complaint and ordered to pay the street railway company five cents for his fare.

All Are Located on Line of Street Railway

The third installment of assessed land values of 1912 is presented today and comprises every lot on the northerly side of School street, and westerly side of Franklin street to Independence avenue, and the westerly side of Independence avenue to the Braintree line.

MARRIAGE IS ANNOUNCED

Madeleine Brown Now Wife of Paul Zerrahn

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Brown of Elm street confirm the newspaper report from Springfield of the marriage of their daughter Madeleine and Paul Zerrahn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Zerrahn of Milton.

The young lady left Quincy about ten days ago for a short visit at Philadelphia, and then was expected to make an extended visit with relatives in New York city. But it appears that when she arrived in New York last Saturday noon Mr. Zerrahn met her, and they were married in the afternoon at Jersey City, by Rev. Ernest Gilpin, rector of the Episcopal church in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Zerrahn then went to Springfield where the groom is connected with the business office of a local newspaper.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown met the young couple in Springfield on Tuesday evening, and is understood that, although they have disapproved of the match on account of recent disclosures concerning business affairs of Mr. Zerrahn while he was at Lowell, that they have agreed to give the young man a chance to make good.

Mr. and Mrs. Zerrahn have taken apartments in the Forest Park section of Springfield, and since the visit of the bride's parents appear to be very happy.

The wedding which was announced to have been held Oct. 15, was to have been one of the social events of the season, for which great preparations had been made and its sudden breaking off called for a hurried cancelation of orders for new gowns by many of the young ladies who were to assist or attend the affair.

NEW RECORD.

Captain Marceau of the Dartmouth College cross country team lowered the college record, indoor and outdoor, for two miles at Hanover, N. H., Tuesday, when he circled the 13 laps in the Alumni gymnasium in 9m., 47-25-5s. Less than two weeks ago he won a silver cup in competition, the most prized trophy that an athlete can be awarded. Captain Marceau has been a consistent performer since he took to track sports. His home is in Wollaston.

HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL

Ghosts escorted the guests to the ghost chamber at the Hallowe'en social at the First Presbyterian church Tuesday evening under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. Games and refreshments were part of the evening's program. The committee included Miss Jessie Shirley, Miss Annie Walker, Margaret Morrison, George Shirley, Georgie Michael, Sarah Howe, William Michael, Wendell Clark, Jenie Norrie, James Jenkins and Louis Marini.

AN EVENING OF SMILES

Newton Newkirk Addresses Congregational Club

An evening of smiles, one filled with fun, enjoyment and laughter. That is what the executive committee of the Wollaston Congregational club predicted when it announced Newton Newkirk of newspaper fame as the speaker at the first meeting of the season on Tuesday evening.

This prediction was fulfilled for there were smiles in every corner of the church auditorium, to which the club members adjourned after supper to enjoy with their invited friends the ready wit of Mr. Newkirk.

Mr. Newkirk known in Newspapers as the creator of Stealthy Steve and other characters, the editor of "All Sorts" and the "Bingville Bugle" in the Boston Post, and originator of many other interesting and comic features, needed no introduction for he was received by his audience with rounds of applause.

"I am going to talk to you a few minutes about myself," said Mr. Newkirk. "I am more interesting to myself than anyone else and that is as it should be. When I was young I wanted to make a splash in the puddle of fame—to be a subject for monument builders. Since then these things have many times seemed less important than where my next ham sandwich was coming from.

"I fell in love with my teacher and took her a rosy apple. She told me I would be president some day, and I had almost decided to accept the nomination when my father took it out of me by saying the woods, were full of presidential timber and I was only a sapling.

"I decided if I couldn't be president I would be a lawyer. Dissuaded from this I thought I'd be a politician. All a politician needs for his profession is an upturned palm and a set of grafting tools. A burglar is satisfied with your watch, while the politician is not satisfied unless he gets the whole ward. A politician has it, but can't remember where he got it.

"I then decided to become a doctor, but I had that cut out. There are more doctors than sick people. If there weren't so many doctors there wouldn't be so many sick people. They have to make well people sick in order to earn an honest living. If they can't find what is the matter with you in three guesses they decide to operate.

"I next thought of being a preacher, but I was not cut out for that. When I was cut out the shears must have slipped for I was a misfit. A preacher gives more and receives less than any man I know. When you are baptised he is with you. When you commit matrimony, he completes the job. When you have passed on, he says beautiful things about you, three quarters of which are not true.

"Salvation is free but church members ought to be willing to pay the freight. We should not ask for eternal life C. O. D.

"I finally decided to become a newspaper man. A morning paper is printed the night before and an evening paper is printed in the morning. Soon you will be reading tomorrow evening's paper yesterday.

"I began as a reporter. A reporter is one who has to take a kick coming, going or wherever else it is handed him. He makes appointments with big news items and has to be there when they happen, or else write the facts as he thinks they would have happened had he been there when they did happen. He is the chap that pries the lid off the news. A reporter, like a mince pie and other things, works while you sleep. If he doesn't get the news he gets a vacation."

Mr. Newkirk told of his harrowing experiences as a reporter and later as editor and owner of a country newspaper. "It finally died of general debility and poor circulation. I ran it for three years but never caught up with it. I finally secured a divorce on the grounds of non support.

"This is a great age to live in but we are not satisfied with burning the candle at both ends, we want to cut it in two and burn it at all four ends. We work our cosmic machinery until we arrive at the House of Bug or the Lid Pickers' Home."

The speaker talked at length on the quick lunch habit and told of his experiences at a Boston hashery. He declared that the great trouble with the popular short story was that many of them were too long. He told a large number that were humorous in their extreme brevity.

Newton Newkirk closed his talk with a description of the subway at rush hours and a dissertation on modern transportation.

At the supper and business meeting that preceded in the vestry, President Chester I. Campbell announced plans for the year. Among future speakers are District Attorney Pelletier, Earle Ovington and others. Special entertainments are being planned.

CHAIRMAN MILLER OFFICIALLY NOTIFIED

New Adams Schoolhouse Is Now Ready for Occupancy

Dedication Exercises will Be Delayed Some Time

Mayor Stone officially notified Chairman Miller of the School Committee this morning that the new Adams school building was ready for occupancy.

No action was taken at the meeting of the School Committee on Tuesday evening regarding the opening of the new building. One of the members did remark however that he thought it would be a good idea to ask the City Council to provide a moving stairway for the children to reach the building.

Supt. Barbour said this morning that the building would probably be occupied for school purposes on Monday morning.

The dedication of the new building is in the hands of the Adams Parents and Teachers association, but the date for the dedication had not as yet been fixed. The association is very anxious to have Hon. Charles Francis Adams deliver the address at the dedicatory exercises, but as Mr. Adams is at present in Europe no definite plans for the dedication will be made until he returns, which is expected in a few days.

Ross, Gertrude Jones, Mildred Smith, Lucy Moyle, Annie Benton and Grace Brownrigg.

NO WITHDRAWALS FROM BALLOT

The time for the withdrawal of parties who had filed nominations papers for the municipal primaries expired Tuesday night and none withdrew although it was rumored about City Square Tuesday afternoon that Mr. Shaw, the Progressive candidate for Mayor, intended to withdraw his papers.

As it is now however his name will have to appear on the official ballot for the primaries, although any candidate nominated at these primaries will have an opportunity later to withdraw if they desire to do so.

This morning three additional independent nomination papers were taken out at the City Clerks office. These were by Thomas J. McGrath of Field street. Two papers are for Councilmen at large and one for councilman from Ward One. It was not stated who the papers were for.

The Mexicans would perhaps be willing to have the United States supervise an election if every one could vote as often as he wanted to.

The currency legislation will never be satisfactory as long as you have to put up security before getting a loan.

Secretary Garrison has stopped the practise of lending war department property, but it is suspected that his wife occasionally falls short of coffee and has to borrow of the next door neighbors.

Congress does not care how many bills the President returns unsigned provided he does not veto the desired appointments.

There is a growing feeling that President Huerta is playing a pretty large game for a seven spot high.

The Congressmen's contribution of $5 for a wedding present for Jessie Wilson will be very welcome, if they don't mark the gift so it can't be exchanged.

Many people believe a central bank would be a very good thing if it could be located about 25 miles from where they live.

The express companies have kindly accepted the rates fixed by the Inter-State Commerce Commission, instead of requiring the commission to make the figures higher.

Most of the Congressmen are helping solve the currency and Mexican problems by going home to see their constituents about the offices.

"Under the spreading chestnut tree,
The village blacksmith stands."
wrote the poet. If this verse is to be fitted to the modern school reader, "garage-keeper" must be substituted for "black smith."

There is a general feeling among our patriotic voters that they would be willing to go to the polls provided they could be paid for doing so.

The marriage of Nancy Leischman to the Duke of Croy makes quite a fuss across the water. It should not be forgotten that American girls have always shown great generosity in giving reduced rates to the European nobility.

AN "OFF YEAR."

Only a few elections take place on Nov. 4 of this year. In the states that are voting, the general prediction is made that the vote will be light, as it is an "off year."

In one district that has a member of Congress to elect, a newspaper remarks that the voters are not expected to turn out, because "no issue of importance is pending." Yet where these off year elections are taking place, the work of the officials chosen will intimately touch community life. Notwithstanding that, from a third to a half of the qualified voters will not cast a ballot.

What a paroxysm it does take to persuade the American voter to exercise the privilege that his fathers fought to give him! Many business men seem to feel that it is cheaper to let the grafters graft and the politicians to gather the plums than to spend the slight amount of time needed to vote regularly at primaries and elections.

That is a question well worth arguing. But even if the time put into performing a citizen's duties did not bring returns in dollars and cents, how can a man be indifferent to the struggle of social and industrial forces that expresses it self every year at the ballot box?

Talk about Armageddon! Every election is an Armageddon! Frequently it is a fairly clear cut choice between good and evil. There is petty self seeking, the arrogance of corporate power, the ignorant impulses of the rash and headstrong. There is the growing sense of civic responsibility, the demand for social equity. Who stands idle, dull, and asleep, while these forces are mustering? Why such mental and patriotic sluggishness, in the face of these dramatic, stirring issues?

EVIDENCE ENDS IN EATON CASE

Noted Murder Trial Is Now Nearing Its End

MRS. EATON A GOOD WITNESS

Boston Expert, Called by Defense, Believes Admiral Took Poison In One Dose on Wednesday Before Death While Wife Was Absent—Witnesses Called In Rebuttal

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 29.—The defense in the case of Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, on trial for the murder of her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, rested yesterday afternoon, following the testimony of Dr. Arthur E. Austin, the noted Boston chemist, who declared that in his opinion the naval officer took between fifty and sixty-six grains of arsenic in one dose about noon on Wednesday, March 5. Mrs. Eaton was in Dorchester that day. The admiral died at dawn Saturday, March 8.

Dr. Austin disagreed with Prof. Whitney, the state's expert, who previously testified that in his opinion Admiral Eaton received the first dose of arsenic on Thursday, March 6, and several other small doses up to within a few hours of death. Prof. Balch, another state expert, agreed with Prof. Whitney. A total of 16.67 grains of arsenic was found in the admiral's body.

Dr. Austin admitted that the conditions surrounding the admiral's illness were consistent with the theory that the poison had been administered in more than one dose.

Dr. Austin said the finding of about fifteen grains of arsenic in the dead man's body indicated that he took an immensely larger amount of the poison than was found in his stomach.

Just before Dr. Austin took the stand the cross examination of Mrs. Eaton was finished. She left the witness stand without any display of of emotion. If she felt any relief she did not show it in the slightest. She had been on the stand fifteen hours, during nine of which she was under cross examination. It was the opinion of those in the court that she had made a good witness.

She denied writing or dictating the document purporting to be her will which State Officer John H. Scott said he saw in a typewriting machine at the Eaton house shortly after the admiral's death.

It is expected that the case will go to the jury late today or some time Thursday.

With the defense resting, a short recess was taken and then several witnesses were called by the state in rebuttal.

The first was Dr. Thomas Carroll of Norwood, a Holy Cross and Harvard graduate, who testified to having seen the navy record relative to the admiral's ailment.

Cross examined by Mr. Morse, Dr. Carroll admitted that the cure for the ailment was a preparation containing arsenic.

TO SEE MISS WILSON WED

Mother of White House Bride to Issue About 800 Invitations

Washington, Oct. 29.—Final steps are being taken by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and her daughters toward pruning the list of persons to be invited to the wedding at the White House next month of Miss Jessie W. Wilson.

Mrs. Wilson has been unable thus far to reduce the list, it is said, below 700 or 800 guests. The engraved invitations will be mailed within the next two weeks.

Portions of Miss Wilson's trousseau have already begun to arrive. The wedding dress is being made in New York, as are the gowns of the bride's attendants. The gowns of the bridesmaids will be made of pink chiffon and satin with a modified pannier tunic. Their hats will be of pink and gold lace with transparent wired gold lace brims.

The magistrate's umbrella was broken and his head bruised. Reporters witnessing the assault overpowered Patuzel and saved the magistrate from further injury.

LEARNING A LANGUAGE.

It Is an Easier Task the Younger It Is Taken In Hand.

The time to learn a language is when you are young, the younger the better. We learn our own language as children. The older we grow the harder it is, because it means not merely learning by heart a great many words, not merely training the palate and tongue to produce different sounds, but adopting a new attitude of mind.

Nothing definite has been discovered as to the localization of faculties in the brain, therefore nothing certain is known, but it has always seemed to me and to others whom I have consulted that when you learn a new language you are exercising and developing a new piece of brain.

When you know several languages and change from one to another you seem definitely to change the piece of brain which actuates your tongue. You switch off one center and switch on to another.

You will always notice in yourself and others that there is a definite pause when the change of language is made. Now it becomes every year more difficult to awaken an unused part of the brain and bring it into active use, and to begin at twenty-three is late.—Atlantic.

FIRST POSTAL TRAIN.

It Was Tried In 1864 and Proved a Thorough Success.

The first trial of a postal car service, in which mail matter is assorted while in transit, was made in 1864 on the Chicago and Northwestern railway. The scheme was a thorough success, and railway mail service was inaugurated that year on several of the important railway lines and was gradually extended all over the United States and adopted by other countries.

In 1874 the American railway mail system was thoroughly organized on a permanent basis, with eight territorial divisions, each in charge of a superintendent subordinate to a general chief at Washington.

This service was among the first to adopt a modern classified civil service, appointment of railway mail clerks having always been made for a probationary period, permanent employment being conditioned on satisfactory service and conduct and removal based on good cause only. The service has been gradually increased and new divisions organized and is now operated on practically every railway.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Swordsmen of the Sea.

The swordsmen of the sea are the sawfishes, spearfishes, sailfishes, swordfishes and the narwhal, with its spirally twisted straight tusks. Sawfishes inhabit the warmer seas, while the narwhal is a creature of the Arctic. The tusk of the narwhal is hollow nearly to the point and is spirally grooved. It uses its tusk as a weapon of defense and to plunge through the ice to breathe, the narwhal being a cetacean. Sometimes when a boat has been caught in the ice great damage has been inflicted by the inquisitiveness or blundering of this great creature, that sometimes reaches a length of fifteen feet, with a tusk of from six to ten feet in length. As a rule, however, the narwhal uses its tusk for the purpose of killing fish for food. In the castle of Rosenberg the kings of Denmark have long possessed a magnificent throne made of tusks of this cetacean. These tusks are harder and whiter than ivory.

Author Who Wrote Legibly.

No author, or any one else, for that matter, could possibly have written more legibly than Francis Thompson. He wrote frequently in pencil in a careful round hand that would have put a schoolboy at the top of his writing class. His copy was always "good" for the compositor, which was fortunate, for there was always the greatest difficulty in getting him to correct the proofs of his reviews. I have the manuscript of one of his later poems which a child of ten could read with ease, though it is written partly in ink and partly in pencil and carefully stuck together where lines have been skipped out with scissors. He was probably the only writer of genius who used penny exercise books as manuscript paper.—London Spectator.

Tennyson and a Telescope.

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in "Thoughts and Afterthoughts" tells this tale of Lord Tennyson: The poet was invited to a certain country house, and all the neighboring luminaries of the county had been invited to meet him. After dinner his host asked whether he would like to look at the stars. Tennyson took up the telescope and, forgetting all else, gazed for twenty minutes at the wonders of the heavens. "Well, what do you think, Mr. Tennyson?" inquired his host. "I don't think much of our county families," Tennyson replied.

Tumblers.

Drinking glasses called tumblers owe their name to the fact that they are the successors of the little round silver bowls, so perfectly balanced that, which ever way they were tipped about on the table they tumbled into position again and there remained with the rim upward.

Fairly Lazy.

"Is Jones lazy?"

"Lazy's no name for it. Why, he'll go into a revolving door and then wait for somebody to come in and turn it around."—Judge.

He that comes unbidden will sit down unasked.—Irish Proverb.

DIAZ FLEES TO AMERICAN SHIP

General and Three Friends Afraid of Being Shot

OVER ROOFS AT MIDNIGHT

Under Great Excitement Fugitives Claim Protection of Consul Canada and Are Taken to Gunboat Wheeling—Relatives of Late President Lodged In Prison Here

Vera Cruz, Mex., Oct. 29.—General Felix Diaz is under American protestion on the United States gunboat Wheeling. Diaz applied for protection to Consul Canada during the night, following the arrest by Mexican police of L. Blum, an American, who accompanied Diaz from Havana and has been with him since he arrived in Vera Cruz.

Rear Admiral Fletcher decided to transfer Diaz from the Wheeling to one of the larger American war vessels, probably the cruiser Tacoma.

Cecelio Ocon and Jose Sandoval, friends of Diaz, and Alexander Williams, an American newspaper man, also asked for protection and were put upon the Wheeling.

The American consul at once took steps to have the refugees transferred on board the gunboat Wheeling, which was lying in the harbor. The three Mexican fugitives and Williams were taken to a small boat and hurried on board the American warship, where they were given accommodations.

Diaz and his companions, once on board the Wheeling, soon recovered their equanimity, but reiterated their belief they were to have been shot.

The flight took place after midnight, the three men then taking the risk of an excursion over the roof tops, which were guarded by armed men, into the American consulate.

Diaz with Sandoval and Ocon dropped over a low wall and made their way into one of the rear rooms of the consulate.

When they arrived inside the room they asked that Consul Canada be called and, apparently suffering from great excitement, assured him when he came they were confident that their lives were in imminent danger. They declared they had knowledge that orders for their arrest had been issued, and they begged for his protection.

In reply, Consul Canada pointed to the waterfront some 200 yards distant, and told them a launch was there and to make a run for it. The fugitives hesitated for some time to make the venture, as the street in front of the American consulate was patrolled by a number of detectives.

When, however, they finally left the door of the consulate the detectives on duty apparently did not recognize them, and they walked deliberately past them to the pier, where they presented a card from Consul Canada to the officer in command of the launch.

The American naval officer hurried them on board the launch, cast off, steamed quickly across the harbor to the Wheeling and put them on board.

Evaristo and Daniel Madero, relatives of the late president, who were arrested at Monterey for complicity in a plan to hand over the city to the rebels, and brought by way of Tampico to this city, have arrived here on a Mexican gunboat and have been lodged in the prison of San Juan de Ulua.

IN RECEIVER'S HANDS

Pope Company Gives Restricted Credit as Cause of Action

Hartford, Oct. 29.—It became known that Colonel George Pope, treasurer of the concern, was appointed receiver of the Pope Manufacturing company, manufacturers of automobiles and former leading bicycle manufacturers.

The application was granted in the supreme court here by Judge Tuttle on petition of the New Departure Manufacturing company of Bristol and Frederick F. Small of West Hartford, small stockholders of the concern. The application was a friendly one, it is understood. Bonds of $200,000 were fixed for the receiver, who was authorized by the court to continue the business.

Restricted credit is given as the cause of the receivership proceedings. It is a Massachusetts corporation.

UNCONSCIOUS ON PORCH

Lynn Girl Wanders In Search of Work Until Exhausted

Melrose, Mass., Oct. 29.—Exhausted by a fruitless search for work, Miss Eileen Putnam, a 17-year-old Lynn girl, was found unconscious on the porch at the home of Arthur Shaw at 76 Damon street.

She is unable to account for her arrival in Melrose, except that she kept walking on from Saugus while in a semi-conscious condition. She declares that her mind was a blank from the time she reached Saugus Center, where she walked from Lynn Monday afternoon, until she was revived at the Melrose hospital.

DELAYS TAKING OFFICE

Billing Will Not Assume Duties of Collector For Two Weeks

Washington, Oct. 29.—Edmund Billings, confirmed as collector of the port of Boston, has notified Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo that he prefers not to take office until about the second week in November. The first week in that month a collectors' conference will be held in New York, which Billings desires to attend, and he has prevailed upon Collector Edwin U. Curtis to remain in office until after that event.

The Treasury Department appreciates the courtesy of Collector Curtis in his dealings with it, and he will retire with the good wishes of all his superiors. It is conceded that his administration of the duties of his position has been of the highest order. Collector Curtis wanted to retire last July and take a vacation, but he has remained at his desk continually at the request of Secretary McAdoo.

THREATS AGAINST COURT

Prisoner Says He Will Kill Judge and Jury For Prison Sentence

Northampton, Mass., Oct. 29—When sentenced to a term of fifteen years in the state prison for attempted assault upon a woman, Thomas Jaso, a Pole, threatened to kill Judge King and the jurymen in the superior court, and then attacked Sheriff Maurice Fitzgerald, who tried to check him.

The convicted prisoner used both fists on the sheriff, punching him with all his might, and was only subdued when another prisoner awaiting sentence went to the aid of the four deputy sheriffs and a state police officer. Before he was overcome, Jaso tore the face of State Officer Daly with his nails.

Jaso was convicted of an attempt to assault Mrs. Jane Juimenbeau of Westhampton last July. When arraigned he denounced the court, and on being called to the witness stand refused to take the oath.

LAWRENCE MAN SUES FOR $30,000

Says Wife's Affections Alienated by His Former Friend

Salem, Mass., Oct. 29.—The fact that the former Mrs. Winifred B. Morris, wife of Michael W. Morris, once owner of the Broadway theatre, Lawrence, had become the wife of his former friend, Albert E. Royal, now of Brookline, has become public through the filing of a $30,000 suit for alienation of affections by Morris against Royal. Both of the men are prominent in Lawrence, while Royal is treasurer of a large cocoa company with an office in Boston.

In his declaration, which was filed through his attorney, Harry R. Lawrence, Morris claims that Royal persuaded Mrs. Morris to leave home and to remain away from him. He says that on Feb. 21, 1909, Royal persuaded Mrs. Morris to go to another state and secure a divorce. She secured a decree of divorce, which he claims is fraudulent and void and of no effect in this state.

He says that his wife and Royal then went through a form of marriage in another state, making the marriage void in this state.

SENATORS DEADLOCKED

Committee on Currency Bill Disagree on Administration Plan

Washington, Oct. 29.—A threatened deadlock in the senate banking and currency committee over the proposal to substitute a government-owned bank for the regional reserve bank plan in the administration currency bill became apparent when the committee began executive consideration of the measure.

Discussion was confined to the central reserve bank scheme, and while no vote was taken, the debate disclosed six senators for the government controlled central bank and six for the administration regional system.

Oakland, Cal., Oct. 29.—George Fonts, 14 years old, who is said to have become mentally unbalanced as the result of a hazing received at school six years ago, was committed to the home for the feeble minded at Glen Ellen.

The alleged hazing was committed by four youths who tied a sack over the boy's head and told him they intended to bury him in the school yard. Young Fonts never recovered from the fright. The mother of the boy told her story of the hazing in court.

It is of interest to know that prominent women of England are giving freely of their time to serve municipal interests and Duchess of Marlborough has recently founded a new organization which has for its object the attempt to interest women in municipal affairs. The General Federation magazine gives notice of the views of Mrs. L. E. Huford, who at the age of 83 gives her reasons for being a club woman, as follows: "I am a clubwoman because I want to know how to do things. One may be ever so faithful, and yet fail to perform perfect service, for lack of knowledge. One may have all knowledge and fail, unless that knowledge be expressed in service. Knowledge, the dreamer, sees the fair ideal. Service, the wizard, makes the vision real Knowledge soars heavenward, upon the wings of service. Wisdom is the proper use of knowledge. What does the General Federation of Women's clubs represent? Knowledge glorified in service."

QUINCY WOMEN'S CLUB.

Rev. William H. van Allen of the Church of the Advent, Boston, called out a large assemblage of club women Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse, who listened appreciatively to his address on "The General Problem of Poverty."

Owing to the conference of presidents of clubs in the State Federation at Malden and Mrs. Chandler W. Smith president attending, Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham, first vice president presided, it being her first appearance before the club as a presiding officer. Records of the last meeting were read. On recommendation of the executive board it was voted to reduce the club membership from 500 to 400.

Mrs. E. S. Tenney, Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham, Mrs. Z. S. Arnold and Mrs. George L. Badger were elected delegates to the fall meeting of the State Federation, Nov. 17 at Whitman and instructed to vote for all the amendments proposed to be acted upon at that meeting. It will be an interesting meeting and members were urged to attend, tickets to be obtained of Mrs. Tenney, corresponding secretary.

Among the reports Mrs. N. S. Hunting chairman of the Visiting Nurse committee told of the work of visiting nursing in our city. She said it was the first humanitarian work undertaken by the club after its organization in 1905 and told how the funds were raised by contributions from the club, from Dr. Brackett, Unity Circle of King's Daughters and individual subscriptions. How in those days every one interested gave $5, $10 or even $25 each year but that now there was the Tuberculosis camp, the Associated Charities and other good works which all wished to help but made it more difficult to raise the funds necessary for the visiting nurse work.

The work has grown and it became necessary to have two nurses and some times an assistant nurse. All the doctors in the city co-operate. Last year's expenses were $1603.82. The nurses collected in fees $388.00; the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., paid for visits $339.50 and subscriptions made up the balance.

This year the committee tried a new way to raise money and distributed envelopes the first of June asking for a penny a day up to Oct. 1. The penny collections have been very successful amounting so far to about $450. Help has also been received from the Quincy Catholic club, the Katharyn Crane Memorial club, and Unity Circle King's Daughters. This circle has contributed $50 each year since the work began. By the will of Mrs. George W.Morton who was always interested and a generous contributor the interest of $1000 will be available each year for the visiting nurse work.

Other chairmen to make reports were, Mrs. Seavey of the Art and Arts and Crafts who reminded members of the four free admission tickets to the Boston Art Museum and also admittance could be had by club members to the Boston Art club by applying to her. A class in pottery would be formed if a group of members desired. The first lecture in the Home Decoration course would be by Mrs. Nickerson, subject Story of Arts and Crafts in New England. Samples of the work would be exhibited. Tickets for lectures and further details to be obtained of Mrs. Tenney. Mrs. Arnold anounced Current Events lectures by Mrs. Pennock, the first one to be Nov. 12 at 3 P. M. at clubhouse, tickets to be had from members of her committee. The class in parliamentary law under the auspices of the Legislative committee, Mrs. Electa Sherman teacher, would be held the first and third Fridays each month at 10.30 at clubhouse, the first one Nov. 7.

Several announcements were made by Mrs. Pinkham and Mrs. Badger after which the Quincy Women's Club Glee club sang, repeating the songs rendered by them at the opening meeting which was not largely attended owing to bad weather. They were warmly greeted and received hearty encores after each number.

The afternoon's program was in charge of Mrs. Hunting who first introduced Miss McEwan the capable head Visiting Nurse, who gave a heart to heart talk about the work among the needy of the city. Her word picture, pathetic in detail, proved the need of nurses in our city and showed the big and helpful work they were doing. All who contributed toward the work must have felt glad they had done so after hearing Miss McEwan.

Following a group of songs finely rendered by Mrs. William H. Spooner, soloist of St. Chrysostom's church, Mrs. Hunting introduced the Rev. W. H. van Allen who spoke for an hour on "The General Problem of Poverty." He described poverty as the state where individuals or a family are improperly nourished, poorly clothed, over anxious as to the future and deprived of the rightful joys of life.

He said poverty was against Christian conception, curable, and should be abolished. Personally he had been a crusader against poverty all his life. He spoke of poverty in England where 30 per cent of the people lived on the ragged edges, and 10 per cent received apupers' aid. He touched on conditions in France and Germany and then spoke of conditions in America. The more civilized the land the greater menace was poverty.

How about our great and free country? Our large cities are almost as bad as in England. We have a mass of unemployed who want work but cannot get it; the old man is pushed out. Mr. van Allen believed the public parks and breathing places should be in the poorer rather than in the wealthy sections of the cities as the rich could provide their own parks. White slavery was the curse of poverty. There will always be the rich and poor but never has it been so extreme—never so many plutocrats, never so much poverty. There is a false standard. We are raising up a vulgar ostentatious idle rich in America, who are rubbing in the contrast between wealth and poverty. There is no over-production in this country so long as one stomach is empty or unclothed. There is more scandal among the idle rich than the idle poor.

Mr. van Allen believed that poverty made drunkards, not drunkards poverty. The man poorly fed and housed found the saloon attractive. It is right that all men should have work to do which shall be worth doing and under right conditions.

We must get at the root of the evil, give justice not charity. Of what benefit were clubs, hospitals, rest rooms for employees if employees were not paid a living wage? Why cut wages and declare large dividends? We must face facts, open our eyes and do a little reaching out. Our country is in much the condition Rome was before its downfall. Too much unearned wealth in the hands of a few. Too much monopoly exploiting land, petroleum, coal, railroads and labor of men. There is something wrong—this madness for pleasure, for money it made for a corrupt government, big trusts, etc. We must build toward evolution or there would be revolution and a going down as Rome did.

Mr. van Allen closed by reading a fitting poem by James Russell Lowell. He was given prolonged applause in appreciation of the message he brought to the club and many members had the pleasure of meeting him at the close of the meeting.

SENATOR LEWIS AND H. T. PINDELL

H. T. Pindell of Peoria, Ill., here seen with his sponsor, Senator J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, has been slated for appointment as ambassador to Russia, but opposition has developed on the ground that he has not always been a consistent Democrat, and there is likely to be a fight in the senate over his confirmation. Mr. Pindell's opponents in Illinois called attention to the fact that he did not support Mr. Bryan when he was a candidate for the presidency, and the secretary of state is believed to be using his influence against the editor.

GIRL ESCAPES WHITE SLAVER

Julia Ryan s Found In a Taunton Hotel

Taunton, Mass., Oct. 29.—Julia Ryan, the 21-year-old immigrant girl who wandered from the home of her employer in Boston, Sunday, has been located at the Taunton House and the police are convinced that in her being brought there an attempt had been made to enmesh her into white slavery.

She was brought there by a young man Sunday afternoon who declared she was his sister. He left the house immediately after and has not been seen since. Miss Ryan is now at the home of her sister, Miss Margaret Ryan, who is employed in the home of John T. Kennedy in Dorchester.

From the time she was brought to the Taunton House till her discovery Miss Ryan had had nothing to eat. She carried a purse containing $1. Not knowing where to obtain food, she requested a woman living in the place to buy her a loaf of bread. The request was not complied with.

POLICE GUARD MAILS

Strikers Set Fire to Truck and Stone Driver and Policeman

New York, Oct. 29.—Guarded by policemen and federal secret service men, the United States mails are being moved about the city on normal schedules that had been interrupted for nearly twenty-four hours by 125 striking mail truck drivers.

Postmaster Morgan said there was now no delay in transportation between postoffices and railroad and steamship terminals.

Strikers and sympathizers made several attacks on trucks. In Eighth avenue they stoned a driver and the policeman on the seat and set fire to the truck. Among those arrested during the day was Patrick Johnson, who said he was vice president of the local branch of the chauffeurs union that is conducting the strike.

McLEANS AND MICHAELS WIN

Good Bowling Last Night in Clan Mcgregor League

The Clan MacGregor league attained some prominence Tuesday evening when its bowlers made the best showing of any league in a rolloff on the Coliseum alleys this season. In the three matches several men had good scores and but for the poor showing of some of their team mates alley records would have been smashed. The men passing 100 were McLean 101, Michael and Birnie 102, Mitchell and P. Dackers 104, Morton and D. Dackers 105, McLean 106, McLean 107, and Marnock 109. McLean rolled 314 for the best three string total and he easily outdistanced his fellow competitors.

The McLeans applied a coat of whitewash on the Thompson five, the final lead being nearly 100 pins. At no time were the losers dangerous.

Limitations of Fame.

In Professor Knight's reminiscences of Tennyson it is related that on one occasion when the poet laureate was stopping at an inn in the island of Skye the landlord was asked if he knew who had been staying in his house, and on being informed that it was the poet Tennyson, he replied:

"Lor', to think o' that! And, sure, I thoucht he was sheptleman."

At Stirling some one asked the landlord of the house where the poet was stopping:

"Do you ken who you had wi' you t'other night?"

"Nan, but he was a pleesant shentelman."

"It was Tennyson, the poet."

"And wha' may he be?"

"Oh, he is a writer o' verses sich as ye see i' the papers!"

"Noo, to think o' that! Jeest a poobllc writer, and I gi'ed him ma best bedroom!"

But the charms of Mrs. Tennyson, her gracious manners, did not pass unnoticed, for the landlord said, "Oh, she was an angel!"

A Great Musical Library.

There is no public library which contains so many works of interest to students of music as the one in Manchester, England, says the Musical Courier. Henry Watson, who spent a lifetime in accumulating rare musical works and original scores, bequeathed the entire collection to the Manchester library on the condition that musical students, members of musical societies and all others interested should be allowed free access to it. The Manchester library is very proud of the collectio and continues to add to it. Among its treasures is a volume of pieces for viola da gamba, written by English composers of the sixteenth century and the first half of the seventeenth century, and collected in 1650 for a wealthy amateur. Popular songs mentioned by Shakespeare are in this unique and most valuable volume.

The Beggar's Baby.

In the Rue St. Lazare, says the London Mail's Paris correspondent, stood a poor and meanly clad woman who stopped passersby, crying, "Give me a penny for food for my baby," as she pointed to a wailing infant in her arms.

But an observant policeman interfered. It was only when the woman made a particular movement that the infant squealed, and investigation showed that a string which the woman worked with her foot was tied to it. The apparent cruelty resulted in the woman's arrest. Great was the astonishment at the police headquarters when the injured "baby" was found to be a large doll, whose vocabulary consisted of "mamma" and "papa." Further, in the "baby's" clothes were linen articles pilfered from the stalls in the street.

A Remembered Grudge.

Queen Wilhelmina when a small girl found it hard to learn English and perhaps for that reason did not love England. The first map of Europe she drew showed an enormous Holland, a fair sized Belgium and France, but an almost imperceptible Great Britain. To draw particular attention to the diminutive island representing England she wrote below it, "Land of Miss S." (her English governess). Years later the young queen said to the minister plenipotentiary of England:

"Be sure to tell her majesty Queen Victoria that I love Englishwomen—all Englishwomen."

To which the minister bowed, and the queen added:

"All Englishwomen who are not governesses!"

True Love.

An official of the State Charities Aid association of New York, said of eugenics the other day:

"The love match is a good thing for eugenics. By this I mean that it is better for a pretty girl to marry a brave, handsome youth for love—true love—than it is for her to marry an elderly millionaire for his money.

"Mercenary people like to sneer at love in a cottage, and bread and cheese and kisses, and all that sort of thing. But these sneers are false, for when poverty comes in at the door love flies out and gets a good job."—Exchange.

Between Girls.

"It is vulgar to dress so as to attract attention on the street."

"Isn't it!"

"I saw Miss Knobby going down the street yesterday in a gown which caused every man she passed to turn and look at her."

"Sure enough! I wonder who is her dressmaker."

"I asked her, but she wouldn't tell me."—Houston Post.

How a Stone Varies.

A stone is usually considered to be fourteen pounds, but a butcher's stone of dead meat is only eight pounds, a stone of cheese is sixteen pounds, a stone of glass five pounds, while a stone of hemp runs to thirty-two pounds.—London Standard.

An Impression.

"I think I've made an impression on that young lady."

"Why?"

"She's trying to remember who it is I remind her of."—Detroit Free Press.

Paradoxical Veracity.

QUINCY WINS FROM THAYER

Score Was 20 to 0 in Favor of High School Boys

In a contest interesting in more ways than one Tuesday afternoon a team of Quincy High first and second men defeated the Thayer Academy eleven on the Merrymount oval 20 to 0.

Twice Thayer was in Quincy's territory and once was held for downs on the three yard line.

In the first place the visitors were outweighed by many pounds, and in the second place football at Thayer is only in its infancy and incidentally, so are some of the players. One fellew weighed a little over 110 while the giant of the team, Leonard, easily tips the beam at 175.

Coach Mansur refereed the game and discovered a few poor spots in the Quincy team. His ends got away in good style, the game was not opened up but they held to the line and the backfield showed speed and interference of ground gaining quality.

Jack Reardon was in centre and although he is in the buster class is rapidly developing into a powerful player. His headwork at all times was directed the right way for good results.

Paige was at quarter and the practice was worth considerable to him, in view of the long week between the scheduled games. He ran the game in snappy style and spoiled one of Thayers chances for a score by nailing Leonard who got away from the field and started for the Quincy line.

Miller and Blackmur of Quincy both played with Thayer, the former at centre and the latter between the end and quarter back positions. Both stayed in all the game although their physical condition is not up to the standard. The score:

Where a Rainbow Touches the Earth.

In every country in the world rainbow folklore declares that some object of value may be found where the ends of the beautiful arch touch the earth. In Suabia the ends are said to rest on bowls of gold; in Hungary, that cups of silver will be found at the spot where they come in contact with the earth. In Switzerland it is said that a shoe cast over the rainbow will come to the ground on the other side filled to overflowing with gold. In Bosnia it is said that if iron or other base metal happens to be at the spot where the bow touches the ground it will be instantly transformed to pure gold. In many parts of Germany, Poland, Russia, Belginm and Holland it is said to be a golden key that may be found at "the end of the bow." In Portugal and Spain they speak of the "silver hen" having her nest where the bow rests, and in Norway it comes to the ground at a spot where a golden bowl and a silver spoon are hidden. In many of the chief European countries it is said that water touched by the rainbow will cure fits and insanity.

He Paid For the Boots.

According to an old French tale, a number of shoemakers argue the question, Which one of them is the most meekly submissive to his wife? To the one who is least so the host offers to give the best pair of boots in his shop. If any one claims the boots and fails to prove his claim he must pay double price for them. The boots are claimed by a man who declares that he is not afraid of his wife. The man who offered the prize is somewhat taken aback by the man's confident manner, but he determines not to let his boots go without an attempt to save them. "The boots are stiff, I think," he said. "Take this grease with you to soften them, but put it inside your waistcoat, so that my wife may not see it."

"Oh, no," was the reply, and the grease was hastily pushed away. "No; my wife would be frightful mad if I should grease my waistcoat."

Then the other promptly decided that he must pay double price for the boots.

Ill Fated Explorers.

Among the Spaniards who won fame as discoverers and conquerors in America only a very few died peacefully. Here is a list of some of the more important who suffered at the hands of fate: Columbus died broken hearted. Roldin and Bobadilla were drowned. Ovando was harshly superseded, Las Casas sought refuge in a cowl. Ojeda died in extreme poverty, Enciso was deposed by his own men, Nicuessa perished miserably by the cruelty of his party, Vasco Nunez de Balboa was disgracefully beheaded, Narvaez was imprisoned in a tropical dungeon and afterward died of hardship, Cortes was dishonored, Alvarado was destroyed in ambush, Almagro was garroted. Pizarro was murdered and his four brothers cut off, and there was no end to the assassinations and executions of the secondary chiefs among the energetic and daring adventurers.

Power of a Sunflower.

"One of the most remarkable exhibitions of plant life I ever saw," writes John Burroughs in an Atlantic Monthly article, "was in a western city, where I observed a species of wild sunflower forcing its way up through the asphalt pavement. The folded and compressed leaves of the plant, like a man's fist, had pushed against the hard but flexible concrete till it had bulged up and then split and let the irrepressible plant through. The force exerted must have been many pounds. I think it doubtful if the strongest man could have pushed his fist through such a resisting medium."

Her Eight Daily Meals.

Somerset, in England, is rich in names for the intercalated meal. In "Red Letter Days" Mrs. Andrew Crosse gives a delectable sketch of her old nurse, a Somersetshire woman, "who lived to be nearly a hundred. She used to say that folks should take their meals regular. All her life she had eaten 'a dew bit and breakfast, a staybit and dinner, a mommet and crummet and a bit after supper'—eight meals in all."

Moisture of the Eye.

The moisture of the eye is genuine solvent. Many persons have gone to bed troubled with a foreign substance in the eye and have waxed in the morning to find it gone. In many cases of this kind the foreign matter has been dissolved by the moisture of the eye.

Not What She Meant.

"I think the baby has your hair, ma'am," said the nurse girl, looking pleasantly at her mistress.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the lady, glancing up from her novel. "Run into the nursery and take it away from him. What will that child do next?"

Ambitious.

"And is it your expectation to support me in the manner to which I have been accustomed?"

"Indeed it is"—

"Then let's call it off. If you can not do better than that I may just as well remain where I am."—Houston Post.

The Stolen Portemonnaie

She Forgave the Thief Twice

By LILLIAN SHARPE

A young lady sat in a waiting room at a railway station watching the clock as its hands moved slowly toward the time of departure of her train. Presently she turned to a satchel on the seat beside her, placed it on her lap, opened it and took out her portemonnaie, which she laid in the place where her satchel had been.

A young man with curly auburn hair and brown eyes was sitting at the other end of the seat and observed that the girl had forgotten to put her portemonnaie back into the satchel. He kept his eyes on her and it until suddenly a railroad official called.

"Train for Hampton!"

The young lady started, glanced at the clock, saw that the hands stood at fifteen minutes before her train time, remembered that trains are opened to travelers some time before they leave and, grasping her satchel, hurried away. Seeing the words "Ticket Office" over a window, she remembered that she had forgotten to provide herself with a ticket and, turning aside, took position at the end of a line of several persons.

"If that isn't just like a woman!" said the young man with auburn hair to himself, and, reaching for the portemonnaie, he put it in his pocket and followed her, taking position next to her in the line. When it came her turn to purchase a ticket she asked for one to Hampton, at the same time opening her satchel. First there was a quick movement of the top articles, then a plunge of the hand down into the bag, after this a convulsive stirring up of everything.

"Oh, heavens, I've been robbed!"

"Permit me to pay your fare," said the young man behind her, and, taking out his wallet, he bought a ticket for her and one for himself. Then they both made room for those behind them.

"What shall I do?" wailed the girl.

"You had better get aboard the train. You haven't time to investigate the loss of your portemonnaie, and it would probably avail nothing if you had. Was there much in it?"

"Only $7.53, four postage stamps and some samples."

"What exactness! I wish I could remember things like that. Never mind. I have advanced the amount for your ticket. You haven't lost very much. Good morning." And he lifted his hat deferentially.

Now, the young man knew very well the girl would not let him go without asking his address that she might return his loan. She asked him for it, and he said that it would be more convenient for him to give it to her in the train, so the two went on. He handed her on to the car, took a seat beside her and, producing a card bearing his name, Nathaniel Meriweather, wrote his address on it and handed it to her.

"Why, you live in Hampton!" she exclaimed.

"I don't live there, but I am going there."

That he was going there was perfectly true, but when he had entered the station he had just left he had no such intention. He was going to his home, fifty miles beyond.

"But you have given your street and number there."

"That's the address of a friend."

The girl put the card in her satchel, and Mr. Meriweather took up the matter of the lost portemonnaie.

"Was any one," he asked, "near you while you were in the station?"

"No one near enough to get possession of anything that belonged to me. Now, I think of it, some one was sitting on the other end of the bench while I was waiting for the train."

"Man or woman?"

"I think it was a man."

"Did you take out your portemonnaie while he was there?"

"Yes, I did. I tired of waiting and took out this magazine." She still held it in her hand. "To do so I was obliged to remove the portemonnaie and some other things which I laid beside me. After getting out the magazine I put them all back again into the bag."

"Are you sure you put them all back?"

"Perfectly."

"Then there can be no doubt about the matter. The man who sat beside you must have been an expert at sleight of hand and contrived to get your pocketbook away from you. I was in the station and saw a man sitting beside you."

"How careless of me! Could you identify the man?"

"I think I could."

"What was he like?"

"Well, he was not a very attractive looking person, but I wouldn't have taken him for a thief."

"Did you notice his features?"

"I noticed one feature. He was a red headed chap."

The young lady cast a side glance at her companion's hair.

"Anything else?" she asked.

"Nothing especial. He was looking at you admiringly. I wonder that he stole from you."

A girl can't help being pleased at admiration even from a thief. The young lady instinctively put her hand to her back hair.

Not long after this, when the train was nearing Hampton, Mr. Meriweather thought it better that he should have the young lady's address; he might meet the man who he declared had stolen her pocketbook and if he did it would be essential that he communicate with her. She gave him her name, Alice Deane, and her address. When Hampton was reached Mr. Meriweather handed Miss Deane off the train, and they parted. The next day the former received from the latter the amount he had expended for her ticket.

Within a week Mr. Meriweather wrote Miss Deane that he had seen the man who sat beside her in the station, had shadowed him and learned where he lived. Should he have the fellow arrested? Miss Deane replied that if Mr. Meriweather could induce the thief to return a sample of ribbon there was in the pocketbook he was welcome to the rest of the contents. The next day Mr. Meriweather rang the doorbell of Miss Deane's home and sent up his card. She came down to receive him becomingly dressed, and as she entered the room he held out the missing sample. She received it with some surprise.

"So the man who stole my portemonnaie," she said, "was he who sat beside me in the station?"

"He was."

"And he was quite willing, I suppose, to give up the sample on condition that he might keep the other things."

"Yes."

"That was very nice of him."

"Was there anything else in the portemonnaie that you especially desire?"

"No; there were only the money, a few addresses and the samples. The addresses I know, and the other samples I don't care for."

"The fellow seems quite willing to return everything except the money. He seems to have admired you."

"And yet he stole my portemonnaie!"

"You are wrong in permitting him to go free; you are encouraging vice."

"Do you really think so?"

"I do, indeed. I consider it my duty, being cognizant of his criminal act, to inform the police of it."

"And would he have to go to jail?"

She raised her eyes to Meriweather's pityingly. He would have liked to take her in his arms and confess that he was chaffing her, but that time had not yet come.

"Yes; he would have to go to jail, and that would surely make a criminal of him for life."

"Don't do it."

"How would it do for him to come to you, confess his crime, restore the other articles and throw himself on your mercy? You could tell him how wicked he had been and picture to him his end if he continued in crime. Then you could forgive him, and he might hereafter live a blameless life."

"I think that would do very nicely. It would be infinitely preferable to sending him to jail."

Mr. Meriweather left after a two hours' visit, promising to propose the plan he had suggested to the thief and ask if he would consent to make restitution and ask forgiveness. Miss Deane would be advised of the result.

A few days later Mr. Meriweather called and handed Miss Deane the money that had been lost with her portemonnaie, saying that the heart of the thief was slowly softening and he thought that if he could be taken under her influence he might yet make a man of himself. There was another two hours' chat, after which Mr. Meriweather departed, intimating that he expected the next time he came to bring the penitent with him.

Nevertheless it required several more calls, each lasting from two to three hours, before the gentleman assured the lady that the criminal was ready to confess his fault and ask forgiveness.

Meanwhile, as may be supposed, other matters than this proposed reformation engaged Mr. Meriweather and Miss Deane. In fact, one evening after a visit that was prolonged till midnight Miss Deane consented that Mr. Meriweather should go to her father to ask for her hand. The suitor, being an estimable gentleman and a good catch, received the required consent, and the couple became duly engaged.

A short time after the betrothal Mr. Meriweather announced to his fiancee that the next evening the penitent thief would call upon her to restore the remainder of the stolen property, listen to a lecture on his dishonesty and receive her forgiveness. When the appointed time came round there was a ring at the doorbell, and a man in an ulster, wearing a heavy beard and glasses, was admitted to the Deane residence. Miss Deane came down, and the stranger in a broken voice said:

"Pardon me for a miserable sinner."

He bowed his head and waited.

"I have been told that this is your first criminal act," said the girl, "and I sincerely hope that it will prove your last. You may have a sweetheart, and think how glad you will make her by your reformation. You are forgiven."

The man threw off his ulster, tore away his beard and his glasses, and her lover stood before her.

"The confession," he said, "comes after your forgiveness. You left your portemonnaie on the seat in the station, and I picked it up. I did so for an excuse to make your acquaintance and prolonged the deception to win you."

Miss Deane stood thunderstruck for a few moments, then turned and was striding indignantly out of the room when the penitent caught her around the waist and held her despite her struggles to be free till she recovered something of her calmness.

"You have forgiven me!" cried her lover. "You can't go back on it."

But she did go back on it, and it was two long days before she repeated the forgiveness spoken to the supposed thief. She does not even now, ten years after the episode, refer to it pleasantly.

CHARLEY GATES DIES SUDDENLY

Stricken With Heart Failure After Long Hunting Trip

WAS THE CHAMPION SPENDER

Gates and His Party Were at Depot Near Cody, Wyo., When He Was Seized With Convulsion—Was Welcome Visitor on Broadway and Gave Thousands In Tips

Cody, Wyo., Oct. 29.—Charles G. Gates, the multi-millionaire, known as "Spend a Million Gates," son of "Bet a Million" John W. Gates, died suddenly in the Burlington depot, a mile from this place.

Death was caused by heart failure.

Gates and his hunting party had gone to the depot to take a train for New York after thirty days spent in the big game country. Other members of the party are Morror G. Irving, Dr. Mothersell, Dr. Williamson and a Mr. Heisler.

The hunt on which Gates and his party went ended eight days ago, since which time they have been at a rustic lodge on the road to Yellowstone park, or in town. At noon the party with servants and baggage were taken across the Shoshone river to the terminus of the Burlington, about a mile from Cody.

Gates was not feeling well and complained frequently. Suddenly he was gripped by a convulsion. The physicians of the party resorted to heroic measures to relieve him, but he died within a few minutes.

The body was brought back to town and here was prepared for shipment east.

Charles G. Gates was a man who knew how to make money and who believed in spending it. Long before John W. Gates, his father, died and left him $20,000,000 the youthful broker was known from one end of the continent to the other for his skilful stock manipulations and for his disbursing proclivities.

Gates was born at Turner Junction, now a part of Chicago, on May 21, 1876. When he was 22 years old he married Miss Mary W. Edgar of St. Louis, despite the opposition of her foster parents. In 1893 he began as a clerk to his father, who was then chairman of the board of the Consolidated Steel and Wire company. Four years later young Gates began his career as a partner in Baldwin, Gurney & Co., who were stock and commission brokers of Chicago. From then on he was always in the financial game, and he played it hard. When this firm was dissolved in 1900 it was reported to have made profits of $2,000,000.

For some months after the dissolution Gates amused himself. Wherever he went he distributed cash with a free hand, and Broadway, New York, always wore a glad smile when the tip went around that "Spend a Million" was out for a good time. It wasn't long, however, before Gates was back at his money making. He was elected to membership in the New York stock exchange March 1, 1901. The firm of Harris, Gates & Co. was formed and Gates began to do big business, sometimes with his father, sometimes alone.

In February, 1911, Gates made a sensational trip from Yuma, Ariz., to New York in a special train. He had been poisoned, it was said, through a bruise on his knee made by his automobile crank. The trip of 3000 miles was made in 74 hours and 19 minutes.

WIFE AND CASH GONE

Norwood Man's Boarder Also Missing and Police Are Called

Norwood, Mass., Oct. 29.—The police have been appealed to by John Pugitore of 349 Pleasant street to assist him in locating his wife and two children and $300, which he claims she took at the time of her departure about a week ago. The money was borrowed by Pugitore to make a payment on the house in which he resides.

About the same time that Mrs. Pugitore left it is alleged that Patsy Galouts, a boarder, also disappeared. Pugitore was informed of the desertion while at work, by a friend, who informed him that a number of articles had been removed from his home and put into an automobile, which speeded away with his wife, children and the boarder.

Boy Drowned In Trench

Woonsocket, R. I., Oct. 29.—Rodolph Varieur, aged 4, son of Antonic Varieur, was drowned in the Clinton mill trench. He fell in while trying to prevent an old baby carriage falling into the water. A pulmotor was used, but without any resulting resuscitation.

Schmidt Absolves Muret

New York, Oct. 29.—Reiterating his confession of the murder of Anna Aumuller, Fr. Hans Schmidt, on the stand, absolved Dr. Ernest Muret, the dentist now on trial for counterfeiting, from all complicity in conducting the counterfeiting plant in an uptown flat.

Militants Again Apply Torch

London, Oct. 29.—The suffragette arson squad again applied the torch, setting fire to an unoccupied and redecorated mansion at Shirley Manor in Bradford. The loss was $250,000

Glynn Enrolls Forrest Because of His Sulzer Charge

Albany, Oct. 29.—In replying to a charge made in New York by Jay W. Forrest of Albany that Governor Glynn was present at a meeting in Delmonico's at which Governor Sulzer's impeachment was decided upon, the governor put Forrest in the Ananias class.

"This statement is absolutely, unqualifiedly and wickedly false," he said. "When Forrest says that I was present at a dinner at Delmonico's at which Sulzer's impeachment was decided upon, he states an absolute falsehood. I never discussed the impeachment of Sulzer at Delmonico's or elsewhere and never attended a dinner or conference anywhere else where it was discussed."

LID AT PORTLAND LIFTED BY DEATH

Carload of Liquor Shipped In on Demise of Sheriff

Portland, Me., Oct. 29.—A carload of whiskey arrived in this city from Portsmouth, N. H., and it is expected that between 50,000 and 60,000 gallons of "red eye" will be shipped here to allay the Maine thirst.

The wholesale liquor dealers took advantage of the death of Sheriff Everett G. Scully, who dropped dead at Scarboro, to smuggle large quantities of liquor into the city. Under the Maine statute all the deputies went out of office automatically when the sheriff died, and so nothing was done to stop the shipment of the liquor.

Immediately after Sheriff Scully's death the wholesalers had the wires between Portland and Portsmouth and Boston hot with messages. The first shipment of one carload arrived and was quickly called for. The whiskey was "planted" in various places about the city.

It is expected the governor will appoint a successor to Sheriff Scully late this week. In the mean time, it is figured, a whole trainload of whiskey will have arrived here.

BAPTIST CONVENTION

Various Associations of Church Hold Conference at Brockton

Brockton, Mass., Oct. 29.—The meeting of the various Baptist state associations opened in the First Baptist church with the eighty-fourth conference of the Massachusetts Baptist Ministers' association as the first sectional meeting. The address of welcome was delivered by Rev. A. C. Archibald, and R. L. Webb, state president, responded in behalf of the delegates.

The principal address was by Rev. B. D. Hahn, D. D., of Springfield, on "The Coming American."

In the afternoon the ninety-second annual convention of the Baptist Charitable societies was held. Routine business was transacted, followed by the selection of officers; also the woman's missionary branch met and listened to addresses by Miss Anna L. Prince of Burmah, India, and Miss Grace Daland of New York.

TO DISARM MOROS

Result of Desertion of Several From Company of Constabulary

Manila, Oct. 29.—A number of Jolo Moros have deserted from the De Witt company of Moro constabulary, taking guns and ammunition. They engaged in a raid in which a Chinaman is reported to have been killed.

—A well-equipped hospital in an ordinary box car, the first of its kind to be operated by a railroad, was put in commission at Chicago near the scene of track elevation work by the Chicago Rock Island and Pacific railroad. It will be in charge of a surgeon who not only will give first aid to the injured, but will lecture to employees, instructing them how to aid themselves and warn them against carelessness, "Safety first," is the motto which the New York Central railroad is endeavoring to impress upon the minds of its employees by painting it upon every tool house and machine shop along its lines. It is a idea that is worth passing along.—Milford Gazette.

United States Delegation to Conference Agrees on Program

Washington, Oct. 29.—The United States delegates to the international conference on safety at sea have agreed upon a program of measures to press upon that meeting, which will convene at London, Nov. 12. Probably fifteen countries or more will participate in the conference.

A readjustment of steamship lanes, changing the northern route at certain seasons, adequate protection against fire, a requirement that every ocean craft shall carry sufficient life boats and rafts to accommodate all passengers and crew, adequate wireless telegraphy equipment and manning, international patrol of the iceberg fields in the path of ocean travel and the adoption of complete rules of the road at sea will also be urged.

PROGRESSIVES DESERT PIPER

Reported to Have Endorsed the Democratic Candidate

A big political sensation was caused by the action of the City Committee of the Progressive Party on Tuesday evening, when they repudiated the nomination of Walter E. Piper, and unanimously endorsed Michael T. Sullivan, the Democratic candidate. The resolution was introduced by James P. Roberts, who was the Progressive candidate in the district last year.

It would be interesting to know who constitute the Progressive City Committee, and who was present at the meeting.

Last year in a triangular fight Walter E. Piper, the Republican candidate for re-election was defeated by the following vote:

Michael T. Sullivan, D.,	1107
Walter E. Piper, R.,	1052
James P. Roberts, P.,	495
Caleb F. Howard, S.,	2
Blanks	202

This year, regardless of the action of the Progressive Committee Tuesday night, the only names that will be printed upon the ballots will be:

Walter E. Piper of Quincy, Progressive Party. Republican.

Michael T. Sullivan, Citizens. Democratic.

It is too late to make any change, and the issue between the two is clearly drawn.

SCHOOL TEAMS AT SOCCER

Lincoln Wins One, and the Other Was a Tie

Tuesday afternoon, for the second time this week the soccer games of the grammar school teams were uninterrupted. Lincoln and Massachusetts Fields played a tie game, 1 to 1 and Hancock beat Wollaston 1 to 0.

In the tie game Lincoln secured their goal in the early part of the first period, and in the last minutes of the play of that period Massachusetts Fields shot a goal. The remainder of the game was interesting both being unsuccessful in their efforts to dissolve the tie.

Hancock shot the ball between the goal posts in one of the most exciting moments that the gallery has had this season. Spectators and players were well bunched when the ball went before the line and it was sent over.

The second annual dance of the St. Kevin court M. C. O. F. will be held in Alpha hall, Nov. 6 and a large committee is working for a greater success than that of last year. The guests of the evening will be Rev. Fr. J. P. Cuffe and Rev. J. F. McNiff of the Sacred Heart church and several of the state officers. The general committee includes John H. Hayes, Joseph H. Sullivan, Peter H. Flynn, James J. Duggan and Ted Keohane.

STATE FEDERATION MEETING.

The autumn meeting of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's clubs is to be held Monday Nov. 17, in Whitman with the Whitman Woman's club as hostess. Only three times in the history of the state has it been entertained in this vicinity, twice in Brockton and once in Bridgewater. The Whitman Woman's club with its 500 members, is looking forward to the coming meeting as an opportunity to show the representatives of the 60,000 club women of the state, its fine quarters. No club could be more conveniently situated than the Whitman Woman's club in the Town hall, which it rents for its meetings and which seats more than 1000 people. Delegates will attend from all parts of the state.

The subject of the day will be Home Economics. At the morning session there will be two interesting addresses. Mrs. Ruth Butts Carson will speak on "Fashion and Its Relation to Art in Dressing," and Mrs. Wellman, of the Woman's Educational and Industrial union of Boston, will speak on "Interior Decoration." In the afternoon Scott Nearing will speak on "Financing a Wage earner's Home."

THE ENDOWMENT FUND.

No greater opportunity for service during the coming winter will come before the clubwomen of Massachusetts than the completion of their share of the endowment fund of the General Federation. It is of the most vital interest to the Massachusetts Federation that this be paid before the biennial in the spring, and every effort toward this end is being made, but the hearty co-operation of every club is necessary to make this possible. Up to date $6598.40 has been paid, leaving a little more than three thousand dollars still to be raised. More than 170 clubs have contributed toward the fund, six have promised to complete their share, and the following nineteen have already paid the full amount asked for, i e., fifty cents per capita: Arlington Woman's club, Auburndale Review club, Cantabrigia club, Cambridge; Cosmopolitan club, Springfield; Current Events club, Springfield; Fitchburg Woman's club, Framingham Home Travel club, Junior Charity club, Boston; Jamaica Plain Tuesday club, Milton Woman's club, New England Woman's club, Boston; Newton Social Science club, Nineteenth Century club, Northampton; Roxburghe club, Roxbury; Shirley Altrurian club, Wednesday Morning club, Boston; Winthrop Popular Authors club, Worcester Woman's club. Eleven states have paid their full quota: Dakota, Utah, Texas, Virginia, Florida, Missouri, Nevada, Delaware, Louisiana Colorado and Ohio.

The State Federation is in sympathy with the policies of the General Federation, and hopes that Massachusetts may be the next to show its loyalty by being able to announce that $10,000, its full allottment, has been pledged.

KNOWS HOW TO SHOOT

Fred H. French Gets Prize at Lancers Shoot

Fred H. French celebrated his 42d year as a member of the Boston Lancers by attending its 48th annual shoot Tuesday on the range at the estate of Capt. Stevens at Melrose, and what is better still Fred showed his comrades that his aim was just as true as ever, as he carried off one of the prizes, getting two threes and three fours. It has been some time since Fred handled a rifle, but his work Tuesday showed he knew how to shoot

It was just before the great Boston fire in 1872 that Fred became a member of the Lancers, the proudest mounted cavalry company in the state, whose gaudy red uniforms are always so much admired, and his first active duty was at this same fire where he did patrol duty for ten days about the ruins.

It was during those years that the annual regimental encampments of the state were held in North Weymouth just across the Fore River bridge, and some of Quincy's older residents can vividly recall the lively times that took place in and about Quincy during those encampments.

WARD FOUR REPUBLICANS

Dedicate the New Garage of Candidate Sandberg

A very largely attended meeting of the Ward Four Republican committee was held Tuesday evening in the new garage of Councilman Sandberg on Buckley street.

Chairman William H. Teasdale presided and brief addresses were made by Mr. Sandberg who is a candidate for Representative from the Sixth district. Mr. Sandberg said that he had served for two years in the legislature and desired to be elected for his third term as it was customary to give representatives three terms. He gave an account of his stewardship during the two years in the legislature.

Charles H. Johnson, the Republican candidate for Mayor, also spoke, but confined himself wholly to state politics not even touching on municipal affairs. He said that he was originally a Col. Benton man, but that he should support the regular nominee, Congressman A. P. Gardner and bespoke for him a large vote in Quincy and his election.

Dr. Everett M. Bowker, candidate for County Commissioner, also spoke briefly, as did also Louis F. R. Langelier candidate for Senator from the Quincy district. In addition to these speakers there were remarks from a number of those present.

Many of the old Republican war horses of the ward who in recent years have not taken an active part in political affairs were present, and there seemed to have been an awakening among the Republicans of the ward, and it was predicted that the party would cast one of its old time votes at the coming election.

ROCK ISLAND PREDICAMENT

Is Surrounded by Water at High Course Tides

Mrs. Ernest Baker of Rockland street, Rock Island, while returning home at high tide Tuesday morning, attempted to navigate the straight and narrow path across the marsh near her home which was flooded with water and hidden from sight. It is a raised path with ditches on each side and Mrs. Baker got off the path and fell into the water. Mrs. James Young saw her predicament and with difficulty reached her and took her home, and cared for her.

Mrs. Baker, according to stories has acted the role of rescuer several times under similar conditions.

Tuesday the height of the tide was 11 feet and the waters overflow in the vicinity. Thursday the tide will be 11ft. 4in. and before it ebbs others may have to rely on the assistance of Mrs. Young.

Mrs. Baker besides receiving a thorough drenching received a bad fright. This morning she shows but slight effects from her experience. But she does think the city should build a street, and will attend the meeting of the City Council next Monday evening. She says Rock Island children returning from school often have to sit down and wait for the tide to ebb.

A tour of inspection through the magnificent new Boston Y. M. C. A. building has been arranged for the Juniors of the Quincy association to take place Friday of this week. The group will meet in the Y. M. C. A. at 9 o'clock and leave Quincy on the 9.18 train.

Opportunity will be given the boys to try out the bowling alleys and game room, and to see all there is to be seen. By special arrangements, a swim in the big new pool will be granted to the boys. Mr. Corsan, swimming instructor of the International Committee, will be present to teach the boys some new strokes.

In the afternoon, the bunch will have a chance to see the Huntington school play football. The Prout boys of Quincy are members of this team.

The return will be made by 5.30 so that the boys will have a chance to get ready for Hallowe'en frolics.

WELCOME HOME.

Probation Officer Francis J. Fahey was among the 200 leading citizens of the state who gathered at the Somerset, Boston, Tuesday night, to welcome home Edwin Mulready, Deputy Probation Commissioner, and Mrs. Mulready who have just returned from Milan, Italy, where Mr. Mulready was sent as a representative of the United States to the International Congress on Alcoholism. All classes were represented in the gathering, including eminent clergyment, judges of the supreme, Superior and municipal courts, lawyers, physicians and social workers. Alfred W. Donovan of Rockland presided and addresses were made by many prominent officials.

WORK OF Y. M. C. A. NOW IN FULL SWING

Several Recommendations for Boys Department Adopted by Directors

Saturday Evening Basket Ball to be a Feature

President Sidelinger presided at the first meeting of the Board of Directors held since his election as president of the Y. M. C. A. There was an unusually large attendance. Supper was served by a committee of the Woman's Auxiliary under the direction of Mrs. A. H. Gilson.

The reports presented contained the following facts:

BOYS DEPARTMENT.

Since the last report of the Boys Work Department Committee a number of months have elapsed during which the activities of the Association have been continued as much as is possible. During the summer and early fall the outdoor life keeps most of the boys away from the building except for swimming. The Employed Boys group have used the gymnasium and boys rooms steadily all summer, and inasmuch as that is the class we most desire to reach their interest is encouraging.

The fall work is just getting into full swing and by the middle of next month all the activities of the Boys Department will have been started. The Saturday morning meetings start this week with Rev. G. M. Bailey of the Wollaston M. E. church as speaker. Other speakers of the month are Rev. B. A. Willmott, Rev. A. L. Hudson and D. H. Goodspeed. The Bible classes are to start by the middle of November. One teacher, S. C. Melville a member of the Boys Work Committee, has already been secured, and two others whom we are trying for we expect to get. The course to be used is entitled "Men of the Bible."

The recommendations of this committee which were adopted at the committee meeting on Monday evening are these:

(1) That a cadet membership be established for the boys from 10 to 12 years of age, these boys to meet once a week for gymnasium work and baths and to have especial activities arranged for them by the Boys' Work director. The charge recommended is $3.00 a year including locker.

(2) That a membership campaign be held in the latter part of November As a special inducement to prospective members the last month in this year will be given them in addition to the whole of next year. In order to get the best results and to have something definite to work on, the boys will be asked to get a boys census of the city.

(3) That the idea of co-operation with the Sunday schools be continued by means of the Sunday school athletic leagues and the Sunday school Boys Association. The basket-ball league will be continued in a slightly changed form and if favorable to the Sunday schools a bowling league will be organized.

(4) That the Father and Son banquet be held again this year as well as a Mothers' reception by the boys and the State Boys day. A year ago the boys collected over $100 on State Boys Day and since it was in small amounts it is no way interfered with the boys financial canvass.

PHYSICAL DEPARTMENT.

The activities in the various classes of the Physical department opened this year with great enthusiasm and good attendance. With the one exception of the High school and Student class the attendance has been the best since 1910. Owing to the fact that the Quincy High school has an unusually good foot-ball team this year the students have been attending the practice and the games, and our attendance has suffered as a result.

On Monday night of this week the Employed Boys had 38 on the floor, the largest attendance in the history of the class. Attractive athletics and basket-ball schedules have been arranged for all the classes and it is planned to have some extra feature in the "Gym" on every Saturday night.

Last year the attendance at our basket ball games was good, but with the possibility of our First and Second teams both winning the championship in their respective leagues the attendance at the games this season ought to be much larger.

A number of the members of the Physical Department Committee have signified their intention of conducting a systematic advertising campaign in the interest of our Saturday night games and good results may be expected.

RELIGIOUS WORK.

The Young Men's Christian Association really lives in proportion to the amount of real prayer that is offered on its behalf by those active in its management. The Religious Work committee has arranged to observe the Week of Prayer in common with the Associations of the world, November 9-15.

Meetings will be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, November 10, 11 and 12. The meetings on Monday and Wednesday evenings at 7.30, and Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock, for one half hour. These meetings are for power not just for holding meetings.

On Friday evening the 31st, the Brockton Association holds a Religious Work conference. Supper will be served. A more comprehensive plan for the shop meetings is contemplated.

HOUSE COMMITTEE.

The plan of the House committee to put up a fire escape from the top floor window to the roof of the gymnasium has been approved by the State Inspector. Work of taking down the "Safe" on that floor is progressing.

The walls of the toilet from the office floor up through have been painted and varnished. They look much better, are more sanitary and can be kept cleaner.

The Women's Auxiliary has redecorated the reading-room. The result is very pleasing and satisfactory.

The 43d convention of Y. M. C. A. of Massachusetts and Rhode Island will be held at Ford hall Boston, November 11, at 2.30 and evening. Dinner at 5.30.

DEMOCRATS IN FOUR WARDS

Rallies Addressed by the Various Candidates

It was nearly midnight Wednesday when the Democratic City committee announced to their audiences in four sections of the city that their list of speakers had been exhausted. An open air rally was held in City Square, Brasees hall in Wollaston, Poland hall in Atlantic and Hibernian hall in West Quincy were scenes of enthusiastic gatherings. Some confusion in the arrangements of speakers required several long waits but the interest of the audience never lagged until adjournment.

The speakers were Hon. Edward P. Barry, candidate for Lieutenant Governor, Congressman Edward Gilmore, William J. Good, Esq., candidate for district attorney; Ex-Congressman Michael J. McEttrick; David W. Murray, candidate for senator; Hon. Richard Olney, 2nd, Representative Jeremiah O'Leary of Sharon, candidate for county commissioner, J. Raphael McCoole, candidate for registrar of probate and insolvency, Michael T. Sullivan and Cornelius M. Duggan, candidates for the house of Representatives. The speeches were practically the same at all halls. Messers. McCoole and McEttrick did not speak in City Square.

At the open air rally, Candidate Barry suffering from the effects of strenuous campaigning, was brief. He talked Democracy from the bottom of the ticket up, stated he believed McDevitt was right, but should have taken the advice of friends and not pressed a charge he could not prove. He said he would rather suffer defeat than see a Democratic Governor with a Republican house and senate.

Congressman Gilmore said the reason the Republicans do not want to talk national issues is because the Democrats have placed more progressive legislation on the books in their short term than the Republicans did in 16 years and the work has only commenced. He talked national issues and the attitude of the Wilson administration. He asked the voters to support it by voting Democracy all over Massachusetts.

William Good accused District Attorney Barker with neglect and in support of his charge cited the case of Harry Martin, charged with larceny from person in Quincy, released under bail. He left the state and was later convicted in Philadelphia where he is now doing time, and still, said Mr. Good, Mr. Barker has not forced two professional bondsmen to turn over the bail which should be forfeited and that is seven years ago. The police of your city who made the arrest can tell you all about the case.

Local national and state issues came in for their share of attention and Representative Sullivan said that his opponent Mr. Piper, while running on the ballot as a Progressive has the name but not the substance of that support.

David W. Murray closed the rally in City Square, when, after a lengthy speech, he said that the interest of his district would be guarded and that corporations could not count on his being one of 20 Senators used to block legislation inimical to their interests.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

Israel Shangold, a Water street junk collector, was quite seriously injured Wednesday afternoon when the team which he was driving was struck by an automobile at the corner of Washington and Union streets. The auto was owned by Mrs. Mary Litchfield of Scituate. Shangold's wagon was struck with such force that he was thrown off. The injured man was taken to the office of Dr. S. C. Hardwick in her automobile where it was found that he had suffered a general shaking up and numerous bruises. After receiving medical treatment he was taken to his home.

Auto Trucks and Pleasure Cars repaired. Broken Springs repaired. Parts made to order. Machine shop connected. Storage.

BETWEEN FOSS AND WALSH

Declare Speakers at Foss Rally in Electa Hall

A rally in the interest of the candidacy of Gov. Foss was held Wednesday evening in Electa hall, although the affair was not graced by His Excellency. Ex-Representative Sydney B. Allen of Wollaston, and formerly of Brockton, presided, and in opening the meeting spoke at lenght on the record of Gov. Foss. He told of the large number of offices to be filled by the Governor and of the excellent men he had selected for the positions. He was a man of opinions and not the creation of party managers. His platform is distinctly his own, while the platforms of his opponents advocate things he had already accomplished. David I. Walsh, he declared, would if elected be the tool of Mayor Fitzgerald and Martin Lomasney.

Andrew A. Highlands said that neither Gardner or Bird stood a chance of election and they knew it. The speaker said that he could not find that Walsh stood for anything. To vote for either Gardner or Bird is to throw your vote away. Foss is a man who would conduct the affairs of the state as you and I want them conducted. He then reviewed at length the attitude of Foss on prison reform, and said that he would not be in this fight if he did not see how things were going. A vote for Gardner or Bird was a vote for Walsh and the fight in this campaign is solely between Foss and Walsh.

Hon. Louis Swig said that for the first time citizens have an opportunity to vote for a man not tied down by any party interests. The attitude of Gardner on the immigration question was un-American. We have need of every good man in this commonwealth, and we should not ask his religion or his country. Walsh can not be depended upon to live up to the promises. Bird belonged to a party who had got a little restless and wanted a change, but they had not offered you anything. He asked his hearers to judge Gov. Foss by his deeds. He then spoke at length on the three years record of Foss as governor. He stands for the people. The speaker also briefly mentioned some of the important measures passed during his term of office which were of great benefit to the people. Bird stands for nothing.

Samuel L. Bailen said he was a dyed-in-the wool Republican, and for the first time was not going to vote the straight ticket. Principles are eternal, he said, but indivduals die and pass away. This year he said the Republicans have no candidate, for Gardner has repudiated the platform and his attitude on the immigration question is un-American. Foss was the only man that could be trusted, and the only man capable of judiciously dealing with the railroad situation. He also declared that Walsh would be the tool of Fitzgerald and Lomasney.

MRS. EATON NOT GUILTY

Acquitted by Jury at Plymouth for Murder of Her Husband

The jury in the celebrated case of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, who has been on trial at Plymouth charged with the murder of her husband(Rear Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, returned a verdict of "not guilty" at daylight this morning.

The case was given to the jury late Wednesday afternoon and it was an all night vigil before a final verdict was reached. There were rumors of a disagreement but no word came from the jury room until 4.30 this morning when it was announced that a verdict had been reached.

Judge Akin came from his hotel to the court room at 5.07 and a few minutes later the jury filed in. Mrs. Eaton and her counsel were soon escorted to the court room. When the foreman announced the verdict, "not guilty," Mrs. Eaton sank limply in her chair for a minute, then leaned forward to receive congratulations of her counsel.

Through the long night Mrs. Eaton sat in an anti-room with her counsel, Attorneys Morse and Geogan, while in the court room were crowds of women who anxiously waited through the long night for the verdict.

Mrs. W. F. Cummings of Atlantic, who has been prominent in local Y. M. C. A. circles, was elected vice president at the 25th annual conference of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. which convened at Westfield on Wednesday.

The vote at the Mexican election was light, as real contests of much more importance were taking place at the bull-fights.

A New York educator says teachers would be more cheerful if they would dane the tango. But will the men dance any girl who has education enough to be a teacher?

The girls have all kinds of stunts Hallowe'en to determine their future husbands. Probably one reason why these are so popular is that the forecasts are never correct.

While eggs are terribly high, few people undertake to raise hens in their back yards, as the neighbors would think they were having to economize.

How can the public be expected to take an interest in the fall elections, when the leading football games have not yet been played?

When Felix Diaz goes to dine with Huerta, no doubt he will be polite enough to let the host taste the dishes first.

RUNNING FOR OFFICE.

Whever elections are being held this fall, there is more complaint than ever of the heavy burden placed on candidates. In the times when corporations were permitted to contribute freely to party treasuries, funds were more abundant. A candidate who was open to influence from the right quarters would find funds appearing as mysteriously as the ravens brought food to the prophet of old.

Public sentiment and election laws have partly dried up this source of support. Today, unless a man has subterranean connections with parties seeking favors, he must largely draw on his own resources.

One of the greatest abuses in politics is the custom of hiring paid workers. A gang of Hessians around every polling place claim to sway the support of doubtful voters. They demand payment for rendering this assistance, which is practically the purchase of their influence. The man who is poor but honest and square stands but a bad chance at the polls until this abuse shall be stopped.

THE 25 CENT MEAL.

The news was telegraphed from New York that Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst had luncheon at Mrs. Belmont's restaurant, where each guest serves herself, and where an elaborate course dinner can be had for 25 cents. Just why so much publicity should be given this incident does not appear. Perhaps it is because in these days of high prices, it is of striking news interest that any one has secured a square meal for 25 cents.

Restaurant prices depend more on style than food. Travellers find that at the ordinary eating house having immaculate linen, shiny silver, flower decorated tables, it takes forethought and arithmetic to get a meal for 50 cents. Then the waiter looks haughty unless he has a quarter.

Meanwhile in most cities there are many resorts where you buy a good meal for a quarter, subject to certain limitations. The table may have a marble top. With a swish of her towel the waitress removes the debris of previous diners. It doesn't pay to think too deeply upon the previous history of that towel.

The "china" is armor clad, built for the battering of washers and slaming of waitresses. Your order will be shouted out by large lunged waitresses. But it will be delivered with a celerity unknown in the eating palace.

The cooking of the cheap restaurant is often good, and one wishes the proprietors could learn a few primitive and inexpensive ideas of comfort. Probably Mrs. Belmont's restaurant, where Mrs. Pankhurst acquired her 25 cent meal, would show that neatness and taste may not be costly. One difficulty in the low priced place is that people demand additional style when travelling. At home they may "reach" for their own food. It would be socially lowering to walk up to a counter and take a trayful to a table.

LAVERS HAS RESIGNED

Norwood Police Head Springs Surprise on Board of Selectmen

Norwood, Mass., Oct. 30.—Chief of Police James F. Lavers furnished a surprise last night by sending his resignation to the board of selectmen, which had been investigating charges against him. The selectmen had announced that they would make public their findings last night, but did not do so.

At a meeting of the selectmen Chief Lavers' resignation was accepted and the charges were withdrawn. It was stated that a thorough reorganization of the police department will be made.

PORTLAND POLICE IN LIQUOR RAIDS

Enforce Prohibition Until New Sheriff Is Appointed

Portland, Me., Oct. 30.—Mayor Oakley C. Curtis has directed the Portland police to enforce the liquor law pending the appointment of a new sheriff for Cumberland county. Sheriff E. G. Scully dropped dead in a liquor raid and immediately the liquar interests began to flood the city with intoxicants.

Mayor Curtis directed the police to raid the Hollywood bar on Preble street. This was done. Judge Merrill gave a two months' jail sentence to Martin Conley, arrested in connection with the raid.

This is the first jail sentence imposed in a liquor case by the lower curts for nine months, and it threw a wholesome scare into the liquor men.

County Attorney Samuel L. Bates said: "It is my intention to use all the powers of my office to see that the law is enforced till the new sheriff takes office. I shall move for jail sentences in every case." Conley has appealed, and is held in $200 bond.

CRUELTY CHARGES DENIED

Nurse at Worcester Hospital Has No Knowledge of "Sheeting."

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 30.—A general denial of all charges of cruelty was made by nurses at the Worcester state hospital when the hearing before the state board of insanity was resumed.

The superintendent of nurses and one nurse were called, both of whom denied any knowledge of the so-called "sheeting" method. The nurse, Jessie Johnson, admitted having seen patients slapped in the face, but denied there was any necessity of even such violence. She admitted, however, that she had never served in what was called a violent ward.

When the hearing opened the chairman of the board announced that the hospital would be given opportunity to reply to the charges already made and that the additional charges and evidences of cruelty preferred by Dr. Galvin would have to wait until the conclusion of the hospital's side of the case.

Schoolboy Killed by Automobile

Hope Valley, R. I., Oct. 30.—On his way home from school, Charles Jeffreys, 6 years old, ran in front of a heavy touring car and was almost instantly killed, George B. Chadwick, of Providence, the owner of the automobile, and Renny Hargreaves, his chauffeur, were both detained by Deputy Sheriff George H. Barber, pending an investigation.

CHANGES ARE MADE

Amendments Alter Complexion of Federal Reserve Board

Washington, Oct. 30.—important changes in the administration currency bill resulted from the first day's executive work on the measure by the senate committee.

The committee passed over for later action the proposition to substitute a central, government-controled bank for the regional bank plan in the bill, on which the members were evenly details of the measure.

The complexion of the proposed federal reserve board as materially altered by amendments adopted today, and it probably will be further changed. It was decided to increase the membership of the board from seven, as fixed in the house bill, to nine and to eliminate the secretary of agriculture and the comptroller of the currency from service on the board. Another amendment is pending to take off the board the secretary of the treasury and to remove all ex-officio members.

DYING NEAR TRACKS

Man Taken to Salem Hospital Expires Without Being Identified

Salem, Mass., Oct. 30.—An unidentified man, found in an unconscious condition near the tracks of the Boston and Maine railroad, near Ipswich, died at the Salem hospital, and effort is being made by the authorities to locate some relative.

At first it was believed the man had been struck by a train. At the hospital no bruises to speak of were found, but one entire side was paralyzed. In a pocket of his coat was a certificate which had been issued by Dr. J. H. Ash, of 239 Copeland street, West Quincy, stating that Frederick Wiggin, or Duggin, was unable to work because of bronchial asthma.

VIOLATION OF LIQUOR LAWS

William Smith Fined and Sentenced to One Month

It was last Wednesday afternoon before the cases against William Smith were disposed of in the district court. Smith is the man who jumped his bail some months ago much to the discomforture of his friends who had deposited a cash bail of over $100 that he might be at liberty until the cases were finally disposed of. A statewide search was made for him and it was not until Sunday night that he was located in Roxbury and arrested. Wednesday the defaults against him were removed and the cases tried. These were for assault, drunkenness, keeping and exposing liquor for sale and keeping a house of ill fame. After a hearing that continued until late in the afternoon he was fined $100 and sentenced to one month in jail for violation of the liquor law and fined $15 for drunkenness. The other cases were placed on file.

DISTRICT COURT.

Edward Wilhelm was fined $10 for selling apples other than by weight at Quincy.

William Smith was arraigned on complaints Wednesday afternoon, charging him with violation of the liquor law, assault, drunkeness and keeping a house of ill fame at Quincy. He was fined $100 and sentenced to one month in the house of correction for violation of the liquor law and fined $15 for drunkenness. The other complaints were placed on file.

James Harvey was fined $10 for assault at Weymouth.

Andrew Heikkanen, August Laakkanen and William Lester were fined $10 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

Edward R. Hall and Roy G. MacPherson were fined $3 costs each for gunning on the park reservation at Quincy.

Eger Provednicoff was fined $20 for assault at Quincy.

Michael W. Coyle was fined $15 for drunkenness at Weymouth.

MUST SELL BY WEIGHT.

Sealer of Weights and Measures Cantfill brought Edward Wilhelm into court Wednesday afternoon on two complaints. Wilhelm is a peddler and Sealer Cantfill charged him with selling apples other than by weight, and with giving short weight, he having found that a bushel of apples that Wilhelm sold was twelve pounds short. The court fined him $10 for selling other than by weight. The complaint for giving short weight was dismissed as the court stated the man did not use a weight and therefore he could not give short weight.

Cookery Points

Way to Cook Steak.

The men of the family are sure to declare in favor of beefsteak when asked what they would like for dinner. This popularity never seems to wane, and the average man if served with steak and potatoes will leave the table carrying with him the impression of a good dinner. The choice cuts of steak are often expensive, so the clever cook has discovered a way of cooking ordinary cuts that makes them the equal or even the superior of the expensive meats. A dinner menu with steak is:

Cream of Pea Soup.
Swiss Steak With Tomato Sauce.
Hashed Browned Potatoes.
Cucumber Salad.
Apple Pie. Coffee.

Any favorite soup may be used for the first course if cream of pea is not desired.

Take an ordinary round steak cut at least an inch thick. Place it on a board and sprinkle it well with flour. Pound this flour into the steak with the edge of a plate or a regular meat pounder and when all the flour is absorbed turn the steak and treat the other side in the same fashion. Then turn to the first side again, alternating until it will take no more flour. Singe quickly on each side in an iron frying pan with hot butter. Take from the fire and pour over the meat enough water to half fill the pan. Slice two tomatoes and an onion, if desired, into the pan, cover and allow to simmer very gently for three hours, replenishing the water from time to time. Season an hour before taking from the fire. When tender there will be a rich brown gravy flavored with tomato. Serve on platter with the gravy poured over the steak.

Cooking Bananas.

In Hawaii the banana is a favorite article of food, not only as a delicacy, but as an actual food commodity. The natives of the island have dozens of disguises for the fruit, and visitors agree that the American knows little of the possibilities of the long golden tube with its fragrant fruit filling. It is fried, baked and stewed in Hawaii, but there is a way in which it appears at dessert which is worthy of imitation by the American.

For banana pudding slice six bananas, ripe ones preferred, and stew them with very little water. Beat to a pulp when done, add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and turn them into a baking dish. Rub a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour, smooth and mix with a half pint of cocoanut milk. Place on the stove and stir until boiling. Remove from the stove and when cool add the yolks of three eggs Beat the whites of the eggs to a froth, stir in the custard slowly, add four tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a quarter of a grated nutmeg. Pour over the bananas and bake in a moderate oven for a half hour.

Maple Fondant.

A delicious maple fondant is made as follows: Boil together three cupfuls of maple sirup, two of cane sugar and half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar until it forms a thread an inch long when dripped from a spoon. Pour it into a buttered pan and let it stand for twenty minutes. Then beat it with a fork until it thickens. Turn the mass out upon a large buttered platter and form it into balls or cut it into squares when it has cooled. If not too stiff it can be treated like an ordinary fondant, but it is delicious however it is treated. Balls of the fondant may be dipped in melted chocolate or rolled in fresh grated coconnut. A ball of it pressed between two walnut halves makes a delicious bonbon.

Salt Mackerel For Sunday.

Salt mackerel is less popular than it should be, because most people have not cooked it the way to bring out its best points. There is a way to make it the best Sunday breakfast dish in the world: Select a good, firm mackerel. Soak it over night in icy cold water, flesh side down. In the morning melt in the frying pan a heaping tablespoonful of butter. Put in the mackerel, fry one side, turn carefully, keeping the flesh whole. Lift out on to a hot dish and pour in the pan a pint of thick sour cream. Let it boil up well, stirring it thoroughly, and pour it over fish. The salt of the fish takes out all the sour of the cream and makes a delicious gravy. Serve with hot buttered toast.

Coffee Custard.

Put one-half cupful of good ground coffee in a little muslin bag and drop into four cups of cold milk. Let stand twenty minutes, then pour into the double boiler and leave until it reaches the boiling point. Cook five minutes, then remove the bag and pour the hot milk over four beaten eggs, and four heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar. Pour into a custard bowl and set in a pan of hot water in the oven, or, if preferred, turn back into the double boiler and cook until thickened. Strain and set aside to cool.

Halibut and Potato Cakes.

Break left over halibut into flakes, mix these flakes with mashed potatoes. Add a small piece of butter and a seasoning of salt and pepper. Form the mixture into cakes and fry in hot drippings.

FIRST MINISTER TO BERLIN

Why John Adams Appointed John Quincy Adams

The letters of John Quincy Adams of Quincy are a valuable record of America's past, says the Christian Science Monitor. He was a representative of the United States in Europe when his father was made President of the United States in 1797. The letters written to his father under these circumstances seem quaint today, with their grave beginning, "My Dear Sir," He addresses his mother, however, in almost as formal a way, as "Honoured Mamma." Later he calls her "My dear Madam" and at last "My dear Mother." This is the famous Abigail Adams of whose patriotism and heroism during the revolutionary days American womanhood may well be proud.

John Adams was President for but the single term and his son writes to him from abroad to remind him that he had always prepared himself for the proverbial ingratitude of republics. He must bear with equanimity the want of appreciation of his high services. Yet the father is to look for comfort to the fact that by the wisdom and firmness of his administration he leaves the country in safe and honorable peace which was involved in dangers and complex disputes when he went to the White House.

Washington had chosen John Quincy Adams as American minister to The Hague. When the father was made President we find him hesitating over promoting his son to Berlin. Washington wrote to Adams expressing "a strong hope" that Adams would not "withhold merited promotion from John Adams," because he was his son. "I give it as my decided opinion that John Adams is the most valuable public character we have abroad and there remains no doubt in my mind that he will prove the ablest of our diplomatic corps." So John Adams sent John Quincy Adams to Berlin, the first minister to Prussia from the United States. It is interesting in this connection to remember that Jefferson disapproved the establishing of the ministry to Berlin. John Quincy Adams himself became President of the United States in 1825, and for a single term.

This afternoon the pupils of the Adams school are going room by room from the old building to the new, and are being assigned their seats and made familiar with the building in readiness for the opening on Monday. The formal dedication will not take place until later, as it is hoped to have Charles Francis Adams as the speaker of the evening and he is at present in Europe.

All the schools of the city, with the exception of the Industrial school, will be closed tomorrow for the sixty-seventh annual convention of the Norfolk County Teachers Association, to be held in Jordan hall, Boston. The change of meeting place from Ford hall to Jordon hall has been necessitated by the steady increase in membership in the association. The program will be opened by devotional exercises by President Murlin of Boston University and the speakers for the day include Ernest K. Coulter, formerly clerk of the Children's court, New York County, on "Citizens of Tomorrow;" Alfred W. McCann, New York City on "Ten cages in the school;" and Dr. Josiah Strong, president of the American Institute of Social Service, on "Ours, the day and land of opportunity." Music will be furnished in the morning by Dedham public school pupils, and in the afternoon by the Adelphi Male Quartette. Dr. Snedden will also speak briefly in explanation of the Teachers retirement law.

The teachers in the commercial department in the High school, under the leadership of H. W. French, the head of the department, are planning to attend the convention of the New England Commercial Teachers Association held tomorrow in New Bedford. A strong program has been prepared for this meeting, and in addition those in attendance are to be shown through some of the great industrial establishments of the city.

Beginning on the same day, the annual convention of the New England Association of colleges and preparatory schools will be held at the new lecture hall, Harvard University. The principal topics to be considered at this meeting are the adequate preparation of teachers for high school work, and the measurement of efficiency in the work of colleges and high schools.

* * *

The newspaper discussion of misconduct of pupils of the City of Boston on the way to and from school, which has appeared in several of the papers this week is an indication that this phase of school attendance is not peculiar to any town or city. It was only two weeks ago that our own school authorities were called upon to straighten out trouble of this sort, and it is a matter that recurs every year or two. There is never the slightest difficulty in remedying a matter of this sort, once the facts are known to the school authorities. The discouraging feature of it all is that the trouble arises very frequently from pupils from whose environment, better things might be expected, abetted all too often by the indifference or complacency of the parents.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

This is the time of year when foot-ball appeals most strongly to people who enjoy out-of-door sports. The library, therefore, has made a list of books on foot-ball and has added many new ones. The list includes both fiction and non-fiction and the authors are all high authorities on the subject. A number of books by Walter Camp, who is now the most famous foot-ball authority, are exceptionally appropriate, including "Foot-ball for the spectator" a new book recently added to the library. This book explains to the enthusiast the minute details of the game, and it also gives the duties of the referee, umpire, field judge and linesman.

Another equally interesting and instructive book is one by Parke H. Davis, "Foot-ball, the American intercollegiate game" and it reviews and shows the changes which have taken place in the game since the year 1175. In this book it shows that foot-ball under different names and rules was a game as early as 750 years before the Christian era. Its history is then traced to the present day with many illustrations of famous games and plays. The collection of fiction on this subject is also very entertaining.

A candy sale will be held today at 3.30 to raise money for the association.

The election of officers for the Class of 1914 will take place Tuesday at 8.30 A. M. The following members of the class have filed nomination papers:—

For president—George Nichols and Lawrence J. Whitehead.

For vice president—Sumner Robinson, Carroll Wright and Charles Morris.

They will also visit the Old State House and the present State House.

The election of class officers, 1914, will take place next Tuesday. Polls open at 1 P. M. The following voters have filed nomination papers.

For president—Donald Blake and William A. Walter.

For vice president—H. Stuart Dimmick, Arthur Palmer, Emily Finnan and Wilson E. Blake.

For treasurer,—Albert Stephenson, Edward Taylor, Frederick Cutler and Clare Manning.

There is much interest in the recess games. The girls are playing for Vassar and Wellesley, the boys for Harvard and Yale. Last week the scores were very close:—

MUSICALE AT ATLANTIC

Delightful Program at the Memorial Church

The concert in Memorial church under the auspices of the China Committee, Wednesday was one of the finest concerts from a musical standpoint that has ever been held in the church.

Mrs. Rose Thayer Thomas, the soprano and Clarence E. Hay the baritone sang "O that we two were maying." by Henschel. Both singers acted as if they delighted in singing and for range of voice and tone they were exceptional.

T. Fred Harry the youthful tenor with his fine pleasing personality won the audience at once. His voice fitted his smile and when he sang "The soft southern breeze" by Barnby the people showed their appreciation.

Leon Van Vliet the 'cellist then rendered two selections from Galtermann and Chopin. Mrs. Thomas sang "Pace" by Verdi.

Mrs. Emily Wentworth Carter then sang—"My heart ever faithful" by Bach. Mrs. Carter has an exceptional contralto voice and with Mr. Van Vliet as an accompaniest, touched every chord and seemed to make the audience feel the deep religious sentiment of the words.

Mr. Hay sung "Invietus" by Bruno Huhn. Mr. Hay as a teacher was highly commended for the work of his singers.

Several quartet selections were given and the program closed by singing "The Swanee River."

E. L. Mehaffey was the organist of the occasion and opened the program by playing "The Lost Chord." Mr. Mehaffey is well known in Quincy as he graduated from the Quincy High school, and has played at many of the organ recitals in and around Quincy. The large audience when filing out of the church expressed their appreciation of the fine treat they had enjoyed.

The ushers were Charles A. Hall, Edward A. Burkhardt, Percival Hall, Harry Read and Lyndon T. Gurney.

The platform was decorated with ferns, palms and cut flowers.

RIVERSIDE CLUB.

The Quincy Women's Riverside club held a Hallowe'en social at the Town River Yacht Club, Wednesday afternoon which was well attended. The afternoon was devoted to whist and informal dancing. Piano selections were given by Mrs. Charles Hodgkinson and Miss Draper received much applause for several readings. The party continued until twilight.

UNKNOWN KILLED.

No identification has been made of the man killed at Ipswich Wednesday afternoon. In his pocket was a medical certificate from Dr. John H. Ash bearing the name of Diggins. Dr. Ash said the man called last month and was suffering from bronchitis. When advised to enter a hospital he said he would go to his sisters. It is thought that he was an employee at the Fore River yards.

MRS. KEYES RETURNS.

Mrs. June Ainsworth Keyes, daughter of Mrs. Eaton who was acquitted of murder by the Plymouth jury this morning, came directly to her home in Quincy after the finding of the jury. She arrived in Quincy about noon and immediately entered Thompson's restaurant where she had lunch. She showed the effects of the worry over the trial.

RUBBER WALK PLANNED

Commissioner at Atlantic City Trying to Cut Down Expenses

Atlantic City, N. J., Oct. 30.—The boardwalk is to be rubber coated. The city rulers, figuring on cutting down the expense of frequent replacing of the pine planks, have arranged for experiments with a rubber preparation along certain sections. If the result is good they will coat the entire mile of boardwalk with the mixture.

Unofficial experiments have proved that the planks thus coated not only live longer, but are easier on the feet. The commissioners think the rubber will cure what is known as "boardwalk feet," a condition that develops among visitors after their first long walks on the wooden way.

HAS SOUVENIR OF HIS TRIP

Walter McClintock Popular with Cretic Passengers

The most popular passenger aboard the White Star liner Cretic, which reached Boston on Wednesday after a stormy trip, was 8-year-old Walter McClintock, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. McClintock, who returned with three children from a European tour. Mrs. McClintock before marriage was Miss Falvey of West Quincy and she is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Joanna Falvey for a few days.

Walter, clad in sailors rig, conceived the idea he was a deck steward and went about offering assistance to women passengers. Capt. Howarth was impressed, and Wednesday morning when land was sighted he called the youthful Walter to the bridge and presented him with a discharge. It is made out on a regular blank and states Walter performed faithful service during the trip. He also gave him a "character" saying the boy was sober and industrious. His sisters Margery and Mary both enjoyed good health during the tour.

SLIGHT FIRE NEAR MUSIC HALL

The alarm from Box 23, at 1.17 this afternoon was for a slight fire on the roof of the Home Laundry Co., building in the rear of Music hall. The fire was discovered by employees in the buildings in the neighborhood and volunteers ran a line of hose from the hydrant in the rear of the Kincaide block and had a stream on before the department arrived. The loss was confined to a few shingles.

QUINCY HIGH CONFIDENT

Expect to Win Annual Game at Brockton Tomorrow

The work of the Quincy High school team this week has been directed towards preparing for Brockton on Friday. On paper Quincy is better, but in a game where the rivalry and spirit is keyed so high, the outcome is as usual, hard to predict. For the last two years Quincy has won; last year particularly in the face of tremendous odds, and the local followers are more than anxious to make it three in a row.

The game is to be played at Brockton again, although it is Brockton's turn to visit Quincy, but in order to get the game, Quincy made the concession. The fact that Arthur E. Staff, who coached Quincy two years ago, is one of the Brockton coaches, makes the contest still more interesting.

The Quincy coaches feel that their line cannot be pierced. Even Newton and Cambridge Latin have been unable to get through it. With Young Jenkins, Foy, Hamlin and White all in first class condition there is no reason for supposing that Brockton can get through.

Right end, with Schenkelberger ineligible and Creedon injured, is the only problem, and Crocker, Sanborn Coughlin are fighting for the place. At present Crocker seems to have the call, though he would have to fill in at quarter back should anything go wrong with Page. Murphy has been kept out of scrimmage this week with a strained leg, but will start Friday's game at half back. Paul Larkin at left end will have another chance to equal his standard established this season.

Brockton has had rather poor success so far, having won but one game, and that from Bridgewater Normal school. Fairhaven and Abington found the Shoe City team fairly easy. Providing the local team does not become overconfident, as Brockton did last year, the victory should come to Quincy.

As Friday is the day of the Norfolk County Teacher's Association convention there is no school in Quincy, and a large delegation is planning to take the trip with the team.

TENNIS LEAGUE BOWLING SCORES

Only four men went over 100 in the weekly bowling of Wollaston Tennis league at the Coliseum alleys Wednesday evening. The teams made a poorer showing than in the grand opening a week ago. C. Baker and Jesse Litchfield tied at 114 for high single. Jenner of Capt. Estes boys had 111 and Capt. Emery 104. Captain Baker and Captain Litchfield differed one pin in the high total of the evening 302 being Captain Litchfield's record.

Captain Powers set a 4 to 0 collar on Captain Hoxies five each point being decisive. The singles varied between medium and low.

Aged Murderer Tries Suicide When Daughters Arrive

LIVED IN LONELY COTTAGE

When Neighbor Forced His Way Into House He Found Ernest McCoy on Floor With Bullet In His Head—Doctors Said Wife Had Been Dead Two Weeks

Pelham, N. H., Oct. 30.—After guarding the body of his wife, Minerva, whom he had slain two weeks ago, Ernest McCoy, 64 years of age, and living in a secluded section of this town, shot himself through the head when his three daughters, alarmed by letters they had received, applied for admission at the lonely cottage.

When Howard Chase, a neighbor, who accompanied the daughters, demanded to be let in, the visitors were startled by the shot of a revolver, followed by the fall of a body. Pushing open the door they found McCoy lying in a pool of blood. Giving what assistance he could to the unconscious man, Chase started for the adjoining room to look for the 80-year-old wife.

Opening the door he stood aghast. There lay the body of the woman on a couch. She had apparently been dead for about two weeks. Jagged holes in her clothing gave mute testimony of the manner of her death.

Two shots had been fired in the murderer's frenzy. One had entered the heart. The second had tern through the aged woman's house dress, but had not entered the body. The bullet was found lying on her underclothing over her chest.

McCoy's attempt to end his own life upon the arrival of his neighbor and daughters proved unsuccessful. He shot himself over the left eye, but the bullet glanced off without entering the brain. He was carried to a room over that in which his wife lay, and doctors were hurriedly summoned.

As he lay in bed receiving medical attention, an inquest was being held in the parlor below, to determine whether he should be charged with the killing of his wife. Referee B. G. Moran was in charge of the inquest. He could not account for the murder in any other way than questioning the aged man's sanity.

The murdered woman was McCoy's second wife and had also been married before. They were married three years ago and lived in their little two-story cottage, about a mile above the town centre.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McCoy are old residents of Pelman. The husband worked steadily as a carpenter until a few years ago, when he retired because of his advancing age.

The wife who, before her marriage, was Mrs. Benjamin Merrill, had never visited much because of her age. It was not thought strange by the neighbors that they had not seen her for two weeks.

No True Bill Found Against Connecticut Woman For Murder

Putnam, Conn., Oct. 30.—Mrs. Amanda Lawson, who had been held without bail for the superior court, accused of the murder of her husband, Jonas Lawson, in East Woodstock, Aug. 14, was discharged from custody, the grand jury, after being out seven hours, failing to find a true bill of murder.

Mrs. Lawson, who has been in poor health since her arrest, became hysterical when the jury's report was announced. She was attended in court by a physician and a trained nurse.

New York, Oct. 30.—Announcement is made by the New Haven railroad that by Dec. 1 all the Pullman cars on that line will be of either all steel construction or of steel underframe and steel end construction.

TO SEND BODY HOME

Remains of "Spend a Million Gates" In Private Car at Cody, Wyo.

Cody, Wyo., Oct. 30.—Preparations to send to his late home in the east the body of Charles G. "Spend a Million" Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, who was known as "Bet a Million" Gates, are being made. Young Gates, the prince of all spenders, died in his private car here of apoplexy.

Mr. Gates came west about a month ago on the advice of physicians, who accompanied him. His condition improved and a hunting trip was planned. It was successful, from the sportsmen's viewpoint, but the exertion seemed to leave Gates weaker. Monday night he grew rapidly worse. Efforts to relieve his sluggish heart were of no avail and he gradually weakened, finally failing to respond to strong stimulative treatment.

Fifteen minutes before his death Gates had expressed his satisfaction over the trip, promising to return for a month's vacation next year. He and his party has just made the biggest killing of elk, deer, bear and other big game in the history of this section.

So deeply was Mrs. Dexter impressed by the dream that she journeyed to Moravia, and found the dream true in every particular. Fifteen years ago Miss Dexter's parents separated in Boston. Mrs. Dexter moved recently to Chicago.

For the past two weeks the principal has been under the care of a local physician, but the trouble was not diagnosed as scarlet fever. When Dr. H. C. Boutelle, the school physician, called at the Danversport school he decided that the principal had scarlet fever.

ULTIMATUM FOR MEXICAN RULER

How to Eliminate Huerta Without Armed Force Is Problem

POWERS SUPPORTING WILSON

Belief That Concerted Action by Federation of Nations Would Drive President of Mexico Into Retirement—Warship Force In Mexican Waters to Be Increased

Washington, Oct. 30.—How to eliminate Huerta as a factor in Mexican affairs without recourse to the armed forces of the United States is the problem confronting President Wilson. Back from his southern trip he plunged directly into the international problem which has complicated our foreign policy ever since the early days of the Taft administration. But for the first time the president had the active support of the world powers.

The agreement of France, Germany and Great Britain not to interfere in Mexico was admittedly far more potential than appears on the surface. It means that they not only will await the declaration of principles by this government, but also that they will co-operate in any feasible scheme proposed which will wipe out anarchy and restore order south of the Rio Grande.

The president is considering an ultimatum directed to Huerta demanding that he retire immediately from his position as dictator. It is believed here that the powers will uphold him in such a demand. And if they do Huerta can hardly disregard it. Concerted action by a federation of nations would mean contraction of the purse strings by the financiers who have covertly been supplying cash to the de facto government.

Revolutionary activity was on the increase, according to consular advices. Fighting was reported from a dozen points with both sides claiming the advantage.

Felix Diaz, now on the battleship Louisiana at Vera Cruz, will, it is thought, decide to go to New York, although he will eventually take up his residence in Paris. Admiral Fletcher's force at Vera Cruz will be augmented by the fourth division of the Atlantic fleet, comprising the flagship Rhode Island, and battleships Virginia, New Jersey and Nebraska. They sailed from Hampton Roads to take the places of the four battleships of the second division which will come north to repair and refit. It is stated, however, that the second division will be held, probably at Guantanamo, within striking distance of the Mexican coast, until it is certain they will not be needed for action.

The news that Huerta would probably declare General Blanquet was legally elected vice president last Sunday and suggest to congress that it make him "acting president," interested diplomats here, but it was said such action would not change the situation. This government will not recognize Blanquet any more readily than it would Huerta himself, as it is recognized the policy of one would be the policy of the other.

Secretary Bryan said that a formal note had been sent to all the European governments asking them to suspend the formulation of a policy toward Mexico until the United States had defined its attitude. While England, France and Germany, he said, had already been heard from, it is expected the other governments will follow the three great powers in awaiting the decision of the United States as to the next step in bringing peace in Mexico.

President Wilson had a conference with Secretary Bryan, and the secretary stated afterward that they were at work on the next step in the policy that will be pursued.

It was generally agreed in official circles that some positive action looking toward a solution of the problem would be in line with the expectations of the powers. Steps to secure a new election would involve negotiations with the constitutionalists, and there is a confidence among administration officials that if guaranty for a free campaign can be arranged through the establishment a provisional authority at Mexico City acceptable to the constitutionalists the latter are likely to fall into line.

Rear Admiral Fletcher will continue to command the squadron in Mexican waters because of his familiarity with the situation.

OUR FRIENDS IN WOLLASTON

Give Added Praise. Their Statements Are Convincing.

It is gratifying for us to read such good news as the following, for it shows that the experience of our friends in Wollaston is the same as that of many Quincy men and women who have spoken out so heartily in these columns:

Richard W. Smith, painter, 14 Blake street, Wollaston, Mass., says: "I suffered from a painful back and kidney trouble for a long time. I was so stiff in damp and rainy mornings that it was some time before I got limbered up enough to dress myself. There was a dull, heavy pain through the small of my back. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up all right. I have used this remedy off and on since, whenever I have needed a kidney tonic. Doan's Kidney Pills have never failed to put me in good shape. In my present work, painting, I find Doan's Kidney Pills to be just the medicine I need for keeping my kidneys in good working order. I have recommended Doan's Kidney Pills before, and am glad to do so again."

An Imaginary Feast

A Thanksgiving Day Story

By CLARISSA MACKIE

They had started out in Jack Henshaw's cabined launch, for a cruise among the islands, with duck shooting as their object. It was a fair day in November, with an Indian summer warmth that did not hint of a sudden change in the weather. There were six in the party—Frank Carew and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Hayden and pretty Phyllis Hayden and Jack Henshaw. The three women occupied the cabin of the launch, and the men made themselves comfortable with blankets and sailcloth on deck.

The first day had passed uneventfully, without even a shot at a duck. The second passed likewise, and the third dawned in the same glow of amber haze and ruddy sun.

"It looks very much as though we would have to return without those promised ducks for Thanksgiving day," observed Jack restlessly as he took the wheel after breakfast.

"If it would blow up a bit colder we might bag a few today. If my prophetic instinct serves me right those clouds yonder look like wind and rain." Bob Hayden puffed out a cloud of smoke and leaned lazily over the rail.

"I hope it doesn't storm. If we don't hurry we won't get back to Cromore in time for dinner tomorrow," said his wife.

"What's the matter with Thanksgiving dinner aboard the Nautilus?" asked her owner.

"It would be perfectly lovely, of course, only you know it couldn't seem like a real Thanksgiving feast. Everything is tinned or bottled. All the Thanksgivings I ever remember are accompanied by the aroma of delicious goodies cooking in the kitchen."

"Enough said," returned Jack grimly. "You spurn my invitation to dinner; therefore it is up to me to turn and beat it for Cromore. We will have barely time to make it before nightfall."

They might have done so easily had not those threatening clouds gradually massed toward the zenith and slowly covered the rest of the blue sky. Then came a thick blanketing fog that blotted out the world and left them isolated in a dense white world of dripping moisture.

There was consternation aboard the Nautilus after that. Those November fogs were very deceiving, and it might be many hours, perhaps days, before the mist lifted. If they could keep in the winding channel among the islands they would be all right, but if they missed their way and nosed around outside in the track of the big steamers there was no knowing what would be the fate of the little craft and her passengers.

They anchored for awhile, and then, impatient of the delay that would prevent them from arriving home in time for Thanksgiving dinner, they started out again, feeling their way, Jack Henshaw at the wheel and Frank Carew blowing the siren at intervals. Bob Hayden and the three women remained in the cabin and played bridge by the light of the lamp. It was very cheerful in there, away from the fog.

Jack Henshaw stared at the lighted windows of the cabin and thought rather ruefully that his task would be more attractive if Phyllis Hayden would come out and share his turn at the wheel.

The little Nautilus felt her way among the hidden rocks in the channel that snaked among the little islands, and it seemed that hours passed before the fog thinned sufficiently for them to glimpse the dark bulk of an island near at hand.

With the lifting of the fog, which was driven before a nasty easterly wind, the channel became unpleasantly choppy, changing to dashing waves as the wind increased.

While they debated whether to go on or to make an anchorage among the islands their fate was decided for them. A big wave rushed along the narrow channel, lifted the Nautilus upon its crest and sent her crashing upon the rocks of the nearest island, where she wedged tightly between two bowlders.

It all came so suddenly that the duck hunters hardly realized what had happened before Jack Henshaw hustled them ashore with their belongings.

"She's sprung a leak, a big hole in her port bow. We can't do a thing except to carry a couple of lines ashore and fasten them to some of those large cedars."

He was hurrying them ashore with their burdens of hastily snatched clothing and bedding. He followed with all the provisions he could gather and later sent the small oil stove from the galley. By scrambling over the slippery rocks they could reach the firm white beach where ancient cedars fringed the foot of the sand bluffs.

Here the women waited while the three men made the Nautilus fast in her cradle among the rocks in the manner suggested by Jack. When all was completed the six pleasure seekers gathered ruefully about their possessions.

"Goodby, Thanksgiving dinner!" said Carew in a hollow tone.

"And nobody knows how soon we may get to Cromore for any meals," added Mrs. Carew mournfully.

Phyllis Hayden and Jack Henshaw exchanged glances of amusement. To them the adventure savored of romance. To be cast away upon a desert island was a novel experience enough, but to be cast away together, these two, who were in love with each other, made that island a paradise.

"Ah, you're a cheerful lot of Robinson Crusoes!" chided Jack at last. "You may never have the chance to be cast ashore again, and you sit here bemoaning because you can't spend Thanksgiving in the conventional way."

"Can't you be thankful without being prodded by the smell of pumpkin pie and roast turkey?" demanded Phyllis scornfully.

"Let us contrive a shelter from the tarpaulins, and you four may sit there and play bridge. Miss Phyllis and I will concoct a Thanksgiving feast for you to enjoy tomorrow."

The others shamelessly agreed to this unfair division of labor, and after a very practical shelter had been constructed against the sloping bluff and under the shade of two wind blown cedars the married people made themselves very comfortable with cushions from the boat and by the light of a ship's lantern played bridge.

In the meantime Jack Henshaw and Phyllis Hayden held several conferences, during which they displayed much merriment and a thorough contentment with their lot.

They fussed around a hastily improvised shelter that Jack arranged for a little kitchen, and there they prepared the evening meal with the aid of the oil stove.

A creditable meal it proved to be, though canned beans formed the principal dish, and other canned and bottled delicacies rounded out the menu.

Morning brought sunshine and scudding clouds across the blue sky. The wind still blew heavily, but from another quarter, and the waves were dashing over the deck of the Nautilus.

The castaways tried to be cheerful, but it proved a dismal failure, except in the case of Jack and Phyllis. Those two seemed to have tapped some resourceful flow of good humor, for they laughed and jested and promised a most inviting dinner for the others, who clung to their bridge playing, now sitting on the sandy beach with their cards.

Jack and Phyllis disappeared and were gone for a couple of hours. While they were gone those left behind heard the report of Jack's gun.

"Aha! We'll have a duck, at any rate," murmured Carew.

"I'm afraid not," said his wife. "I notice that the supply of oil is gone, and the Nautilus is washed over with water. Every stick of wood on the island is too wet to burn. Cold canned beef and crackers and peanut butter will constitute our menu today," she ended drearily.

There was nothing cheering in the sight of Jack and Phyllis returning with a brace of ducks, for there was no fire to cook them by. When this evil news was announced to the young pair they merely laughed and said there was oil enough to boil coffee and heat some beans.

"Dinner's ready!" sang out Jack, and they gathered about the hastily prepared meal.

"I thought it was to be a big dinner with trimmings," remarked Carew as he unfolded a paper napkin and sniffed hungrily at the tinned soup.

To the four older ones of the party it was a ghastly feast. With most unseemly levity Jack and Phyllis insisted on referring to the various tinned foods as though they were delicious viands served at a well appointed Thanksgiving table.

"Do have some more turkey," insisted Jack, passing the tinned beans around.

"And some of the cranberry sauce," added Phyllis, holding up a bottle of tomato ketchup.

"This chestnut stuffing is delicious," commented Jack, nibbling a crisp cracker. "Mrs. Carew, you are not going to pass up the mince pie?"

"I've eaten many a badly cooked meal," observed Bob Hayden bitterly, "and I've partaken of food from Bombay to Bangor, but this is the first time I've ever eaten an imaginary meal. It gives me mental indigestion to think of it."

"Then what we all need is exercise!" cried Jack. And, having disposed of the remnants of the meal by tossing them into the swift waters of the channel, he drove his guests before him up the steep bank and into a plowed field.

"This doesn't look like any of the islands I've met around here," marveled Carew, gazing thoughtfully around.

"We went a good deal farther than we realized in the fog. I'll lead you to a place. Well, ladies and gentlemen, welcome to Cromore!"

A surprised shout went up as they found themselves on the hill back of Jack Henshaw's home. A curl of blue smoke from the kitchen chimney bore witness that dinner might be expected there after all.

They looked at Jack for explanation.

"We struck the mainland instead of an island. I haven't been in that spot for years and didn't recognize it till Phyllis and I went out this morning. We shot a brace of ducks, and I believe mother has prevailed upon Chloe to include them in the dinner"—

"A real dinner!" yelled Hayden and Carew in chorus.

"Yes," Jack laughed as the two men broke away pellmell toward the house.

Mrs. Carew and Mrs. Hayden looked at blushing Phyllis and happy Jack.

"I believe you two have found something else to be thankful for," said Phyllis' mother softly.

TEACHER IS ATTACKED

Mother of One of Her Pupils Pull Her Hair and Scratches Her

Nasonville, R. I., Oct. 30.—The school authorities began an investigation of an alleged attack upon Miss Mary Callahan, a teacher in the grammar school in this village, by the mother of one of her pupils. The teacher says she has been receiving many anonymous letters apparently written by the same person, threatening dire happenings if she did not "look out for herself."

Miss Callahan says she kept a pupil after school because of deficiencies in studies. The child's mother came to the school, the teacher reported, and after demanding an explanation attacked Miss Callahan, pulling her hair and scratching her face.

The teacher cried for help and people in the vicinity came to her assistance and induced the mother to go home. Miss Callahan was taken to a physician. She was graduated from the Normal school at Framingham last June, and this is her first year teaching.

COLLIER A SUCCESS

Jupiter, Electrically Driven, Makes Fifteen Knots on Trial Trip

Washington, Oct. 30.—The electrically driven collier Jupiter has made a successful forty-eight-hour trial off Santa Barbara, Cal.

Captain F. M. Bennett, commanding the Mare Island navy yard, telegraphed the navy department that the shiped averaged 14.78 knots for forty-eight hours, or more than three-quarters of a knot above her designed speed. The Jupiter is an experiment in naval construction, and her subsequent performance will be watched with the keenest interest and in comparison with the collier Neptune of the same size, but using the new reduction gear instead of electric dynamos and motors to bring the high speed of her turbines down to a workable and economic basis.

CONFESSES THAT HE STABBED SOULEYMAN

Hiro Threatened by Laclioli Unless He Took Hand In Murder

Bath, Me., Oct. 30.—A signed confession that he stabbed Kassen Souleyman once in the back when he was murdered by Raseoul K. Laclioli, recently sentenced to life imprisonment for the crime, was obtained by county officials from Baho Hiro soon after he was brought from Lawrence, Mass., where he was arrested.

Hiro claimed that Laclioli threatened to kill him if he did not take a hand in the murder, and that he was given $5 out of more than $325 taken from Souleyman's body. He will be arraigned in the supreme court, an indictment for murder having been found against him by the grand jury.

STRIKERS BURN BUILDINGS

Arms and Ammunition Taken From Them by Militia

Trinidad, Col., Oct. 30.—The destruction of the tipple and office of the Southwestern mine near Aguilar by fire and an attack by strikers on the Empire mine and the camps of Berwind and Tabasco is the record of damage due to the coal strike.

Arms and ammunition have disappeared from the Ludlow tent colony and hundreds of strikers have scattered to neighboring tent colonies on the arrival of the militia at Trinidad and Walsenburg. Adjutant General John Chase stated that twenty-four hours would be given the strikers in which to lay down their arms.

MURET IS SENTENCED

Pal of Schmidt Gets Seven and a Half Years In Atlanta Prison

New York, Oct. 30.—"Dr." Ernest Muret, the fake dentist, found guilty of counterfeiting, was sentenced to serve a term of seven and one-half years in the federal prison at Atlanta by Federal Judge Hunt.

Muret was arrested soon after Fr. Hans Schmidt confessed to the murder of Anna Aumuller. The priest-murderer took the stand in Muret's trial and assumed all responsibility for their counterfeiting operations, but could not save his accomplice.

The Tombs physician testified that Muret was suffering from tuberculosis and the sentence was made comparatively light. Muret might have been given thirty years.

MRS. RAND SET FREE

Was Accused of Abducting Children of Dublin Strikers

Dublin, Oct. 30.—Mrs. Lucille Rand, the American woman arrested here on a charge of abduction, was set free. At the same time her friend, Mrs. Dora Montefeire, was released. When the two women were arraigned their counsel said to the court:

"These women regret that their motives have been misunderstood. They have decided not to continue their philanthropic work here, and their release is asked on this condition."

They were accused of abducting children because of their scheme for taking into English homes for proper care the children of Dublin strikers.

Killed Four Hundred Snakes

Paris, Oct. 30.—A peasant plowing at Moulin's uncovered two vipers' nests and in a fight for his life killed 400 of the reptiles.

WILL VOTE FOR PIPER

Progressives Not Bound by Vote of Committee

It would be interesting to know how many voters of Wards One, Two and Three were present at the meeting of the Progressive City committee at Wollaston, Tuesday evening, when it repudiated its candidate, nominated at the primaries for representative in the Fifth district, and voted to endorse the Democratic candidate. Wards One, Two and Three are the wards comprising the Fifth district, while Wollaston is outside the district.

The Progressives in the Fifth district placed no candidate in nomination for the primaries, but Progressives write in the name of Walter E. iper and he therefore received the nomination as the Progressive candidate. No action of the committee can remove that party designation from his name on the official ballot and he is entitled to their support regardless of the action taken at a meeting, said to have been largely composed of Ward Five voters.

Last year, when the Progressive party in the Fifth district was at its zenith, it polled 495 votes. There has been a decided change of feeling during the past year, and many voters who last year at the polls cast their lot with the Progressives and helped place Democrats in office are reported to have seen the folly of their way, and having administered the rebuke desired have returned to their first love, so that a much smaller Progressive vote is anticipated in Quincy this year.

It is unusual for a political party, after it has nominated a man for office, to repudiate that nomination at the eleventh hour of the campaign, and it is problematical just how much weight such a vote will have all things being considered. The voters have been led to expect different things from the Progressive party. Many Progressives will repudiate the action of the City Committee and vote for Walter E. Piper.

Her bridesmaid was dressed in pink silk crepe and carried pink chrysanthemums.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick McLaughlin 13 Penn street, which was attended only by the immediate family. FIREMEN BURNED AT SQUANTUM

Chief Litchfield Among the Injured

Had Responded to Box 84

Chief Litchfield and two firemen were burned by exploding gas Thursday night at a fire that practically destroyed a small building situated on Dorchester street, near the end of the street car line at Squantum, used as a general store and waiting room. Chief Litchfield had his eyebrows singed while leading a party of firemen to the rescue of two of his men from the Atlantic auto company. The two firemen injured were Miles Creamer, a call member of the Atlantic auto company, and William B. Gerry, chauffeur of the apparatus. Both these men were knocked down by an explosion of gas as they entered the building.

Gerry was the first to get to his feet and he began groping about trying to find his companion Creamer, but it was not until a rescue party headed by Chief Litchfield entered the building that the prostrate man was found and brought out. He was hurried to Atlantic, in Chief Litchfield's car and given treatment by Dr. Bruce. All of the hair on his head was burned off and his face and hands were also badly burned. After receiving medical treatment he was taken to his home on Sagamore street.

Gerry's hands and face were also burned but he refused to leave the fire to be treated by a physician at that time. His hands were so badly burned, however, that he was unable to run his machine back to quarters and it was navigated by William Leahy of the Central station.

The building is a one story affair, composed of two rooms. The front room is used as a general store and waiting room by Joseph Allen, while the rear room is used by him as a living room.

The fire is supposed to have started from the explosion of a gas stove. The theory is that the stove had been left lighted to warm the building, and becoming too hot exploded. The explosion was immediately followed by fire which spread so rapidly that the occupants had all they could do to get out and they had no opportunity to save anything, not even $60 in money which was in a bureau drawer where it had been left for safe keeping by James Allen and David Olsen and represented their profits of recent smelting trips.

The building was badly gutted, causing a damage estimated at $1,200 in addition to the loss of the $60 in cash.

The fire made a brilliant blaze and its reflection could be seen for miles. The department from Atlantic was the first to arrive having made the run from its station in a few minutes. Chief Litchfield in his powerful car, although having to come from his home on Quincy street arrived a few minutes later and was in time as noted above to enter the burning structure and save two of his men.

COSTUME PARTY AT WOLLASTON

Hallowe'en Gathering at Unitarian Vestry

A very enjoyable Hallowe'en costume party was held in the vestry, Thursday evening, by the Choir Guild, a girls' organization of the Wollaston Unitarian church.

The guests were met, on their arrival by a ghostly figure who conducted them by a round-about way through the church and finally into the vestry.

Here were seen a motley array of people representing every clime and condition of life. The festivities opened with a grand march during which the costumes were judged.

For the most original costume, Leon D .Browne, in the costume of a German comedian with loud checked suit and flaxen wig received first prize.

For the pretties costume his sister Miss Helen Browne was awarded first prize. She was attired in a dainty Colonial costume of light blue and wore powdered hair.

The award for the funniest costume was presented to Carlton Weaver. He came in the character of a clown and wore a freak mask with immense ears.

Biting for doughnuts, bobbing for apples and other Hallowe'en games were indulged in, Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, as a witch, told the fortunes of those present with broom straws. This resulted in several laughable surprises.

A bounteous repast of Hallowe'en refreshments was served and after a series of mystery drawings, "Good night ladies" was played.

The entertainment committee consisted of Misses Katherine Reed, Ednah Sanborn, Martha Robinson, Anna Weston and Gretchen Horst, assisted by Mrs. Frank A. Page, Mrs. Royal L. Turner and Mrs. Chandler W. Smith.

A general invitation has been issued to the school children of Atlantic to attend the special services at the Atlantic M. E. church Sunday afternoon. Last Sunday over 50 children attended the illustrated sermon by Rev. E. C. Pollard.

CURTIS AND BATES

May Become Candidates for Mayor

Another Paper for Council

There has been a persistent rumor about City Square for the past few days that ex-City Treasurer John Curtis will be a candidate for Mayor at the municipal election in December It is too late for him to enter the contest for the nomination at the city primaries and report has it that he will take out nomination papers and run at the election as an independent candidate. Up to this noon however he had not taken out any papers.

There is also a well founded rumor that under certain conditions Gus B. Bates will also be a Mayoralty candidate. Mr. Bates is said to be preparing a boomshell which will deal with taxation, grade crossings, etc.

The only papers taken out Thursday were by J. Harry Slade who took out a set of papers for Councilman at Large. He did not state in whose interest they would be circulated.

BIG PAYMENT OF TAXES

Interest on unpaid taxes of 1913 begins tomorrow Nov. 1, and all this week there has been a great rush at the Tax Collectors office at City Hall to pay up. Tax Collector Sandberg reports that the collections thus far this month are many thousands of dollars in excess of a year ago.

EUROPEAN TRIP.

The lecture Thursday night at the Swedish Congregational church, by Rev. A. Sporrong, on his trip abroad was well attended and enjoyed by the audience. He went through on this first lecture the first part of the journey, viz., Glasgow, Sweden, Norway. Afterwards, souvenirs collected on the trip were seen in the downstairs apartments of the church.

The next lecture will occur in two weeks, when he will lecture on Southern Sweden, Germany, Paris and London.

WITCHES AND SPIRITS

Reign Supreme at Park and Downs Party

A Hallowe'en party and pageant, probably the most successful of its kind since the new Park and Downs church was built, was held in the vestry, Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Women's Guild.

The entire vestry was transformed into a corner of the forest, the abode of witches and spirits. A carpet of leaves covered the floor while around the pillars were bunched cannas and other materials, giving the effect of trees. Owls and black cats placed at opportune intervals together with decorations of orange and black completed the effective scene.

As the pageant opens a witch in the person of Miriam Chase approaches the cauldron, which is realistically hanging on a tripod over a fire in the centre of the room.

She busies herself fixing the fire and is followed by three other witches, Mrs. Celia Mackay, Mrs. Seth Crocker and Mrs. Charles F. Bryant, to the accompaniment of weird, rythmic music.

Fourteen ghosts in gowns of white file slowly in and take their places around the fire. Mrs. Louis B. Weston as a beautiful fairy enters and dances around the pot.

She falls asleep with her head in the witches lap until awakened by a chord of music. Then she calls to the little elves who are cunningly clad in brown costumes with bells.

They do a pretty drill and William J. Colby as the goblin man comes hurriedly in.. Mr. Colby recited the story of "The awful bugaman."

Mrs. Celia Mackay sang the "Witches song" and Rev. William B. Ayers told the original and weird tale entitled "From the bottom of the sea."

A drill by the elves followed, after which fortune faggots were given them by the witch and the elves passed out among the audience with these for sale.

To an appropriate march the entertainers filed out and the evening was thrown open for games and other pastimes. Over 325 witnessed the performance.

The pageant was wholly original, having been planned entirely by Mrs. Arthur F. Capen, chairman of the committee. Miss Emily J. Bjorkman, in the costume of a ghost, presided at the piano.

Hallowe'en refreshments were on sale by the witches and a committee consisting of Mrs. A. V. Bissett, Mrs. Charles A. Richardson, Mrs. Maxwell, Mrs. Nason and Miss Marion Brown.

Ice cream was on sale by Mrs. William C. Crane and Mrs. F. J. Brown. At the peanut grab, in charge of Mrs. Ella M. Brown, the pastor Mr. Ayers got the largest number amounting to 55.

In the guessing contest for a bushel of apples the honors and incidentally the apples, were divided between Mrs. Field and Mr. Cooney. One guessed 143 and the other 145. There were 144 apples in the bushel. The contest was in charge of Mrs. J. A. Boone and Mrs. James D. Willson.

In charge of the affair was the entertainment committee of the Guild consisting of Mrs. Arthur F. Capen, Mrs. Fred Bussler, Mrs. Wayfield, Mrs. William J. Colby and Mrs. W. C. Crane.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY.

The Packard homestead on Hancock street was the scene of a gay Hallowe'en party Thursday evening which was attended by many friends of the Misses Minnie, Ruth, Ella and Dorothy Packard. During the early part of the evening dancing was enjoyed in the barn, music being furnished by a hurdy gurdy. The party later adjourned to the house where refreshments were served, games played and dancing again enjoyed. All joined in singing the popular songs of the day. It was also an informal dedication of the new hot house recently erected by Walter M. Packard. Here, in the centre of its attractive growths was Miss Minnie Packard dressed as a fortune telling witch. Beside her fire and tongues of flame leaped and danced in the darkness. The decorations about the house and grounds were of the Hallowe5'en order.

MUSIC HALL RALLY

Progressive Speakers Are Heard

Hale Criticises Walsh

Walsh did not repudiate the Democrats who went back on their platforms and voted for the trolley merger bill," said Matt Hale at the Progressive rally in Music hall Thursday evening and facing Representative Michael T. Sullivan, elected on the Democratic ticket, he said, "anything wrong with these facts, Mr. Representative?"

Sullivan, said they were correct and cheers followed the statements of both men.

The enthusiasm, a big factor in all Progressive rallies was not lacking in those present, and a band furnished music during the evening. All the speakers were cheered to the echo. The rally flags draped the platform and the Bird warblers, two caged canaries were in full view. Paul R. Blackmur presided.

The speakers were Matt Hale; William F. Kane of Brockton, candidate for district attorney; Lester P. Winchenbaugh, candidate for Senator; Joseph Walker; W. G. Shaw, candidate for Mayor; Horace G. W. Richmond, candidate for Representative; and Miss S. M. Stackpole.

Matt Hale said the fight was between Walsh and Bird, and as he commenced to speak he noticed Representative Sullivan in the rear of the hall. The invitation to the front was promptly accepted and it was in analyzing the gubernatorial situation that Hale's above statement was made.

Paul R. Blackmur said, "Mr. Hale is my authority for saying that the gentleman who is now the candidate for re-election in the Fifth Norfolk district voted for practically all of the Progressive bills before the house, and now the committee, I am glad to say ,has endorsed the candidacy of Michael T. Sullivan. I went to school with him, called him "Mike," and know that he is worthy of your vote because of his honesty and sterling qualities."

Lester P. Winchenbaugh spoke of the necessity of having a house and senate to back up the Progressive Governor. "The endorsement you have just given to Mr. Sullivan, I accept and it proves that today the barriers are down, the paths are broken and there is no reason why a man cannot vote for the best man for the office and that is what we are willing to do. It demonstrates how clearly and well defined the fight on principle is this year. I am a candidate because I am willing to serve the Progressive cause.

"Joe" Walker said the Progressive party stood for new nationalism. "We realize," said he, "that if we are to raise the standard our industries are to be put to difficulties in competition with states having other standards and therefore we favor a protective tariff but it must not be used for the sake of building up monopoly or increasing the cost of production. We stand for an independent expert tariff commission for the time has indeed come when the tariff should be taken out of politics. We have seen it made the football of parties, and it can be placed on a reasonable basis through the establishment of this commission. Business and working men will flock to the standard of the party in ever increasing numbers for it is a party of the people, supported and controlled by them and designed to help social conditions."

Miss S. M. Stackpole said, "The day of the Republican and Democratic parties are done. They filled the exigiencies in the past and things for which they stood. The reasons for their birth, are things of the past. Our necessity has called the progressive party into being. It does not live by virtue of past deeds accomplished. It will not equivocate or retract one single inch."

"BARN DANSE" AT ALPHA HALL

Annual Party of Manet Encampment of Odd Fellows

Manet Encampment, I. O. O. F., held their annual barn "danse" in Alpha hall Thursday evening and the attendance was large. Their string orchestra furnished the music for the "dansin list" which consisted of 16 numbers, all of which were encored. The costumes were typical and many.

The grand march was led by Chief Patriarch Alexander S. Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy. He was in charge of the floor and his aids, all members of the George L. Gill Rebekah lodge were Mrs. James E. Richardson, Mrs. James S. Baker, Mrs. Robert W. Wood, Mrs. Walter H. Walker, Mrs. Charles J. MacDonald.

Refreshments were served in Union hall during intermission after which dancing was resumed and continued until midnight.

The committee in charge was Sam Wood, Jr., Walter H. Walker, George C. Ela, Frank L. Carlton, Charles H. Wood, Charles C. Barron, William A. Richards, Frank E. Badger.

The "dansin list," designed by William Richards was one of the most attractive ever seen in this city. Pumpkins, pears and farm fruit were distributed under a rural caption and the list was phonetic to the last word.

BUFFALOES HOLD SMOKE TALK

Quincy herd, Benevolent Order of Buffaloes, held their third smoke talk in Hibernian hall Thursday evening with an attendance of 250. The guests of the evening were William Hart of Beverly, national supreme president; James Hanson of Gloucester, national supreme marshal; and C. H. Finn of Quincy, national supreme secretary. Mr. Finn was introduced by John J. Byron and presided during the evening. Short speeches were given by the visitors. A fine entertainment was given by professional talent, and there were whistling solos by Matt Fay and vocal solos by Adolph Restelli, George Davey and Philip Savard. Archie Shannon and William Grant contributed a buck and wing contest. Refreshments were served.

If a merchant does not advertise, he runs no danger that any one will think he is making any money.

The government chrysanthemum show no doubt serves many useful purposes, in this time when the florist's bill is considered one of the basic necessities of life.

There is a strong feeling that the government should save money on its armor plate contracts, so as to have more for marble post offices.

THE HARVEST HOME.

One by one traditional customs of the race are dying out. One of those of which only a trace remains is the old "Harvest home."

In many parts of Europe, when the fields were harvested, it was once customary to erect a figure in size from a doll upward, which personified the frolic spirit of the occasion. The laborers danced merrily about the image. An evening's revelry celebrated the end of a period of labor.

It was an outburst of the good cheer and high spirits that follows the completion of a big task. The American Thanksgiving day is different, expressing originally the feeling of devotional and spiritual people toward the unseen author of all good.

Sunday school and church harvest concerts and festivals might be considered slightly related to the old Harvest home. These observances are appropriate in a farming community, where people draw their living from the soil. Where they are held in a city church they seem less fitting. When people earn their living as merchants, business men, and mechanics, the decorating of churches with pumpkins and corncobs seems slightly far fetched. Still as these gifts are usually bestowed on hospitals or other charity, a too keen sense of humor is not called for in this connection.

Public celebrations reflect the age. The American people are making their own celebrations. The football game supplants harvest home and the old time Thanksgiving, as baseball has set aside the patriotism of the summer holidays. Quaint customs with whimsical local flavor are replaced by athletic sports which appeal to the modern demand for power and competition. There are some real losses here.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

The New York Times has started a discussion as to what are the typical characteristics of the "American girl." Paul Poiret, the psychological French dress-maker, finds her essentially Puritan, well bred. Chauncey Depew says she is expensive as a wife, without domestic accomplishments. Meredith Nicholson, says she pursues an ideal.

Most Americans know the girls of other nationalities only through books, but by this means a very good picture can be had by thoughtful people. Perhaps the principal contrast is in the self reliance of the American girl.

When girls start on the war path for the subjugation of man, they are much alike the world over. American girls, like others, are alluring, uncertain, coy, hard to please." The girl who yields easily to the pursuit of the male animal is regarded as eccentric. The normal girl wants to see the man prove his faith by the passion of his struggle.

The purely sex aspects of the American girl's life are not so prominent as formerly, when the search for a husband was the first aim. Now most girls prepare to face the world on a basis of independent service.

They do not prepare themselves much for housewifely arts. They think they can put in their time to better advantage. With splendid confidence, they have no doubt of their ability to manage a home if the chance comes.

The result is that the American girl is not a particularly efficient housekeeper. There are more leaks in the kitchen than the French or German girl would care to show. But the American girl has not wasted her time. She is a penetrating student of life. Her husband finds her sparkling nature a fountain of refreshment, and her keen intuition an enlightening guide in the problems of daily life.

Wilson's Mexican Policy Nearly Ready For Announcement

AWAIT RESULT OF ELECTION

United States Could Not Act In Situation Until Foreign Powers Should Recognize Her Rights—Secretary Bryan on Speaking Tour—Naval Officers Report No Trouble

Washington, Oct. 31.—That the next step in the Mexican policy of the administration has not been finally worked out and may not be announced for another week, was indicated at the White House.

"It has been necessary," said Chairman Bacon of the senate foreign relations committee, "that the European nations should recognize the right of the United States to deal with the situation. Now that we have that recognition it will take a little time for the president to work out the problem."

The possibility that within the next few days a definite announcement will be made by the Huerta government of the result of the election last Sunday is having the effect of postponing action by the United States.

While the election has been repudiated here, the actual formalities of proclaiming the result may have some bearing on the situation, for, while this government has already refused to countenance the result, foreign governments have not taken any position, and it is felt in many quarters that the United States should await formal action by the authorities in Mexico City before putting on record its rejection.

President Wilson is carefully considering suggestions from his advisers, and it is said that the plan may not be ready until next week's cabinet meeting.

Secretary Bryan, leaving to speak in the New Jersey political campaign, said there was no change in the Mexican situation. He will return to Washington Saturday morning, and that day will address Maryland voters in Rockville, Hagerstown and Frederick.

Officers on the American warships now patrolling the west coast of Mexico seem to know nothing of any peril impending at San Ignacio to the French colonists there. Rear Admiral Cowles, from his flagship, the California, at Guaymas, makes no mention of any trouble and reports all quiet at Mazatlan and Guaymas.

Panic In Aristocratic Circles When Man Is Arrested

Clarksburg, W. Va., Oct. 31.—Photographic films showing the nude likeness of several young well known women of this city were taken from George B. Thomas, when he was arrested, charged with pistol toting.

When Thomas' arrest became noised about there was consternation in several aristocratic homes and hurried calls over the telephone for Chief of Police H. L. Brooks, who was frantically appealed to, to prevent a "scandal."

Chief Brooks took the filmes to a photographer and after having prints made was soon able to identify from them several of Clarksburg's prettiest and most popular young women. Chief Brooks has not yet disclosed the identity of the women.

MARSH ESTATE SETTLED

Pacific Coast Property of Murdered Millionaire Goes to Miss Marsh

Stockton, Cal., Oct. 31.—Settlement of the estate of George E. Marsh, the Lynn, Mass., millionaire, who was murdered by William A. Dorr of Stockton, that his aunt, Miss Orpha Marsh, might come into immediate possession of the property he knew had been left her by the terms of Marsh's will, was arranged insofar as the Stockton property is concerned.

Miss Marsh is to receive the bulk of the estate, valued at $190,000. The eastern heirs get about $130,000 in property.

SCHOOLBOY KILLED

Accidentally Shot While Showing Boys Pistol In School Yard

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 31.—Frank McCann, aged 14, a pupil of the Green school, was accidentally shot while playing in the school yard. The boy died in the Lowell hospital shortly after his arrival there.

The boy, who was the son of James McCann, well known in Centralville, was showing companions a pistol. The weapon dropped and, on striking the ground, exploded. The shot struck young McCann in the body, causing a fatal wound.

Mother Seeks Missing Son

PLANTS IN SLEEP.

Some Take Their Naps at Night, Others During the Day.

Clover shuts its leaves before rain and at night, bringing two of its three leaves face to face and folding the third over the top. The young blossoms are also carefully sheltered by inclosing leaves which move forward in the evening and wrap them around.

There are two plants in the garden whose flowers sleep by day—the night blooming stock and Lychnis vespertina. The former is withered and shriveled in daylight, but expands and exhales a vanilla-like odor at night. The lychnis is white, and in bright sunshine every flower closes and hangs limply down.

As the sun sets this Endymion plant awakes expectant of the moon. The drooping calyzes raise themselves and slowly expand their flowers. It visibly ceases to droop and fade, and the plant, which almost died by day, is adorned anew. Its sister, the red lychnis, shines by day and is called diurna, but this white one has long left the beaten ancestral path and has become vespertina.

As it opens small flies appear and visit it. The calyx is of that reddish hue which they approve. The sun dew which attracts flies shows the same dull red in its leaves. It is not a rarity, but few have seen its blossoms opened.—Scotsman.

TEST YOUR BAROMETER.

Air or Moisture In the Tube Will Render It Unreliable.

Don't expect a barometer to tell you the truth about the weather until you have tested it thoroughly. Two common causes for unreliability are air and water mixed with the mercury in the tube. These can be expelled by boiling the mercury.

In order to test a barometer let it hang for a time in the proper position; then gently and with care incline it so that the mercury may strike against the glass tube. If there is no air within you will hear a sharp metallic click, but if the sound is dull and muffled it indicates the presence of both air and moisture. The presence of air alone is shown by minute bubbles.

If at any time the mercury seems to adhere to the tube, even in the slightest degree, and the convex surface assumes a more flattened form it is safe to conclude that either air or moisture is present. In any of these cases the instrument should be put into expert hands for rectification.

There are several kinds of barometers. The ordinary "weather glass" in common use is more or less unreliable and is easily made more so by careless handling. In fact, any barometer must be treated with great respect in order to retain its usefulness.—Harper's Weekly.

The First False Teeth.

Until little more than a century ago humanity had to rub along without false teeth, of which nowadays one firm alone claims to sell over 12,000,000 a year. The first successful maker was Giussepangelo Fonzi, an Italian dentist, who started practice in Paris in 1798 and, thanks to his skillful treatment of Lucien Bonaparte, soon made his way. After years of experiment he discovered the substance from which artificial teeth are made and received the gold medal of the French Academy of Science. One of the earliest persons fitted with false teeth was the empress of Russia. After Waterloo Fonzi migrated to London and then to Madrid, where Ferdinand VII, rewarded him with a yearly pension of 1,000 ducats for a set of false teeth.

Human Derelicts.

This is the invariable history of such cases. Let an unidentified body of a man or woman, young or old, be discovered, and from all directions will come inquiries disclosing the fact that many persons have disappeared from the knowledge of their friends. Tragedies and heartaches are thus uncovered, for the mere act of inquiry proves that some one in each case has suffered anxiety over the missing one and has feared evil happenings. Crime, shame, melancholy, discontent, unhappiness, desire for adventure, are among the causes that lead to the disappearances.—Indianapolis Star.

Jim's Advantage.

A prominent state official in a mountain region rode in his horse one hot afternoon and inquired of a barefooted woman working in the field, "Madam, can you tell me how much farther it is to Johnson's Corners?"

The woman leaned on her hoe and pondered gravely. "No," she said finally, "I can't. My son, Jim, could tell you, though. Jim's been aroun'. He's got shoes."—Everybody's.

A Deduction.

Personally we do not pretend to be much of a hand at reading character, but when we see a young man carrying a pair of kid gloves in one hand and a cane in the other we know he isn't looking for a plowing job.—Galveston News.

Only a Bluffer.

"He says he's boss—likes to show his wife that he's clothed in authority."

"All I can say is that he's a pretty poor dresser."—Town Topics.

Around the Circle.

"In my time," declared grandma, "girls were more modest."

"I know," said the flippant girl. "It was a fad once. We may get back to it."—Kansas City Journal.

After the official inspection the Grand Officers witnessed an exemplification of the work which was performed in a most creditable manner by Officers of Rural lodge. Music during the ceremony was furnished by the Harvard male quartette composed of Jewell Boyd, Lester Bartlett, Minot Phillips and John Thomas.

At the close of the exemplification Rt. Wor. Pinkham brought the greetings of the Grand Master, Everett C. Benton, and congratulated the officers on the excellence of their work. He then spoke briefly of the Masonic home at Charlton and told of the work it was doing. A collection for the maintenance of the Home, taken at this time, netted nearly $100.

At the close of the meeting a banquet was served by Henry P. Furnald.

GARDNER CLUB PARTY.

The Gardner Club of Christ Church held their Hallowe'en party in the parish house Thursday evening with a fine attendance. A delightful program of games was successfully carried out and all took part in the impromptu entertainment. Ghotss stalked the floor of the darkened parish house and witches appeared from unexpected corners. Attractive decorations in the season colors gave the scene of the festivites a gay appearance. Dancing was enjoyed, music being furnished by a graphanola. The entire membership of the club composed the committee in charge of the affair.

TO SETTLE STRIKE

Copper Miners Offered Old Jobs If They Will Quit Union

Calumet, Mich., Oct. 31.—What is announced as the final effort of the copper mine operators in this district to induce their striking employes to return to work, will be made through the medium of the Copper Country Commercial club.

A statement from the mining companies will be published by the club in the local press to the effect that strikers who apply for their old positions will be re-employed, regardless of nationality, provided they give up their membership in the Western Federation of Miners and have not been participants in any violence during the strike.

The concession of an eight-hour day, to be put into effect in January, has already been granted by the operators. If the strikers remain loyal to the Western Federation of Miners the importation of men will continue and the working forces brought up to normal as rapidly as possible.

INHERITS A FORTUNE

Providence Woman Learns Good News Through Newspapers

Providence, Oct. 31.—Through the medium of newspapers Miss Tessie Michael, who has been working as housekeeper in a lodging house here for more than three years, learned that she was heiress to $40,000 left by her father, a wealthy Belgian farmer, who recently died.

Miss Michael said that while living with her grandfather in Kiev, Russia, she married a soldier named Pasha, who went away to war a few hours after the ceremony and never came back. She came to this country in 1908, and after an unsuccessful venture in the restaurant business, went to work as a cook and afterward as housekeeper.

DECEIVED INTO SIGNING PETITION

Nurse at Insane Hospital Never Saw Patient Cruelly Treated

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 31.—The Massachusetts state board of insanity put in its third day at the state hospital for the insane, getting evidence regarding charges that have been made by certain nurses to the effect that patients are treated roughly, that there is not sufficient help and that the food is not good.

Miss Irene Fitts, who has been a nurse in the hospital about a year, and who signed the original petition in which the charges of cruelty were made, testified she had been deceived into signing the petition because she had been led to believe it referred only to the food.

She said she never saw a patient treated cruelly, but had seen them given "wet packs" as a treatment, through never as a punishment. Once she saw a patient attended by eight nurses with a sheet over her head. She said that while she would not say the food was not good, she thought it was poorly served.

Miss Helen Rogers said she had seen nine around a patient with a sheet over her head, after the patient had nearly bitten off the finger of one of the nurses.

DELAY ON CURRENCY BILL

Senate Committee Argues All Day Without Advancing Measure

Washington, Oct. 31.—The proposed government-controlled central plan prevented progress in the senate committee's consideration of the administration currency bill.

After an all-day discussion of the number of regional banks to be created to administer the proposed new system, the committee adjourned without taking a vote on a single proposition.

Discussion of the question involved any number of regional banks from three to fifteen. Senator Owen, leading the administration adherents on the committee, proposed that the number be reduced from twelve to ten. This was accepted as the extent to which the president is willing to go in his concession that the number should be reduced.

SCENE FROM "THE WHIP," BOSTON THEATRE.

AMUSEMENTS

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

There wouldn't be an empty seat the rest of the week at Quincy's pretty playhouse if people but knew what a splendid program is being presented.

Charles Terris and his players put on the best playlet ever seen in this city, "The preacher and the man." Terris wrote the sketch himself and very pleasingly plays the part of Father Anthony, a most lovable character. The way he deals with "Lucky" Hank Scott, the slang-slinging saloon-keeper is attention gripping, and the climax grand when Father Anthony's ward Mary proves to be Scott's daughter.

The new program that begins with Monday's matinee will end with Wednesday's matinee, for that evening the Boston Opera Company is coming to present "Cavaleria Rusticana." Manager Wardwell has made the special prices for this "Grand Opera Night" as low as possible so that all may enjoy the evening of music, and judging from the way seats are now selling, there won't be standing room even Wednesday evening.

MUSIC HALL, QUINCY.

Manager Ashley has secured at great expense and special request of many at Quincy, and surrounding towns, the Murray Stock Company including Peter Murray the favorite comedian and excellent company to remain at Music hall, for one more week commencing Monday Nov. 3. Mr. Murray will present some of New York's greatest successes and change plays daily with vaudeville between acts. Monday matinee and night, the successful southern comedy drama "A Kentuckey Romance" will be played. This company has played in Quincy the present week, giving the best of satisfaction. The plays are strictly refined and moral. Ladies are invited to attend the matinees given daily at 2.30. This is one of the best stock companies on the road and their performance must be seen to be appreciated. Special scenery and effects are used. Lovers of good dramatic plays should visit Music hall matinees at 2.30 evenings 8.00. Saturday afternoon and evening this week the company will play the great comedy drama "A Ragged Politician."

TREMONT TEMPLE.

It will be a long time before Boston will witness another photo-play that will equal the enormous success of "Les Miserables." There is no let-up in the popular interest of this remarkable photo adaptation of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, which on next Monday, will begin the tenth week of its engagement at the Tremont Temple, Boston. There are several unusual features to the production. The work is admirably produced by an extraordinary cast of French players, and the pictures are remarkable for their clarity and vividness. There are two performances a day at a popular scale of prices.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"We the People" will receive its first production on any stage at the Castle Square next week. It is the week of John Frederick Ballard, who wrote "Believe Me, Xantippe," in collaboration with Edwin Carty Ranck, and it gives a dramatis series of incidents in the life of a courageous young man who is able to live down an unfortunate error of his youth. The audience watches his rise from a convict's cell to a position of prominence in a western city. There is a love interest in the play, of course, and it comes to an extremely logical and romantic conclusion. The cast will be headed by John Craig in the role of Philip Durgan, the hero, and Miss Doris Olsson will appear as the heroine, Jean Townley. Mr. Carleton will act the role of Durgan's friend, Dr. Richards, and other leading roles will be played by Mr. Meek, Mr. Ormonde and Miss Colcord.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

After playing to capacity audiences for six weeks and breaking all house and attraction records for runs in Boston, Julia Sanderson, Charles Frohman's newest and daintiest star, in her sparkling musical comedy "The Sunshine Girl" is preparing to go to Philadelphia for a long run, and in consequence enters upon her final fortnight at the Hollis Street theatre Monday night. Seldom has a star so completely captivated a great city as has little Miss Sanderson and from Back Bay to Boston Light and from North Shore to South Shore her name has been on all lips while her praises have been sung high and low. Mr. Frohman's foresight in elevating this clever and beautiful girl to stardom has been recognized fully and that she has a long career of triumphs ahead of her is not doubted for an instant. That he was especially fortunate in securing as brilliant a musical entertainment as "The Sunshine Girl" for Miss Sanderson's initial starring tour is also generally admitted. This will probably be Miss Sanderson's last visit to Boston for some time as she is to make an extended tour in "The Sunshine Girl."

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

At the Majestic Theatre, Boston next Monday evening we shall have for the fourth week "Bought and Paid For," from William A. Brady's Playhouse in New York, where the play ran for one year and a half. In the company are Charles Richman, Frank Craven, Kathleen McDonnell, Marie Nordstrom, Allen Atwell and others who have contributed in an important measure to the very unusual success of Mr. George Broadhurst's comedy drama. The cast and stage settings are those used at the Playhouse, and are described as exceptionally elaborate. The third act is brought to a successful conclusion by the blundering of a silly brother-in-law, who, by the way, has been enlivening the audience all along with his dry humor. This individual brings the wife and husband together, and, though there is no promise onthe part of the husband to pilot the water wagon, the matter seems to be forecasted by his delight at once more enjoying her good graces. The popular priced Wednesday matinees when the best seats in the house are only one dollar are always crowded and out of town patrons should secure their seats in advance by mail for this performance as well as for the Saturday matinee and evening performances.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

"The Honeymoon Express" which comes to the Shubert Theatre, Boston, for a limited engagement beginning Monday, Nov. 3rd, is the record-breaking winter garden show, having attained a run of twenty-six weeks in the big New York play house. Its first presentation at the Shubert will be in every respect exactly the same production with Al Jolson at its head, as made its New York success. During the engagement of "The Honeymoon Express" there will be three midweek matinees, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, at which every seat in the orchestra and balcony will be sold at the uniform price of $1.00. There will also be a matinee Saturday at regular evening prices. The sucess of "The Honeymoon Express" is not far to seek when it is understood that it embodies a combination of story with a plot, some of the most remarkable scenic effects ever produced in New York and a list of artists for its interpretation such as are rarely seen in one company. One effect in particular, the race between an express train and motor car are seen first far up in the mountains, until both in actual size rush out to the footlights on even terms. While all the Winter Garden shows are noted for the beauty and grace of their chorus women, the Messrs. Shubert have surpassed even themselves in their selection for "The Honeymoon Express" of the most captivating lot of girls that have ever been brought together in one organization.

BOSTON THEATRE.

"The Whip," the big Drury Lane melodrama, coming to the Boston Theatre for a limited engagement, starting Monday evening, is an exciting play of love and adventure that grips the auditors from start to finish That the staging of this production is of an unusual and exacting character is apparent from the fact that thirteen complete stage settings are required for as many scenes, a dozen huge treadmills and five electric driven panoramas are employed for the race scene, while real tracks, locomotives and rolling stock are essential for the sensational collision. The latter will undoubtedly be the most remarkable stage picture ever presented in Boston, and is described as the climax of sensational realism. Two trains are shown running at full speed in plain sight of the audience. The rear car is detached from the first train and comes to a standstill at the entrance to a tunnel directly in the path of the following express. The latter crashes into the car and is shattered into a mighty wreck, lit up by lurid flames and shrouded in a mist of steam from the bursted boiler of the over-turned locomotive.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

Morning papers report that an automobile driven by John B. Chadbourne the charcoal man, of South Quincy who is also reported to be carrying on the same business at Hyde Park, struck a bicycle on River street, Mattapan, about 6 o'clock Thursday night, throwing the rider John Byrnes, aged 68 years, a paper maker, employed at the Mattapan mills, who received injuries from which he died two hours later at the Hyde Park hospital.

According to the report Byrnes was riding a bicycle returning from work when Chadbourne's automobile struck his wheel throwing him heavily to the ground. Chadbourne was taken to the police station by Sergt. Snow and examined as were also several witnesses to the accident. They were later released to await the outcome of the injuries to Byrnes. After learning of the victim's death the police announced that they would apply for a warrant for Chadbourne in the West Roxbury court for manslaughter.

Chadbourne is the same man who appeared in an automobile accident in City Square earlier in the year when his car was run into and smashed by the auto chemical from the Central station and for which Chadbourne has recently asked the city to reimburse him in the sum of $66 for damages done to his car.

PRIZE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

One of the best exhibits at the annual chrysanthemums show which opened in Horticultural hall Thursday was that of James Nicol, Quincy's well known chrysanthemum fancier. One of his exhibits which took first prize ,a bunch of yellow Paul Jones blooms, was the subject of an illustration in a morning paper.

Although Mr. Nicol competes with the greenhouses of the wealthy residents of the state he always manages to get away with some of the best prizes and his greenhouses on Coddington street are plastered with prize cards, which have been attached to his exhibits in other years.

This year Mr. Nicol was awarded the first and second prize from the Henry A. Crane memorial fund for the best vase of blooms of the Mrs. Paul Jones or the yellow Mrs. Jerome Jones. He was also awarded the societies first prize for a vase of 10 blooms on long stems.

The Kaleidoscope.

Have you any idea what a wonderful thing a kaleidoscope really is? Did you ever catch yourself wondering how many different kinds of patterns could be formed by the little bits of colored glass which the instrument contains and which adjust themselves with such remarkable facility when the instrument is turned in the hand? A calculation has been made by a noted mathematician which we are sure will astonish readers. He shows that a kaleidoscope containing twelve bits of glass may be turned rapidly enough to make ten changes a minute day and night for ninety-one years and forty-nine days without exhausting the different combinations or the possibilities of getting a new figure on the next turn. If the number of pieces of glass be increased to twenty, a calculation shows that 462,880,899,576 years would be necessary to go through all of the changes of which it would be capable, the holder of the instrument turning all the while so as to get ten changes a minute and working day and night those millions of years.

Business Men and Lunch.

There was a conference in London recently under the auspices of the Incorporated Institute of Hygiene to discuss the health of business men. Many of the greatest physicians in England spoke, especially about the diet of the ordinary man of business. The New York Medical Record sums up their conclusions thus:

"Most of the speakers expressed the opinion that but little should be eaten in the middle of the day, and some seemed to think that two good meals in the day were quite sufficient. A man who does not take enough exercise or who does not perform enough manual labor to enable him to digest and assimilate a large quantity of food, and particularly flesh food, should be very careful as to the quality and quantity of food he ingests. Such a man does not require much meat."

Genius and Appetite.

"Men of genius are almost uniformly large eaters," says Dr. Hanover. "They require a tremendous amount of good, wholesome food, for long continued and exhaustive intellectual work demands full nutrition to repair the waste brain tissue.

"Scott is said to have attributed his tremendous capacity to his power of digestion and the good, wholesome restraints of appetite in his youth.

"Most of the French leaders, in war, politics and literature, were men whose digestions were powerful and appetites unfailing. Napoleon's capacity to eat was enormous, as was Talleyrand's and Mirabeau's. German statesmen and poets seem to have had the same reputation, for Bismarck and Goethe were both of them noted for their insatiable desire for food."—Chicago Tribune.

Turnips as They Grow.

It has been said that the seed of the globe turnip when growing increases its own weight fifteen times within a minute. The seed of this turnip is exceedingly minute, being not larger than the twentieth part of an inch in diameter, and yet in the course of a few months the seed will be developed by the soil into 27,000,000 times the bulk of the original, and this in addition to a considerable bunch of leaves. On peat ground turnips have been found to increase by growth 15,990 times the weight of their seed each day they stood.

Stung.

"How soon do you start on your trip to Europe?" asked a man of a friend he chanced to meet one morning.

"I had to give it up," replied the other.

"Why so?" inquired the first.

"Well, you see," said the man, "my wife went and ordered her clothes for the trip, and when the bills were paid there was absolutely no money left to go with."—New York Times.

"I guess so. Why?"

For the Children

Prince Henry of England Tramping In the Hills.

© by American Press Association.

Royal princes look very much like ordinary folks when you don't know who they are. The boy in the picture is Prince Henry of England, third son of King George V. The prince is in his fourteenth year and, like all the children of the English ruler, he has been trained in a common sense way. Queen Mary is a rather strict disciplinarian and her boys are brought up much as are other English boys of good social standing. When Prince Henry was snapped by the camera man he was tramping with his brother, Prince George, who is two years younger. The picture was taken in the hills of Wales.

Tree Toad's Change of Colors.

A correspondent of Farm and Fireside has the following to say about tree toads:

"When a boy the writer often read of a wonderful animal, called a chameleon, which was said to have the power of taking the color of the object by which it was surrounded. But he never saw a chameleon and always felt a little 'Thomas like' in regard to its existence. However, he has since learned that there is an animal that has some of the powers attributed to the chameleon. That is the tree toad. Its life history is similar to that of the toads and frogs in the early stages.

"To show these various changes we took one that was found on an old board and placed it in a white pitcher. When placed in it the toad was a dingy brown, but after a few hours in the pitcher it was white with a slight creamy tint and with a few pale brown dots. On being placed in a window beside some green moss it soon took that color. Make the experiment of putting one in various colored locations and see the changes. You will be greatly interested."

A Writing Experiment.

The following is an entertaining experiment in a party of young people. One of those present is asked if he can write his name and will, of course, answer "Yes." He is then subjected to the following test: He is asked to sit down in a chair, a paper folded several times is placed on his forehead, a lead pencil is handed him, and he is asked to write his name on the paper. As little time as possible to reflect should be left him. If he hesitates he should be told to just go ahead, and in most cases it will be found that he starts writing his name at the left temple and to the amusement of the others present writes it so that it is legible only when held in front of a mirror unless one is practiced in reading reversed writing.

Queer Eating.

The king or horseshoe crab chews its food with its legs. This is an actual fact, the little animal grinding its morsels between its thighs before it passes them over to its mouth.

Rather Curious.

The frog, owing to its peculiar structure, cannot breathe with the mouth open, and if it were forcibly kept open the animal would die of suffocation.

Wash Day.

Rub a dub dub—
Dolly's clothes in the tub.
I will wash them so clean and so sweet
While Dolly's in bed
With a pain in her head
And a hot water bag at her feet.

I know she'll be good.
She knows if I could
I'd soon have them nice and dry.
I'll work with a will
If she will keep still
And not worry me with a cry.

I really should take Time enough to make
Some pretty new clothes for the child.
It's really a shame.
I'm afraid I'm to blame,
And she's really so sweet and so mild.

So now, my poor dear,
I see it quite clear.
It's my duty to make you some clothes.
With the wash on the line
It will surely be fine
To sit and sew while you doze.

Poehler's Stars Defeat the Riepke Foresters

Riepke's Foresters lost to the Poehler All Stars on the City Square alleys Thursday evening, 3 to 1. A return match will be rolled Thursday. Once again Santa Cruz of the Argentine Inspectors topped the bunch for high single, his 109 being the best of the evening. Poehler made two strings of 105, and Bergfors tied them in his second. A 98 in Poehlers last jumped his score to 308 for high total. The match appeared to be even and the second meeting of the two aggregations will probably produce better scores than the alley has seen this season. The score:

MRS. EATON IS FREE WOMAN

Verdict of Not Guilty Reached After Long Session

STATE DID NOT PROVE CASE

Demonstration In Court Promptly Quelled When Jurors Report Finding —Widow Joined by Dorothy Soon After She Is Set Free—Returns to Her Home In Assinippi

Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 31.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton — acquitted by the death trial jury at Plymouth—walked from the court house a free woman and exclaimed:

"Oh, it is like coming into a new world. To think that I am free! I am free!"

Mrs. Eaton's first thought after the foreman of the jury had reported the verdict of "Not guilty" was of her mother and her two daughters—Dorothy and June.

"Oh, my children! My children!" Mrs. Eaton cried in the fulness of her heart, tears of joy filling her eyes. "Oh, my mother! My dear mother!"

Then a few moments later she stepped from her last night as a prisoner before the bar into the bright sunshine, she exclaimed.

"It's the dawn of a beautiful morning, especially beautiful for me, for it is a new era in my life, one I know that will never have the sorrows of the one gone."

Then in haste, speeding up from Assinippi came Dorothy, the crippled daughter. Mother and child clasped each other in a long embrace. This afternoon Mrs. Eaton—happier than she has ever been before in all her life—she declared—went with Dorothy to their Assinippi home after a last visit to the Plymouth jail.

At her home Mrs. Eaton was greeted by her white-haired mother, Mrs. Harrison. Later from Quincy came June, the elder daughter—and this filled the family circle for the first reunion since the day on which Mrs. Eaton was arrested last March, accused of slaying her husband, Rear Admiral Eaton.

The jury's verdict came after eight hours of deliberation. For Mrs. Eaton the words of Foreman Thomas—"Not guilty"—sounded the happy end of a fourteen-day ordeal in witness chair or prisoner's seat in the Plymouth courtroom.

"Oh, I couldn't have waited much longer," she exclaimed. "They need me so at home. I don't see how I could have stood waiting longer than this for the happiest day of my life."

The scene in the courtroom as the jury filed in was the most remarkable in the court annals of the state. The room was crowded with men and women spectators.

The jury room door was slammed open.

Then came the verdict.

She rose to her feet and gripped tightly the hands of her attorneys, Mr. Morse and Mr. Geogan. The three smiled happily.

Through her tears of happiness Mrs. Eaton cried:

"I have two of the best attorneys in Massachusetts."

Back in the rear of the courtroom something came like a subdued cheer.

Two hundred men and women in the room stood up.

"Sit down," warned Sheriff Porter.

The demonstration stopped at the word. Almost immediately Mrs. Eaton, between her two attorneys, passed outside, where she shook the hand of each of the jurors warmly. Then she walked to her hotel, surrounded by a crowd of cheering men and women.

One napkin ring is marked "A. S. Carver," and another, "Sarah, from Mary." Around some of the silver was wrapped a paper marked, "Fred B. Hall, Leavitt's Hill, N. H."

The police think that the goods had been stolen and that the thieves left the bag intending to come later for it.

LOCKS IN NO DANGER

Enemy Could Not Locate Them, As Maps Are Inaccurate

Washington, Oct. 31.—Secret tests recently made by the third division of the Atlantic battleship fleet, under command of Rear Admiral Usher, are said to have disclosed the fact that the Panama canal virtually has nothing to fear from the fire of an enemy's fleet, so far as the Gatun and other important locks are concerned.

The tests, started last winter, are declared to have developed the fact that the fleet could not determine the location of the Gatun locks. It also is intimated that the data made public and supposed to give the topography of the canal were purposely inaccurate. In addition, it was discovered that the hills intervening render the locks almost immune from damage by bombardment from sea.

Extension of the breakwater on the Atlantic side has made it possible to mount long range guns so far out that the approach of an enemy's fleet could readily be checked. Elaborate plans also for the mining of the approaches to the canal on both the Atlantic and Pacific sides already have been completed.

English Tank Steamer Picks Them Up After Abandoning Schooner

The Lizard, Eng., Oct. 31.—The crew of the American schooner Lottie Beard was landed here from the British tank steamer Sylvia, Captain Kendall of the Lottie Beard and his men having abandoned their vessel Oct. 16.

Captain Prouse of the Sylvia, from Port Arthur, Tex., Oct. 6, for Shearness, Eng., picked up the shipwrecked crew, who had been compelled to abandon the Lottie Beard while that vessel was making the voyage from New York to Augusta, Me. The Lottie Beard hailed from New Bedford, Mass., and was owned by O. E. Kendall.

ESKIMOS FIND USE FOR PARCEL POST

Get Much More Money For Furs Than Formerly

Washington, Oct. 31.—The benefits of the parcel post have extended to the Eskimo, and he is making use of the newest of Uncle Sam's aids to cheap transportation to the advantage of his own pockets and the discomfiture of the fur companies.

According to advices received in Washington the price of a white fox skin among Eskimos in northern Alaska has jumped from $2 to more than $20 in the last few months.

The natives have learned that they do not need to sell the skins to the fur traders, but that the can send them direct to the states to avoid the middlemen.

Polar bear and other valuable skins have taken corresponding jumps in price at the source.

ENDS LONG CRUISE

Cutter Manning Visits All Aleutian Islands, Covering 16,000 Miles

Seattle, Oct. 31.—The United States revenue cutter Manning, Captain Dodge, arrived from Alaska, having completed a 16,000-mile cruise among the Aleutian islands, including a visit to Attu, the most westerly on the chain.

"The natives on the isolated islands are in much better condition than in previous years," said Captain Dodge. "There is not much sickness and the natives are beginning to observe the sanitary regulations given them. A few reindeer were given to every native village with instructions for their care, so that they may be propagated and supply food and clothing for the natives.

Two reindeer were eaten aboard the Manning, the crew preferring the meat to beef or mutton.

BITES ON PEARL

Woman Finds One Worth $25 While Eating Oysters

Maynard, Mass., Oct. 31.—Profits in the silver fox industry of Prince Edward island will finish a poor second to the earnings of the oyster business of this town for the next few days.

Mrs. James Moynihan of Waltham street bit on a hard object as she was masticating a succulent bivalve. Why can't shells stay on the outside, looking in, she wondered.

Spitefully she spat out the spindling sphere. She looked at it more in anger than in sorrow. Suddenly her frowns were transformed to smiles of acquisitive joy. It was a pearl. Experts said it was worth $25. She will wear it.

Maynard Hotel Man Dead

Maynard, Mass., Oct. 31.—Andrew W. Gibbons, a prominent citizen of this town and proprietor of a hotel, died at his home here following an illness of three months. He was a member of Division 44, A. O. H., and the Holy Name society of St. Bridget's church.

MRS. CHARLES G. GATES

Widow of Millionaire Who Died Suddenly

BODY OF GATES TO BE BESIDE FATHER

Will Arrive In New York In Time To Be Buried Sunday

New York, Oct. 31.—It was announced by Herbert L. Jones at the Plaza hotel that the body of Charles G. Gates would reach New York late tonight or early Saturday morning and would be taken immediately to the apartments of his mother at the hotel.

The funeral will take place in the Madison avenue Methodist Episcopal church at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and the body will be placed in a vault in Woodlawn cemetery beside that of his father.

The Gates family is now erecting a large mausoleum in Woodlawn cemetery, but, pending its completion, the bodies of father and son will lie in a vault.

Mr. Gates was not as wealthy in his own right as many persons believed. When his father, John W. Gates, died he left $1,000,000 and an income of $100,000 a year to his son, who was also made joint executor of the estate with his mother.

EX-DEPUTY DEFIES COURT

Refuses to Return Liquor Seized Before Death of Sheriff

Portland, Me., Oct. 31.—The court ordered ex-Deputy Sheriff Hermann, now in charge of the liquor seized before the death of Sheriff Scully, to return the liquor to the consignees, as in the opinion of the court the liquor was for private use and not for illegal sale.

Hermann refused to obey the court order, saying that he was in charge of the liquor for the county and would hold it unless ordered to do otherwise by higher authority.

No large amount of liquor reached Portland, as the dealers got wind of the fact that Hermann intended to use every means to prevent its entrance. Not to take any chances, the dealers are having the liquor shipped to stations just outside of Portland and will watch an opportunity to get it into the city by automobiles. Enough liquor has come into the city the past few days to last for six months.

The new sheriff, King F. Graham, will take office at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, that being exactly seven days after the death of Sheriff Scully.

HEADS FLYING TROOPS

Prince Alfonso of Spain to Command Aeroplane Flotillas

Madrid, Oct. 31.—Prince Alfonso of Orleans, cousin of the King of Spain, who is a certified air pilot, has been appointed to take charge of the two flotillas of aeroplanes for use in the campaign against the Moors.

It will be recalled that Don Alfonso married Princess Beatrice of Saxe-Coburg in 1909. Because of this marriage he was deprived of his title of Infanta and stripped of all honors and decorations. Two years later he was restored to the rank of lieutenant in the army for his service at Melilla, and the following year King Alfonso issued a decree restoring his title.

Brockton, Mass., Oct. 31.—Mrs. Katherine W. Johnson, 27, of East Bridgewater, shrieked out that she would kill herself if she were asked any more questions when the attorney for her husband, whom she is suing for non-support, cross examined her in court regarding her husband's behavior.

She merely declared that she didn't like her husband and didn't want to live with him, and refused to give details.

Her husband was discharged and she left the court in tears.

John Jones' Find

It Was a Vacant House That Paid a Good Rental

By NATHAN B. TOWNSEND

Johnny Jones, a Maine farmer boy, went to the city to make a fortune, but, getting stranded, started to walk home, a hundred miles, usually sleeping out of doors.

One afternoon, while wending his way eastward along the coast he came to a handsome country residence standing alone. Looking about him, he could not see another house, though the coast was open in either direction for several miles. But Johnny doubted if he could get any comfort in the place, for he could see no evidence of its being occupied. The shutters were closed, not one being left open. Then, too, there was an old look about the house. The shingles on the roof were black and crumpled, the woodwork in places was rotten, and only the brick of which the house was mainly built was solid.

"If I could get inside," said John to himself, "I could at least keep warm, and the night promises to be cold."

He had on only the thinnest clothing and shivered as a chill November wind struck him. Climbing the fence—the gate was fastened with a rusty chain and padlock—he went up on to the porch and began to look about him for a means of entrance. He was not long in finding a shutter with a loose fastening and a pane of broken glass behind it. Putting his hand inside, he unlocked the sash and raised it.

To his surprise, the room into which he looked was furnished. True, there was a moldy look about the furniture, but it was of a fine quality, though old fashioned. John climbed over the window sill and inspected the furnishings at closer range. He was in the drawing room among damask covered chairs and sofas and velvet curtains to the windows. A piano stood at one end, and John struck the keys. He was startled at the breaking of the stillness. It seemed to him that the shades of those who had once inhabited this house, who had years ago locked and left it, had cried out at his intrusion.

John fell to wondering why so much valuable property was left to rot. Though young, he considered the financial feature connected with it. Had the property been sold years before it would have brought what to him would have been a fortune. There must be some reason why it had been suffered to sink to ruin.

John hesitated about spending the night in so grewsome a place, and had it not been for the cold without he would have preferred to sleep under the stars. As it was, he looked about for a bed and, though he was hungry, finally got on to one of the couches upstairs. But it seemed to him that he was lying among worms. He took hold of a coverlet to draw it over him, and it parted through decay. This was too much for him; he arose and felt his way downstairs and, finding a lounge covered with leather, though it was stiff through age, stretched himself on it and fell asleep.

He was awakened during the night by voices. For a few moments he could not recall where he was. Then he listened for the direction of the sound and concluded that it came from under him. Presently a light flashed through a crack in the floor. Sliding off the lounge, he crawled to the crack and put his ear to it.

"We've got to run in some o' these goods," said one in a man's voice. "This cellar is full."

"Why not store the next lot above?"

"What rot! Don't you know we've taken every pains to keep any one from looking in here? Put goods on the floor above, and some boy or some tramp will look in, see them and report the fact."

"It's a wonder no one has got on to us as it is," remarked a third man. "They've gone around this depot often. Fact is, it's well known that Crawford owns it, and Crawford is above suspicion."

"We pay him enough rent for it."

"Rent be hanged! He's one of us."

"He tells me the place can't remain much longer as it is. A number of real estate men have been to him to buy it. They want to fix it up and make it pay."

"Crawford is making it pay well enough."

This was the last heard of a dialogue between different men, none of whom John could see. He heard something fall and thought a bolt was shot, though he could not be sure of this, then all was silent again. He lay awake thinking about what he had heard, but couldn't make out anything except that the basement was used for the storage of goods. Were they stolen articles? Were they barrels of liquor manufactured illegally? The reason for the house remaining in its present condition was apparent. This man Crawford was keeping it for a purpose. It had doubtless long been shut up and was not an object of curiosity. Turning these things over in his mind, John fell asleep again.

When he awoke in the morning the sun was shining in through a broken blind. John arose from his couch and looked about him. He was in a library. Books were on the shelves, but they were dusty and dingy. He went through a door into a pantry and through the pantry into the dining room. He opened some cupboard doors in a vain hope of finding something to eat. There was not a crust, and not a crust had been there for years. He went to the stairs leading down into the cellar, but the door separating the cellar and main floor was fastened. He tried to kick it open, but failed to make any impression on it.

Leaving the house by the window through which he had entered, he looked about the brickwork below the first floor. There were but two small windows, over both of which boards had been placed on the inside. There was not a crack through which he could look within.

How were the goods taken in? There were no marks of wheels on the entrance road. Indeed, the grass grew on it as well as on the lawn. The chain and lock on the gate gave no evidence of having been moved in a long while. Toward the ocean a distance of several hundred yards there were no tracks of any kind. There was no opening from the cellar except within the house. This matter of the storage of goods was a mystery.

John walked out to the rocks which formed the shore. Here he was more at home, for he had been brought up near the water. Naturally his eyes fell upon the irregularity that marked the shore. There were many protuberances, many indentations. He descended to the sea level and, the tide being at the ebb, noticed a place where the water washed in under the rocks. John wondered how far in it extended. He couldn't tell without going in under the rock, and this was impossible without a boat or a raft unless he swam, and the water was too cold for swimming.

The boy pondered on what he should do. Should he go on home or remain and try to solve the mystery? Curiosity held him. He would go back to the house and see if he could not look into the cellar through the crack at which he had listened. He did so, but the cellar was too dark for him to see anything. His mind reverted to the overhanging rock, and he went back to have another look at it. The rising tide had partly covered the place, and he knew that it would be nearly twelve hours before the water would give him an opportunity to examine it again.

He resolved to improve the interval by securing a boat or building a raft to use in his investigations. Going to a wood near by, he saw plenty of fallen timber, and after walking several miles to a house where he was given some breakfast he returned and carried sufficient wood to the shore to make a float. He laced the pieces together with twigs and when the tide subsided in the afternoon put his raft into the water and paddled to the rock in question. Lying flat, he pulled himself in under the land some twenty feet, when he came to an iron door. It was fastened with an iron latch, which, being covered by water at every tide, was so rusty that he could not move it. He scuttled out, got a stone, returned and by hammering opened the door. There before him lay a subterranean passage leading in the direction of the house.

Not having a light, the young discoverer did not attempt to investigate any further. Besides, he had no mind to be caught in a trap by an incoming tide. He got out as quickly as possible and, sitting on a rock, bethought himself what next to do. He concluded to go on home and consult with some one about his find. He was not sure but that there was something in it for him, and he wished to find a way to get it out.

John was a secretive boy, and, though he told about his experiences in the city, he said nothing about the house by the sea. In a few days, armed with some carpenter's tools and a candle, he went back to it and, closing the shutter behind him through which he entered, took up a part of the floor, went down into the celler and found it full of boxes and bales.

By this time it occurred to the boy that the house was a storage depot for smugglers. He found a door in the celler leading into the passage to the water and presumed that the goods were carried in by that route. Replacing everything as he had left it, he made his way to the nearest port of entry and, calling for the collector, told him that he had discovered a depot for smuggled goods. He was too smart to give any clew to it till he had made terms with the government. This necessitated some correspondence between the officials and the government, and it was finally agreed that of any smuggled goods that John should point out to the revenue officers half the amount accruing by confiscation should go to him.

These preliminaries having been settled, John led the officers to the house and showed them the goods. But, being desirous of capturing the smugglers, they placed a watch in the house and waited for them to come again. It was several weeks before the unsuspecting men fell into the trap. When they did they found both the egress by the passage to the sea and the one up into the house stopped. They were all taken just after they had deposited a new, valuable boatload of goods.

Johnny received a small fortune for his information. He decided to go to college and is now a lawyer with a good practice. Inquiries as to the lonely house resulted in his learning that the parties owning it had gone abroad many years before and left it to be sold as it stood. It changed hands several times without being occupied and was finally bought by the Crawford mentioned by the smugglers as an available depot for smuggled goods. He had grown rich by this means.

Woman's World

The Past and Present First Lady of Empire State.

MRS. MARTIN H. GLYNN (ABOVE), MRS. WILLIAM SULZER (BELOW.)

You never can tell. This time last year public attention was directed toward Mrs. William Sulzer as the wife of the Democratic candidate for governor of New York state. Today she is looked upon with pity as the helpmate of the deposed governor.

Mrs. Glynn, the present mistress of the gubernatorial mansion in Albany, was before her marriage to Martin H. Glynn thirteen years ago Miss Mary C. E. Magrane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Magrane of Lynn, Mass.

She is a woman of high intellectual attainments, interested in charitable work, a linguist, well read, well educated, but of a retiring disposition, averse to getting into the limelight which is of necessity flashed upon her husband.

Miss Jessie Wilson's Trousseau.

In the matter of a trousseau Miss Jessie Wilson reversed the order of the average bride of the period, again proving that she has a conspicuous amount of common sense. Every gown except the white satin wedding gown is said to have been selected from ready to wear stock presented by a high class specialty house. The lingerie, on the other hand, has all been made to order under the personal direction of the bride and her mother. Furthermore, most of these dainty belongings are of exquisitely fine material and hand made, to insure the old time elegance of our grandmothers as well as an excellence of construction rarely found in the modern trousseau.

The ten room house at Williamstown, Mass., where Mr. Sayre and his bride will begin their married life, will be one of the best equipped in that land of good housekeeping with a large part of the linen exquisitely initialed by Miss Wilson and her sisters.

Beyond the fact that one of Miss Wilson's bridesmaids will be her sister Eleanor, the list of attendants so far has not been confided to any one beyond the family circle.

Cuban Women Intellectual.

Cuban women are very intellectual, said a Spanish visitor to the States recently, although they haven't had that reputation. Even in the old days Cuba had its intellectual women, and we are very proud of the fact that the greatest woman in Spanish literature, Gertrudis Gomez de Avellaneda, was born there. She is regarded, in fact, as one of the world's great poets, being ranked with Sappho and Mrs. Browning. A number of statues have been erected to her memory on the island, and great preparations are now being made for the celebration of her centenary on March 23, 1914.

"One curious difference between Gertrudis de Avellaneda and the modern intellectual woman was that she was very masculine. In those days a woman had to be a man to do anything. She couldn't afford to be womanly."

Chemise Rarely Seen.

The old fashioned chemise, long treasured since its revival because of its usefulness, is rarely seen now. Fashionable women have relegated it to the background because it makes wrinkles and folds show in the new tight skirts. Instead of this garment fashion now decrees that women shall select a style of lingerie which adds not a perceptible inch to their size. To be truly smart one's dress must look as if it was being worn next the skin. A thin silk hobble chemise, a fancy bust supporter and a pair of silk knickerbockers will accomplish this effect.

NEW YORK STYLES.

Go-As-You-Please Styles Unlimited—Waist Lines Anywhere—Blouses Slouchy—Skirts Baggy and Looped Hats any Shape, any Size Topped by Jack-and-the-Bean Stalk Feathers.

Only the fact that the average well dressed woman is well corseted saves her from a hopelessly slouchy look, in the loose, baggy, Zuave type of costume that has taken the fashionable world by storm this season. Waist lines are located anywhere from just below the shoulder to the curve of the hip while seemingly every effort is made to increase the girth at the waist in order to keep the straight line of the figure which makes for slenderness of effect. Blouses are loosely fitted and pulled out at the belt into still greater bulk, and skirts are almost all more or less full at the waist, increasingly full from thence to the knee, where the draperies are tightly drawn to narrowness at the enkle that makes slashes and panels a necessity for ordinary walking.

CONTRASTING PETTICOATS.

Petticoats show so much with the present foot line that they are of greater importance than ever, and are often relied upon to give the fashionable color contrast, that makes a plain toned suit effective. Fortunately, since so little material is now used, these garments can be had at very small prices, though people buy so many more of them than formerly that in the end the expenditure for silk skirts is not much diminished. Fur trimmings on satin petticoats is the newest wrinkle, employed only on the more expensive and elaborate skirts. Embroidered pique continues popular for practical wash skirts.

RUFFLE STYLES.

Ruffles and ruffles and more ruffles or "volants" is the Worth edict for winter get-ups, but these are usually anywhere except at the foot of the skirt except in the two or three tiered models, where the whole skirt is formed of ruffles, or shaped volants. The most popular place for the ruffle is from waist to knee, where they lend just the right fullness and flare, and often have their hems stiffened to produce the "Lamp shade silhouette" as some one has dubbed this modish outline. Droopy ruffles make fichu draperies on waists, and hang away from slashes in sleeves. Upstanding ruffles frame the face with the popular low-cut blouse, and fill in the neck appropriately and becomingly when too severe lines need softening. Ruffles and lace trim hats of velvet, or satin, and themselves make all of the hat except the crown, in many models.

HATS AND THEIR TRIMMINGS.

Velvet hats lead, and black is first favorite, but whatever the color, size or shape, of the headwear, a high upstanding trimming of feather or ribbon, or net towers up at the back in regular sky-rocket fashion. Usually these trimmings are slender as they are tall, with the tips expanding in "Pine tree," "palm, or "paint brush" lines. The single, tall, ostrich plume finds its place in this fashion, and is very much used, though made feathers of various sorts are newer. Paradise continues modish and too expensive for any but a well filled purse.

Moire ribbon makes an effetcive trimming for a velvet hat, and is wired to stand out at any extreme angle, that seems good to milliner and wearer.

Mercury wings pose on top of crowns or on the edge of upturned brims. Butterfly fantasies of lace, ostrich or other feathers poised on long wired stems covered with chenille or satin sway high above the hat.

The general line from back to front is shorter, and there is a decided tendency to loop up the brims at the back, or build them close to the crowns at this point.

The poise of the hat is the same, low on the head, and tipped to hide the left ear and show the right side of the coiffure. This line is becomingly exemplified in many shapes with "Tam" crowns where the trimming is apt to be a bandeau like affair of fur or of contrasting coloring, and a fountain like spray of Gourach or Paradise, or some of the many feathers that suggest the Antennae of the butterfly.

LIES DOWN IN WATER TO DIE

Mrs. Burns Left Note For Husband Saying He Would Hear From Her Later—Police Recover Body After Two Hours' Work—No Reason Known For Deed

Boston, Oct. 31.—Mrs. Catherine Burns, 22 years, of 24 Dean street, Dorchester, a bride of two weeks, committed suicide by wading into Ward's pond, Jamaica Plain, where, about twelve feet from the shore, she deliberately lay down in the water and drowned.

Two small boys, John Mahon and Francis Norton, were standing at the water's edge but a few feet from where the woman ended her life, both of them witnessing her act.

Leaving a prayer book on the shore, Mrs. Burns calmly took off her hat and laid it on the shore, then waded into the water and lay down to drown. The prayer book furnished the clue to her identity, for written upon an inside cover was the name and address of her husband.

When she left the house she left a note on the table for her husband in which she said that if he did not find her upon his arrival home he would be sure and hear from her later.

When Burns returned from work he was greatly alarmed at the absence of his wife. He had not been home long when a police officer came with the prayer book, which Burns identified as his own. In company with the woman's sister he went to the city hospital morgue, where he identified the body as that of his wife.

The boys who saw her drown say that her act was deliberate. A passing autoist saw her wading into the pond and shouted a warning to her from the parkway. She took no notice of his shouts, but continued to wade into the water. The autoist, whose name is not known, telephoned to the police of station thirteen, and Sergeant Arnold and Patrolman Lyons went at once to the pond.

They found beside the prayer book the woman's hat and shoes and a pocketbook with eight cents in it. After grappling for two hours they recovered the body.

It was found that she wore neither shirtwaist nor dress, but had on a light underskirt. She also wore a long blue coat.

QUINCY'S VOTE FOR GOVERNOR

May Give Gardner a Small Plurality

Third Place for Bird

At the State election in Quincy last year 5,681 votes were cast, of which 1,998 were for Charles S. Bird, the Progressive; 1,858 for Eugene N. Foss the Democrat, 1,355 for Joseph Walker, the Republican; 92 for Roland D. Sawyer, the Socialist; 31 for Patrick Mulligan, the Socialist Labor; and 25 for Frank N. Rand, the Prohibitionist, while 322 were defective or blank.

The vote by precincts for the three leading candidates was:

	Bird Pro.	Foss Dem.	Walker Rep.
Ward 1, P. 1,	193	127	146
Ward 1, P. 2,	223	177	181
Ward 2, P. 1,	66	126	61
Ward 2, P. 2,	149	184	93
Ward 3, P. 1,	171	207	114
Ward 3, P. 2,	162	103	104
Ward 4, P. 1,	79	294	35
Ward 4, P. 2,	109	194	46
Ward 5, P. 1,	297	80	235
Ward 5, P. 2,	249	104	157
Ward 6, P. 1,	143	159	116
Ward 6, P. 2,	157	103	67
	1998	1858	1355

It will be seen that the Progressives led in six precincts and the Democrats in six, while the Republicans did not lead in any.

..The situation this year is a remarkable one, as Walker has changed to a Progressive and Foss to an Independent. Then there are four prominent candidates this year where there were three last year.

Here is one prediction of the Quincy vote this year:

Gardner	1750
Walsh	1700
Bird	1350
Foss	600

DECREASE IN NET DEBT

But Water Debt and Sewer Debt Are Larger

The Nov. 1 statement of City Auditor Fairbanks shows an increase in the water debt and sewer debt during the ten months of 1913, and a reduction of the City debt, the street improvement debt, the park debt and the refunding debt.

The net debt Nov. 1 was $2,215,245. a decrease of $79,651.46 since Jan. 1, when the total was $2,294,896.46.

The city debt on Jan. 1 was $711,-496.46, of which $137,476.46 has been paid, but a new city debt to the amount of $53,625.00 has been issued, leaving the balance $627,645.00.

Although water debt to the amount of $52,500 has been paid this year, the new water debt is $70,000, so that the net water debt of $727,000 is $17,500 larger than Jan. 1. The expenditures in this department have been unusually large this year.

The same is true of the sewer debt; although $29,000 has been paid the new sewer debt is $40,000 so that the total of $634,500 is an increase of 11,000.

No new debt has been issued this year under the special street improvement act, or for parks, or for refunding, and these debts have been reduced respectively $7,300, $2,000 and $15,000.

The borrowing margin of 136,508 on Jan. 1, has been increased to $220,359.

UNHURT BUT PAINTED.

Santino Giglio while painting his house at 17 Union street, Thursday, fell 18 feet to the ground when the ladder on which he stood slipped. Besdes a severe shaking up his face was spattered with the contents of a can of paint which he had in his left hand Liberal applications of turpentine were required before his features were distinguishable. Giglio was at the top of the ladder when it slipped from an unsecure foundation. He held on to the can of paint in his flight. He is at his home this morning apparently none the worse for his experience.

SURPRISE PARTY.

Many young friends of Miss Sadie Mellen attended the Hallowe'en surprise party tendered her by the members of the Violet club at her home at 755 Washington street Thursday evening. The decorations were Hallowe'en colors and were tastefully arranged. A gold bracelet the goft of her friends, was presented by Joseph Levangie. Games were enjoyed and solos were rendered by John Doherty Dennis Dennehey, Veronica Burke Sadie Mellen. Gretchen Mischler was the accompanist. Refreshments were served. The committee included Gretchen Mischler, Eliza Levangie and Sadie Wilson.

PAINFUL INJURY.

Mrs. E. Bent of Braintree received a painful injury at her home in Braintree Thursday afternoon when a vulcanizer in her husband's office exploded and a piece of the flying vulcanizer struck her in the left eye inflicting an injury which later necessitated the eye being removed at a Boston hospital.

Mrs. Bent had gone to her husband's office to shut off the vulcanizer and in doing so in some unexplainable manner the machine exploded and a piece of the metal flew and struck her in the eye, making a very painful injury.

Mrs. Bent was hurried to Boston where it was found at the hospital that the injury was such that it was necessary to remove the eye. Mrs. Bent is resting comfortably today but is suffering from the shock.

QUINCY AVENUE RALLY.

A largely attended Republican rally in the interest of the state candidates was held Thursday evening at the home of Councilman Stephen L. Devaney, on Quincy avenue. Councilman Devaney presided and there was speaking by Dr. Everett M. Bowker candidate for County Commissioner Albert L. Whitman; Walter E. Piper candidate for Representative from the Fifth district; Louis F. R. Langelier, candidate for Senator from the First district; and others. All spoke of the bright outlook for a Republican victory at the polls next Tuesday.

The Mexicans would perhaps be willing to have the United States supervise an election if every one could vote as often as he wanted to.

SLIDES FOR LIFE.

Tibet's Perilous Bridges and the Way They Are Crossed.

In Tibet they have not yet progressed far beyond the primitive. Especially when it comes to engineering the Tibetans are at about the stage reached by Europeans six centuries ago. At that time in Switzerland they used a long cable and swinging carrier for the transport of heavy weights, even of cannon from one mountain to another a little lower down.

Now, in Tibet they do not try to build bridges across the Mekong river, but where there are high cliffs a cable is stretched to the other side of the river, and for a trifling fee the person who wishes to cross clings to a thick bark carrier and slides down, holding up his feet at the point where the water nears the perilous bridge.

If he wants to cross back he must go farther up or down the river to a point where another cable is stretched from a high cliff to the other side, and again he performs the "slide for life."

This may not be a very comfortable way of crossing a river, but it is easier than swimming across, especially if there are rapids in the stream, and it is the favorite and cheap way of building bridges among the Tibetans.—New York World.

MAKING OF MAPS.

The First Attempt Was by Anaximander About 560 B. C.

Anaximander, a pupil of Thales, about 560 B. C., sketched the first map. It was in the form of a disk. Democritus of Abdera, about 100 years after, with a wider range of knowledge, drew a new map, giving the world an oblong form, showing extension east and west rather than north and south.

The first application of astronomy to geography was made by Pytheas of Marseilles about 326 B. C., he having made the first observation of latitude. Hipparchus of Nicaea, 162 B. C., first determined latitude and longitude. Marinus of Tyre, about 150 B. C., was the first to make use of Hipparchus' teachings in representing the countries of the world.

Claudius Ptolemy of Pelusium, Egypt, about 162 A. D., was in reality the first scientific mapmaker. Notwithstanding errors in boundaries and locations, the method was correct. The Romans contributed nothing to mapmaking. No improvement was made in it from the time of Ptolemy until the thirteenth century, when a map appeared in Italy which was constructed with the aid of a compass.—Exchange.

Old Time Football.

In the twelfth century London enjoyed football. Fitz-Stephen, clerk to Thomas a Becket, tells how after dinner the youths of the city would "address themselves" to football. These sportsmen were fastidious in their way. The scholars of each school had a ball peculiar to themselves, as had, indeed, most of the particular trades. The fathers of the players, too, were "as youthful as the youngest," for, "their natural heat seeming to be revived at the sight of so much agility," they sprang from their stands into the arena. In later days, too, the excitement of the game has been known to infect the spectators. Somebody wrote of a game in 1598: "These two men were killed by Ould Gunter. Gunters sonnes and ye Gregories fell together by ye years at football. Ould Gunter drewe his dagger and broke boothe their heads, and they died boothe within a fortnight after."

Lightning Shuns Women.

Statistics appear to show that men are more likely to be struck by lightning than women, more than two men being killed by it for every woman. But a London journal points out that the man's occupation is more likely to take him into the open when lightning is about. It has been observed, however, that in a group equally composed of both sexes lightning seems to prefer the men, and we may theorize at pleasure as to whether it is the comparive height that does it or some protection afforded by the woman's dress or a difference in conductibility between the sexes. The fact that children are seldom killed by lightning supports to a certain extent the first of these theories.

Let Down the Blind.

A youngster had been to the theater, and upon his return his uncle asked him how he liked the play.

"Oh," he replied, "the play was all right, but I didn't see nearly all of it!"

"Why, how did that happen?" asked his uncle.

"Because," answered the youngster, "the roller must have been broke, for the window blind fell down two or three times."—London Express.

His Idea of It.

"George Washington," read the small boy from his history, "was born Feb. 22, 1732, A. D."

"What does 'A. D.' stand for?" inquired the teacher.

The small boy pondered. "I don't exactly know," he hesitated. "After dark, I guess."—Exchange.

Can't Do Both.

"Pop, you an' ma have got me guessin'."

"What's the matter, son?"

"Ma tells me to always speak the truth, an' you tell me to always be polite. Now, which shall I do?"—Houston Post.

All human history is the history of reform. The evolution of the race, physically, morally or mentally, has been thus accomplished.—Anon.
